We left Corinth for Holly Springs August 2. It was the next day after the Tennessee election, and there was considerable anxiety to hear the result until we met the train from Memphis. After that conservative faces were lengthened slightly, although the result was as generally expected, but not by so large a majority. Since that, the Memphis Appeal has discovered an important fact, namely that the radical success in Tennessee was the best thing for the conservative party that could have happened. Before the election it thought otherwise, and made every possible effort to prevent such a good thing, and it has not only the benefits of the defeat, but has learned a valuable lesson, which it might never have done in case its party had been successful.

The conservatives having gained so much advantage by their defeat — got the radicals now "just where they wanted them" — and the others being pleased with their success, we hope they will all rejoice together, and inaugurate an era of better feeling. We can assure our conservative fellow citizens that the radicals are entirely willing to confer similar benefits on them at every election.

Making close connection at Junction we arrived at Holly Springs in time for dinner. Our church here is doing well, Brother Butler, the pastor, has been unwell some time, but the interest among the people has been kept alive. On Sunday at 11 o'clock we saw what is not common with us, at that hour, a full house at the time appointed to commence. Our colored people are generally very slow in getting to meeting. They often come after the sermon is ended, and the forenoon is not the hour for the large congregation, but here we had a large audience who had come in a good time. In the afternoon the house could not contain the people. We preached, received members, baptised adults and children, administered sacrament, and took up a collection of $36 towards paying off the debt still on the church. At night we preached again, the third time for the day and called for mourners. About twenty came forward. We retired leaving the brethren to labor with them, feeling that we had worked about enough for a hot August day in this climate. On Monday night we had a very animated love feast. The greatest fault we have to find with the people at Holly Springs, is that they are so excitable.

We were never much on stiring up a shout, but there we had to scold them a little to keep the meeting from being utterly demoralized. but we shall not be sorry when the time comes to visit them again.

The school has been continued all the summer, and the attendance been good. Thursday we went to Oxford. A large congregation of people met that afternoon in the grove, and we preached to them and explained our mission to them. They unanimously voted to accept of a church if we could build one for them. Early in the year Brothor Alex. Phillips went from Holly Springs, and started a school. There has been great opposition, and Brother P. has had much persecution, but would not be driven away. They at last got him out of the house, and he has not been able to get any other, so he is teaching under a bush arbor, We tried to find a lot that we could buy, but could get no one that was satisfactory. Some were afraid to sell a lot for "Nigger church" though professing to be willing enough themselves. Others could not give a good title. Some offered ground so far out, we did not want it.

We still think by persevering efforts we may get a suitable lot. If we can we intend to have the "Old Church" there as well as elsewhere. The M. E. Church South is very unwilling that we should have a church there. They are trying to defeat us, not by any violence, but by diplomacy. The colored people are uniting with us but the whites hold the property. If we get a position we are victorious. Oxford it a poor and hard looking old town. If we could persuade all the colored people to move away, and leave it, we should be well satisfied to let it alone.

Some of our enemies in this part of the country are trying the effect of some most absured falsehoods against us, one of which is that we are taxing our members one dollar a week, and making their employers pay it out of their wages. If any body believes such nonsense it will be because they are very hungry for a lie, and are not particular as to quality.

From Oxford we went to Grenada. Our people here have been buffeted by various influences. A part of the colored people are not very friendly to our church, as they are full of Baptist notions. Some colored man — Turner we believe was his name, was here some time ago, toadying around the white people, and vulgarly abusing Revs. Newman and Brakeman and Northern people generally. The people appear to have treated him about as he deserved. There have been several such fellows in this State; double faced, dishonest scamps. Any black man who staid out of danger while the war lasted, and now comes round and abuses the men who ransomed his race with their own blood, for the sake of being patted on the head by Southern men, and receiving a few ten cent pieces from them, does not deserve the respect of anybody.

At Grenada we had an interesting Quarterly meeting. Congregations were too large for the house, and commendable for decorum and good behavior. Ten joined church, nine adults and thirteen children were baptized. They are building a parsonage for which they raised $47, at the public collection on Sunday. Miss Harwood has remained continuing the day School which is prosperous, and giving valuable service to the Sunday School. The colored people in and around Grenada owe her a debt of gratitude which they can hardly ever pay. We authorized a a man who has been preaching in the Church South but wishes to be with us, to organize a work in the country north of the river. We hope to hear a good report from him soon. After Sunday's work was done, we took the cars at 1:40 A. M. Monday, and came to Jackson, having been absent five weeks, holding eight quarterly and two extra meetings, preaching twenty-three sermons and making two public addresses, recording minutes and revising church records, writing six communications to the papers and various private and official letters; making lumber bills and contracts for building one church and superintending purchase of ground and materials; traveling six hundred miles; sending out two missionaries to organize new charges, and various other little duties too numerous to mention.

We would not boast of this, but merely want our Northern readers to know that Missionary labor in the South, even in the dog-days, partakes somewhat of the nature of hard work. The work all over the district is in a very encouraging state of prosperity. We have a little opposition in a few places, but hardly more than enough to make it interesting. The preachers of the Jackson work, report prosperity at nearly all points of the circuit.

D. D. Home, the spiritualist, to whom was given $120,000, by Mrs. Lyon, a rich convert, has been thrown into prison in London. The lady has commenced a suit to recover the money given to Home last year, charging that he obtained the money by undue influence.

English Reform.

Substantially as it passed the Commons, the English reform bill received the signature of the Queen, and has now become law. The Lords attempted to restrict the extension of the suffrage, but wisely yielded when they found the Commons were firm. There is no room for doubting but that the upper house was strongly opposed to the measure in its length and breadth, but its members knew better than to bring a storm about their own ears by refusing to yield to the force of public opinion. They have not assented to the reform bill graciously. They acquiesced in it, because discretion urged them to do so. When Sir Robert Peel angered the Tories of England by engineering Catholic emancipation through Parliament, he did for England and his party just what Disraeli has just effected for them. Peel was denounced by the Tories as Disraeli has been. The Lords were opposed to the removal of the civil disabilities under which the Catholics labored; but they finally gave the measure a majority of votes. By so yielding they appeased the masses; and with the help of natural English veneration for the aristocracy, their conduct secured for themselves the tranquil possession of their ancient franchises and privileges. But in 1832, Tory and moderate Whig writers greatly feared for the stability of the English Constitution when it was believed that Peel, Wellington and their followers would stand out to the end against emancipation. The aristocracy gave in at the right moment, just as they have now done. Before the reformers are fully satisfied, the Lords will have to practice patient submission more than once again. The aristocracy and gentry of England constitute its conservatism. The party of progress is made up of the middle and working classes. Among the former are to be found Reformers, and among the latte, Tories; but the rule is as we have stated it. Both conservatism and the spirit of progress are necessary to the welfare of the state; and though in the British system there is much that is defective, especially with reference to the privileges of the upper classes, their constitution is in many respects admirable, and even if it needs change, can be reformed too quickly for the good of the nation.

NO. VII.

Daring effort of the Gun-boat Cincinnati — Her fate — Settling down to a regular siege — Spicy conversations — A new General — Pemberton's pickets — Adventure of a "forlorn hope"

Perhaps it was best, all things considered, that the soldiers learned from experience the impossibility of taking Vicksburg by a grand assault. At least they were afterwards more fully reconciled to taking it by a regular seige. All were now fully satisfied than our land forces were not equal to the task of capturing the place by direct assault, but still the inquiry went round, "why don't the gunboats do something?" After the taking of Arkansas Post, the impression seemed to prevail that they could accomplish almost anything. The question was debated pro and con with considerable spirit, till the 27th of May, when we had a practical demonstration of the inability of a gunboat to cope with a formidable water battery.

On the morning of the day referred to, the gunboat Cincinnati steamed down the river, and coming out from the extreme point of land above the town, came directly under the fire of the enemies' guns. As the battery was near the water's edge, it was in the most favorable position to do fatal execution upon the gunboat. No sooner had she cleared the point than a most destructive fire was opened upon her; some of the balls would skim along the top of the water, and strike the Mississippi shore two miles distant, proving the immense force with which they were sent on their destructive mission. Sometimes the shells would burst near the water throwing up a large spray Many of the solid shot would strike the water in line with the gunboat, and from this we knew that the brave old Cincinnati must have been struck several times. Meanwhile she began to act very strangely. At first she went straight ahead as though intended to hug the Mississippi shore, in which case she would have been measurably protected from the fire of the batteries. But reaching the middle of the river, she turned and went directly towards the water battery, not stopping till she was very near the enemies' guns. It was a fearful sight to see her approaching such formidable works; and no one who beheld the scene could think it an equal contest. This strange procedure was afterwards accounted for by the pilot having been killed sometime before it became known on board.

As soon as possible her course was turned up stream; she moved slowly along near the shore until coming opposite the point of land mentioned before, she stopped, as if hesitating whether she should attempt to cross the river, and find shelter there, or continue her course up the stream and get away as far and as fast as possible from the water battery. Choosing the later alternative, she kept her course up stream. She moved slowly, oh! so slowly, and it seemed she would never get out of range of the murderous fire. At length she landed in shallow water on the Mississippi shore, two or three miles above us, just before, or as she was going down. It was said by those who visited her afterwards, that she was literally riddled with balls. Thus ended the career of one of our gunboats, whose name is worthy of being handed down to the future with honor. In the attacks on Forts Henry and Donelson, she bore a conspicuous part, and was among the foremost in the heavy cannonading of Fort Pillow, bearing the brunt of the rebel attacks on that place.

There was nothing more said about the gunboats doing their duty after that affair. One and all came to the conclusion that there was nothing for us to do, but to let things take their course.

"There's but one way left," said my friend, Mr. Brown, "of taking Vicksburg right quick."

"And what is that?"

"Let the ——th Illinois be placed near it," said he, "some dark night, and I think they would steal it before morning."

This plan however not being adopted we settled down into the slow process of a regular siege. The days now began to be very warm, but our boys worked with a will, digging trenches, sharpshooting, and performing other arduous duties without grumbling. There was but little danger in sharp-shooting, when a person was careful, but the boys sometimes became careless and as a consequence one or two would be killed.

At sundown the firing usually ceased, and then it would often be amusing to listen to the lively conversation indulged in by the belligerent soldiers. Generally, they were not sparing of their curses, but sometimes they forgot their enmity and talked to each other as friendly as though they had not been trying to kill each other a few hours before. In the main, we found those in front of us pretty clever fellows; being East Tennesseeans, and not very good secesh as some letters found in one of their deserted camps abundantly showed. We also had other evidence of this fact almost every night in the shape of deserters. Those who came, asserted that whole regiments would follow if they could only get through the lines. While one of these deserters was eating a "Lincoln shingle" with great relish, Mr. Brown accosted him, with,

"How long do you think it will be before the rebs will have to surrender?"

"I don't know," was the reply, "but I expect it'll not be long, they don't like their new general."

"Who is he?" inquired friend B. abruptly.

"General Starvation," said the Tennesseean. For the first time Mr. B. looked kindly on a rebel.

One of the deserters brought over a little secesh bread. It consisted of ground pease and unsifted meal mixed together. He said they were allowed but one meal of this per day, and in a very limited quantity at that. It was evident that the disaffection did not confine itself to the deserters and East Tennesseeans, for the whole rebel army was seized with the yankee failing, of asking questions. Every night they made earnest inquiries concerning Johnston; and they sent many pressing invitations for assistance, which never reached his head-quarters.

"What are you stationing pickets for?" querried one of their men, of the officer of the day.

"To keep you in," was the reply.

"There's no use in that," said he, "Pemberton has stationed pickets for that purpose himself."

The rebel soldiers had become so discontented, the prospect of aid from General Joe. Johnston so discouraging that our men began to hope that each day might end the siege. Aside from the expectation of aid from Johnson the delay bore more heavily upon our foes than ourselves. The weather was exceedingly warm, the rebels were hemmed in on every side and living upon the most unwholesome diet; mule-beef, peas and rough corn meal could hardly be compared to Lincoln shingles, potatoes and coffee, besides we frequently had light bread and other wholesome food to which we were accustomed in our northern homes.

On Sunday night, June 14th, we were awakened by the shrill voice of the "Flying Dutchman" and the sound of balls whizzing over our heads. What could it mean? had the Northern Cops swarmed down upon us? had Johnston taken courage and crossed the river? were the rebels escaping up the river in boats? These were some of our first thoughts as we were aroused by the noise and tumult, but we had not guessed the true cause. We soon learned that a forlorn hope of rebs had been despatched up the river in boats. A few well directed shots from the Dutchman's battery scattered the little party and most of them returned to Vicksburg. Not so a few however, who kept on their course and landed at the gunboat Cincinnati, but receiving an unexpectedly warm welcome from our boys on the boat, they too beat a precipitate retreat. What was the real object to be accomplished by the forlorn hope I have never learned. If any one who reads this was one of that party, and will come forward and explain I will forgive him for being one of the remote causes which waked me out of sleep so suddenly.

There was a battery that opened fire upon the rebels the day preceeding, near the extreme point of the peninsula, and played upon them with effect during the entire day. Perhaps their object was to spike the guns of this battery, as well as those on the gunboat, which it was said our men were at the time removing; or may be it was a private expedition fitted out for plunder. At any rate they returned without accomplishing their object whatever it might have been.

General News.

FROM LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, August 21.—Major General George H. Thomas, with his staff left this afternoon for New Orleans, to assume command of the fifth military district, vice General Sheridan transferred.

In New Orleans the yellow fever is increasing. There is no more use of disguising the fact than there is in being unnecessarily alarmed about the matter. Indeed to prevent the birth of a panic, there is no better course than the publication of the facts just as they are. During last week the number of deaths from the fever in New Orleans was twenty-six. Twelve died during the twenty-fours hours ending Monday monday. Week before last there were fourteen fatal cases, and during the previous week, nine. There are cases all over the city, but they are fatal only in exception instances. These who have died, have generaliy been persons of foreign birth, inhabitants of the lower part of the city, and of the classes peculiarly exposed to the ravages of disease. The number of deaths thus far has been very small, considering that we have a population of about 200,000 souls.

The following parishes show a plurality of white voters; Calcasieu 243 plurality; Jackson 111; Lafayette 72; Livingston 316; Orleans 40; Sabine 138; Union 308; Vermilion 350; Washington 256; Winn 556.

The colored pluralities in some of the parises are very heavy, as in Jefferson parish, 2444; Concordia 1980; Caddo 1947; Bossier 1485; St. Mary 1466.

The excess of colored over white voters in the State is 38,142. Add to this nearly twenty thousand Republican votes from the white persons registered, and the Republican vote would figure up about one hundred thousand in the State of Louisiana, against twenty-five thousand for all other parties, which will be a majority sufficient for all practical purposes. Half that majority will answer.

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is, however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barae's Notes, and will be emminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath-school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable, we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes. We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr. Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an originrl effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence of the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee; though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume'a famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday-school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. Whit frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great imprement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression, and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them, Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exqusite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max aretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The End of Life.

When the eye grows dim and the blood runs cold,
When the pulses of life are at last all told,
When the throbbing brow and the clay cold hand
Tells me I am hurrying to the spirit land,

Oh! what will the joys of the Earth then be,
Or the wreath of it's Islands beyond the sea;
Were they all, all mine, and no hope above
Had my soul, in the world of eternal love,
All this wealth and greatness, I would freely give,
Could I purchase alone, one hour to live.

Oh! Father, give me in that dreadful hour,
Not titles and gems, not pomp and power,
But Jesus, alone on thy downy breast
May my aching head sink to endless rest.

Take the world and wealth, with it's vain display,
And it's fading treasures; all, all away;
Let me pillow my head on that bosom fair,
While I'm wafted away from this world of care

To that far off home, where Thou reign'st on high
Along with glad seraphs; Oh! let me fly,
Let me hear the delightful music flow
Around those Courts where Eternal splendors glow.

Let me then meet those I have loved and known
Rejoicing in glory around the throne,
Let me join, Oh! God, in the loud, loud song,
While ages unnumbered, shall roll along.

Pike County, Miss. T.

GENERAL BUSSEY.

The Annals of Iowa—A Quarterly Publication by the State Historical Society, for July 1867, contains the following interesting biographical sketch of our distinguished fellow-citizen, General Cyrus Bussey:

Cyrus Bussey, Major General by Brevet, U. S. V., came to Iowa in the summer of 1855; then a young man 22 years of age; located at Bloomfield, Davis county, and entered at once into mercantile business. Young as he was he had already been in business in his own name six years; and had already an established busines character and reputation in the state from which he came, as among the stable and reliable business men of the community in which he resided. He was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, October 5th, 1833. His father was a Methodist minister in poor circumstances, with a large family. In those days Methodist ministers received very poor support, which, together with the practice of frequent change of location of their ministers peculiar to that religious denomination, disabled him from giving to his son the advantages of a liberal education at school.

The first four years of the boy's infancy were passed in Ohio. Then his father, having been transfered to the Indiana Conference, two years were passed at Greensburg; then followed two years at Paris; and thus a change every one or two years, as the father changed to a new circuit or station, until the age of fourteen.

At the many places at which his childhood and youth was spent, none afforded the facilities for anything more than the most rudimentary course of instruction. And the father's means not being adequate to sending him away from home to better schools, the youth, through all these years, had opportunities for only the most meagre advantages for study and mental culture. A few months of each year, at the very ordinary schools at the various places of his residence, were all the opportunities afforded him. Once only, for a brief season, were better advantages obtained. When twelve years of age his father was stationed at Columbus, Indiana. At this place there was a respectable seminary to which the youth was sent and continued for six months, which closed his school-going career for life. And yet the General is a fair scholar, a man of extensive general information, good literary acquirements, a fine public speaker, and a writer of easy and graceful style, and is thoroughly skilled in some special branches of science; all of which indicate a self-culture and discipline of mind from persistent habits of thorough study, to what extent and in what manner will be developed as we pass along through this sketch:

When thirteen years of age, he entered a dry goods store as clerk, where he remained a few months; but his father having been assigned to another circuit, Cyrus accompanied him. On his way to his new field of labor he stopped over night at Dupon, Jefferson county. Here the son made the acquaintance of a merchant who offered him a situation as clerk in his store, which was joyfully accepted, and he at once entered upon his duties, where he remained two years, learning the business so thoroughly, and discharging his duties so intelligently and with so much fidelity, and manifesting so good a busines capacity, that he won the confidence not only of his employer, but of the wholesaling dealers in the large cities, where he was frequently sent to transact business, to such an extent that they volunteered to sell him all the goods needed to start business on his own account, notwithstanding he was destitute of a dollar of capital and only a boy. Accordingly, at the age of sixteen, he purchased a four thousand dollar stock of goods and began business in his own name.

At this time he was very small of his age and youthful in looks, not being larger than boys usually are at twelve or thirteen. His diminutive size and youthful appearance attracted frequent attention, when visiting the cities for the purchase of goods, as contrasting so remarkably with his matured judgment and capacity "as a man of business." However, at the age of eighteen he commenced growing, and very rapidly stretched up to the manly hight of nearly six feet.

During the following six years young Bussey pursued the business of merchandizing with varied success. One year of the time he returned to a clerkship with his old employer, at Dupont, having previously sold out his business. After a year's interval he entered into company with an older brother and opened anew. This brother was a physician, and, being actively employed in his profession, the management of the mercantile affairs was left entirely to the younger.

During these six years the young man completed his education; or rather laid the foundation for that mental discipline and culture which has developed his fine powers of mind into strength and activity; which has rendered him accomplished in varied fields of learning, and fitted him for the successful discharge of every duty which in public or private life he has been called upon to perform. During all these years he devoted several hours of each day to laborious study. Rising at four in the morning he applied himself until business hours, then after business hours until ten at at night. was with him an invariable rule. Two years of this time he pursued a coure of medical studies, under the instruction of his partner brother, until his health failing he was compelled to give up study for the time and limit his exertions to the single occupation of his merchant business. In the meantime, during these years of labor and study,—the formative stages of his character,—he had united with the Methodist Church, and in being fixed in his religious principles, was kept a loof from the evil associations wich throng the pathway of youth, and especially those who are thrown thus early on the world, on their own resources, and which thousand of the most gifted, and kindly of heart, find beyond their unaided powers of resistance.

In 1855, Mr. Bussey, having married and determined upon a new and wider field of business than his present turned his attention to looking up some spot for a permanent home, and having been captivated by the descriptions of the bright skies, and the beautiful and vast prairies of Iowa, removed hither in August of that year, as heretofore mentioned; became here, as he had been previously, a successful and prosperous merchant; came through the panic of 1857 with unimpaired credit, and branching out into other channels of investment went on prospering as before. Much of his success is, no doubt, due to a habit of his, of looking thoroughly and minutely into the details of his affairs, and leaving nothing to loss by the carelessness or dishonesty of employees.

Thus the war found him—a successful and thriving merchant. Before entering upon the part he performed in the war of the rebellion, which has brought his name before the country, it is proper to make some mention of his political record.

Up to the time of the inauguration of the rebellion he had been an earnest and efficient democrat. In 1858, he carried his country in a hotly contested canvas, and been elected a member of the senate over Judge Moon, and served through the session of the succeeding winter. In 1860, he was a delegate to the Charleston Convention, which, reassembling at Baltimore in June, nominated Stephen A. Douglas for President. Returning home he supported the candidate presented by that convention with all the zeal, energy, ability and influence he possessed, fully impressed with apprehensions that the country was rapidly drifting toward a revolution, which the election of only one of the several candidates—his own—could avert.

The signal gun having been sounded at Sumter, and the issue having been made clear and sharp beuween the government and its enemies, he took the side of the government. Stepping out of the ranks of his party, no longer a partizan, he became simply a patriot. Like the great leader whom he had supported through the late canvass; like thousands of other noble spirits of his party all over the country; at this trying time, he recognized no longer a party whose single interests were to be served; but a country to be defended and saved. At a war meeting, called by the citizens of Davis county, he came boldly forward to the support of the government, and, in a speech of great eloquence and power, publicly recognized the claims of the government to be paramount to those of any party, and pledged himself to so vote and act in the General Assembly, if it should be convened in extra session,—a pledge which he fully redeemed when the extra session was called.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

A Voice From the East

Dr Newman, allow me to say that your sparkling "Advocate" has not only found its way to our table, but has already won a place in my heart. I find it loyal not only to the country but to every good cause. I found it exceedingly clear and strong on the great cause of temperance. I find in it a sermon from some good man of labor, which abounds with thought and originality, and this practice must give great encouragement to a class that have long been oppressed, yet I find your excellent paper full of good things, and I write to encourage you may it long live and become a great power for good. I can hardly realize how fast the world moves, and thank God it moves in the right direction. Only to think that in such a short time, we should have not only slavery destroyed, but also provisions made for the advance of the oppressed. Theological Institutes through the South for the colored man; and conferences springing up every where of the M. E. Church; where she has been so bitterly despised.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

With a feeble body I came to this country charge over a year ago, from a crowded city where I had taxed myself to the utmost. The change was great and good. My health improved by the quiet and healthful exercise of my change and in the garden. The other morning I took my sythe to mow down my clover patch by the road-side near the parsonage, and was patiently cutting it down, when a fellow minister drove up. Till last year he had toiled on his farm on this charge, but duty called and he went out and, preached in two towns, and God gave him success, and many souls for his hire, and still he prospers temporally and spiritually. He passed on to look after church matters on his charge, and I kept on mowing and thinking. I looked up and an ox team was passing with a load of slabs for market. The driver was one of my members, and was converted years ago, he was very pious and gifted, and no doubt called to preach. He refused, kept on with his farm. But all this time he was embarrassed and nothing seems to go right with him. He has evidently missed his providential path, and although he has a large farm and stock, a good mill privilege, yet he can hardly keep out of debt, and support his small family, and told me this morning that he did not know of a man any where round that had a harder time than himself—truly "the way of the transgressor is hard."

I continued to ponder on those two men, how one was blessing the world, and the other was cursing himself, and the world was losing the benefit of his labors, and those two men represent a large class. For I am fully persuaded that there are hundreds of men who follow the plough that ought to fill the pulpit, and the curse of God is upon them, and if any of them see these lines, I beseech them to leave the plough and enter the pulpit at any cost, fulfill lifes great mission, pull sinners out of the fire or you will be in awful danger of falling into it yourself. You may have lost many useful years, and it may be impossible for you to be what you might have been. Never mind Brother "better late than never." Give yourself to this great and glorious cause, and God will take care of the consequences.

Baton Rouge, La., August 4, 1867.

Editor of the N. O. Advocate:

Several weeks have passed since I last wrote to you, and little worthy of note has occurred to vary the monotony of this quiet city. The prevailing topics of interest before the people here at present, are the crops and the state of health. The cotton worm is reported to be at work in various parts of the parish, but I am told by parties interested to know the truth of the matter, that upon going to the plantations where it is reported that 'the cotton is all being eaten up," it always proves to have been on some other place, about six or eight miles away, and that they are unable to find them any where in any considerable numbers.

There have been quite a number of sudden deaths here within a few days, still I do not hear of anything which gives me any reason to believe there is anything like cholera or yellow fever. It is true that the surgeon of the 20th United States Infantry has pronounced the case of a soldier who died here a few days since, to be yellow fever, but those medical men who are accustomed by long practice to the disease of this climate do not report any appearance of that dreaded disease.

The schools of the city are for the most part now taking their summer vacation, several of them re-open about the first of September.

Brother Hayward is still at his post, and is doing a good work. Last Sabbath the Rev. A. Rose, from your city was here, and preached to a large audience. The church was filled to overflowing, and at the close of the services the sacred ordinance of baptism was performed.

Political matters here engross the time and attention of quite a number of our citizens. The Republican party here is well organized and is constantly extending its influence throughout the parish, and we are hoping to show that we have not labored in vain, when election comes. There is a small class here, numbering perhaps twenty or thirty men who claim to be Radical Republicans and assume to concentrate in themselves the entire control of the 2700 republican votes of the parish, and because they are not granted this privilege, they are laboring hard to defeat the republicans in every thing, and the petty spite, purile efforts with which they labor to gain ther ends are simply amusing to all intelligent beholders, our pity is excited for their ignorance and bigotry, when we see to what low acts of border ruffianism they will descend. It is but a few weeks since that a meeting of the "Grand Army of the Republic" was fired into by parties who supposed it to be a committee of the Republican party, in session. This clan recently sent a delegation to New Orleans to pursuade the commanding general to remove the present officers of this city, and appoint in their places certain men of their own selection, but not having succeeded they are now thinking that perhaps it is best that General Sheridan should be removed.

The union people throughout the Parish feel confident that any change of commander for this District will be a misfortune beyond repair to them. Through the years of his command here, they have rested, secure that there was a power in the land to which they could look for justice when others failed, knowing that when Sheridan acted he would do it in the right direction and at the right time.

Mr. R. P. Kennon is a strong and energetic worker for good among the colored people. He has organized a temperance society and is doing a good work in that cause, which is not confined to the colored people, for I saw, on a pledge which he keeps by him, the name of one of our most talented medical men, whose love for strong drink has alone stood between him and a large and successful practice in his profession. I often think what an inducement for us to exert ourselves in doing good, is the example of a consistent and active man who wherever he may be seeks to do good.

Hoping that this communication may not, by its great length, provc tiresome to you, I will subscribe myself,

Yours for good,
Upsilon.

To The Freedmen — Temperance.

You that have had the direful shackles of slavery to bear for ages, are now freed from them. You are now men—men to a cause. To prove this to your enemies, great thing are expected from you. You are to acquire knowledge, and become useful to the position where christianity and humanity have placed you, more is looked from you, than from any other class of people. By your actions, by your deeds, you are to show to the world, you can be men, you are men. To wield this, one of your greatest duties is to be temperate, avoid drinking saloons, let none ever see you there. They are the gates that open the way to the road of vice, infamy, degredation and an ignominous death, to end in perpetual torment. Think of the consequences, and if you are on that road, turn about, and leave it, not only for your good, but for your race, your children; you are the guide and the lamp for them, you must lead them aright, "that the sins of the parents shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation," should be your daily thoughts.

Think of what other men are doing for you, to assist you in meeting this end. That christian soldier, the engineer of that great engine—the Freedmen's Bureau—think what he is doing for your future good and prosperity, should he not be encouraged, so as to see the fruits of his noble labor? You cannot expect always to have such men as he, to look into your future welfare, while you have the opportunity, use it, grasp it with an iron will, and show to the world you are a temperate, honest, and need be a respected people.

Should you want to hire a man, a man that you could put dependence in, you would not find him at the whiskey shop, or the gambler's table. Nor would you even wish to find him lounging around some idler's place. You would prefer finding him at home, or diligently seeking employment, hence, what you expect to find in others, must be expected to be found by others, in you.

Ask an inebriate, what benefits he derives from the incessant use of strong drink. It makes him miserable, none respect him, no, not even those of his own class think any more of him than a brute. By its use it not only makes you a brute in the eyes of man, but you find in yourself one. At home, you find an impoverished family, abroad, all you meet are your enemies. O what misery must dwell in his heart! yet he goes on the broad macadamized road to perdition.

Reader, if you are a drunkard, if you are addicted to strong intoxicating drinks, stop! stop before it is to late. May God through his infinite wisdom, bring you to a more concise contemplation of your duties, in being temperate, honest and frugal christians; and fortune will crown your every effort

9. Unlawful marriage and crimes causing divorce, are punished by fine and imprisonment or both.

Burning the Worms.

The plan for destroying cotton worms by fire so earnestly urged upon the attention of planters by the Times a day or two ago, we are pleased to learn has afforded most gratifying results wherever put in practice. A prominent Federal official, who is frequently thrown in contact with planters in a business way, informs us that he has met several during the past few weeks who feel confident that they have entirely rid their fields of this terrible pest, at least for this season, and it is hoped that the possibility of their generation next year is removed.

The work can be performed much more rapidly than might be supposed by those who have not witnessed the operation. Two men with shears or very sharp knives, and a boy with a fire pan walking in front will save from destruction an immense number of plants in a day, and when all hands are set at work a whole plantation may be cleared within a week. Another plan, which we suggest, is to take buckets or closely fitting baskets, fill them with leaves or stalks to which the webs have been attached, and then carefully empty their contents into large fires built at convenient points for this purpose.

Concert of action, we firmly believe, is all that our planters now require to save the remainder of their crops, and exterminate their voracious enemy. It will be useless for one man to burn and destroy the worms in his fields, if they are permitted to attain maturity on the neighboring plantation, and extend their ravages to his. Let us hear that in every cotton field where a web has been formed that the "fire ordeal" has been employed—N. O. Times.

Yellow Fever.

The accounts recived of the ravages of the fever at Corpus Christi are perfectly heart-sickening. A gentleman who left that place some five days since, reports that eighty-three persons had died of fever before he came away, sixteen of whom died the last day of his stay. When we consider that this mortality has occured in a village of fifteen hundred inhabitants, we are able to estimate the terribly virulent type of the disease prevailing there. We are informed that almost all the whole population is prostrated by it. The people of Corpus Christi need prompt and generous aid. Money is wanted to provide them with the necessaries demanded by their unfortunate condition. New Orleans has a duty in this matter, and we have no doubt that it will be cheerfully and quickly performed. Mr. George P. Deshon, 26 Carondelet street, is in constant communication with Corpus Christi, and will undertake the transmission of all contributions that may be left with him, to Mr. Headon, of the Howard Association, at that place.

A telegram from New Iberia, from Mr. Schmidt, president of the Howard Association, informs Mr. Tupper, of the firm of Price, Hine & Tupper, that but two deaths occured there during the twenty-four hours ending yesterday morning. We publish the telegram referred to.

In New Orleans there were nineteen deaths from yellow fever, and eleven from other fevers, during the twenty-four hours ending yesterday morning.

N. O. Crescent.

It is stated that letters have been received here by prominent politicians from members of Congress, which state that the only remedy left for reconstruction is in the impeachment of the President.

A partisan correspondent says these letters are significant from the fact that several of them are from members who, at the last session of Congress, were known as Conservatives and opponents of impeachment. They further state that the prominent movers in impeachment are busy at work, and are already canvassing among the members to test the feeling on the subject.

FUNERALS.

Within a few days past, we have attended the funerals of four young men, who had severally died of yellow fever. The first was Dr. Shields, of our army; the second, Mr. Pierce of Central New York; the third, the son of Governor Hamilton of Texas, and the fourth, the son of Vice-President Hamlin. When we knelt around young Hamilton's tomb in the gloom of evening twilight, to offer our prayers to God for comfort, all hearts were moved in the presence of Death, and the afflicted father and sisters were overcome with grief.

The funeral of General Hamlin was solemn and imposing. He was a young man of great promise, and many sympathizing friends followed him to the grave. A member of their fraternity, the Masons were his mourners, who buried him according to the impressive ceremonies of their order. Many of our prominent citizens were in attendance and not a few of his former Companions-in-arms. The flag he loved so well, draped his coffin. The religious services were held in our new Chapel, which was crowded to overflowing, with an audience deeply affected. In the last telegram his father sent prior to his son's death, he inquired; "How is his courage?" There was significance in this, for in yellow fever, a strong will and true courage go far to sustain the patient. But young Hamlin was compelled to yield to the fell destroyer, and now we mourn his loss. O young men of New Orleans!—hope of the church and pride of state—let the death of the noble youth we here record, warn you of life's uncertainty and of the importance of being prepared for that tremendous hour when you shall be cal led into the presence of yoru Judge.

CITY COUNCIL.

On last Tuesday evening, the city council met in joint session, and held an important election, the results of which may be found in another column. The gentlemen elected are in every way worthy of the positions they have been chosen to fill.

S. S. Fish, the City Attorney, is a young gentleman of pure character and of good legal attainments. He was desperately wounded in the July riots of 1866, and aside from his christian character and legal abilities, the place he now fills was due him. Mr. Fish fought bravely for his country in the late war for the Union.

The Assistant City Attorney, Hon. Ezra Heistand, is a staunch loyalist and an out and out republican. He is a man of years, of mature judgment and has long been in public life.

H. C. Dibble, who was elected City Notary, is a young gentleman who deserves well of his country. He fought bravely for the Union, and lost a leg at the siege of Port Hudson. All honor to our soldiers!

In making up the Board of School Directors, the council acted wisely in electing nine colored citizens to the Board. This is a great advance. Great responsibilities rest upon the school directors, and we believe they are fully competent to meet and discharge the same.

Johnson and Grant.

The eyes of the nation are for the moment turned to the President of the United States, and the General of our armies. Stanton and Sheridan are momentarily forgotten in the struggles of the greater giants. In another column we publish their respective letters, which are the exponents of their principles and feelings touching the men and measures involved in the reconstruction of Louisiana. Grant's letter is no less an honor to his intelligence than to its patriotism; it has the ring of the true hero and fearless patriot: while the President's reply is the effusion of a demagogue—a partizan plea—a self-defence. The verdict of the nation is for Grant, while Stanton and Sheridan will be remembered in due time.

A recent telegram announces the probable arrest of Grant for insubordination; but we shall not be surprised to learn at any moment that Grant has arrested Johnson. In view of Mr. Johnsons' mental inbecility, physical debility, and the return of his old disease, kindly called by his friends, frenzy, we think a residence in the Soldier's Home, until Congrees meets, would be beneficial to the presidential invalid and to the country at large. We hope if the General finds this course necessary, he will provide for the National patient in the most tender manner, especially during those frenzied moments, when old Mars Stanton and little Phil Sheridan, are rising up before his fevered mind. If this is done the nation will feel greatly relieved, by such tender care of the President. And the relief will be even greater, when the people learn that Mr. Wade is present to relieve the invalid president of the onerous duties of his office; while he has those mighty duties to discharge, it is impossible for him to recover.

The Social Evil.

The question of licensing brothels is being agitated by persons interested in the study of social science, with a view to correct one of the greatest evils that besets society in large cities. The matter has even been brought before the Legislatures of some of our States, and it is one we would gladly keep out of sight did not our duty as public journalists force us to meet it, show its hideousness and denounce it, Licensing vice will not diminish it but will render it, so to speak legislatively respectable, and give its votaries aid, comfort and the opportunity of flaunting their lawful authority in the eyes of the virtuous and good. With licensing, prostitution becomes a legitimate business and may array itself in the market, advertise itself in the public prints and contaminate thousands upon thousands more than it does now. Some will say "you can not lessen the evil—its votaries are joined to their idols—let them alone." This may do well for those who look for an excuse for inactivity and sloth but it is not the part for him who is fighting the good fight, the battle against wrong and error. Others will say. "why meddle with it, you can not crush it—it will exist in secret and in secret places." In secret and in secret places, let it be then—but hunt it down, pursue it—strike it with the strong arm of the law, and if any revenue is to come to the public coffers, let it come as fines not as license fees.

Those who argue most strongly for the license system, say that many young women who are still restrained by public opinion, would never enter a life of open shame if they were compelled to first register themselves as public prostitutes. The licensing system would do more harm than all the good it would do, in the exceptional and individual cases hinted at. Want, more than love of dress, drives most women to commit those errors that in time becomes soul and body destroying habits. No doubt the christian community is much to blame for this; and the time is rapidly approaching if it have not already arrived when christian men and women must approach and take hold of the work of reclaiming these fallen ones. We have not room to discuss the question in all its bearings; and, as we would like to do, give an outline of what has been accomplished by humane and benevolent associations in London and other large cities in the matter of reclaiming these morally blighted beings; but we will say that this city seems to be a particularly inviting field for kind efforts in this direction; and we will suggest that the work can best be performed by societies established for that purpose and working together to the same end; for individual effort without the moral and material support of co-laborers is almost useless.

Conservatism—False and True.

This is a long word and good enough in what we consider its true meaning. That is a due respect for what is venerable, attention to the lessons which the experience of mankind is able to teach us, and taking good care of, and using well the blessings we now enjoy.

It is often used to express what we here term false conservatism. It is applied to, and appropriated by those who mean by it, opposition to any improvement or progress. Their platform is "Things as they were" or at furthest as they are. The fact that a thing has been, is reason enough with them, why it should continue to be; that it is established is reason enough why it should not be changed. Their ideal of excellence is unchanging stability, and whatever tends to move or unsettle things to them is an evil. They revere the past, distrust the present, fear the future. Their faith, if they have any, is reversed, and they can only believe in what is behind them.

They regard the Fathers as great men, and think our only security is in copying after them as nearly as our degenerate nature will allow us to, and in following all the advice they have given us. When this advice is no longer applicable they are lost. Unable to return to the past, afraid to advance to the future, they resolve if possible to stay just where they are. To their vision the future is a wide waste of ruin into which all progressive people are strangely hastening. What vigor they have is employed in warning the world of its danger, and advising it to go no further. So great are the perils of being alive, that they advise all to fall into a Rip Van Winkle sleep, or what perhaps would be better, die and be embalmed.

Such moral and intellectual mummies do not always receive that charity from live men that they are entitled to. There are nutual causes for their condition, and some of them are not to blame for it. What we think we see in the world is often but a sort of reflection of what is in ourselves. The clouds and darkness we see in the heavens, may be only the dust and cobwebs and stains on our mental windows.

When a man is growing old, and becoming conscious that he has seen the best part of his life, it is but natural that he should think the world around him has also passed its prime. Unless he has strong faith in God, and the future of humanity, he will almost certainly think so.

Minds of little energy are unused to change. They do not feel strong enough to go into new investigations and shrink from the excitement of new thoughts as invalids do from variations of weather. Some are so timid, that they fear the consequences of any agitation or experiment. Stupid people cannot make much progress, and some are so intellectually indolent that they will prefer keeping their old ideas to the labor of getting new ones Examine what are called conservatives and you will find that old, feeble timid, stupid and indolent people comprise the mass of them. Prejudicel passion, or the hope of accomplishing certain ends by so doing, may for a while attach persons of a different kind to them, but they do not naturally belong there. Youth, strong vitality, courage, enterprise, intellectual activity, and religious enthusiasm are all essentially progressive.

This spirit of opposition to new things is one that all who have advanced the interests of humanity have had to contend against. Every new invention from a plow to a telegraph was cried down by it, and men said the old way was better. All intellectual improvement has had to overcome it. From the christian era till near the discovery of America, men only studied the past, the consequence was the world made no progress, When, instead of recognizing the authority of ancient philosophy, men began to open their eyes to the real world, and study facts, and deduce principles from them, the world moved.

Conservatism sometimes claims to be the especial friend and guardian of true religion. As that is a matter of ancient revelation, this claim might not seem unreasonable, but the fact is ts record here, is no better than in material and intellectual history.

It has been the chief support of all that has been against Christianity. Idolatry had no evidence, reason, or utility in its favor. The fact of its existence and antiquity were its only vindication, and its continuance must depend on the unwillingness of its votaries to make any change. Judarism was not conservative—the Pharisees preeminently so. The apostles were denounced as men who "turned the world upside down." Conservative Roman emperors persecuted the christians rather because their religion was a new one, than because they were oppressed. Jews and all sorts of idolators were allowed their religion if it was old, and had been sanctioned by national custom. Christianity was new and aggressive, causing changes, and, therefore odious. The emperor Julian, who undertook to restore the idolatry of heathen Rome seems to have been influenced rather by a desire to have things as they were in the past, than by any other motives.

The reformers from John Huss to our own days, have been met by those who did not wish to have any thing disturbed that was at the time quiet. We still have many people who believe if their opinions should be found to be incorrect, that religion would be entirely destroyed.

Politically conservatism has not done much better than in other respects. In ancient times, there were a few small nations that tried to have laws and institutions that never should change, but none of them ever amounted to much, or maintained their unchanging laws for any great length time. The most favorable example of a strictly conservative people now in existence is that of the Arabs of the desert. They have existed, that is all; and probably so much could not have been said had they been near any progressive neighbors, or had a a country that any other people ever wanted. Our American Indians are as good an illustration of the spirit as any we know of in history. They made no changes, either in the country or their mode of life. They would not clear the forest away or plow up the prairie. They would not remove a rock or a log from the river, though they had to carry their canoes around it for years.

They had their notions of honor too, and these made labor degrading to a man, and would not allow them to exchange their old customs and habits of life for those of the white man. They were not so indolent, for they were capable of great physical efforts, but while they could freeze or starve to death with great dignity, they would have regarded working for and making a good living, as much a dishonor and degradation, as our anti-reconstruction friends do the acceptance of the Military Bill. The effects of such a course are seen in their destruction.

Such are the effects of this so-called conservatism. It has tried to hinder man's material well being, opposed intellectual advancement, and been chief enemy to true religion. Politically it has failed, and has resulted in the destruction of its own adherents.

There is a true conservatism, which while it desires to preserve whatever is good, does not undertake to keep all the old rubbish that has ever been in the world. It does not use last year's almanac, merely because it has it, nor gratefully cultivate last years cotton and corn stalks on account of the good they have done. It acknowledges its indebtedness to the past, and while preserving the inherience tries to add to it something of its own earning to bequeath to the future.

It recognizes the fact that change to some extent is essential to the life of all organic beings, and life can only be preserved by complying with the laws of being and the exigences of the times. We never saw a chicken or a goose trying to wear its shell after it was hatched, nor lamenting because it was broken and gone; but but we have seen bipeds of another species trying to do what was about as wise.

The difference between the false and true in conservatism is, one looks at the form the other the life; one at the incidental, the other at the essential; one would embalm the corpse, the other would preserve the life and save the soul.

FROM the CHURCHES.

Rev. S. M. Small, of Alexandria, writes us as follows: Our church is prospering: our sunday school is flourishing and our day school is doing well, I have received a present of a bell for the church, which weighs 154 lbs. The money was raised chiefly by the sisters. I am now about to organize a Church over the river in Pineville. The Baptists are coming to our Church from all directions and I am called upon to take them in on every side. I can't get around fast enough for the Baptists to get into our connection."

Brownlow is reported 45000 ahead of his opponent as Governor of Tennessee.

General News.

Washington, August 27, 1867.—All the members of the cabinet have offered written resignations of their portfolios, and a grand flare-up seems to be incvitable. Secretary McCulloch swears he will leave the cabinet as soon as the New York whiskey frauds have been properly attended to and set to rights.

Postmaster General Randall is preparing to settle in Florida.

Jerry S. Black, formerly attorney general and secretary of state in Buchanan's administration, has been telegraphed to come here immediately.

The president yesterday, ordered General Grant to send General Hancock to relieve General Sheridan immediately, and also modified Gen. Grant's instructions so that General Hancock has power to revoke all orders issued by General Sheridan.

General Grant replied in a strong letter remonstrating against changing Hancock, as being incompatible with the interests of the public service. Also against any change in the instructions he had given to commanders of the military district, which takes from him the power vested in him by the reconstruction laws. The order, however, was issued and sent to day.

The president is determined to override General Grant. The latter will soon apply to be relieved from duty as secretary of war ad interim, as he is satisfied he cannot accomplish any good by remaining in that position.

Washington, August 27, 1867.—The friends of the government urge General Grant to remain in the position of secretary of war. The order relieving him from duty as secretary of war is hourly expected. He will refuse to promulgate the order assigning Hancock to the Fifth Military District, with power to revoke the action and appointments of Sheridan, as he urges that the reconstruction acts give him the sole authority to revise the action within the jurisdiction of the department commanders. He also argues that under the second section of the military appropriation bill of the thirty-ninth congress, all orders must pass through his office.

The Georgia registration shows a a small majority of colored voters registered in that state.

The prisoner Duncan confined to Fort Pulaski, escaped from there last week.

Washinton, August 28, 1867.—The situation here is more delicate than ever. The rupture between General Grant and Johnson, culminating in Grant's strenuous objections to Johnson's assumption of power to revise orders issued to commanders of the five military districts to be conridered by the president's friends to be insubordination.

It is thought possible that Johnson may order General Grant to be arrested.

There was an exciting cabinet meeting yesterday.

General Grant's friends argue that the reconstruction bills empower him to execute them and require him to do so. The president, however, assumes the authority to order the commanders direct, thus ignoring General Grant.

Later.—Finding opposition useless and accepting the advice of the friends of the government, to remain in the cabinet, General Grant has sent the order relieving General Sheridan, and transferring Hancock to the fifth military district, to the printer. It will be officialy promulgated to-morrow, dated to day.

Grant previously had an interview with the president, and earnestly protested against issuing the order.

Mississippi Items.

CANTON, MISS.

This place is at the present terminus of the N. O. J. & G. N. R. R. where passengers going North change cars and take those of the Miss. Central R. R. For Mississippi it is rather a lively and pleasant looking little town, and notwithstanding the hard times it is improving.

An appropriation was made last year for a church there, but it was not built. The funds being transferred to the present P. E. he visited them early in the year, and informed them that the house would be built as soon as they could get a lot to put it on. This they finally succeeded in doing some time in July, and having been informed of it we went to see them on the 16th of August. Calling for their deed we found it had been made to them as trustees of the M. E. Church South. This had been done by one or two of the trustees named in the deed, contrary, as they knew to the wish of the people, and for a long time they stubbornly refused to consent to any change, but at last finding that they would not get any house, as it was the refractory ones consented to make a new deed to trustees for the M. E. Church, whereupon we constracted for materials for a church to be 40 by 60 feet.

The white people of Canton and a small faction of the colored, have opposed the building of a church there by us. Several of them expressed their opposition to the move in very decided language to us, and made rather doleful prophecies as to the consequences that would follow in a hundred years from this time. We told them we had concluded it was a safe rule to interpret their predictions like some people's dreams by contraries. They said that the negroes were growing worse, we claimed that as a good reason for more religious influence. They asserted that they were the negroe's friends but made the admission at last, that they believed his best condition was that of slavery. Of course a man's best friends are those who would put him in his estate, and those who would re-enslave the negro, his best friends. The white people of the M. E. Church South turned their colored brethren out of their house of worship some months ago, and while offering them no assistance in building one for themselves, strangely opposed them in going to the old church. It is due to a part of the white people however to say that they advised the colored people to go to our church after they had been excluded from the other church. There was considerable talk and some excitement over the matter for two days when the opposition having about expended itself, saw the absurdity of trying to hold the colored people under the circumstances and generally gave up.

There are many colored people in that county—a large majority of voters—and we hope much from the influence of our church there.

In travelling over the country as we do one hears many things illustrative of the temper and feelings of the people. We saw one old fellow who had just returned from Honduras with an enthusiastic account of that favored land. His estimate of it seems to be rather increased by the opposition of another man who insisted that it was not a fit place for any one to go to. We often here references made to what is a puzzling problem to such as are of a religious tern of mind—the part or influence of Providence in the late war. Some think in some way it was all right, others say they think the Lord let the matter alone, and left the battle to the strong. Some are willing to admit that the South was wrong while others contend that the chivalry are suffering saints and martyrs for a righteous cause.

The anti-reconstiection papers are very bitter in their tone. They show as much opposition to the progress of events as they did three years ago. But they can do but little. The hope of controlling the negro vote has failed them. They are satisfied that the negro is unfit to vote for he does not know his best friend and he will hear what the Radicals have to say and, is so unpardonably stupid as to prefer liberty and civil rights to the bening influence of slavery.

Certain these righteous sufferers have a rather hard time. They seceeded and had to come back, fought and got whipped, fasted and prayed, and proved by the Bible that slavery was of the Lord, but it all availed nothing, appealed to the world and it condemned them, in their extremity call upon their former slaves for help and friendship, and get no large amount of either, dont know how to work, and there is no chance for them to get office. They are certainly very much in need of some one to have pity on them.

MORE REMOVALS.

Three Heads "At One Fell Swoop."

COMMON COUNCIL TO "RE-ADJUST" THE OFFICES.

The following order needs no lenghty explanation:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT, New Orleans, La., August 24, 1867.

Special Orders No. 125.

1. For reasons similar to those given in the order re-adjusting the Common Council of the city of New Orleans, and at the request of the present Common Council of that city, the following removals from office are hereby made, viz.:

Louis H. Pilie, from the office of City Surveyor.

Henry D. Ogden, from the office of City Attorney.

E. Bermudez, from the office of Assistant City Attorney.

The Common Council will, in accordance with law, fill the vacancies thereby created.

By Command of
Major Gen. P. H. Sheridan.
Gen. L. Hartsuff,
Ass't Adjt. General.

Official: GEORGE LEE, FIRST LIEUTENANT 21st U. S. Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

There will be much regret expressed by the better classes of this community at the summary "re-adjustment" of these "impediments," although the order was not unexpected. If the Council select men who will as ably and faithfully administer their trusts, the public will be fortunate.—N. O. Times.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING JURORS.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST. New Orleans, La., August 24, 1867.

Special Order No. 125.

[EXTRACT.]

2. The registration of voters for the State of Louisiana, according to the law of Congress, being complete, it is hereby ordered, that no person who is not registered in accordance with said law, shall be considered as a "duly qualified voter of the State of Louisiana." All persons duly registered as above, and no others, are consequently eligible under the laws of the State of Louisiana to serve as jurors in any of the courts of that State.

The necessary revision of the Jury lists will immediately be made by the proper officers.

All the laws of the State, respecting exemptions, etc., from Jury duty, will remain in force.

By command of
Major Gen. P. H SHERIDAN,
GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

General Dix on the Pacific Railroad

At a recent conference of commissioners in the Paris exhibition building, the following letter from General Dix was read:

A French traveler or a bale of merchandise leaving Paris for a point on the western side of China, situated at the same distance from the Equator, is now obliged to make a long circuit by the Indian Archipelago. In four years from this, when the great railway of the Pacific shall be completed, travelers will be able to reach China by a route almost direct. The 4600 kilometrers (2875 miles) of the American continent will be traversed in seven day, sduring which the territory of the United States, the assured allies of France will not be quitted for an instant. This new route will, therefore, be one of the most favorable to commerce, and to the interchange between the two hemispheres of the most precious and least cumbersome wares. Thus will be realized, after four hundred years, the great idea of Christopher Columbus. It was given to our age to find the true route to India by throwing open those of the West.

HON. ARISTIDE MARY.—We are gratified to learn of the appointment of Aristide Mary, Esq., to the position in the board of aldermen made vacant by the resignation of Jules Lapene, Esq. Mr. Mary is one of our oldest and wealthiest Creole citizens, a man of the greatest purity of character and one of our most highly educated and cultivated gentlemen. In his appointment General Sheridan gratifies not only the best educated of our rerently enfranchized citizens, but the entire loyal community of New Orleans.

Yellow Fever.

BY A LADY OF NEW ORLEANS.

There is no disease of which strangers have so much fear as of the yellow fever. There is no disease more easily managed if only taken in time and the proper course pursued. I speak from an experience of over twenty years in Louisiana. Doctors may differ as they will and try to enhance their importance by learned theories on the causes, symptoms, treatment, etc. I do not pretend to know the cause or whether it is contagious or not, although I am inclined to think it is not, but I do know the symptoms and proper mode of treatment. I have nursed hundreds of persons with yellow fever, and in all cases where the patients were taken in time and properly treated they recovered, and where a contrary course was pursued they invariably died.

SYMPTOMS.

Headache; pain in the back and bones; sometimes a slight shivering at first; then flushed face; eyes inflamed, and often blood-shot; pulse full and quick; skin dry and feverish; sometimes sickness of the stomach, but not often at the beginning of the disease.

TREATMENT.

As soon as the patient feels all or any of these symptoms, even if he should not be satisfied that he has the yellow fever, he had better be treated for it, because the treatment for yellow fever will do for other fevers, but the treatment for other fevers will not do for yellow fever. There is no time to trifle with yellow fever; a delay of a few hours has often proved fatal. "If we err, we had better err on the safe side." The first thing to be done is to undress, go to bed and cover up with blankets. Let a foot bath be prepared as quick as possible; let it be as hot as the patient can bear it, with plenty of good strong mustard in it, (at least a cup full.) Let the bath be given in a good-sized foot tub, while the patient is lying on his back in bed, so that the blanket will cover the foot tub and patient at the same time. Let the feet remain in the bath about fifteen minutes, then give the patient a simple dose of medicine, it may be castor oil or citrate of magnesia. The latter is by far pleasanter to take; a bottle of it may be taken in two doses with an interval of one or two hours. Keep up a gentle perspiration as long as the fever lasts. If the skin should become dry, give another foot-bath. Let the patient remain quiet, free from all excitement. He must be watched continually to keep him from throwing off the bed clothes. He is sometimes delirious; keep clothes wet frequently in ice water to his forehead. Let his drink be ice water, ice lemonade: do not give too much for fear of disturbing the stomach. Let no purgation be given after the first day; if the bowls are not free enough; other means can be resorted to. By all means let the patient be perfectly quiet.

The fever never entirely subsides before seventy two hours from the time it comes on. At the end of that time there is almost always sickness of the stomach; the patient must not be let to vomit, a mustard poultice put upon the chest will prevent it. Let the patient also swallow some ice pounded in a towel until it is almost like snow. If the patient is very weak when the fever leaves him, let a little stimulant be given, say a teaspoonful of the best brandy in a little ice water and white sugar, to be repeated every half hour. Quinine may also be given as a tonic with very good effect; say one or two grains at a time. Let it be remembered that while the fever lasts, viz: during the first three days no food whatever is to be given. After the fever is gone and the stomach is perfectly quiet, that is about the fourth or fifth day, if there is no relapse, food may be given but of the very lightest kind, and in the very smallest quantities; say a little rice gruel, corn starch, chicken water, beef tea, a little tea and toast, and so on. Let the patient not attempt to get up before the eight day no matter how well he feels, for a relapse is nearly always fatal, and with the yellow fever one suffers so little that he thinks that he is well, when he is not.

I do not pretend to say that we should be independent of a physician. Let one be sent for by all means where the parties are able, but let the physician be one who has lived in a southern climate long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the diseases of the south, otherwise you had better have none. If these simple remedies are applied there is not the slightest danger but that the patient will recover.

I would observe, also, that the patient must be kept cheerful as possible without being excited. Let the nurse not be changed if it can be avoided. Everybody who knows anything of yellow fever knows there is more in good nursing than there is in doctoring. M.

SHERIDAN'S REMOVAL.

THE CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT AND GEN. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C. Aug. 17, 1867.

Dear Sir—Before you issue instructions to carry into effect the enclosed order, I would be pleased to hear any suggestions you may deem necessary respecting the assignments to which the order refers. Yours truly,

ANDREW JOHNSON.

Gen. U S GRANT,
Secretary of War, ad interim

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C. Aug. 17, 1867.

Maj. Gen. Geo. H. Thomas is hereby assigned to the command of the Fifth Military District, created by the act of Congress passed on the 2nd day of March, 1867.

Maj. Gen. P. H. Sheridan is hereby assigned to the command of the Department of the Missouri.

Major Gen. Winfield S. Hancock is hereby assigned to the command of the Deparment of Comberland.

The Secretary of war ad interim will give the necessary instructions to carry this order into effect.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, D. C. August 17, 1867.

His Excellency Andrew Johnson, President of the United States:

Sir—I am in receipt of your order of this date, directing the assignment of Gen. G. H. Thomas to the command of the Fifth Military District, General Sheridan to the department of the Missouri, and Gen. Hancock to the department of the Cumberland. Also your note of this date enclosing these instructions, saying, "before you issue instructions to carry into effect the inclosed order, I would be pleased to hear any suggestions you may deem necessary respecting the assignments to which the order refers."

I am pleased to avail myself of this invitation to urge, earnestly urge, urge in the name of the patriotic people who have sacrificed hundreds of thousands of loyal lives and thousands of millions of treasure to preserve the integrity and union of this country, that this order be not insisted upon. It is unmistakably the expressed wish of the country that Gen. Sheridan should not be removed from his present command. This is a republic, where the will of the people is the law of the land. I beg that their voice may be heard. General Sheridan has performed his civil duties faithfully and intelligently. His removal will only be regarded as an effort to defeat the laws of Congress. It will be interpreted by the un-reconstructed element in the South—those who did all they could to break up this government by arms, and now wish to be the only element consulted as to the method of restoring order—as triumph. It will embolden them to renewed opposition to the will of the loyal masses, believing that they have the executive with them.

The services of Gen. Thomas in battling for the Union entitles him to some consideration. He has repeatedly entered his protest against being assigned to either of the five military districts, and especially to being assigned to relieve Gen. Sheridan.

Gen. Hancock ought not to be removed from where he is. His department is a complicated one, which will take a new commander some time to become acquainted with. There are military reasons, pecuniary reasons, and, above all, patriotic reasons why this order should not be insisted on.

I beg to refer to a letter marked "private," which I wrote to the President when first consulted on the subject of the change in the war department. It bears upon the subject of this removal, and I had hoped would have prevented it.

I have the honor to be, with great respect your obedient servant.

U. S. GRANT, Gen. U. S. A.
Secretary of War, ad interim.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, August 19, 1867.

GENERAL—I have received your communication of the 17th inst., and thank you for the promptness with which you have submitted your views, respecting the assignments directed in my order of that date. When I stated in my unofficial communication of the 17th that I would be pleased to hear any suggestions you might deem necessary upon the subject, it was not my intention to ask from you a formal report, but rather to write a verbal statement of any reasons affecting the public interests, which in our opinion, would render the order inexpedient. Inasmuch, however, as you have embodied your suggestions in a written communication, it is proper that I should make some reply. You earnestly urge that the order be not insisted on remarking that it is unmistakably the expressed wish of the country, that Gen. Sheridan should not be removed from his present command.

While I am cognizant of the efforts that have been made to retain General Sheridan in command of the Fifth Military District, I am not aware that the question has ever been submitted to the people themselves for determination. It certainly would be unjust to the army to assume that in the opinion of the nation, he alone is capable of commanding the States of Louisiana and Texas, and that were he, for any cause, removed, no other general in the military service of the United States would be competent to fill his place. General Thomas, whom I have designated as his successor, is well known to the country, having won high and honoroble distinction in the field. He has since, in the execution of the responsible duties of a department commander, exhibited great ability, sound discretion and stirling patriotism. He has not failed under the most trying circumstances, to enforce the laws, to preserve order, to encourage the restoration of civil authority and to promote as far as possible a spirit of reconciliation. His administration to the department of the Cumberland will certainly compare most favorably with that of Gen. Sheridan in the Fifth Military District. There affairs appear to be in a disturbed condition, and a bitter feeling of antagonism seems to have resulted from General Sheridan's management. He has rendered himself exceedingly obnoxious by the manner in which he has exercised even the powers conferred by Congress and still more so, by a resort to authority not granted by law, nor necessary to its faithful and efficient execution. His rule, has, in fact, been one of absolute tyranny without reference to the principles of our government, or the nature of our free institutions.

The state of affairs which has resulted from the course he has pursued, has seriously interfered with a harmonious, satisfactory and speedy execution of the acts of Congress, and is alone sufficient to justify a change. His removal, therefore, cannot be regarded as an effort to defeat the laws of Congress, for the object is to facilitate their execution through an officer who has never failed to obey the statutes of the land, and to exact within his jurisdiction a like obedience from others. It cannot be interpreted by the unreconstruction element in the South, those who did all they could to break up this government by arms, and now wish to be the only element consulted as to the method of restoring order, as a triumph, for as intelligent men they must know that the mere change of military commanders cannot alter the law, and that General Thomas will be as much bound by its requirements as General Sheridan. It cannot embolden them to renewed opposition to the will of the loyal masses, believing that they have the executive with them, for they are perfectly familiar with the antecedents of the President, and know that he has not obstructed the faithful execution of any act of Congress.

No one, as you are aware, has a higher appreciation than myself of the services of General Thomas, and no one would be less inclined to assign him to a command not entirely to his wishes. Knowing him as well as I do, I cannot think that he will hesitate for a moment to obey any order, having in view a complete and speedy restoration of the Union, in the preservation of which he has rendered such important and valuable services.

Gen. Hancock, known to the whole country as a gallant, able and patriotic soldier, will, I have no doubt, sustain his high reputation in any position to which he may be assigned. If, as you observe, the department which he will leave, is a complicated one, I feel confident that under the guidance and instruction of Gen. Sherman, Gen. Sheridan will soon become familiar with its necessities, and will avail himself of the opportunity afforded by the Indian troubles, for the display of the energy, enterprise and daring, which gave him so enviable a reputation during our recent civil struggle.

In assuming that it is the expressed wish of the people that Gen. Sheridan should not be removed from his present command, you remark that "this is a republic where the will of the people is the law of the land," and beg "that their voice may be heard." This is indeed a republic, based however, upon a written Constitution. That Constitution is the combined and expressed will of the people, and their voice is law when reflected in the mannner which that instrument prescribes. While one of its provisions makes the President commander in chief of the army and navy, another requires that he shall take care that the law be faithfully executed.

Believing that a change in the command of the fifth military district is absolutely necessary for a faithful execution of the laws, I have issued the order which is the subject of this correspondence, and in thus exercising a power that inheres in the executve under the Constitution as commander in chief of the military and naval forces, I am discharging a duty required of me by the will of the nation as formally declared in the supreme law of the land.

By his oath the executive is bound, to the best of his ability, to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution; and although in times of great excitement it may be lost to public view, it is his duty, without regard to the consequences to himself, to hold sacrad, and to enforce any and all of its provisions. Any other course would lead to the destruction of the republic, for the constitution once abolished, there would be no Congress for the exercise of legislative powers; no executive to see that the laws are faithfully executed; no judiciary to afford to the citizen protection for life, limb and property. Usurpation would inevitably follow, and a despotism be fixed upon the people in violation of their combined and expressed will.

In conclusion, I fail to perceive any military, pecuniary or patriotic reasons why this order should not be carried into effect. You will remember that, in the first instance, I did not consider Gen. Sheridan the most suitable for the command of the fifth military district. Time has strengthened my convictions upon this point, and has led me to the conclusion that patriotic considerations demand that he should be superseded by an officer who, while he will faithfully execute the law, will at the same time, give more general satisfaction to the whole people, white and black, North and South.

I am, Genral, very rerpectfully yours,
ANDREW JOHNSON.

Gen. U. S. GRANT,
Secretaryof War ad interim.

ADDRESS OF DR. J. WHITE.

To the Citizens of New Orleans:

My past political proclivities prove my admiration of the grand principle enunciated in the Declaration of Independence—"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." On these truths must all republican governments live and flourish, or a grinding aristocracy and despotism enslave the masses of all races. Hence the paramount necessity of every human being—from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean—being able, at least, to read and write intelligibly, in order to vindicate his own and the rights of others.

Our Government, early in its inception, invited immigration and the oppressed of all nations to our shores—implying all the political and social rights of our new-born Republic guaranteed to the native born. The rights of foreigners, which have been discussed in our country for thirty years, with me has been the cardinal principle; no matter whether a man came across the Atlantic ocean or the Mississippi river—if his head and heart are right, he is entitled equally with myself to all the rights and blessings of the Republic; and such was my invariable reply to my most ardent friends whenever they called on me to engage in the "Know-Nothing" cause.

In the same spirit does my judgment and my heart revolt against all political prejudices and crusades on account of Church or religious views. Universal freedom and liberty of all to worship God according to the dictates of his own judgment and conscience, is my creed.

I believe it should be in the heart of every Union man to encourage the restoration to citizenship in all its blessings, the erring—with the least possible delay consistent with the safety and the best interests of the nation. With this generous spirit on the part of Unionists, I believe there will be enough true in that class to discountenance and frown down all factionists and disturbers of the peace of the State.

My heart ardently responds to every article in the platform of the late Republican State Convention, and, if honored with a seat in the Convention for framing the fundamental laws of this State, the principles laid down in that platform will be faithfully regarded by me. But, fellow-citizens, let us hope, in God, that the time may speedily come when justice shall prevail, and that the only question, with either race, shall be, "Is the candidate for office capable—is he honest?" And let us add the New Orleans Republican's "Three Solid Planks (to) for the Republican Platform: REBUILDING OF THE LEVEES BY NATIONAL AID; ABOLITION OF THE COTTON TAX; and SUGAR INTERESTS OF THE STATE TO BE PROTECTED AND FOSTERED." And, further add, enlarged and grand efforts in the promotion of all the scientific, professional and industrial interests of our beloved State.

Depress no human being. Elevate all—politically and socially—to the highest plane which GOD, Education and Virtue have prepared them for.

I have served my country faithfully in two wars; spent a fortune in men and money, furnished in the achievement of the independence of Texas and her liberation from Mexican bondage and oppression. These services were acknowledged by both Houses of the Congress of the Lone Star, in terms most gratifying to me, and which are well remembered by many citizens of the present day.

The results of that contest relieved our State from the embarrassments consequent to the great extent of border boundary, and rendered our city CENTRAL in the immense fields of agriculture and commerce; in fact, in all the social, professional and business departments of life, which are of incalculable benefit to New Orleans, to our State, and to the Union. But justice to myself renders it proper for me to say here, that when contending for the freedom of Texas from Mexican bondage and oppression, I did not dream that there was to be engrafted in the fundamental laws of the "Republic" the institution which has deluged the land in rivers of precious blood.

How far these results, and my acts and gratification, deserve the consideration of my fellow citizens of New Orleans, they are the best and proper judges.

Providence has bounded our nation on the oceans—shaped the lakes, rivers, varied soils and climates—let man do what he may, exchange of commodities, reciprocation of interests and brotherhood—all are laws of that Providence, and are as fixed as the stars in the heavens. And Louisiana must shape her Constitution, and all her institutions and thoughts, in harmony with those decrees of Nature.

We cannot be satisfied with a Constitution that does not shed lustre and glory on Louisiana—give influence and inspiration to all the Southern States, and gladden the hearts and challenge the admiration of the North and west;—LOUISIANA in the heart of the Union, shining out—the beacon of universal liberty and freedom for the globe.

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes. except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is, however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be emminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath-school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable, we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes. We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr. Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an originrl effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence af the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee; though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume'a famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday-school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, tc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its acctions and effects, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression, and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them, Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

[Original.]

For the New Orleans Advocate.

"PEACE—MY PEACE."

There is a scene, that almost like a well
Remembered vision seems, so vividly
The pen of the "Beloved Disciple" has Portrayed its thrilling details; yet the words
Of Jesus most absorb the one, who, on His breast reclining, heard and treasured them.

The supper being ended, and upon
His work mysterious the traitor gone,
Those earnest countenances now are turned
To Him, whom trustingly they've followed, yet
Have not His mission fully understood.
A dire calamity is threatening; this
They comprehend, for shadows gather round
Their hearts, portending evil to their Lord.
A great redemption for the fallen house
Of David, they had hoped would be by Him Wrought out; but now they doubt, and questionings
Aside within their minds, a tumult strange
Arousing there.

The Saviour reads their thoughts,
And He, who, with a word, has calmed the sea,
With angry roar resounding, knows full well
The springs of human passion. Listen as
In tender pity, thus He soothes their fears,
Correcting first the error that He came
An earthly kingdom to establish, He Assures them that the hour of darkness shall
His triumph be; for, "Now, the Son of man
Is glorified, and God is glorified
In Him." In eager attitude they sit:
A deeper sadness on each face appears,
As, "Little children, yet a little while
I am with you," is the unfolding of
This farewell message. Who can fathom all
The depth of love, that prompted agony
Like that endured in lone Gethsemane?
Yet he, who left the radiant realms above,
Thus to redeem a lost, sin-ruined world,
This "new commandment" gives—"That ye love one Another, as I have loved you." By this Shall all, that ye are my disciples, know—
O, may the teachings of the Master with His followers abide, enstamping on Each heart the seal of its discipleship—
This wondrous love!
Inquisitive, impulsive Peter, soon
This converse by a question interrupts:
"Lord, whither goest thou?" How gently is The answer giv'n. "Thou canst not follow
now,
But thou shalt follow afterwards." This does
Not Simon satisfy: "Lord, why can not
I follow thee? I will lay down my life
For thy sake." Only mild reproof escapes
The Savior's lips, and "bitterly" upon
The early morrow, Peter mourns his rash Assurance. Well he learns, in after years,
'Mid suffering and toil for Jesus' sake,
The lesson of humility; and true,
Though zealous to a fault, perceives, at last,
The import of the prophecy—"But thou Shalt follow afterwards."

"Let not your heart
Be troubled."—Precious words! how sweetly o'er
Those weary, care-tossed spirits comes the hush
Of childlike trustfulness. The glories of
The "many mansions," where a "place" shall be Prepared, and they may ever hearken to
The music of the Master's voice, hold each
Intent. But Thomas sees not clearly yet,
Through all the intervening road, and,
"Lord,
How can we know the way?" he asks. O, how
The clouds disperse, and all the vista of
The future glows with light divine! "I am
The way, the truth, the life!" And, Thomas,
now
We thank thee for the thoughtful inquiry,
And looking unto Jesus, safely tread
The path that Homeward leads.

Most patiently
Each questioner is answered, but the truth
Of Christ's omnipotence, His oneness with
The Father seems most forcibly impressed.
"He that hath seen me, hath the Father seen,"
"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my Name I will do." That, surely, Philip, must Suffice to silence ev'ry doubt; yet 'tis
Not strange that finite minds should fail to grasp
The scheme sublime of man's salvation. He
Who came to consummate the plan, and by
His death, perfect the offering for sin,
Would arm His loved ones well, for conflict,
and
For victory. The promise that to them
The Comforter shall come, and with them e'er
Abide, is full of consolation, still.
They wonder, and another asks, "How is
It, Lord, that thou wilt manifest thyself
To us, and not unto the world?"
Not difficult is the solution of
The mystery. The Master knows His own,
And with His Father, will a permanent
Abode take up in contrite, loving hearts,
The Holy Spirit revelations of
The "Things prepared" shall make, and fully bring
To their remembrance all the blessedness
Of sitting at the Saviour's feet.

And yet,
The crowning bliss, the heritage, that to
Their hearts, the living presence of their
Lord
Shall e'er reveal, is, "Peace I leave with you,
My peace." Those tried disciples well have caught
The spirit of their teacher; they have seen
How smoothly flowed the under current of His life, how ever roughly tempests broke
Upon its surface; and they prize this gift
Of infinite consoling, for they know
Its deep repose no storm of earth can move.

But have "The Twelve" the sole inheritance
Of this last testament? 'Tis not for these Alone, but them which shall believe, that they May all be one. BELLE.

wo Buckets.

A great deal of trouble is "borrowed" by the habit of looking at things "wrong end foremost":

"How disconsolate you look!" said a bucket to his fellow-bucket, as they were going to the well.

"Ah!" replied the other, "I was reflecting on the uselessness of our being filled; for let us go away ever so full, we always come back empty."

"Dear me! how strange to look at it in that way," said the bucket. "Now I enjoy the thought that however empty we come, we always go away full. Only look at it in that light, and you'll be as cheerful as I am."

FUNERAL OF J. A. WRIGHT.

Services at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, on Thursday, 22d of August, 1867.

The remains of ex-Governor Wright, late minister of the United States to the court of Prussia, having been embalmed at Berlin, were brought to this country, and on arriving were deposited in the church where they remained until Thursday, the 22d instant. The coffin or box that contained the casket was covered with black cloth and tastefully enveloped in a rich silken American flag—the stars and stripes he loved so well—which was looped up gracefully with rosettes of black crape, producing a very beautiful effect. A crown of the rarest flowers, surmounted by a small cross exquisitely arranged, was placed on the head of the coffin, while wreaths of the most fragrant tea roses and camelias filled the entire cover—love's offering.

The church was not crowded, as it would have been, had the rain not fallen in almost torrents during the day up to the hour for service. At three o'clock the officiating clergymen entered, led by the Rev. Bishop Janes, followed by pall-bearers; then came the family and friends of the deceased, and the procession moved up the aisle and assumed their various places. The twin son and daughter occupied a place on either side of Mrs. Wright, the widowed mother, who was attired in the deepest mourning. The services opened with an excellent rendering of that beautiful anthem, "I heard a voice from heaven, etc." A portion of scripture was then read by Dr. Janes, followed by another appropriate hymn sung by the choir. Dr. Foster offered a very earnest and exceedingly beautiful prayer and peculiarly impressive, while commending the widow and the fatherless to the care of our Heavenly Father—praying that the widow's life might not be henceforth sad, but that she might be cheerful and very happy, awaiting the close of her earthly pilgrimage, and then, with him, receive a crown of immortal glory; also that the children might partake of the excellency of their father's character, and grow up to fill his place. Dr. Holdrich next read a very impressive chapter from the new testament. The following letter was then read by Dr. McClintock:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, inviting the president of the United States and the secretary of state to attend the funeral of the late Governor Joseph A. Wright, recently minister of the United States to the court of Prussia. The president directs me to express his profound sympathy with the friends of the deceased, on account of the great loss which they and the country have sustained in the death of that distinguished man, and his regret that he is unable to be present at the funeral.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
W. H. SEWARD.

The bishop then ascended the pulpit and delivered the following

FUNERAL ORATION:

Probation invests with interest and importance human conduct. Judgment and retribution give solemnity to death. How these truths press themselves upon our attention at this hour! Our friend has passed from our sight. In our thoughts we follow him to the spirit world. We see him as he enters upon that felicity, which is not only to continue, but to increase, eternally. How the vastness of that destiny rises upon our minds—an immortal, rational and spiritual being partaking the nature, and enjoying the full fruition of his God. Such is the view of christianity. As our conduct in this probationary state secures to us through the atonement and mediation of Christ, and the transforming power of the Holy Ghost, an affinity for the heavenly world, or by our wicked works alienates us from God and disqualifies us for this inheritance, and thus absolutely determines our eternal destiny, how grave are all our actions, how important our conduct, how immense the interests we secure or forfeit! Oh, who can trifle with eternal things? How momentous is that event which cuts us off from all further opportunity of obtaining pardon or transformation, and after which he that is filthy shall be filthy still, and he that is holy shall be holy still, which arraigns the subject before his eternal judge. How solemn an event is this! How perfect should be our preparation for it! How terrible the irretrievable disaster of being overtaken by it unprepared; how blessed a result when it finds us ready! The principles we have thus briefly stated were hopefully and impressively illustrated in the life and death of our deceased friend. In life he attended to life's great duties and secured life's great interests. We think, therefore, that his destiny, and character and death are worthy of our consideration. The Hon. Joseph A. Wright was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania. When about eight years of age he and his parents emigrated to Indiana. After faithfully improving the few educational advantages which his home and neighborhood afforded, he spent some time at the Indiana state university, supporting himself by manual labor—the true way for every young man who aspires to a classical education and a professional life. At the age of nineteen he entered upon the study of the law. On admission to the bar he formed a partnership with one of the most distinguished lawyers of the state, to whom he always subsequently acknowledged his great indebtedness, and for whom he ever cherished a very affectionate regard. In 1833, when only twenty-three years of age, he was elected to the state legislature, and was a member of that body until 1838, at which time he was appointed district attorney for the seventh judicial district of Indiana. In 1840 he was elected to the state senate. In 1843 he was elected a member of the national congress and in 1849 he was chosen governor of Indiana, and re-elected in 1853. After having served his state as chief magistrate for eight years with great acceptability and usefulness, in 1857 he was appointed minister to the court of Prussia by president Buchanan. In 1652 he was appointed United States senator to fill the unexpired term of an expelled senator. In 1863 he was appointed by president Lincoln commissioner to the Hamburg exposition. In 1865 president Johnson nominated him for the second time minister to Prussia, the nomination being unanimously confirmed by the senate. While in the faithful discharge of the duties of this post of honor and duty, he closed his brilliant earthly career. Governor Wright was a man of intelligence, energy, self-reliance and perseverance. His success in life abundantly proves this. As a friend he was affectionate, sincere, generous and constant. These characteristics attached his friends to him with corresponding fervor and fidelity. He was a true philanthropist. He sympathized in all the interests of humanity. In him, whether in public or private life, human want or human woe ever found in his heart a ready response, and, as far as possible, relief from his hand. Regarding intemperance as one of the most destructive vices of the land, he identified himself most fully with the temperance reform, and by example and by public addresses, and by personal influence in every way in his power, sought to promote that great movement. He was a patriot and loved his country. In all the offices he held in the state and national governments he earnestly and honestly sought the public good. He was incapable of bribery. When governor of Indiana a bribe of fifty thousand dollars was offered him if he would give his official sanction to a certain railroad grant. He indignantly spurned the bribe. In his last illness he said, "if there is anything for which I thank God it is that I have never received a bribe nor done violence to my conscientious convictions of duty in any public position." Happy the public man who in his dying hours can repeat that declaration. His genuine philanthropy, his manifested interest in the people, and his stern integrity were the principal elements of his long continued popularity. Governor Wright was a christian. When about twenty-six years of age, while in a Methodist meeting one evening, he fully determined to give his heart promptly to God and become a true disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ. He went home with this resolve firmly fixed in his mind, retiring to a private room, humbled himself before God, and implored mercy in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Before the break of day his earnest penitent prayers were heard, and he rejoiced in the salvation of divine grace. The Bishop then gave some interesting religious experiences of the deceased, and concluded with a touching and vivid picture of the calm and hopeful manner in which he died.

At the close of the Bishop's address, Dr. Durbin, the honored secretary of our missionary society, gave some very interesting additional particulars as to the character of Governor Wright, saying he should ever be at a loss which to admire most, our honored friend as a statesman or a christian gentleman. As a statesman, he was noble and patriotic; as a christian, zealous and devout. He referred very eloquently to his devotion to the Sunday school, both in this country and in Europe, having himself been witness of the fruit of his labors in this department both at home and abroad. Just before pronouncing the benediction, Dr. McClintock read a letter addressed to the bereaved family immediately on learning of the death of Minister Wright, expressive of the deep sympathy of the king and his court, and signed by Count Bismarck.

At the close of these very interesting services the congregation were allowed to pass and look at the coffin (but not on the face), that contained the precious dust of one which the country and the church delighted to honor. On the lid of the coffin they read this simple inscription:

JOSEPH A. WRIGHT,
BORN APRIL 17, 1810.
Died April 11, 1867, at Berlin, Prussia,
Aged 57 years.

As the coffin lid had been necessarily fastened down, the features of the deceased were not visible.

The remains were interred the next morning, at Greenwood cemetery, where Governor Wright secured a lot, for the use of himself and family, some time prior to his death. The following gentlemen acted as pall bearers: Major General Vodges, Major General Butterfield, M. Morgan, Austin Baldwin, Daniel Drew, William B. Skidmore, Oliver Hoyt, J. D. Lanier, J. B. Cornell, D. L. Ross and A. V. Stout.

GENERAL BUSSEY.

To any one of the next generation who may incidentally fall upon this number of THE ANNALS,—if it should so happen,—the foregoing few sentences will no doubt sound strangely. That a writer of this day, in representing the character and actions of a public man from the true and loyal State of Iowa, should deem it necessary in defining his political position at the opening of the great contest in which the integrity of the Union, and even life of the government, was involved, to mention that his subject joined the friends of the government in measures for its defence against its enemies, will be regarded, no doubt, as at least a supererogate explanation. For it is not probable that the next or any future generation of Iowans will properly appreciate the true status of parties, or the exact temper of the people of those times, which to be appreciated needs to have been felt. That there could at such a time have remained in life any considerable force of a grand old party organization, which had been potent in influence, and had become venerable as one of the ancient pillars of the republic, to now stand passive through the fearful crisis, with the calm, deliberate, unfeeling expression, as their motto: "It is an abolition war; let them fight it out; Democrats have nothing to do with it," will not be readily comprehended. Nor was a "masterly inactivity" in behalf of the country always the state of these partisans: at times, and at certain points, a bitter feeling was developed which led to acts of opposition. Davis county was one of those points, and Senator Bussey, on his return from the extra session of the legislature, where he had distinguished himself by this bold and unequivocal position in favor of his country, and as a member of the military committee of the senate, labored to place the state in a position to perform her share of the work of suppressing the rebellion, was advised by his party, that he had "misrepresented his constituents," given "aid and comfort to an abolition war, and was no longer worthy of fellowship as a democrat," and was thus formally read out of the party for no crime but loyalty to the country.

Governor Kirkwood, who was laboring entirely to place the state on an ample war-footing, and who was watching carefully the actions of the leading citizens for the purpose of selecting efficient co-workers for responsible positions, had not failed to notice the intelligence and energy with which this young senator had demeaned himself throughout since the opening of the war, sent him a commission as aide-de-camp with rank of lieutenant colonel, and assigned him to the control of the militia of the southeast part of the state.

At this time, the rebels in northeast Missouri were actively engaged in hostilities against the government, and maintained a menacing attitude toward the frontiers of Iowa, for purposes of plunder. Col. Bussey immediately occupied himself in arming the militia of his district and preparing them for defence of the border. A collision of these two irregular forces finally occurred at Athens, where fifteen hundred rebels, under command of General Martin Green, attacked about four hundred militia, under command of Colonel David Moon, and were repulsed.

About this time Colonel Bussey was authorized by the United States government to raise a regiment of cavalry, which he set about doing at once with his usual energy and success; and by the 20th of August had his regiment, the 3d Iowa cavaly, in rendezvous, having been commissioned its colonel on the 10th of the same month.

Early in February, 1862, he was ordered from Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., to Rolla; a few days afterward to Springfield to join General Curtis; arriving at Springfield, found Curtis already in pursuit of Price toward the Arkansas border. Stimulated by the rumors of an approaching battle, he pushed forward and overtook Curtis at Sugar Grove, having marched two hundred miles in four days. Here he at once became incorporated into the army of the southwest, and was assigned the command of a brigade of cavalry.

Colonel Bussey's first battle was that fierce and famous encounter at Pea Ridge, where he commanded his brigade and did efficient service, establishing his reputation at once as a brave and discreet officer, and secured the confidence of the troops under his command and also of his commanding general.

Throughout the several encounters of this hotly contested and protracted battle the 3d Iowa behaved gallantly. Like their colonel, it was their first time under fire, and probably the hardest fought battle that the regiment ever witnessed, but they came through nobly. A portion of General Bussey's command—the Benton and Fremont hussars—however, are said to have acted badly in this battle. On two occasions, in fighting which occurred in the vicinity of Leetown, during some of the counter movements of General Curtis to resist a flank attack of Van Dorn, they broke and fled without firing a gun. The disastrous result of their cowardice, however, was prevented by the steadiness and courage of the gallant 3d Iowa and the balance of the brigade, under the immediate direction of their intrepid leader. After the defeat of the enemy, Colonel Bussey's command was among the pursuing forces that followed them to their strongholds among the Boston Mountains.

THE AMERICANS AT THE WORLD'S EXPOSITION.—It is stated in the Pall-Mall Gazette, London, that out of five hundred and twenty-four American Exhibitors in the Paris exposition, two hundred and sixty-two have received rewards, among which were four grand prizes, ten decorations, seventeen gold medals, over sixty silver medals, and the rest bronze and honorable mention.

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

COMMON SCHOOLS IN LIBERIA.—From the beginning of our missions in Africa we have taken great interest in common schools. For years a goodly number of common schools have been maintained at the expense of the Missionary Society. But it was found difficult to obtain well qualified teachers for them all. The policy was adopted some years ago of employing only such teachers as were fairly qualified. This reduced the number of schools, but improved their character. Bishop Roberts, nnder date of June 17, 1867, says they have now a corps of teachers of good capacity, and equal to the demand of turning out youths fitted for future usefulness. We judge this to be a good sign.

A FADING FLOWER.—Here is a letter from George Rowland Howe, (Si Tiong Ngwong,) one of the recent graduates of our boys' boarding school, dated Foochow, China, May 10. It is addressed to Miss Jenkins, late of New York, now of New Jersey, who has been at charges for his education.

Your unworthy pupil begs to inform you, the American lady, that on the 15th day, third moon of this year, (April 19, 1867,) I completed my course of study in the boys' boarding school, under the direction of the Methodist mission in Foochow.

At this time I remember that for this opportunity of obtaining an education during these eight years, I am indebted to your christian liberality in supplying the requisite funds, thus giving me the privilege of learning the doctrines of the Savior, entering the Church, and knowing how to thank God for his abounding grace to me.

I truly rejoice that God has brought me to see this day; and yet I have sorrow, because during the past two years my body has been very feeble, so that it seems I shall never be able to enjoy rest in this life, or be able to make known the gospel to others. Will you kindly aid me by your prayers, and ask God to pardon all my sins? May I trouble you, also, to present my christian salutations to your pastors and all your christian friends? The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you! Amen.

Rev. Dr. Maclay, the superintendent of our missions, writes in relation to this young man: "From childhood he has been feeble, though at intervals he would seem to outgrow his ailment. During the past two years, however, his disease has increased upon him so as to interfere with his studies, and cause him much suffering. At present he is quite feeble, though there is still a hope that he may yet enjoy a good degree of health. But though not permitted to realize all your hopes in the case of this young brother, you may be assured, my dear sister, that in this instance your labor has not been in vain in the Lord. Through your liberality he has acquired a large amount of christian knowledge, and, best of all, he has become a child of God. The grace of God is his support and comfort, and he rejoices in the thought that when the 'earthly house' is dissolved, he shall have a 'building of God,' 'eternal in the heavens.' I trust you will continue to pray for him, and on behalf of this mission. I thank you for the aid you have given us in this great work." Since the above was written we have received another letter from Dr. Maclay, saying that the young man had departed this life happy in the Lord.

TELL THE CHILDREN.—There are some juvenile missionary friends out in Pennsylvania, who, though belonging to a very small society, as they say, (forgetting for a moment they are about one million strong,) are anxious all their young friends should know how they earn missionary money, and how they think a great number of others might do. "Last Sabbath several little scholars paid in $1 40, made by gathering berries and selling them. They further say, let all the children be ready for next year, and if the parents will encourage them, they would bring in a larger sum than we dare mention, and all for foreign missions."

SMALL, BUT FRUITFUL.—A New Hampshire pastor says of his appointment that it is the banner charge of the conference, having given over $2 50 per member to the cause of missions.

THE PROMISE.—The promise there is in the case of youth within our reach who, in addition to their knowledge of the Bulgarian, understand the English, French, Greek, Turkish, and Russian. Do we not look for the happiest results in the case of converts from among such youth, and should we not encourage ourselves to pray that these may be brought to Christ our Lord?

IN THE BEGINNING.—Where should mothers look for light but in the word of God! Our missionary recently gone to China said, in a brief account which he gave of his religious life and convictions, that he was indebted to his mother for the beginning of his religious life and for the beginning of his knowledge of his letters to her care, who taught him his A B C's from her family Bible!

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.—Rev. N. L. Brakeman, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, under date of August 7, writes as follows:

I have just received a letter from Rev. James Hayward, preacher in charge at Baton Rouge, in which he says: "I have just returned from Stony Point, an appointment twenty miles from this place, where Brother Solomon Montgomery is doing a good work. I am happy to say they are in their new church. It is as good as ours in Baton Rouge and almost as large. So far it has cost the people only $600. Bro. Montgomery built the house mostly at his own expense. I spent the Sabbath with him, preached twice, baptized six persons, and received nine into the church."

Mr. Hayward closes his letter in these exultant words: "Brother B., the old mother church is taking the wings of the morning, and she will fly through the earth in spite of men or devils. And we say, amen! God speed her flight!"

Last week we purchased, in New Orleans, on Sixth street, a church, 30 by 60 feet, and two lots of ground, for the sum of $5,000, paying $1,000 down, and having four years in which to pay the rest—$1,000 each year, at eight per cent. interest. This property was purchased for the society known in the list of appointments as St. Mary's street, Rev. A. C. M'Donald, pastor. The church was reopened last Sabbath under very favorable auspices. Thus does the ark of our beloved Methodism move forward in city and country in the New Orleans district. This gives us eleven houses of worship, the fruit thus far of this year's toil.

The lecture-room of the Ames M. E. Church is completed, and on next Sabbath, the Lord willing, it will be dedicated, and the church will worship there henceforth till the main building is completed, which will be about the 1st of October.

The Powers of the General.

There is a fear in the minds of some people that President Johnson may remove Grant from the head of the army. Congress foresaw the possibility of such a thing, and prevented it at the last session by adding to the army appropriation bill a clause providing that: 1. The headquarters of the army shall be in the city of Washington. 2. All orders and instructions relating to military operations, issued by the President or Secretary of War, shall be issued through the general of the army, and in case of his disability, through the next in rank. 3. The general of the army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate; and "any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void, and any officers who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and any officer of the army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued, contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction."

This act was approved by the President under protest, the section we have quoted being the one to which he objected. It will be noticed that the language is more explicit than that of the tenure of office bill, under which civil officers are protected. By evasion and indirect manœuvring Mr. Johnson got Mr. Stanton out of the cabinet; but the head of the army is beyond his reach—the President is positively forbidden to remove that officer without the consent of the senate. Still further to protect the district commanders from the meddling of the President, the law compels Mr. Johnson to transmit his orders and directions through the general, and declares void any order not so transmitted. Mr. Johnson's war paper is not negotiable until it has the indorsement of General Grant.—New York Tribune.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1867.

WHOM SHALL WE SEND TO THE CONVENTION.

Ninety-eight citizens are to be elected during the present month by the people of Louisiana, to compose the Convention to frame a new Constitution for our State. Upon the character and ability of the delegates chosen, much will depend. Unquestionably, they should not only be Unionist, but Republicans; Republicans tried in the fire, who have a record so clean, that the focal light of noon will reveal no dark spot of treason and no stain of pusilanimity when the emissaries of Davis or of Johnson ruled our State. Fully sympathising in the issues of the war, and earnest supporters of the Congressional plan of reconstruction, such men only are competend to frame the organic law for the new State of Louisiana. Such men should be sought for and triumphantly elected by the people. Middle men won't do. The duties of the hour demand men who are not afraid of the extreme right, and who, when the hour of duty comes will not flinch from their responsabilities.

Evidently, they should be well informed and somewhat versed in the forms of law; especially should they understand the wants of the times, and particularly what the new order of things demands. We do not say that they shall all be men of liberal education, for this were to impose a barrier against the election of some of our newly enfranchised citizens whom we hope to see in that Convention; yet those of this class who may be chosen, should be men of sound judgement and good common sense. The questions which will come up for deliberation will be eminently practical in their character, and will demand a practical judgment for their consideration.

But scarcely less important is the moral character of the delegates to be elected. Under any circumstances, this would be a weighty consideration, but more so now. The acts of this Convention will be judged by the moral sense of the North, as well as the political judgment of Congress. The weightier subjects which will be brought forward will be essentially moral; such as education, public charities, and the equal and just rights of all citizens, without distinction of race or color. No one familiar with its history can doubt for a solitary moment, that had the Convention of '64 possessed a higher morality—had the upright and temperate Howell been elected president of that Convention instead of the morally unfit Durell—had there been less drunkennes among the delegates, less extravagance for wines, liquors and cigars and less official stealing, the Constitution framed by that Convention would have been more acceptable to Congress and the country. But the gross immoralities practiced by many of its leading members sealed the doom of that body in the eyes of the nation. The moral character of the men who composed the Convention of 1776 which gave to the country and the world, the immortal Declaration of American Independence, was a mightier element than the principles therein announced: "For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." Let us look to it, then, that we do not nominate or elect bad men to the forthcoming Convention. Men who have not sufficient self-respect to observe the ordinary moralities of life should not ask the suffrages of a christian people.

We do not join in the cry, "down with the politicians." This is too sweeping. There may be an honest and honorable politician as well as an honest and honorable soldier or a minister. The late Governor Wright of Indiana was a politician, yet a most exemplary christian gentleman. R. K. Howell, Rufus Waples, Cyrus Bussey, John S. Waltor and Edward Heath, are politicians, but gentlemen of unimpeachable virtue. Immorality is the accident of politics, and should be the exception. Bad men, no matter how learned, are not fit to legislate for mules.

The conclusions of this preliminary article are:

1. Elect true Republicans only, to the Convention.
2. Select men of sound judgment and strong common sense.
3. Choose men whose moral character will bear the searching light of noon-day.

WILLIAM MORLEY PUNSHON.

This distinguished minister has been deputed to represent the British Wesleyan Conference at the next session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is to be held in Chicago, May, 1868. One of the peculiar advantages of these grand church councils is that the most eminent men of the church are present to participate in the solemn deliberations thereof. This has been true of all the memorable ecclesiastical councils, from the first of the kind, which was held in Jerusalem, down to our own times. Their fame has preceded them, and there is a desire to look upon the face of those who have rendered signal services to the church. We rejoice, therefore, that Mr. Punshon is to attend our next General Conference. He is the most popular preacher in the Wesleyan connection. He ranks with Newman Hall, Dr. Cumming and Spurgeon. He has not the gentleness of the first, nor the learning of the second, nor the enthusiastic popularity of the third, but he is a mightier speaker than either of them. He is the most magnificent pulpit rhetorician in the christian church. It was our happiness to hear him in London, both on the platform and in the pulpit, and his efforts on these occasions were exceedingly brilliant. We welcome him to America.

With reference to his appointment, the London Watchman has the following:

The request had received the careful attention of a most influential committee on the evenings of Tuesday and Wednesday; and, after a full and minute consideration of the whole case, the conference had been advised to comply with the request from Canada. This recommendation was, after some conversation, adopted by the conference by an overwhelming majority. It is anticipated that, in the grand sphere to which he is to betake himself, Mr. Punshon will probably settle for a season; that the request of the Canada Conference for a visit may be followed up by a request, to be made to our next Conference, that he may be permitted to connect himself with them for some years, as was done by Dr. Stinson and by some others—though never was there a quite parallel case—who were deputed from the British Conference to take the presidency of the conference in Canada This apprehension has of necessity invested the application made to this conference with a special gravity. Notwithstanding, the conference has, very deliberately, although with deep and painful regret, come to the conclusion to sanction Mr. Punshon's visit to America. Undoubtedly he goes to a sphere of extraordinary influence, and will shine with extraordinary brilliance in the western hemisphere. He will be a power in the states as well as in Canada, although in the states there are, within and beyond Methodism, so many names of fame and of power. But whatever may be Mr. Punshon's position or influence in America, whatever happy and influential part he may bear at this critical point in the history of the British Provinces of North America, confederated into the "Dominion of Canada," no sharper sacrifice could be made by English Methodism than to consent to the removal, in the very zenith of his influence, of one so honored, so beloved, and so illustrious among his brethren as William Morley Punshon.

"Angel of the Vale."—In consequence of the absence of Evangeline, the interesting articles on the "Angel of the Vale," have been temporarily discontinued, but will shortly be resumed and carried to completion on her return.

RECONSTRUCTIONISTS.

The citizens of Louisiana, opposed to the Congressional plan of reconstruction, are known by the political cognomen of "Reconstructionists." The appellation was chosen to distinguish themselves from others of their "kith and kin" who are totally opposed to reconstruction. They are further distinguished by the fact that they aim to reconstruct the State according to Mr. Stanbery's published interpretation of the law, and not by General Sheridan's; while the non-reconstructionists refuse to act at all. These gentlemen of the reconstructionist party, knowing that a strictly party nomination on their part cannot succeed, propose to go in for an exclusively "black ticket." The object of this is two-fold: 1. To cause a reaction in the public mind of the North against the policy of Congress, and thereby secure the repeal of the several reconstruction acts. 2. If this plan fails, they believe they can secure for themselves better times from the blacks than the whites—that is, that a constitutional convention mostly composed of colored delegates, will frame a more liberal constitution in behalf of the disfranchised than a convention made up of white loyalists, who have felt the smart of secession persecution. This is sharp practice. It is a desperate game. But it wont work.

The only way by which such a reaction in the public sentiments of the North is likely to be effected, is by the colored people rising up en masse against the whites of the South—that is, the organization of an exclusively colored party. But whatever danger there was of this, it is past; it is not likely now to take place. On the other hand, should a black government be established in Louisiana, by the aid of these Reconstructionists, the design will fail, for the people of the North will detect the motives which lead them to vote for colored men. The black man will not be to blame. Yet our colored citizens should be careful, and not willingly become a party to this scheme, and it is for their benefit that we now write. It will be a temptation that few may be able to resist, to have their old masters take the stump in their behalf, and secure the election of their most ignorant old slaves for the convention, for the several State offices, and for the United States Congress. But it would be a polite request to ask a man to hang himself. Nothing would please these Reconstructionists more than to elect to office the most ignorant and worthless colored men in the State.

But do not be led, like sheep to the slaughter, in this manner. The only way to defeat this malicious scheme is to elect to office our best white men and colored men, and, under the present circumstances, it were better if the preference be given to the former.

The Southern whites not unfrequently taunt the "new-comers" with the assertion that the "Yankees don't understand the negroes." This may be true, and it is equally true, neither do the Southern whites, if they fancy that the black man, when once in power, will be more lenient to them than those of their own color. The freedman can never erace from his memory the terrible wrongs he suffered when a slave, from these same Reconstructionists. Humanity is the same the world over, whether the wrapper is white or black. Once the masters of the situation, they might obey the Mosaic law—"an eye for an eye, and tooth for a tooth;" or, like Shylock, demand his pound of flesh. We have a better opinion of the freedmen than this, yet it will not do to tempt human nature. The baseness of the motive might excite revenge. Like begets like. Southerners are notorious for playing desperate games, but this is too desperate to win. The wiser and better course is for these Reconstructionists to vote for judicious men, both white and colored, and thereby hasten a speedy, harmonious and permanent restoration of their State to the Union.

If the Spanish insurgents, as is asserted by a cable dispatch, have really taken possession of Saragossa, the capital of the province of Arragon, the insurrection may be said to have assumed formidable dimensions. The Spanish government has but few real friends, and has only been able to maintain itself by the most cruel terrorism. As soon as the insurrection has a fair prospect of success, thousands in every province of Spain will be ready to join it. The army, in particular, as previous insurrections show, is very likely to furnish a very considerable contingent. Should the insurrection be successful, the changes it will make in the Government will be of the most radical kind. Gen. Prim, who is again the leader, is in thorough sympathy with the most advanced Liberals of other European countries.—N. Y. Tribune.

A. M. E. CHURCH.

We are informed that a preacher of the A. M. E. Church, from New Orleans, went to Shubuta, Miss., where our church had been organized, and endeavored, by the assistance of the minister and prominent white members of the M. E. Church South, to break up our organization. His abuse of the North, and his affiliation with the Southern Methodists, won for him the deep regard and interest of all those who oppose the enfranchisement of the race, but aroused the indignation of the colored people.

Rev. John Turner, of St. James' Chapel, New Orleans, came to his aid, and sought to rally the people to his support by outdoing his subordinate in his abuse of the North and Northern Methodists, saying that they had done nothing for the colored people.

Will not the A. M. E. Church cause the suicidal course it takes in that section to be changed! It certainly pains the heart of every true colored man.

MAJOR GENERAL GEO. L. HARTSUFF.

A special interest is created for this able officer, who was brevetted major general in the regular army for his eminent services, and who has so faithfully served in this city in the adjutant general's department on the staff of General Phil Sheridan, who has just left us. Hitherto he has been known solely as a military man; but until the arrival of General Griffin from Texas or General Hancock from the plains, he will, to some extent, at his old headquarters, fill an essentially civil office. It is confidently believed by those who best know him that he will prove competent to whatever duties may come before him. He has won for himself a proud position among the heroes of the country; and although his career is too well known to need writing up, we are in want of no excuse for here offering a brief account of it.

General George L. Hartsuff is in his 38th year, he having been born in New York in May, 1830. When nearly eighteen he, a poor farmer's boy, then of Michigan, and having no influence, applied personally to Congressman Bingham for aid in entering West Point. "I wish to be a soldier," was his reply when asked why he wished to enter. This reply secured his appointment, for the congressman said that of all the applicants he was the only one who seemed to feel that after receiving an education at the hands of the government he owed her his services in return. Graduating in 1848, he was engaged for a year in scouting and escort duty at Fort Brown, Texas. In 1853, when the yellow fever ravaged the gulf coast, he had a severe attack of it, with the black vomit. After this he was employed in the military surveys of Big Cypress swamps in Florida, and in the fall of 1854 had a terrible fight with the Indians, in which most of his men were killed and he himself wounded four times and left on the field for dead. Recovering, he was sent north, and soon employed as assistant professor of artillery and infantry tactics at West Point. In June, 1859, he was wrecked on the ill-fated Elgin on Lake Michigan, where four-fifths on board were lost; but he drifted ashore safely after being in the water ten hours. In March, 1861, he was sent to Fort Pickens, having been promoted assistant adjutant general. In three months he was made chief of General Rosecrans' staff, and participated in the engagements of Caraifax ferry, Gauley mountain, Cotton hill, etc., always being recommended for promotion by the commander for his coolness and bravery. In 1862 he was made brigadier general. His troops were the first to enter Culpepper Court House. He participated in nearly all the Virginia battles of 1862. In the retreat from the Rapidan, he covered the approach to the Rappahannock bridge, held the enemy there in check for three days, his troops side of the river. At South mountain and Antietam he fought gallantly, and was severely, long supposed mortally, wounded at the latter place. For his action there he was promoted major general, and he lived to organize and be the first gallant commander of the twenty-third army corps, which did such great service in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Western Virginia. The guerrilla John Morgan, as well as Generals Buckner and Longstreet, had to succumb to this corps. In March, 1865, he was assigned by General Grant to the command of the Bermuda front, participating in the brilliant campaign which resulted in the complete overthrow of the army of General Lee. Such is a part of the career of this once friendless lad, now in charge of the headquarters of the fifth military district, in this city.

REPEAL OF THE SCHOOL ORDINANCES.

The common council at its last meeting repealed all previously existing school ordinances, and directed the closing of the schools until the first of October. This summary action creates a necessity for a new plan throughout.

This way of proceeding possesses the advantage of clearness, by totally wiping out all existing regulations, and placing them in an entire new ordinance, so that there need be no ambiguity or doubt about the meaning of its provisions.

A new ordinance has already been proposed, which, although an improvement upon its predecessor, is liable to some objections on account of not being sufficiently explicit as to its details. The regular weekly meeting of the council will be held on Tuesday evening, at which the question will be further discussed, and we shall confidently expect the council to fully consider and mature a measure that will promote the educational interests of the city.

The resolution closing the schools till the first Monday in October, as well as the ordinance repealing the former school ordinance, and all those amendatory thereof, will be found published officially by the mayor in another column.

DEPARTURE OF GEN. SHERIDAN.

A large number of friends and admirers of General Sheridan visited the Jackson depot yesterday evening to witness the departure of that gallant officer with three of his staff officers for the department of the Missouri. After adieus and cordial hands-shaking, three rousing cheers thrice repeated were given by the assembled crowd as the train moved. In the reception room of the depot the following resolutions were read by Judge E. Hiestand to the general in presence of his friends there, and they were warmly applauded and adopted:

At a meeting of the loyal people of Louisiana and Texas, assembled to pay their regards to Major General P. H. Sheridan, upon his departure from New Orleans for his new command, it was

Resolved, That as an expression of the feelings which animate in common the hearts of all the loyal people of Louisiana and Texas, we witness with profound regret, both for ourselves and for the country at large, the departure of General Sheridan from the command of the fifth military district.

Resolved, That we deem this a proper occasion to express not only the high personal regard which the people of these states entertain for General Sheridan, but also their earnest appreciation of the eminent and invaluable services which he has rendered the country in a crisis of peculiar danger, and of difficulties which would have been insuperable except for the sagacity, courage and honesty which have distinguished his administration.

Resolved, That looking forward through the perils which seem to be gathering around the republic from the treachery of its chief magistrate and the insidious machinations of a rebellious spirit, which is scotched but not yet killed, to a time when the people may look for a man who cannot be bought or sold to guide the affairs of state, we present to the great loyal party of the Union the name of Philip H. Sheridan, now relieved for his fidelity to his country, as the right man for the right place to relieve Andrew Johnson on the 4th of March, 1869.

Resolved, That we extend to the members of General Sheridan's staff our best wishes for their success and advancement, and hereby express our just appreciation of their courtesy, fidelity and devotion to their arduous duties.

General Sheridan, though crowded and jammed into the centre of the heated room, and almost himself driven to the wall as he drove Early in the Shenandoah valley, when Grant told him to "push things," replied in a few excellent remarks, the substance of which was, that he had endeavored to obey the laws of congress relative to the reconstruction of the southern states, which he believed to be his whole duty; he supposed these laws were his only guide, and that he had not expected any instructions from any other source as to how he should carry out these, to him, military orders. These remarks were warmly applauded by those who heard them.

Fifth Military District.

By general order No. 31, dated yesterday, General Sheridan relinquishes command of this district to Brevet Major General Charles Griffin.

The subjoined orders announce the military changes:

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., September 5, 1867. General Orders No. 31.

In accordance with the directions contained in paragraph one, of general orders No. 81, current series, from the headquarters of the army, the undersigned hereby relinquishes command of the fifth military district to Brevet Major General Charles Griffin.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major General United States Army.

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., Sept. 3, 1867. General Orders No. 30.

In addition to his present duties, Brevet Lieutenant Colonel W. T. Gentry, captain seventeenth United States infantry, will, until further orders, assume the duties of secretary for civil affairs, heretofore performed by Brevet Colonel G. A. Forsyth, United States army.

By command of Major General P. H. Sheridan.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., September 5, 1867. Special Orders, No. 134.

1. In accordance with authority from General Grant, Brevet Colonel G. A. Forsyth, major ninth cavalry, and Private Henry Brown, company G, sixth cavalry, will report to the major general commanding, in person, to accompany him under his present orders.

* * * * * *

By command of Major General P. H. Sheridan.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., September 5, 1867. Special Orders No. 134.

* * * * * *

2. Brevet Major M. J. Asch, assistant surgeon United States army, will proceed with the major general commanding as medical attendant to himself and the members of his staff, etc., accompanying him to St. Louis, Mo., when he will return to and assume his duties at his post.

During the temporary absence of Dr. Asch, Brevet Major H. E. Brown, assistant surgeon United States army, will perform his duties.

By command of Major General P. H. Sheridan.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF, Ass't Adj't Gen.

Illegible Penmanship.

A Buffalo judge lately rejected a petition on the ground of "illegible writing," whereupon the Evening Post says it is "an old fallacy to suppose that illegibility and greatness are corelative." This fallacy it is greatly for the interest of newspapers to explode. Fledgling poets are wont to imagine that inspiration and turn-down collars, or long hair, are synonymous; and they usually turn out to be all collar and hair, and no poetry. So some authors fancy that because Rufus Choate wrote a hand he could not read himself—much less could anybody else—that their scrawls show genius. Some of the most talented authors have been beautiful penmen. Thackeray used to take more pride, it is said, in inscribing the Lord's Prayer with perfect legibility within the compass covered by a sixpence than in some brilliant paragraphs. At all events, let not writers venture on this supposed manifestation of talent. A clear, handsome handwriting will never destroy a man's chances with posterity as a great genius.

The Sugar Crop.—It is estimated, from the fullest possible information received, that as compared with last year's crop there will be a double sugar crop in Louisiana this season, or 80,000 hogsheads.

Only three members of the bar have been expelled from the Washington courts since they were established, in 1801; Levi S. Burr in 1822, Henry May in 1850, and J. H. Bradley, Sr., in 1867.

The mosquitoes in great numbers have preceded the organ grinders at Boston this year, and furnished their music on the usual terms—blood.

Military Items.

Upon the recommendation of Governor Flanders, Louis A. Fuller has been appointed justice of the peace for ward No. 5, parish of East Baton Rouge, and Edward Triplett, of the same ward and parish, constable, to fill existing vacancies.

Before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, each of the above named gentlemen will have to take and subscribe to the oath of office prescribed for officers of the United States.

Acting Assistant Surgeon M. S. Ross valley has been ordered to proceed to Galveston, Texas, and report to the chief medical officer there for assignment to duty.

Appointments by the Governor.

Governor Flanders yesterday made the the following appointments: Jesse L. Ward, to be sheriff of Franklin parish, vice A. A. Sanders, resigned; Samuel B. Norma, sheriff of Winn parish, vice J. M. McBride, resigned; W. H. Tanner, justice of the peace at Richland, Madison parish; Ebenezer Clermont, inspector of weights and measures in the third district New Orleans, vice A. Lusto, whose time has expired. Also, as directors of the Citizens' bank of this city, Messrs. Johnson Armstrong and Robert Watson, vice H. M. Hymans and R. C. Martin.

Increased Sickness at New Iberia.

By a dispatch from New Iberia, received last evening by Mr. Tupper, of the Attakapas Transportation company, it is stated that nine deaths had occurred in the preceding eighteen hours, making eighty-five in all that have been recorded since the disease broke out in the village.

An Industrial Fair.

There is proposed to be held in New York next spring a grand mechanics' industrial fair, at which will be exposed only the products of journeymen mechanics [of every trade. The expositions heretofore have been monopolized by capitalists and owners of shops and manufactories. The getters up of this propose to inaugurate a new system of exhibition, in which the journeymen mechanics shall themselves become the exhibitors of the products of their own ingenuity and industry; and in which they shall reap the entire reward of their labor. Similar exhibitions have recently been held in various cities of Great Britain—London, Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, and others. Ten thousand circulars have been circulated in the United States and Canada on this subject.

The Levee Bonds.

Nothing has been heard from Commissioners Oglesby and Smith, of the levee commissoiners, since the 9th of August. Mr. Oglesby then wrote that there was no prospect whatever of the sale of the levee bonds, though no one was so green as to object to them on account of the absence of the signature of ex-Governor Wells or anybody else. So long as A. Johnson and his confederates here continue their present course the capitalists of the north will seek places of investment less liable to be disturbed. It is probable Mr. Oglesby may be able to hypothecate these bonds with Winslow, Lanier & Co., New York, on sufficiently favorable terms, however, should no unusual revolution of affairs occur to prevent. The law does not permit their sale under eighty cents to the dollar; but they may be otherwise used—pledged or hypothecated—if thought best by those having them in charge.

Money Order Postoffices.

We are under obligations to Mr. George P. Betts, money order clerk of the New Orleans postoffice, for the new list of money order offices recently opened throughout the United States and territories.

We give below a list of the most important of the new offices in the southern states:

Louisiana—Baton Rouge, Monroe, Natchitoches, New Iberia, Opelousas, Plaquemines, St. Francisville.

Alabama — Decatur, Eufala, Greenville, Huntsville, Montgomery, Selma, Tuscumbia.

Florida—Jacksonville, Key West, Tallahassee, Warrington.

Georgia—Albany, Americus, Athens, Atlanta, Columbus, Macon, Milledgeville, Rome.

South Carolina—Anderson, Chester C. H., Columbia.

Texas—Austin, Corpus Christi, Galveston, Houston.

The Killona Plantation Affair.

Affidavits have reached the military headquarters, from Sheriff Louis Ranson, of St. Charles parish, in relation to affairs at the Killona plantation on the delivery of same to Mr. Mark Hoyt, on the 8th ultimo, declaring the matter to have been done peaceably, no interference being had or violence offered to the United States deputy marshal or to any one else on the occasion. No molasses was taken possession of by the deputy sheriff, and no attempt made to get inside of the warehouse containing it, the United States marshal being left in peaceable possession thereof.

General Hancock.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, speaking of Generals Sheridan and Hancock, says:

General Hancock, who is to take his place, is to be pitied. He is far away, and ignorant of the duty to which he is to be assigned. Without consultation as to his inclinations, he has been ordered to this new duty—one that is difficult and thankless, however it may be discharged. The antecedents of General Hancock are not such as to justify a belief that he will be a tool of the president. He fought gallantly in the war, and never, by word or deed, sympathized with the rebellion. Will he, therefore, because he succeeds Sheridan, inaugurate a different policy? Perhaps not; because if he is true to himself, he will find the same malignant feeling to deal with which was firmly treated by his predecessor. The chances are that he will not meddle with anything that has been done by Sheridan, but strictly carry out the same line of action. In that case Mr. Johnson's experiment will prove to be a failure, adding nothing to his insane desire to oppose the will of the people, and being, in truth, one of "those ills which return to plague the inventor."

Among the accounts of internal revenue officers recently settled is that of an Ohio collector, which, during his term of office of four years, involved eight millions of dollars in cash and three million dollars of bonded oil account. The difference between the treasury account and the collector's account was but $11 10. This man was last fall removed for political reasons. He has since been appointed United States marshal for the supreme court, and his name is R. C. Parsons, Esq.

Among the new and costly buildings in New York is that owned by James Brown, and situated in Wall street. It is of marble with a frontage of about forty feet, and cost $1,000,000. The entire rental of the building is $180,000 per annum.

John A. Van Namee, Jr., of Burlington, Vermont, has purchased a lot in Omaha, corner of Farnham and Twelfth streets, for $25,000, and will erect a three-story brick building for a wholesale dry goods house.

A new cable from Brest to New York is to be laid in May next. The northern route has been selected as the safest and most practicable. The Great Eastern has been chartered to perform the work.

GENERAL CANBY'S OPINIONS.

General Canby, who has just been appointed to the command of the second military district, is said to have remarked yesterday in conversation with a friend that he was not a political partisan, but that he had studied the reconstruction laws thoroughly, and approved them, and that he considered their faithful execution essential to the welfare of the nation. He thought it the duty of the southern people to accept the terms offered them. He is also said to have expressed his appreciation of the utility of the freedmen's bureau, and his intention of giving its agents all proper and necessary aid in the execution of their work.—Washington Chronicle.

A Horrible and Sacrilegious Traffic.

It has been discovered that some of the farmers in the vicinity of Manassas, and other Virginia battlefields, have reaped a large pecuniary harvest recently by digging up and selling to the bone dust manure factories the remains of Union soldiers buried on their farms. A skull, hip-bone, part of the vertebral column, fumer and tibia, were taken from a wagon which had been loaded at Bull Run by them, and which was on its way to Alexandria, and brought to this city. We referred, a few days ago, to the fact that a portion of a human skeleton, picked out of a heap which had been collected for this revolting use, had been shown us by a gentleman who had been on a visit to the battlefield, and suggested that measures should be taken to put a stop to this horrible sacrilege. Our remarks on that occasion are confirmed by this new evidence, and the necessity of prompt interference demonstrated.—Washington Chronicle, Aug. 31.

A St. Louis correspondent writes: "A son of a wealthy banker, Charles B——, became enamored with the daughter of a shoemaker, a poor but pretty girl. The father of the son looked with no kindly feeling on the attachment, but had no idea that anything serious would grow out of it. A few days since he sent his hopeful to the bank to get a three thousand dollar check cashed. The young sprig did this, but put the money in his pocket, and, eloping with the girl, fled to Belleville, and was joined in the bands of matrimony by a justice of the peace. The worthy paternal, missing first the money, then the son, pursued the erring couple, and in a most practical and manner-of-fact way settled the affair. 'Give me back the money,' said he, 'deducting the expenses you have been to in getting this girl, and come back home and attend to business, and we'll say no more about it.' It is enough to say that the matrimonial expenses only amounted to two hundred and eighty dollars, which the old man cheerfully bore."

A Sentiment.—At a recent railroad celebration the following sentiment was given: "Our mothers—the only faithful tenders who never misplaced a switch."

Monroe.—The Intelligencer reports a pleasant little reunion there on the occasion of raising a beautiful flag in front of the office of Colonel Eugene Tisdale, the internal revenue collector. This is the third ensign of the country now waving over Monroe.

General News.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3, 1867.—President Johnson appears greatly troubled by the increasing cry for his impeachment all over the North.

When the subject is alluded to in conversation he pretends indifference, and gives one of his peculiarly unnatural smiles

He speaks, however, with much animation and indignation against Ashley and other impeachers.

He has threatened to publish private letters from Conservative Congressmen, offering to vote against impeachment in return for offices for their friends and relatives. He says when impeachment comes there will be blows to give as well as to receive.

Jeremiah S. Black and Acting Attorney General Binckley are now in consultation with the President regarding the forthcoming general amnesty proclamation, the tenor of which I telegraphed you yesterday.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 2, 1867.

General Sheridan has acknowledged the receipt of the order relieving him, and says he will leave New Orleans as soon as General Griffin arrives there. He will bring his personal, and two of his department staff officers with him.

The statement of the public debt for August shows a slight decrease.

Assistant Secretary Chandler has returned. He will not resign until next January.

General Steedman has not left yet. He had an interview with the president to-day.

It is reported that General Hancock will be allowed to delay his departure for New Orleans until the yellow fever abates there.

PAYSON.

VICKSBURG, September 2, 1867.

The Union men of Vicksburg are delighted that the axe has begun to fall, and that General Ord realizes the necessity of relieving them from the official presence of some of the bitterest rebels in the south, who composed the city government. He has done this, and so far carries out the true intent of the reconstruction acts.

General Ord made to-day the following removals of "impediments" in the way of reconstruction: E. W. Wallen, mayor; R. King, city marshal; — Kennedy, deputy city marshal, and Councilmen Stiles, Gussio, Bitterman, Walsh, and A. M. Floyd.

H. Kinsky and Dr. Birchett, of the present city council, are retained.

To take the place of the new city officers General Ord has appointed General J. A. Maltby mayor; Captain A. C. Fisk city marshal; Captain Hynes deputy city marshal; and for councilmen, R. F. North, N. M. Williams, J. E. Veglison, Major Hoxie, Dr. E. A. Duncan.

Other removals will be made this week. The work of reconstruction is thus bravely progressing; Union men here breathe freer and easier.

WASHINGTON, September 2, 1867.

Johnson's new policy, which has been under consideration the last two weeks, is now matured and will be publicly developed in a few days.

A general amnesty proclamation is embraced in the plan and will be speedily issued.

This amnesty is intended to give the right of suffrage to many now disfranchised.

Its constitutionality and legality will be backed up with an elaborate opinion of Attorney General Stanbery.

The whole is to be issued in the form of a military order.

Registration is to be re-opened, and elections are to be postponed or delayed until those newly enfranchised under this order are registered.

Administrationists expect by these means to diminish or override the Republican majorities in the South.

Prominent Republicans now here think this bold scheme of the president untenable, but concede that Stanbery can manufacture any opinion required of him by the president.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 4, 1867.

Collector Kellogg has obtained permission from Secretary McCulloch to employ an additional warehouse clerk, at a salary of $1800 per annum.

He has also procured an increase of the salaries of the following-named officers to $1800 per annum:

Charles D. Blanchard, clerk in appraiser's No. 28, $1600 per annum.

Anthony Vallas, clerk in appraiser's No. 7, $1400 per annum.

J. H. H. Houston, warehouse clerk No. 8, $1700 per annum.

John S. Marsh, clerk No. 11, $1600 per annum.

Henry Post, keeper of customhouse No. 35, $1600 per annum.

The salary of John Timberlake, cashier, is fixed at $1800 per annum; and an assistant cashier, with a similar salary, is allowed.

The steam tug Ella has been bought by the treasury department for the purpose of transforming her into a revenue cutter.

Postmaster General Randall is negotiating a postal treaty with Spain, which, among other things, provides for the establishment of a United States postal agency at Havana.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 5, 1867.

It is stated that the amnesty proclamation cannot be issued, as the law allowing it was repealed by the thirty-ninth congress; but pardons can be granted on the application of those who are considered entitled to the same.

At last accounts General Gordon Granger was in New York. He expects that General Grant will order him to his regiment. It is rumored that the president will order him to relieve General Howard.

General Sickles has demanded a court of inquiry.

General Canby, upon taking command in South Carolina, has retained all of General Sickles' orders until further notice.

Henry Reid, an ex-soldier, was appointed janitor of the customhouse.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 2.—Nine regular army surgeons have died within three weeks.

Simon Cameron favors impeachment.

Revenue receipts to-day, $1,500,000.

The secretary of the treasury received a dispatch from special agent Bell that only three of twenty-six customhouse officials are on duty. The secretary has ordered the customs business further down the river outside the city.

Maximilian's adopted heir, young Iturbide, and his grandmother, are at Georgetown heights.

The change in the cotton tax from three to two and a half cents goes into effect to-day.

WASHINGTON, September 5.—The consul at Messina estimates the number of deaths from cholera since July at 6000. The disease appears to be spreading, but abating in fatality.

Major Kenney, of the Fort Phil Kearney massacre commission, has arrived here after a six months absence. His opinion is that the Indians must be whipped before we can have peace. They find war profitable. They have killed seven commissioned officers and stolen property of great value in the vicinity of Fort Kearney.

Revenue receipts to-day $640,000.

Grant has authorized the publication of Sickles' letter.

A knowing gentleman made a bet to-day that the California Democrats have elected the governor and two congressmen, and that the legislature is Democratic.

The Tribune devotes a column to an argument against the president's power to issue an amnesty proclamation.

From Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, September 5.—The Conservative convention adjourned to-day after adopting the following resolutions:

The Conservative men of the state of Alabama in convention assembled in the city of Montgomery, adopt as an expression of their views the following resolutions of the state of Pennsylvania, adopted at a recent convention in that state.

1. The constitution of the United States being that form of civil government established by the founders of the Union, with such changes as have been subsequently made therein in the manner prescribed by itself, is the only rightful government binding upon every inhabitant of all ranks, sexes, colors, ages, and conditions, and it is the duty of each and every one without exception or modification under any circumstances to adhere to, protect, and defend the same.

2. In all conflict of powers under that instrument the supreme judiciary power is the only arbiter which is independent of and in its province superior to each of the others, and which they are bound to obey.

3. The union of the states is decided by the war and accepted by the southern people to be perpetual, and the authority of the federal government is supreme within its constitutional limits.

4. Congress is not the federal government, nor is the president, nor the supreme court. The federal government is that form of civil policy established by the constitution, consisting of all of them, each supreme in its own limits, and each entitled equally with the others to the loyal obedience of every inhabitant of all the states.

5. By the constitution and under the fundamental law of the federal government, which is superior to congress, and of which congress itself is the creature, representation in congress and the electoral colleges is a right fundamental and indestructible in its nature, and abiding in every state, being a duty as well as a right, pertaining to the people of every state, and the denial of which is the destruction of the federal government.

6. Each state under the constitution has the exclusive right to prescribe the qualifications of its own electors.

The Conservative men of Alabama adopt as a further expression of their opinions and purposes the following:

7. Resolved, That it is our earnest aim and purpose to cultivate relations of friendship, harmony and peace between the two races, to deal justly with the blacks, and to instruct and aid in instructing them in a proper understanding of all their duties to themselves, to society and to the country, and we denounce as treacherous and base all attempts by bad men to engender or encourage antagonisms between the two races.

8. That we are inhabitants of a common country, sharers and sufferers of a common destiny, and we will do all in our power to instruct and elevate the colored race in its moral, social and political responsibilities.

9. That while we have much charity for the colored man, and feel inclined to look indulgently and tolerantly on his prejudices of race, inculcated and encouraged as they have been by recent events, and by insidious counsels of bad men, we appeal to him by the common interests of a common country to place his trust in those he knows to be honorable, and to deal cautiously with strangers who bear no evidence that they were honored where they are better known.

MOBILE, September 5.—Colonel F. B. Shepherd, who was shot at Mount Vernon arsenal a few weeks since by Captain Schoff, United States army, died here to-day of his wounds.

Captain Schoff has been on trial before a military commission since Monday. The examination was concluded to-day, but the finding of the court has not yet been made public.

Colonel Shepherd was a highly respected citizen.

From North Carolina.

RALEIGH, N. C., September 5.—The Republican convention reassembled to-day. A more thorough and permanent organization of the party throughout the state was effected. Many speeches were made, chiefly of an inflammatory kind, favoring proscription of rebels, and confiscation of property. Marshal Goodloe defended the southern whites manfully, deprecated confiscation, and warned the freedmen of the dangers surrounding them. No platform has yet been adopted, but a resolution referring confiscation and kindred measures to congress was carried by a tremendous majority and amid vociferous cheering. The convention meets again to-night.

RALEIGH, N. C., September 5.—The convention adopted and indorsed the platform of the convention of the 20th of March. There was more speaking. The proceedings were harmonious. Resolutions were adopted requesting the district commander to order suspension of collection of half taxes due the state and counties, and asking for an early election to call a constitutional convention. The convention will probably adjourn at a late hour to-night.

From Georgia.

AUGUSTA, September 5.—Benjamin H. Hill is writing a series of letters to Grant in reply to Pope, in which he asserts that no respectable white man in the south approves of the military bills as constitutional, right, just, or desirable. The uncandid accept, the candid reject them. None approve—all despise. The first article will appear in the Chronicle to-morrow, and be followed by others.

SAVANNAH, September 5.—Reports from the sea islands' crop are discouraging. Rain and the worm have made great havoc on the South Carolina coast. Reports from the Georgia coast say the worm has only appeared on two of the islands. The other islands expect a fair crop. Last week the island crop was estimated at 35,000 bales. This week it is put down at 30,000. The rains continue, but reports from the interior indicate that a fair crop will be made.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, September 2.—The applications for bankruptcy in Virginia during the last week exceeded the total number made since the law was passed.

From Panama.

PANAMA, August 23.—A conspiracy to restore Mosquera by a new revolution has been discovered and the leaders arrested.

The cholera is dying out in Nicaragua, but is still raging in some districts.

The Peruvian congress will vote to allow Spaniards to remain in the country.

Apprehensions of the return of the Spanish fleet are dissipated, and work on the batteries is suspended.

A furious storm had visited Valparaiso, damaging shipping and dwellings. One bark was wrecked and ten lives lost.

Mosquera will be tried for treason.

ANOTHER EDITOR GOING TO CONGRESS.—Occasionally the people consult their true interests by selecting for their representatives those who have the practical good sense, general intelligence, and wish to further the true interests of their constituents. The Republicans of the Ohio second district have thus consulted their interests in selecting Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, by acclamation in convention as their candidate to represent them in congress. No one contested his nomination; and western journalism will in him have an able representative.

Domestic Markets.

CINCINNATI, Sept 5.—Flour unchanged; steady; family at $10@$10 50. Wheat quiet and firm; No. 1 red at $2 15. Corn firm at $1 10@$1 12. Oats dull at 60c. Whisky steady at 32c. in bond. Provisions decidedly firm and higher. Pork at $24. NEW YORK, September 5.—Cotton easier; sales 900 bales; middling uplands 27c. Flour irregular. Wheat active. Corn, mixed $1 16½@1 18. Oats steady; southern 60@67. Mess pork $23 75. Coffee firm; other groceries dull. Stocks strong. Money 4@5. Gold 142¾; 5-20s of 62 coupons 114½.

NEW YORK, September 5.—Money in moderate demand, and freely supplied at 3@4c. on call; discounts 5½@7c.; sterling quiet, 109⅝@109¾. Gold closed firm at 142⅝ @142¾. Governments steady.

An Unfortunate Toilet.

The following, one of the countless "anecdotes of President Lincoln," illustrates the quickness of that man of energy and greatness in turning little things to advantage:

In a certain case in court Mr. Lincoln had for his legal opponent a lawyer whose excellent character, through knowledge of law and superior logic, combined to exert a controlling influence over the jury. This lawyer (whom we will call Judge Jones) had made a speech and a most able speech it was. It was necessary in some way to dissipate its impression. Mr. Lincoln, in reply, opened his speech substantially as follows:

"May it please the court and gentlemen of the jury, we have just heard the learned and masterly argument on the other side. We know how thoroughly versed is Judge Jones in the law, and how upright he is, and we say: Really Judge Jones cannot be mistaken in his positions. We also know how true a gentleman Judge Jones is, how irreprochable are his manners and dress; and I presume if I should say to you that Judge Jones had put on his shirt wrong side foremost this morning you would reply: It is impossible—and yet Judge Jones has put on his shirt wrong side foremost this morning; you can look for yourselves, gentlemen; and so in this case he has got things wrong end foremost, and his whole argument is wrong from beginning to end."

Surely enough, the irreprochable lawyer, while pondering over his coming speech, had dressed himself in the mistaken manner indicated. After the laugh had subsided, consequent upon the detection, Mr. Lincoln analysed the argument of the Judge and won his case.

Little Savings.

We heard once an agent for a missionary society, who obtained a generous subscription from a business man whom he had heard reproving one of his clerks for using a whole wafer. The gentleman told him that, by small savings he acquired means for liberal charities. The London Times, according to Mr. Forney, of the Philadelphia Press, has a rare faculty for saving in the same way: He says:

Nothing is allowed to go to waste. A card is kept by the different pressmen, and on it is marked the cause of any spoiled sheet, whether it was the fault of the paper-maker, the feeder, or the press. The very rags with which the machinery is wiped are counted, and those who use them cannot receive clean ones until they return the dirty ones. The latter are then washed by a washing machine in the office, and it is said that this small operation saves yearly £150, or nearly $800 in gold.

Effects of Dancing.

An art-critic in the Transcript dismisses the "star" dancers with the following sweeping hit:

Shall we look at the premières? You will be worse off than ever. To be a first danseuse is to commit suicide in a tolerably gradual form. Nine in ten of the queens of the ballet have sunken cheeks and chests, and complexions suggesting a diet of arsenical wafers. The excessive exertion of high art dancing in a heated theatre is fatal to beauty. The unhappy votary saps every wholesome tissue in her frame, and becomes, at last, as Fanny Elssler, by daylight, was once described—"A yellow spectre in a bundle of old shawls."

A Singular Incident.

[From the Putnam (Va.) Sentinel.]

About seven weeks ago a young man named Thomas McClure, of Kalida while drinking some water, swallowed a small bug, familiarly known as the pinching bug. Although at the time of swallowing the bug, he felt some peculiar sensation in the stomach, he did not feel alarmed at the fact. In a few days, however, he felt quite unwell, and suffered intense pain in the stomach. This state of things existed for several weeks, and during the entire time the pains became more severe until they were almost unbearable. Finally, at the end of the sixth week, the young man vomited up the bug; and upon examination it was found to be alive, and larger than the usual size of bugs of its species. The insect was taken possession of by a member of the medical fraternity, who proposes examining into the facts relative to its longevity of life, and growth in the stomach of the young man. The young man has rapidly recovered his health, and is now almost over the effects produced by his bugship.

For the N. O. Advocate.

Clinton and Pass Christian.

August 21st we left New Orleans for another "trip to Clinton," via the river and the Port Hudson railroad. The day, 9 o'clock P. M., found us at the port, and night found us comfortably quartered with mine host, Captain Young, (nine miles from Port Hudson,) whose place is the present terminus of the railroad, and who kindly entertains strangers and gives them excellent fare and for a very moderate compensation. Next day we reached Clinton, and found the new church up and ready for occupation, and nearly completed. The workmen have done the work well and in less time than was expected. Sunday morning the house was dedicated. Services at 3 P. M. and at night. During the day several persons, twenty-eight in all, joined church, and five couples were married. Monday, at 3 P. M., we held quarterly conference, and the pastor's report showed a very encouraging state of the work. Three new "preaching places" had been established, (making five for the circuit,) numbering respectively 32, 49 and 140 members—a total of 221 for the three new appointments. At one of them they are building a new church.

Monday night we had service again; married eight couples; administered the sacrament, and eight persons joined church—making 36 accessions in all, and a total membership of 183 for Clinton.

The entire indebtedness on the church and grounds at Clinton is less than two hundred dollars. Brother Yarborough, preacher in charge, is doing an excellent work, and the people are in the best of spirits, with a bright future before them.

We returned by the way of Baton Rouge, where we found Brother Hayward and his charge in the midst of spiritual prosperity. The late visit there of Bro. Ross, of Wesley Chapel, in New Orleans, will long be remembered as a time of power and great glory. Arrangements have been made for building another church, only a few miles from Baton Rouge, where a new society has been organized during the last quarter. Thus does the work progress. Brother Hayward, who is a very energetic and successful worker, will soon visit Clinton and vicinity, and spend a couple of weeks in aiding Bro. Yarborough. May God give them great prosperity. A camp meeting will be held in that region the last of October, or thereabouts, and a great gathering of the people and ingathering to the Church is expected.

We returned to New Orleans Thursday, August 29th, attended General Hamlin's funeral in the evening, and the next morning left for the Pass Christian circuit, to attend the third quarterly meeting for that work. On Saturday the money was raised and the two lots were paid for, and the deed made of them to the trustees. Their little chapel there has been occupied for some time, but it is now too small to accommodate the people, and they will have to enlarge it. At the Wolf River appointment a church has been built, which, with the one at Handsboro, makes three chapels for that work this year, or, rather, within the last five months, for the work was not organized till last March. Sunday morning, at nine o'clock, the people gathered upon the beach, and four persons were baptized by immersion. At the 11 o'clock appointment, Brother Robinson, of the First street charge, in New Orleans, preached a practical, good sermon. At 3 P. M. we preached and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and God was with his people of a truth. Sabbath, September 1st, was a day to be remembered by our "little flock" in Pass Christian. Brother Avery, preacher in charge, was with us, and at the close of the afternoon service gave a very effective exhortation to the people, and a number joined the church. Bro. Avery will report in figures.

The work has suffered not a little in consequence of his absence, at Mobile, as one of the registrars of that city. But that business is now done, and he will be able to devote his time to the work, and expects prosperity. There are five appointments. Brothers H. and F. Green and others have kindly given some attention to the work in Brother Avery's absence. Now, that he has returned to it, let them still extend to him a helping hand, and push "the battle to the gates." Bro. Avery formerly lived in this city; was one of the editors of the N. O. Tribune, and deserves well of his brethren, and we hope they will aid him all in their power.

Miss Holmes, from Constantine, Michigan, is teaching a colored school and a Sunday school at the Pass, and is having good success in the work.

New Orleans, Sept. 2d, 1867.

Saying Prayers and Praying.

A poor old man, when a child of three years of age, had been taught by his mother to repeat a prayer every night, which he did till he was seventy-three years old; and not a little proud was he to say that he had not omitted saying his prayers every night for seventy years! At this advanced age it pleased God to afflict him severely; he was led by the Holy Spirit to see that he was a poor sinner who had been living in a form of godliness, but had never felt its power. He was enabled to spend the few last years of his life in humble dependence on the grace of Christ; and when he referred to himself, he would often add, "I am the old man who said his prayers for seventy years, and yet all that time had never prayed at all."

GAMBLING.

The love of excitement in American life gives an attraction and zest to gambling which many find it difficult to resist. The transactions of the stock-exchange and the speculations of business are little better than legalized gambling, and prepare the way for those darker deeds which lead to bankruptcy of fortune and character. If the veil could be lifted from the haunts of sin in our city, good people would be amazed to learn how many resort to them who occupy respectable positions in society, and of whom no suspicions are cherished. Parents would be shocked to find that sons in whose good habits they have reposed confidence are habitual frequenters of the gambling saloon, and are so infatuated with the excitements of the place that they cannot break the spell. An organized attempt is now making in New York to probe this social evil to the core, and check, if possible, its corrupting power. A young man who has been one of its victims makes the following sad revelation:

"Well," said he, "I go in for the society with all my heart, but I cannot join it. I was worth a little fortune five years ago. I am now a clerk at nineteen dollars a week, but I will cheerfully give one-third of my salary weekly, for one year, to assist in closing these places, in order that I and others may be prevented from playing, that I may regain my self respect, and feel once more entitled to the position in society which I have lost through my cursed blindness. It is not the loss of money which troubles me. It is the fact that for so long I have given myself up to a vice which enslaves the soul, makes life unbearable, except where the click of the ivory chips is heard, turns day into night and night into day, brings shame and sadness into the family circle, estranges relatives and friends, in nine cases out of ten drags the infatuated man down, down, down, lower and lower, until he becomes meaner than the meanest thief."

"Do you still play?" we asked.

"Once in a while the temptation is to strong to resist, and I risk a dollar or two without any thought of winning or loosing, but with the old desire to try fortune. I cannot play now where I did once when I had money. One night I lost $800, and asked the banker for the loan of a dollar to take me home. He almost spat in my face. The cold-hearted crowd about the table laughed at me, and as I passed out I heard more than one jeering allusion to my 'cheek.' That was my last night in a 'first-class' hell. I tell you I have seen at a faro table what would make your blood run cold; and every night in the week, at some altar of Satan or another, there is some poor devil devotee revolving in his mind the shortest way to end his miserable life. I beg of you, push this thing! Stir up the press to fight these pests, whether 'square' players or 'skinners.' You can't expect the courts to punish them; they dare not do it unless the people imperatively demand it. Call for vigilance committees, such as they had in California when the gamblers ruled. They are the correctives we want."

YELLOW FEVER.—Intelligent yellow fever physicians inform us that no man can take the yellow fever from another person who even has the black vomit; that where a man goes to a planter's house in the country, or any other house that is isolated or beyond the influence of the atmosphere of a city or village, and dies of black vomit, no person in the house—none that nurse or bury him—take the fever; that it takes houses and families enough to make at least a small village to produce materials for a yellow fever epidemic; that white people are much more liable to yellow fever than blacks, and more apt to die when they have it; that men are more liable to have it than women, and that but few women die of the disease who are properly attended to; that the infection cannot be carried from place to place in pork, lard, flour, iron ware, and such articles as are wholly exposed to the air; but that woolen and cotton goods, boxes of shoes, or any material which may contain pent up air, the hull of a steamboat or vessel, may hold the germ of yellow fever for many months. By understanding the nature of the yellow fever we can know better how to guard against it and to keep out of its way.—Franklin Planters' Banner.

How it Died.

"Died—in Laodicea, the Prayer-Meeting, aged one year. The health of this meeting was poor most of the year, and its life was despaired of. But a few anxious friends kept it alive, and sometimes it would so revive as to encourage them.

"Discouragement at last prevailed, and the Prayer-Meeting is dead. It died from neglect. Not a Christian was present when it died. Over forty were living within a mile of it, and not one was there.

"Had two only been there, its life might have been saved, 'for where two are agreed,' etc.

"Two-thirds of the forty might have been there, had they been so disposed; but they were not, and the Prayer-Meeting died."

A Confirmed Grumbler.

The following sketch may be a caricature, though we think there is a human likeness about it so real as to be easily recognized:

Some time ago there lived in Edinburg a well known grumbler named Sandy Black, whose often-recurring fits of spleen or indigestion produced some amusing scenes of senseless irritability, which were highly relished by all except the brute's good, patient little wife. One morning Sandy rose bent on a quarrel; the haddies and eggs were excellent, done to a turn, and had been ordered by himself the previous evening; and breakfast passed without the looked-for cause of complaint.

"What will you have for dinner, Sandy?" said Mrs. Black.

"A chicken, madam," said the husband.

"Roast or boiled?" asked the wife.

"Confound it, madam, if you had been a good and considerate wife, you'd have known before this what I liked," Sandy growled out, and, slamming the door behind him, left the house. It was in the spring, and a friend who was present heard the little wife say, "Sandy's bent on a disturbance to-day; I shall not please him, do what I can."

The dinner time came, and Sandy and his friend sat down to dinner; the fish was eaten in silence, and on raising the cover of the dish before him, in a towering passion he called out—

"Boiled chicken! I hate it, madam. A chicken boiled is a chicken spoiled."

Immediately the cover was raised for another chicken, roasted to a turn.

"Madam, I won't eat roast chicken," roared Sandy; "you know how it should have been cooked!"

At that instant a broiled chicken, with mushrooms, was placed on the table.

"Without green peas," roared the grumbler.

"Here they are, dear," said Mrs. Black.

"How dare you spend my money in that way?"

"They were a present," said the wife, interrupting him.

Rising from his chair and rushing from the room, amidst a roar of laughter from his friend, he clenched his fist and shouted, "How dare you receive a present without my leave?"

Answer to Prayer.

Mr. Spurgeon, like George Muller, is illustrating the strength of faith, in securing supplies of money needed for benevolent objects, by earnest prayer. A correspondent of the Examiner gives the following incident, learned at one of his prayer meetings:

It was in the main audience room, on the lower floor, and notwithstanding it was a very unpleasant evening, there were from 1,500 to 2,000 present. It was a grand sight. In Mr. Spurgeon's remarks he spoke about the power of prayer, and related the following facts: "You know that some two weeks ago, in view of the urgent need of more money to prosecute successfully our orphan asylum building, I requested the prayers of the church for that object; and I now wish to inform you of the success resulting from that meeting. A few days ago I received from a friend, living about two hundred miles from here, a check for £500 ($2,500) in gold; and to-night, about half an hour ago, a gentleman called and gave me £3,000 for that object, and not either of the individuals knew anything about our having made it a special subject of prayer, and that we had not expected it from that source." He then offered up a short prayer of thanksgiving to God for the blessing.

Value of Gold and Greenbacks.

The quotations for gold generally given in the papers, convey no fixed idea to general readers. What a paper dollar is worth may thus be stated:

When gold is quoted at 150, a paper dollar is worth 66⅔ cents.

Gold at 145, a paper dollar is worth 69 cents.

Gold at 140, a paper dollar is worth 71 cents.

Gold at 135, a paper dollar is worth 74 cents.

Gold at 130, a paper dollar is worth 77 cents.

Gold at 125, a paper dollar is worth 80 cents.

Gold at 120, a paper dollar is worth 83⅓ cents.

Gold at 115, a paper dollar is worth 87 cents.

Gold at 110, a paper dollar is worth 91 cents.

The Herald wants the President to proclaim universal amnesty, in which case, it argues, the District Commanders will be compelled to receive as voters any Rebels who may claim the right. This is nonsense. We advise The Herald to read the Supplementary Reconstruction act, the seventh section of which says: "No person shall at "any time be entitled to be registered or to vote by reasons of any "executive pardon or amnesty for "any act or thing, which, without "such pardon or amnesty, would "disqualify him from registration "or voting."

A Fidgetty Wife.

The following amusing mistake of a Swedish bachelor we meet with in Miss Bunbury's Life in Sweden. Reporting the conclusion of a conversation, the gentleman is represented as saying—

"Well, I should like to get a fidgetty wife; yes, my wife must be a little fidgetty."

"A fidgetty wife!" I exclaimed, in amaze at the nature of his difficulties.

"Yes, madam; I am not very fidgetty myself, and I tink a fidgetty wife would shuit me."

"Well, if she were in a fidgetty humor, I think she might 'shoot' you," I replied, feeling that it would not be safe to trust me with weapons in such a case.

"Madam," said the Swede, though I spoke very gravely, "do I speak your langurge right."

"O yes; but perhaps you don't exactly know what fidgetty means. If you go to England to look for a wife, it might be as well not to ask at once for a fidgetty one. What do you mean by the word in Swedish?"

"I got it in the dictionary, madam; yes, it is correct English, for I have a dictionary in two volumes, in which is every word that was ever spoken or written in the English tongue; and, indeed, whoever has that dictionary need have nothing more. You must buy it, madam; it is English and Swedish, and will teach you the meaning of every word in your language."

"And pray how does it translate fidgetty in Swedish?"

He told me; and the translation was "lively, gay!" that is, he told me the Swedish words, which mean these in English. I got the dictionary afterwards to look at; and, certainly, if the Swede had sought for all the qualities of his wife by the explanations given there of such terms in our language, he would have imported a singular specimen of English womanhood into his country. A fidgetty wife, instead of a lively one, would have been only one result of these mistranslations.

Borrowed Books.

The practice of writing mottoes on the fly-leaves of books that are liable to be lent, may be classed by some among the eccentricities; but the following specimens in the New York Observer should, from their suggestiveness, commend themselves for that purpose:

This very excellent stanza, relating to the returning of borrowed books, is from the pen of the late Joseph P. Engles, Esq., of Philadelphia, a gentleman of good judgment, strict principles, and rare literary acquirements. These lines come with good grace from the pen of Mr. Engles, who always practised whatever he preached.

This book belongs to Mr.——

If thou art borrowed by a friend,
Right welcome shall he be
To read, to study, not to lend,
But to return to me;
Not that imparted knowledge doth
Diminish learnings store,
But books, I find, if often lent,
Return to me no more.

Read slowly; pause frequently; think seriously; keep cleanly; return duly, with the corners of the leaves not turned down.

THE CHILDREN'S ANSWERS.—A Sunday School teacher, instructing his class on that petition of the Lord's prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," said to them, "You have told me, my dear children, what is to be done—the will of God—and where it is to be done—on earth; and how it is to be done—as it is done in heaven—How do you think the angels and the happy spirits do the will of God in heaven, as they are to be our pattern?"

The first child replied, "They do it immediately:" the second, "They do it diligently:" the third, "They do it always:" the fourth, "They do it with all their hearts:" the fifth, "They do it all together."

Here a pause ensued and no other children appeared to have any answer; but after some time, a little girl arose, and said, "Why, sir, they do it without asking any questions."

Happy world! Our Father who art in heaven, whose will is always wise and always good, thy will be thus done on earth as it is done in heaven!

Earnestness in Saving Men.

The most earnest laborers for souls may receive a new impulse to fidelity from the following incident in the life of the noble-hearted Simeon:

Charles Simeon was once summoned to the bedside of a dying brother. Entering the room, the relative extended his hand, and with some emotion said, "I am dying, and you never warned me of the state in which I was, and of the great danger I was in in neglecting the salvation of my soul."

"Nay, my brother," said Simeon, "but I took every reasonable opportunity of bringing the subject of religion before you, and frequently alluded to it in my letters."

"Yes," said the dying man, "but you never came to me, closed the door, and took me by the collar of my coat, and told me I was unconverted, and that if I died in that state I should be lost; and now I am dying, and, but for God's grace, I might have been forever undone."

It is said that Simeon never forgot this scene.

Eighteen Things that are Very Impolite.

Leaving church before service is over.
Reading when others are talking.
Cutting finger-nails in company.
Whispering in church.
Gazing at strangers.
Leaving a stranger without a seat.
A want of reverence for a superior.
Reading aloud in company without being asked.
Receiving a present without some manifestation of gratitude.
Making yourself the topic of conversation.
Laughing at mistakes of others.
Joking others in company.
Correcting older persons than yourself—especially parents.
Loud laughter—especially by ladies.
Commencing to eat as soon as you sit down to the table.
Commence talking before others have finished.
Answering questions when put to others, and not listening to what one is saying in company, unless you desire to show contempt for the speaker.

Heavenly Minded.

One of our best and most esteemed ministers said, a week or two ago, in a sermon on Heaven, "How seldom we hear the word heavenly-minded now-a-days. Our fathers used it often; they understood it well; but now it is rarely heard, either from the pulpit or the press."

The remark is a suggestive one. Words are things, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The words of Christ are spirit and life; and, on the other hand, his life in the soul finds utterance in the emotions and language of the Bible.

The Christians of other days were heavenly-minded; their affections were set on things above; their conversation was in heaven; and when they met together, they thought and spoke much of things pertaining to the kingdom of God. They loved the Bible and devotional works that lifted their aspirations to a better world.

A change for the worse is apparent among many professed disciples of Jesus. Their treasure is below, and where the treasure is, the heart is also. They mind earthly things; are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; read works of fiction oftener than God's Word. How can such persons be heavenly-minded, or understand the life that is hid with Christ in God?—Watchman and Reflector.

THREE MONTHS FOR NOTHING—Look at this Offer.—The publishers of the American Agriculturist show their enterprise by offering that valuable journal free for the remaining three months of this year to all new subscribers for 1868, (Vol. 27,) who send in their subscription during this month of September. The cost of the Agriculturist is only $1 50 for a year, or four copies for $5, so that $1 50, (or $1 25 each for four persons,) if sent to the publishers this month, will secure the paper for fifteen months. We advise all to make haste to accept this offer. The money could not be better invested, for that paper, at its present subscription price, is one of the cheapest in the world. It is designed for the farm, garden and household. It has readers almost everywhere, among the old and young, and not its least recommendation is the fact that the children are delighted with its boys' and girls' department. Each number contains 32 to 44 large, quarto pages, full of interesting and valuable matter for readers both in country and city. Its engravings are costly and beautiful, and calculated not only to please the eye, but to improve the taste. We have also seen, from month to month, exposures of the various humbugs and swindling operations of the day, which must have saved tens of thousands of dollars to the unwary. We are sure you will thank us for our advice if you send your subscription at once to the publishers, ORANGE JUDD & Co., 41 Park Row, New York city.

AGED TREES.—We are told that in 1810 a noted tree, the Golynos oak, was felled near Newport, Monmouthshire. It was 28½ feet in circumference; its bark sold for £200, its timber for £670; the rings (400) encircling its trunk indicated that it had continued growing four hundred years. The far-famed red oak of Mount Etna was of precisely the same age. Four hundred years appears a venerable age even for a tree. Still there were many, the longevity of which was greatly in excess of it, among the most celebrated of which were the following: Fig tree in Damascus, 648 years; the Persian olive tree, 700; olive tree in Palestine, 719; olive tree in Asia Minor, 850; the Louisianean oak, (still living,) 1,000; yew trees of Fountain Abbey, 1,200: yew trees of Crowhurst, Yorkshire, 1,400; sycamore of Heliopolis, 1,805; cedar of Mount Lebanon, 2,102; yew of Fotheringay, Scotland, 2,500; yew of Bradburn, Kent, 3,000; sycamore of the Bosphorus, 4,020. The cypress of Taxodinne, in Mexico, is said to be more than 5,000 years old; its circumference was 117 feet and 10 inches.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

At the last communion in our church, one of the seats was occupied by Mrs. S——, with Willie, her son, a boy about six years of age. She was not a member of the church, and the deacon, in distributing the bread, passed her, when the little boy called out, "You did not give mamma any." The lady turned deadly pale, and telling Willie that she did not care for any, quieted him; but she could not so easily quiet her own conscience.

When she reached home, she thought, what if my son should grow up in sin through my neglect? This thought troubled her; then she thought, "I have spoken a positive untruth when I said I did not care for any, for I do wish I was worthy to partake of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The next Sabbath the minister preached from the text, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." He spoke forcibly, and among other things said that we were not sure of living another day; even while we were in the house of worship the angel of death might come to some one. At night Willie came to his mother, and said, "Mamma, do you suppose you'll die to-night?" "I don't know, Willie; I hope not." But "what if you should?" Her heart answered, "I am not prepared." Her conscience thus awakkened, she sought in her Bible and prayer the way of escape from the path of death. She foiled the great enemy of souls, procrastination, and is now rejoicing in her Redeemer.

Thus by the few words of her little son she was brought, through divine grace, to see the error of her way, and was led to Christ.—American Messenger.

Cheap Pleasure.

Many a great man has owed his greatness to a kind word in his early years. It is so easy and cheap to please children by a pleasant word or trivial gift, that we wonder more do not practise it. Douglas Jerrold, in one of his papers, thus eloquently testifies to the value of these little things:

The writer of this recollects himself at this moment as a barefooted lad, standing at the wooden fence of a poor little garden in his native village, while with longing eyes he gazed on the flowers which were blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sunday morning. The possessor came forth from his little cottage; he was a wood-cutter by trade, and spent the whole week at work in the woods. He had come into his garden to gather flowers to stick into his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations—it was streaked with red and white—he gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke a word, and with bounding steps the boy ran home. And now here, at a vast distance from that home, after so many events of so many years, the feeling of gratitude which agitated the breast of that boy expresses itself on paper. The carnation has long since withered, but now it blooms afresh.

Deep Preaching.

"Is not Mr. B. a deep preacher?" asked a friend of the late Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Aberdeen. "Eh!" replied the doctor, smiling; "I will tell you a story, sir. When I was a boy, I was amusing myself, with some other boys, in a pool. Some of them were going in further than I was disposed to go, and I was frightened. To a man who was passing by, I called out, 'Is this pool deep?' 'No, man,' replied he; 'it is only muddy.' There is such a thing as preaching the deep things of God, which will be neither understood nor relished by the natural man. But it is very possible to preach the plain truths of the gospel in a language and style which at once clothe them with mystery, and expose them to ridicule. It ought never to be forgotten, that the gospel is a revelation; and that it is by manifestation of the truth that the preacher is to commend himself to every man's conscience. I have heard of a minister discussing the unrevealed glories of Christ. This may be deep preaching; I am sure it must be very nonsensical and unprofitable. Paul said, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of men's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit of power."

An Aerial Fort.

In the island of Mahaga, one of the Solomon Isles in the South Pacific, about 500 miles east of New Guinea, a weaker tribe, driven by a stronger, took refuge on a steep hillside at the foot of some lofty trees. Here the passengers of the missionary ship Southern Cross, found them defended by a wall of coral and chevaux de frise of bamboo. But their chief defense was in the summits of the trees, where were deposited magazines of stones carried up on bamboo ladders, frail to look to as spider-webs. A woman, with a large stone on her head, would skip up these swaying threads nearly a hundred feet without holding on with her hands. One of these aerial forts, ninety-four feet from the ground, measured eighteen feet in length, ten in breadth, and over eight in height. The whole fortress was the work of less than a year.

ONE SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

We were in company, the other day, with a gentleman, apparently fifty or sixty years of age, who used, in substance, the following language:

Were I to live my life over again, I should make it a point to do a kindness to a fellow-being whenever I had the opportunity. I regret very much that my habit has been so different, and that I have induced feelings so unlike those which would lead to such a course of life.

It has been too much my way to let others take care of themselves, while I took care of myself. If some little trespass was committed on my rights, or if I suffered some slight inconvenience from the thoughtlessnes or selfishness of others, I was greatly annoyed, and sometimes used harsh, reproachful language towards the offenders.

I am now satisfied that my own happiness was greatly impaired by this course, and that my conduct and example contributed to the irritation and unhappiness of others.

"It was but the other day," continued the gentleman, "that I was passing along the street, and a coachman was attempting to draw a light carriage into a coach house. He tried once or twice without success, and just as I came up, the carriage occupied the whole of the sidewalk, and prevented my passing. The fellow looked as though it ought not be exactly so, and there was something like a faint apology in his smile. It was on my tongue to say: 'In with your carriage man! and don't let it stand here blocking up the passage.' But an influence prevailed; I went to the rear of the carriage, and said: 'Now, try again, my good fellow!' while with the end of my umbrella I gave a little push, and in the carriage went, and out the pleasant 'Thank ye, sir; much obliged.'—I would not have taken a twenty dollar bank note for the streak of sunshine that this one little act of kindness threw over the rest of my walk, to say nothing of the lighting up of the coachman's countenance.

"And when I look back upon my intercourse with my fellow men all the way along, I can confidently say that I never did a kindness to any human being without being happier for it. So that, if I were governed by mere selfish motives, and wanted to live the happiest life I could, I would just simply obey the Bible precepts, to do good to all men as I had opportunity."

All this was said with an air of sincerity and deep conviction which we cannot give to our report of it. And does the experience of the youngest of our readers confirm or contradict the statement? Is there a boy or a girl among all of them who can say: "I did a kind act once to my brother, or sister, or playmate, and was afterwards sorry for it. I should have been happier if it had been an unkind one!" It is very likely that a kind act has been ill requitted, perhaps misconstrued—but if it was performed with proper feelings, it is as certain to produce happiness as sunshine is to produce warmth.

We counsel our friend, then, to seize every opportunity of contributing to the good of others. Sometimes a smile will do it. Oftener a kind word, a look of sympathy, or an acknowledgment of obligation.—Sometimes a little help to a burdened shoulder or a heavy wheel will be in place. Sometimes a word or two of good council, a seasonable and gentle admonition, and at others a suggestion of advantage to be gained and a little interest to secure it, will be received with lasting gratitude. And thus every instance of kindness done whether acknowledged or not, opens up a little wellspring of happiness in the doer's own breast, the flow of which may be made permanent by habit.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The exhaustion of the native population of the Sandwich Islands, which has been going on for a great number of years, seems to be accelerated of late. During the last six years there has been a decrease of over 9,000. The death rate among the natives is now about 1,500 a year over the births; and with an increasing ratio, this decimation will work the extinction of the race in a quarter of a century. European, but more especially Californian enterprise, already sways the developement and the institutions of these islands, and the proximity and unequalled energy of our Pacific States must inevitably draw them at no distant day under the protection, if not the possession, of the United States.

THE NILE.—Bayard Taylor, writing two thousand miles from the mouth of the Nile—whose unknown source he is anxious to discover—says that its current there is as broad, as strong, and as deep as at Cairo, and that he is even there no nearer the mystery of its origin. He is confident that when its hidden fountains shall at last be reached, and the problem of twenty centuries solved, the entire length of the Nile will be found not less than four thousand miles, and it will then rank its name with the Mississippi and the Amazon, a sublime trinity of streams.

The Cynic.

The cynic is one who never sees a good quality in a man, and never fails to see a bad one. He is the human owl, vigilant in darkness and blind in light, mousing for the vermin and never seeing noble game. The cynic puts all human actions in two classes, openly bad and secretly bad. All virtue and generosity and disinterestedness are merely the appearance of good, but selfish at the bottom. He holds that no man does a thing except for profit. The effect of his conversation on your feelings is to chill and sear them, to send you away sour and morose. His criticisms and inuendoes fall indiscriminately upon every lovely thing, like frost upon flowers. If a man is said to be pure and chaste, he answers: "Yes, in the day-time. If a woman is pronounced virtuous, he will reply: Yes, as yet. Mr. A. is religious: Yes, on Sundays. Mr. B. has joined the church: Certainly, the elections are coming on. The minister of the gospel is called an example of dilligence: It is his trade. Such a man is generous: Of other men's money. That man is obliging: To lull suspicion and cheat you. That man is upright: Because he is green.

Thus his eye strains out every good quality, and takes in only the bad—as the vulture, when in the highest heavens, will sail by living flocks and herds, but comes like an arrow down on the smallest carcass. To him religion is hypocrisy, honesty a preparation for fraud, virtue only a want of opportunity, and undeniable purity, asceticism. The live-long day he will coolly sit with sneering lip, uttering sharp speeches in the queerest manner, and in polished phrase transfixing every character which is presented. "His words are softer than oil, yet they are drawn swords." Psalms 5: 21. All this to the young seems a wonderful knowledge of human nature; they honor a man who appears to have found out mankind. They begin to indulge themselves in flippant sneers; and with supercilious brow, and impudent tongue wagging to an empty brain, call to naught the wise, the long-tried and the venerable.—H. W. Beecher.

The New York World on Stanbery.

The New York World of Monday has an article declaring that the Hon. Henry Stanbery, though an able lawyer, is not a statesman, and urging him to resign his position in in the Cabinet. The World says:

It is not mere logic, however vigorous and unanswerable, that constitutes statesmanship, but the ability to extract the most good and exclude the most evil from any given situation. Is the overbearing rigor of Congress greater or less in consequence of Mr. Stanbery's manifestoes? We suppose nobody questions that it is greater. That statesman should have foreseen this consequence is implied in the very meaning of the word; a wise forecast of the future being the chief attribute of statesmanship.

The July meeting of Congress was so obvious, almost so necessary a consequence of Mr. Stanbery's opinions, that we pointed it out immediately on the publication of his first opinion, and the whole country inferred it from the second. The evils which were not law, he provoked Congress to make so. Commanders who were restrained by doubts before, had their doubts all removed by the new act of Congress, which Mr. Stanbery occasioned. He is no statesman if he did this unwittingly; still less a statesman if he brought it about by design. It was better for the South that the law should have remained doubtful in all these points in which Congress has changed it.

If Mr. Stanbery had acted in the spirit of a statesman, he would have given the President, orally and privately his opinion of the law, and have advised him to make in May the change of commanders which he has deferred till late in August. If the President had put General Thomas in General Sheridan's place in June, and replaced Gen. Sickles by a pronounced Republican of natural moderation of character, there would have been no meeting of Congress, and the unrelieved ambiguity of the original law would have been favorable to the South during the procession of reconstruction, and have been a convenient justification of the generals afterward. Mr. Stanbery having neither strengthened the President nor benefitted the South, there is no reason why any well-wisher of the country should depricate his resignation.

John Bull.

England is emphatically the home of fogs, and to see one anywhere is sure to remind a loyal Briton affectionately of his mother isle:

The Portland Transcript says: "We heard an anecdote the other day which amusingly illustrates John Bull's incapacity to appreciate any thing that isn't English. The weather was somewhat foggy, and one of the sailors belonging to a Liverpool steamer in our harbor was overheard to say to one of his mates: "This is weather as is weather, none of your blasted blue sky?"

This reminds us of Irving's description of Wouter Van Twiller, whose face (very blank and round) "presented none of those useless irregularities called 'features'."

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

SONG OF LIBERTY.

For seven long years, through storm and shade,
Our Patriot Fathers bled;
And moor and mountain, hill and glade,
Gave back the warrior's tread.

For FREEDOM—glorious, heavenly thing—
They fought, they toiled and died;
They met Old England's veteran hosts,
And all her strength defied.

Three millions of their enfranchised sons
Received the BOON of Heaven,
And all this continent of ours
For FREEDOM'S home was given.

Years rolled amain! a dusky race
Was brought the ocean o'er:
And SLAVERY, in fair Freedom's name,
Disgraced our Western shore.

Once more to arms and battle field
Fair Freedom called each son,
And many a gallant soldier died
Ere the fierce fight was won.

At length dear victory crowned the right,
The foe laid down his arms,
And red-eyed War, with visage grim,
No more spread his alarms.

Then FREEDOM, in her strength,
Burst every servile chain,
And to the slave the BALLOT gave,
This freedom to maintain.

Now come, each sable son of toil,
Come each enfranchised man,
From field and workshop, farm and town,
Each true REPUBLICAN.

The POLLS! make them your trysting place:
To each eye let them be
Like beacon lights, on stormy nights,
To pilgrims of the sea.

With those who strove to rend our chain
Let each proud vote be given;
Thus only, can you FREEDOM gain—
That noblest gift of heaven.

LOYALIST.

New Orleans, Aug. 26, 1867.

From the "Annals of Iowa."

GENERAL BUSSEY.

(Concluded.)

It was at Pea Ridge that civilization was outraged by the shocking barbarities perpetrated by the savage hordes, led to the field by Albert Pike. Among the victims of these barbarians were eight of the 3d Iowa, found scalped, and many others bearing the evidence of having been murdered after their capture.

Continuing with the army of the Southwest during the spring and summer of 1862, participating in the long and tedious march through Arkansas, he was frequently sent out on separate expeditions from the main army with his brigade, but without finding any considerable force of the enemy, had no opportunity of signalizing the campaign with any farther battles. On the 10th of July, 1862, he was assigned the command of the 3d brigade of General Steele's division of the same army. On the 11th of January, 1863, was appointed to the command of the District of Eastern Arkansas, which he filled until the following April, when he succeeded Major General Washburn in command of the 2d Cavalry Division, "Army of the Tennessee." At his own suggestion was relieved and ordered to report to Vicksburg, then the most active field of military operations in the West. Soon after his arrival was appointed Chief of Cavalry, and, until the fall of Vicksburg, commanded all the cavalry engaged in the operations connected with that famous siege; especially rendering important service to General Grant in watching the movements of the rebel General Joe Johnston, who was hovering near with a large force waiting an opportunity to raise the seige. He led the advance in Sherman's movements against Johnston at Jackson, Miss., after the fall of Vicksburg; meeting the rebel General Jackson on the 8th of July, and forcing him to retire. During the few days' siege of Jackson he was active in visiting different points, Calhoun, Beattie's Bluff, Vernon and other places, driving in the outposts of the enemy and feeling his strength. Met Jackson again at Canton on the 17th of July, and, after a battle that lasted all day, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the evening, drove him to the east side of Pearl river.

January 5th, 1864, he was commissioned Brigadier General U. S. V., for "special gallantry," on reports of commanding officers. It was, probably, a misfortune to General Bussey, that, at the time of his promotion, he was serving in the trans-Mississippi Army: for the reason that an order of the War Department assigned all officers promoted to Brigadier General to duty with the corps in which they were serving at the time of promotion. Under this rule General Bussey was still left with the 7th Army Corps in Arkansas, where but few military movements of any magnitude afforded opportunity for distinction took place from that time on to the end of the war.

His promotion found him at Little Rock, where he remained until the winter of 1865. When General Reynolds took command of the Department—relieving General Steele—General Bussey was assigned to a new and very important command in the reorganization which took place. At this time in the Department of Arkansas there were three divisions of federal troops belonging to the 7th Army Corps, and at the same time twelve Brigadier Generals in the Department, all but two of whom ranked General Bussey. Under this state of facts he could only expect to be assigned to the command of a brigade at best. What, then, was his surprise on receiving an order assigning him to a command, embracing Western Arkansas and the Indian Territory, and the 3d Division of the 7th Army Corps, numbering about ten thousand men, stationed at the military posts of Fort Smith, Fort Gibson, Van Buren and Fayetteville; and this over the heads of ten Generals, his seniors in rank. This appointment was peculiarly complimentary, when the circumstances and the particular reasons for it are considered.

Grave charges of corruption had been made against all the officers who had served in that District. The War Department had sent several inspectors to examine the charges. One of them, Maj. Gen. Herron, recommended the removal of all the important officers of the District, which was done, and General Bussey was selected with the view of breaking up the corruption and restoring discipline—a compliment both to his integrity as a man and capacity as an officer. To understand the exact character of the work which he had to perform, it may be proper to give a brief outline sketch of the "situation" of his district at the time of his assuming command. An officer, who was stationed within the District prior to that occurrence, and who remained there during Gen. Bussey's administration, sends us an account from which we gather the following condition of its affairs:

Fort Smith, the headquarters of the District, had from its first reoccupation been the resort of a crowd of speculators, traders and contractors, many of them unscrupulous to the last degree. These men, by corrupting some officers and overawing others by their influence, had committed a series of enormous abuses, which ended in great demoralization to the troops and loss to the Government- Illicit and contraband trade in violation of the treasury regulations was openly carried on; Government transportation was used in the carrying of traders' and sutlers' goods, while the troops were destitute of clothing and food; private property was taken from the people and sold to the Government by the parties taking it, and the proceeds appropriated to their own uses; beef, which cost the contractors nothing, being taken without pay and driven in by the soldiers, was sold to the Government at high prices; hay, which was cut by the soldiers on the prairies, was sold by the contractors to the Government for thirty dollars per ton; scouts, sutlers, cotton speculators, robbed and plundered the people; houses were burned, fencing destroyed, and the country generally laid waste. The discipline of the troops had become greatly relaxed; drunkenness, theft and pilaging prevailed to an alarming extent; and to add to the disorder, through the neglect of the proper officers, food, clothing and equipments were not forwarded, and the stores that were on hand suffered to spoil. The people, plundered alike by friend and foe, were utterly disheartened, and, abandoning all attempts at cultivation of the ground or self-support in any way, resorted in crowds to the Commissary Department for subsistence. Three hundred thousand rations were issued per month to white refugees alone. The troops, badly fed, badly clothed, badly equipped, were discontented and disorderly.

General Bussey, upon his arrival, entered immediately upon his duties with an intelligence of business, a promptness of decision, an efficiency of action, and an integrity of conduct, that bore speedy and benificent results. A few weeks changed the whole aspect of affairs, and made his district and division one of the most orderly and best disciplined in the Department. The hordes of contractors and spoilsmen were sternly and and quickly dispersed; incompetent and immoral officers summarily dismissed; ample supplies were brought forward, and the troops, fed, clothed and equipped for the first time, acquiesced cheerfully in the regulations which were established, and rigid discipline was restored. The whisky shops were closed; the people were encouraged to rebuild their fences and cultivate their fields, and were protected from depredation, thereby helping to lessen the immense expense of the Government in their support.

To remedy all these evils and reorganize his command, required the most arduous and laborious personal direction of the commander. The work was herculean. To every branch of business, and every class of complaints, or abuses, he gave careful personal attention. Every paper requiring his endorsement was carefully inquired into, and every transaction, involving the interests of the District or Government, was given a personal cognizance. All persons had free access to him, and his affability of manners, his kindness, firmness and rectitude of character impressing itself upon all who came in contact with him, created a marked influence over citizens and soldiers, and secured him the confidence and good will of all.

General Bussey was commissioned Major General by brevet March 13th, 1865; remaining in command of his District until the 1st of October of the same year, when the war having ended he was mustered out of service.

General Bussey is now a resident of New Orleans. Finding himself enfeebled in health on his return from service, which seemed to be aggravated by a return to a northern climate, he was induced, after a few months' trial at his Iowa home, to return and take up his abode under the more genial skies of the "Sunny South," where, recovering in a measure, he has entered into an extensive, and, as usual with him, prosperous business.

A Human Timepiece.

The ingenious Yankees have learned how to make the cheapest clocks and watches in the world; but even they may gain a new "notion" by the following paragraph:

A wonderful story is told of a man named J. D. Chevalley, a native of Switzerland, who had, in 1845, at the age of sixty-six, arrived at an astonishing degree of perfection in reckoning time by an internal movement. He was, in fact, a human timepiece, or living clock. In his youth he wus accustomed to pay great attention to the ringing of bells and vibrations of pendulums, and by degrees he acquired the power of counting a succession of intervals exactly equal to those which the vibrations of the sound produced. Being on board a steamboat on Lake Geneva, on July 14th, 1832, he engaged to indicate to the crowd around the lapse of a quarter of an hour, or as many minutes and seconds as any one chose to name, and this during a most diversified conversation with those standing by; and further, to indicate by his voice the moment when the hand passed over the quarter, minutes, or any other subdivision previously stipulated, during the whole course of the experiment. This he did without mistake, notwithstanding the exertions of those about him to distract his attention, and clapped his hands at the conclusion of the fixed time. His own account of his gift was as follows: "I have acquried, by imitation, labor and patience, a movement which neither thought, nor labor, nor anything can stop. It is similar to that of a pendulum, which at each moment of going and returning gives me the space of three seconds, so that twenty of them make a minute; and these I add to others continually.

The Folly of Law.

Two Dutchmen, who built and used in common a small bridge over a stream which ran through their farms, had a dispute concerning some repairs which it required, and one of them positively refused to bear any portion of the expense necessary to the purchase of a few planks. Finally the aggrieved party went to a neighboring lawyer, and pacing ten dollars in his hand, said:

"I'll give you all dish moneys if you'll make Hans do justice mit the pridge."

"How much will it cost to repair it?" asked the honest lawyer.

"Not more ash five tollar," replied the Dutchman.

"Very well," said the lawyer, pocketing one of the notes and giving him the other; "take this and go get the bridge repaired; 'tis the best course you can take."

"Yaas," said the Dutchman, slowly, "yaas, dat ish more better as to quarrel mit Hans;" but as he went along home he shook his head frequently, as if unable, after all, to see quite clearly how he had gained anything by going to law.

Chinese Emigration.

A correspondent from California has no exalted opinion of the quality of citizenship to be derived from the Chinese emigrants on the Pacific coast. He says:

Who that has seen the dirty Chinese in the streets and hovels of San Francisco will deny that they are a nuisance? There is a class of writers whose consideration of all questions is pecuniary. To these the sole object, aim and end of human existence is buying and selling. It is not wonderful from such a standpoint the conclusion should be arrived at that the Chinese immigration to California is a benefit to that State. Such is not the case morally, physically or socially, whatever it may be commercially. The Chinese males are, in the aggregate, utterly degraded. Filthy in their personal habits, clannish in their associations, vicious to an extent which cannot be decently named, it is fortunate that they do not come with families, and are, therefore, doomed to early extinction. As for the few women, they come as slaves, whose masters are to be enriched by the profits of their prostitution, and the fruits of their unholy acts are now fearfully manifest on the Pacific coast, and will be manifest "even to the third and fourth generations" of its inhabitants. To this every medical practitioner in that region will bear testimony. In exchange for these accursed conditions we get their custom. They buy our goods; and by their means the trade of the Indies is to be ours hereafter. "But what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We would not urge prohibitive measures against the influx of the Chinese, though the temptation is strong to do so. But we would deprecate any attempt to increase the tide oi Asiatic immigration, and rebuke any effort to make it appear proper and praiseworthy. The movement is not a natural one, and its practical result will be the establishment of a kind of slavery differing in form, but identical in nature, with that which we have just thrown off.

English Children.

Let us take a drive through some of the streets of London. As we stand waiting in the hall for a cab, the governess passes us with her charge. She is a bonnie-looking, lady-like girl, neatly dressed in drab-colored merino, and by the clatter they all make, the troupe is well supplied with thick-soled, heavy boots. They are going for their three or four mile walk. There is a park opposite, where they might ramble and play; but as the father says they must get out of sight of the house, out of the way of familiar surroundings; so twice a day they are sent off, and never do less than their two miles, except in rainy weather. There's the kind of training to make blush-roses bloom on each hearty, healthy face. No wonder Englishmen and English women look ruddy and strong, in spite of their ale, when one sees such foundations laid.

The little children are only manly, only womanly, so-called, in one thing; and that is politeness.—Well-bred children in England may well be termed little ladies and gentlemen, "I beg your pardon," and "I am giving you too much trouble, I fear," are so ready on their little six-year-old tongues! they express themselves so well and so gracefully! I imagine they are taught more reverence for their elders than is customary in other countries.

The emperor of Russia has taken an enlightened step. A system of instruction is to be organized over the length and breadth of the land. School-houses are to be provided, and teachers appointed, at the expense of the government. The secular education will be taken entirely out of the hands of the priests.

THE CHARITY THAT COVERETH.—"Dear moss!" said old thatch, "I am so worn, so patched, so ragged, really, I am quite unsightly. I wish you would come and cheer me up a little, you will hide all my infirmities and defects, and, through your loving sympathy, no finger of contempt or dislike will be pointed at me."

The Immortal Huss in Prison, 1414.

John Huss, a scholar of the University of Prague, felt the light of holy scripture dawning upon his mind, and as fast as he received truth, taught it to the students and people in public preaching; for this he was silenced by the Pope; but he knew that he enjoyed the privilege of a commission higher than man was able to bestow or interfere with, and continued to lift up his voice against the ungodliness of clergy and people.

At length he was commanded to appear at the Council of Constance, to answer for what was called his heresies. And as the Emperor gave him a safe conduct, Huss was pleased to appear in person and answer from scripture all the objections of his enemies. But the word of that Emperor was not worth much, and he allowed Huss to be immediately put in prison, when some of his noble Bohemian friends hearing of it, went to Constance to see him, and thus they found him:

"Conducted by the Emperor's attendants, the Bohemians proceeded to the Franciscan Convent. There they found Huss, to outward view a pitable object. He lay stretched on a miserable couch, emaciated and wasted almost to a skeleton. On the ground before him lay a small strip of paper. They picked it up, and though the writing upon it was scarce legible, it told the story of the neglect which would soon have saved the stake a victim. 'If you still love me, entreat the Emperor to allow his people to provide for me, or else enable me to find sustenance for myself.' Such were the words they read. The meeting of Huss and his friends was very melancholy, and the parting was still more sad; for all those brave men loved Huss as their father, and their hearts were full of gloomy forebodings. When the sufferer had received the last embrace of his countrymen, he sank back fainting on his chains."

Such was popery in the early part of the 15th century, and it has ever remained the same cruel, persecuting power, where it is permitted to reign and have full sway. Q. Q.

From the Watchman and Reflector.

Wit Better than Argument.

A witty retort is often more convincing than elaborate reasoning. It goes straight to the mark, and if it contain also the seeds of truth, it satisfies the judgment and wins the heart.

One of the best specimens of such wit, carrying with it a cogent demonstration, is found in the early life of Napoleon I.

He had been ordered by the Directory to disperse a formidable body of rioters in the streets of Paris. He prepared for the work with great coolness and decision, planted guns across the street, drew up his soldiers, and waited the coming of the mob. They appeared in vast force, sweeping down on his little body of troops like a fresh-et. The guns were charged with grape, and the artillery men stood ready to mow down the advancing lines when the signal should be given.

But Napoleon wished to try the power of words before the last appeal to powder and ball. He stepped in front of the soldiers to address the people, and ask a statement of their grievances. A woman confronted him, one of the ferocious residents of St. Antoine, of prodigious stature, and huge girth, and fiery tongue. Her temper was at red heat, and heedless of his calm questions and remonstrance she poured on him volleys of abuse. The people were ground to the dust, she said, helpless and starving. She and her companions, honest and industrious people, could get nothing to eat, while lazy fellows like him and the rest of the army, were living on the fat of the land.

Napoleon saw at a glance how this field could be won. He was then both short and thin, known familiarly as "The little corporal." He waited patiently till her violence had exhausted her breath, and then placing his slender body beside the ponderous woman, he took off his hat, bowed graciously to the mob, and asked, "Fellow citizens, which looks more in danger of starving, this good woman, or myself?" The joke was irresistible; the contrast between the two was so marked that the mob burst into a shout of laughter at the expense of their leader, and gradually dispersed. The wit of Napoleon won a bloodless victory.

NEW PLANET DISCOVERED.—Prof. J. C. Watson, of Ann Arbor, Mich., announces the discovery of a new planet, hitherto unknown, which was first seen by him a few nights ago. It is situated in the right ascension one degree and forty minutes, and in declination three degrees and ten minutes south. It is moving west and south.

Tippling in England.

It will be seen by the following paragraph that tippling is on the increase in England no less than in this country, and among ladies also. The medical faculty there, as here, are responsible in part for this social degeneracy:

The Lancet has raised its voice, certainly none to soon, against the increasing indulgence among the educated and gentle, of what it justly characterizes the pernicious habit of tippling. There can be no doubt in the mind of any who observe the changes of manners in good society that this very serious charge is well founded; nor must the ladies, though the Lancet delicately abstains from direct allusion to them, be allowed to consider themselves exempted from its strictures or unconcerned in its warnings. Everything in modern custom tends that way—the large wine-glasses in use at all dinner tables, the introduction of amiable alcoholic drinks; the fashion of giving claret or moselle cup as an adjunct to the five o'clock tea table, and at the buffets of evening parties, where girls, heated with dancing or fevered with the constant round of excitement, may be seen swallowing glass after glass of these tempting and fallaciously cool beverages in place of the lemonades and syrups which formerly sufficed for their refreshment. But has the faculty, as it is called, nothing to answer for in promoting the present state of things? Children are now given, "by the doctor's orders," an amount of alcohol which would have horrified their grandmothers. The beer or port wine administered two or three times a day at first disgusts, but soon becomes grateful to them. Almost every one of us may plead medical advice as the beginning of the habit. They say the modern type of disease is low; that stimulants are requisite; and that whether they prescribe chloric ether or champagne does not much signify. Perhaps not in the physical point of view, but in the moral one. Surely the temptation to the abuse of such stimulants as lavender ether, etc., are not so great or so constantly recurring as that of wine and liquors, which are offered and pressed upon us wherever we go. Brandy now takes the place of sal-volatile in the lady's dressing-case; and the properties of gin as a cleansing agent applicable to everything, from the gilt stopper of a scent bottle to a lace flounce, are firmly impressed upon the mind of the waiting-maid. We would never speak but with respect of the noble profession of healing, but it cannot be denied that the peculiar temptatian assailing some of its more "fashionable" members is that of following rather than leading the inclination of their patients.

Lamartine's Vanity.

The following anecdote not only illustrates the vanity of Lamartine, but of the French character. Richelieu, when master of France, invited all polite Paris to the Palais Royal to see his tragedy, and whisper in his ear that Corneille was a poetaster to him:

While M. de Lamartine was in life's sunny hours he was accustomed to issue weekly an invitation somewhat in these terms: "M. de Lamartine begs M. N. or M. to do him the honor to spend the morning of — inst. with him. M. de Lamartine will extemporize a landscape." His large drawing-room, beautifully furnished and decorated, was rather sombre. The guests were seated in chairs placed in parallel lines. M. de Lamartine sat on an arm chair under a sort of velvet canopy, and was wrapped in meditation. Near him was a black ebony easel and a painter. When all the guests were in their places, a servant carefully and noiselessly closed the doors, and M. de Lamartine rose.

The painter likewise rose and stood in front of his canvas. M. de Lamartine fixed his eyes on an imaginary horizon and began to say: "On the right of the landscape a series of small hills—as it were waves of sand—planted with vines, crowned with nothing but some wild peach trees, which throw no shade upon the vines." The poor painter's hand went as fast as the stenographer's, while perspiration rolled down his forehead. On M. de Lamartine went, throwing in the sun here, a rock there—yonder a waterfall, hard by a cottage; beyond it the full moon—clouds all around. At last, almost breathless, M. D. Lamartine exclaimed, "Look on this landscape, and tell me if it does not invite thought to spread its wings, and bear the soul as far as hope can fly, imagination soar!" The landscape was shown to the guests. They all poured holy water on it. One vowed Raphael had never painted anything half so beautiful; another declared no museum possessed anything like it (which was true;) this one begged for it; another said 'twas worth its weight in gold. M. de Lamartine strutted backwards and forwards, bowing, in his stately way, to the compliments paid him. It turned out afterwards that the artist who so greatly exceeded Raphael was a poor wretch of a house painter, who received a dollar and a quarter for his pains, and who has, since M. de Lamartine discontinued his excursions into the realms of art, earned his living by painting signs.

Les Pensees.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

One, speaking of her submission to the will of God, in a matter of some importance, said: "If I could, with a press of my finger, touch the spring that would give it success, I would not do it—only leave it in God's hand."

Intimacy with Christ makes the trials of life easy and bearable; for the more closely we walk with Him, we see the more clearly through the shadows of time, and into the realities of eternity.

"The thoughts of such amazing bliss Should constant joy create."

We would never seek purity of heart if we were not convicted of its necessity for our safety, and the privilege for our present happiness.

God will bring to naught all error, but the doctrines of his blessed word, in our experience, He will preserve, with a strong and mighty arm. Woe be to the man who resists God in his truth.

In a Tuesday afternoon meeting, one said, "I know that I was justified by faith, and I also know that I was sanctified through faith. Some may shut my mouth, but they cannot destroy my experience in the two distinct states, and my sanctification was just as clear and distinct as my justification. Oh, if I had only known the blessedness of this state before."

A sigh is sometimes a murmur, if it refuses the will of God.

There are some people who would like to be thought very respectful toward all that is religious, but take, or seem to take great pleasure in shunning everything that is spiritual.

A good thought is a crumb of angel's food, therefore dispise not the day of small things.

Seeking evidences keeps doubts alive.

No one less than the divine Savior can save us. We must be related to the Godhead to be saved.

The books of the Treasury department show that all the seven-thirty notes due August 17 have already been converted into five-twenty bonds. Of $331,000,000 falling due in June next, $50,000,000 were redeemed; and of $199,000,000 due July next, $47,000,000 have been redeemed—the Treasury being nearly a hundred millions ahead of its promises of redemption.

Dr. J. Mason Warren, who died recently at Boston, was the son of Dr. John C. Warren, who was the son of Dr. John Warren, all of them distinguished as physicians and anatomists. The last named was a brother of General Joseph Warren, also a doctor, who fell at Bunker Hill. Talent and patriotism seem to have "run in the family."

The President and Amnesty.

Has President Johnson the power to proclaim amnesty? The New York Tribune says he has not. It says:

On the 3d of December last the house of representatives, on motion of Mr. Eliot, repealed the section of the act of July 17, 1862, which conferred upon the president the power of declaring a general amnesty; on the 7th of January the senate did the same, and as the executive neither signed nor returned the bill, it became a law ten days afterward. Thus, the authority of congress for the publication of a fresh offer of amnesty has been explicitly withdrawn.

The constitution gives him authority to "grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States." Now a pardon and an amnesty are two very different things. A pardon is an act of grace exempting a person from penalties which he has incurred under the law. Amnesty is defined as "an act of the 'sovereign power,' the object of which is to efface and cause to be forgotten a crime or misdemeanor." Amnesty is abolition of the offense. Pardon is remission of the penalty. The sovereign power of this nation is not the president, but the people. The representative of the people is not Andrew Johnson, but the national congress. The president may pardon individual offenders, but the constitution gives him no authority to declare a general amnesty.

He assumes to exercise a power which was only granted him for a time, and then deliberately taken away. It is better for him to understand that when the people, through their representatives, took away that temporary authority, they meant to keep it in their own hands, and there they will keep it, Johnson, Binckley, and all the rest of the nullifiers to the contrary notwithstanding.

In a school recently, a teacher took occasion to relate an anecdote of the little girl who tried to "overcome evil with good," by giving a New Testament to a boy who had ill-treated her. The story was appreciated, for, a few minutes afterward, one boy struck another, and, on being asked the reason, said he was "trying to get a Testament." This was a practical bearing altogether unexpected.

REPUBLICAN ASCENDANCY.

Our people are now, and will be until our States have resumed their places in Congress and their legal constitutional organizations, which they lost by rebellion, in that uncomfortable position of dependence which makes of us a foot ball, to be kicked to and fro in the great game for political supremacy between Congress and the President, and which varies with every shifting phase of the contest.

The President's game is plain. It is to obstruct and delay the execution of the will of the people as long as possible, trusting to the prevailing uneasiness on financial matters and local differences in various States, to reduce the republican preponderance in Congress to a bare majority, which cannot override his vetoes. This effected, he will, for the concluding months of his administration, wield every engine of power and influence in his hands, without restraint, for the overthrow of the Republican party North, and the political re-subjugation of the colored men of the South.

Should the first part of his game be successful—the defeat of the republican party in the doubtful States in the fall elections—we may look to see a sweeping change in the military government, the freedmen's bureau, and the custom house and post office, and other Federal appointments in the South, and a vindictive, unsparing warfare upon radical men and radical measures, such as will make the Monroe infamy bright in comparison.

But of the ultimate result we have never entertained a doubt.

In the dark days of 1862 and 1863, when treachery and incompetency had neutralized the superhuman efforts of our gallant armies, the loyal party of the Union bared their heads and wept, only to raise them again with a renewed consciousness of their strength and solemnity of purpose. It was as though a tongue of fire flashed through the land, and touched the conscience of each man. The voice of millions, like the roar of many waters, rent the halls of the Capitol, saying, "Be just. Free the slave." And it was done. Hardly was the ink dry on the parchment of the immortal proclamation, when the hozannas of victories, from the Alleghenies at Gettysburg to the Mississippi at Vicksburg, from the battling sons of the Republic, answered the petitions of the fathers and mothers at home, and entered the portals of Heaven along with the answered prayer.

The same men who wept then, weep now; the same men who rejoiced then over the disasters of the nation rejoice now over the President's plots.

But let the conspirators tremble even in their triumph.

Those millions of heads bared with shame and sorrow, will rise with a vow toward Heaven, to do justice and erase the last letter of caste or proscription from the statute books of every State. Andrew Johnson, having served the same purpose in 1867 as the rebel armies in 1863, as the spur of the Almighty to drive the nation to do justice, will finally plunge down the abyss of utter political and personal ruin and immortal shame.

The Republicans of the South, if they will share the coming triumph, must share the repentance and atonement of the North.

In the anomalous, but only temporary condition of affairs here to which we referred in the beginning of this article, there is a disposition to forget principles, and shift with the man or men who may be temporarily in power.

We caution those entrusted with the management of city and State affairs, to look well to their steps and to let no discouragements cause them to be unfaithful to their trust.

As sure as the sun will rise, so sure will the people of this State, without any distinction of color, rule the State—no matter who is military commander, and no matter how the President may plot to retard this consummation.

And just so sure will they, when they come to their own, require a strict account of the stewardship of these temporary officers, and discard such as have been faithless or cowardly.

The work now before the republicans of Louisiana, as before those of the whole country, is to do justice to all men, to enforce equal rights, and to erase from every statute the last trace of privilege and inequality before the law, to any class or race of men.

The public schools must be opened to all citizens. The object of those who do not wish their children to associate with colored children, is fallacious. They can do what a large class of people have done and do now elsewhere, where similar objections are urged against the common schools, send their children to private schools. It is no hardship. The public schools are for the people. The taxes are paid by the people without distinction of color. The children of the people must be taught by the people's schools in the same manner. Again we say to the officers of this city and State, gentlemen, if you would be with us in the triumph, you must be with us in the fight.

GEN. SHERIDAN AGAIN.

With all due respect for the high standing of other distinguished patriots and soldiers in our country, we do not hesitate to express the belief that no one man fills so large a space in the public eye, or has so warm a place in the heart of the patriotic and loyal millions, as Major General Phillip H. Sheridan. And as we humbly conceive, very justly so.

He is a live man, and his devotion to the interests of the country is an active, living, moving devotion. His patriotism is not merely a sentiment—but rather a breathing, burning, efficient, active patriotism, like the flaming sword that gleamed over the entrance to Eden. With sleepless eye and uplifted arm he guards the portals of loyalty and liberty. He makes his impress on men and on institutions, and his presence and power is felt from center to circumference of any district under his command.

As a soldier Gen. Sheridan stands confessed, before the world, without a superior. And the puny, lilliputian critics who assail him, produce no more effect upon his equanimity or his reputation than the gnat on the ox's horn, or the dew-drop on the lion's mane. The writer of this once heard the great Captain of the age, Gen. Grant, say,—"Sheridan is the most perfect model of a soldier I ever saw," and added, "Take him all in all, I have never seen his superior, if his equal." Such testimony as this is perfectly conclusive. So, let serpents hiss and gnaw at a file, if they will.

As an Executive officer in command of the Fifth Military District, he has, in the estimation of the wise and prudent loyalists, displayed the rarest qualities of the administrative officer and the statesman, the New Orleans Republican to the contrary notwithstanding. The fruitless, abortive effort of the Republican, or rather one of the Editors, to give the General a farewell kick, is but too well understood by the people in this locality. It is but the giving vent to long pent up wrath, which has been carefully nursed to keep it warm—arising from matters purely personal between the writer of the article and the General. Sheridan, in a candid, honest statement of facts in a given case, had expressed an opinion of the writer as a public man. And now, a long year afterward, he furnishes, in the article referred to, the evidence of himself against himself, that Gen. Sheridan was not mistaken in his estimate; as the article can have no other effect than to gratify and amuse rebels, and furnish them with clubs with which to assail the loyal people, against their will, came very near causing bloodshed; white men armed themselves, and so did the colored, and the clamor at the religious assemblages was terrible.

I arrived in the town of Shubuta last Saturday. I made a radical speech to an immense crowd of white and black at the depot, of nearly an hour and a half in length. At its close the southerners appeared calmed, for I spoke for the Union, liberty and peace, taking high Christian ground. In the afternoon I came out here, and found an ample black guard ready for any emergency.

Sunday morning I preached; the most bitter opposers among the whites had offered me their meeting house; I thought I would accept, but looking in all directions, the colored people, (magnetized by the very name of the "Northern" church which the unreconstructed had given us,) were seen coming at double quick, and the house would not hold them. We sought the camp ground near by, and under a bush arbor we met and preached. The white Sunday-school over, the whites having no morning service attended our meeting.

Spiritual weapons conquered—the devil was silent. Every colored man and woman had arisen and voted themselves into the "mother church," and I took names until exhausted. I told them that the remainder must give them to the preacher in charge. The wealthiest and most influential planter in the county, who has sense enough to know the winning side, to the astonishment of some of his friends, gave two acres of ground, and promised to aid in building a church. Said he, "I have got bread and meat for all the preachers or teachers who may come. Make yourself at home at my house." The course pursued by Turner and Harper awakens my deepest indignation. How these men can expect respect, and at the same time assist the whites in striving to keep the colored people content with those religious, educational and political privileges which southern ideas of the negro, scantily deal out, I cannot tell. Sir, the A. M. E. Church as propagated by its ministers in these regions, is checking the progress of the colored people, and fostering disloyalty to the government.

Harper, at the close of his quasi rebel campaign, said, "It won't do for the Yankees to know what I have said." I have not said a word in this letter but what I will prove if called upon. J.

Mississippi Items.

This contributor is half inclined to be angry with the printers of the Advocate, on account of the many things he is made to say in print which he did not say in the manuscript. A single instance will be given. In an account of the Quarterly Meeting at Holly Springs he wrote that seventy were at the altar for prayers. The typos reduced it to twenty. That was too bad, to take fifty of our mourners away so suddenly, and never let us know what became of them. We should hardly think twenty a sufficiently large number to mention in these revival times.

Saturday morning, August 24, we were off early for the Vicksburg train. The cornfields are matured, and the fodder has been stripped from the stalks. Cotton begins to open and show his snowy locks. We saw no sign of the much dreaded worms. By and by we reach the stream known as "Big Black," and as we looked down on the narrow, muddy channel from the high trestle work which always tries our nerves, and makes us feel that we did wisely in insuring against accidents, we thought "Little Yellow" would be a name much more appropriate. In about three hours we accomplish the journey of forty-five miles, from Jackson to Vicksburg. The hilly and historic city, notwithstanding the hard times, has made very considerable improvements since the fires of last winter removed the old rat lodges which looked on the river. From the Washington Hotel southward, for several blocks, there are in process of erection rows of good brick buildings, with iron fronts, which, when completed, will give that street a very respectable and city-like appearance. The church in Vicksburg is in a prosperous condition. Brother Baker has the rather important quality of being alive. Commencing with a small congregation and feeble membership, he has now in town and country nearly five hundred members and probationers. We had a very pleasant quarterly meeting. The Love feast was one of universal interest. A very good revival influence prevailed, and brother B. was continuing the meeting of nights when we left. On Wednesday he said fourteen had professed conversion up to that time, and a great number were coming forward as seekers, at every meeting. They will soon need a large church. We hope, ere a great while, to be able to move back the present church, and make a school house of it, and build a larger and better house of worship.

Northward of Vicksburg there is a very extensive swamp, through which there is a large muddy ditch—at present partially filled with muddy water, which is known in geography as Yazoo River. On Friday, Aug. 30, we went on board the steamer Calumet for a voyage up the aforesaid ditch. For fifty miles or so the country is so low that the water is ten feet or more above the surface in times of flood. This renders cultivation impracticable, and the primitive forest is nearly unbroken. Further up the land is higher, and there are many large plantations which were very valuable in the good old days when cotton was king and "nigger" was his prime minister. Even these were nearly all under water last spring, but the river is now so low that we could not see over the banks from the steamer. We were informed that the coru was generally good, and cotton fair.

We have doubts whether this country is a suitable place for men to live in. It suggests ideas of those periods described by geologists, when the world generally was in a swampy condition, and Saurian monsters, in size and ferocity, surpassed the alligator as he does the common lizard of the present day. It is a question with us whether a man could live in the Yazoo bottom and be a christian. It would be a good time now, as the water is low, to clear the channel of the river of the old logs and wrecks of sunken boats which are in it.

A hundred miles, more or less, up this river, there is a collection of shanties and old houses, known by the name of Yazoo City. There we have a church in which we held a quarterly meeting Aug. 31 and Sept. 1. We found them prospering beyond our expectations. The weather was showery on Sunday, but we had good congregations. Brother Gibbs, the pastor, was suffering from chills and fever, so we had to make three attempts at preaching during the day, besides the other duties. Some twelve persons united with the church, which now numbers about two hundred and twenty-five. Before leaving Yazoo we would like to spoil about a page of our paper with a notice of the "Hotel de Kusick," but we will let that pass this time. We waited till Monday noon when we ascended the driver's seat of an old fashioned stage, and sat down beside a Jehu for a ride to the rail road. Slowly we ascended the hill from which we could look far over the low lands behind us. On one side of the road was a grave yard that was in part washed away, suggesting the half skeptical inquiry where these dead might be found when the trumpet sounds the resurrection call. The road was tolerable; the rain had laid the dust, the air was fresh, and our ride would have been enjoyable but for the poverty and slowness of the team, the heavy load and the poor driver; but we went through safely. The country is fair, the crops tolerable. Many plantations and one or two little towns going back to the primitive order of things. One old gentleman offered us a plantation so cheap that we thought of buying it, planting it in persimmon trees, and stocking it with "possums;" but we didn't do it.

After a good night's rest we were up early and on the cars again, and at Canton in time for breakfast.

The arrangements for the church were progressing favorably. Specifications were made out, and contract for the work entered into. During the night following we did what we never did while soldiering—evacuated a position and made a "masterly retreat." In this country there is an animal something smaller, but in shape resembling a mud turtle, which is usually found in or around the beds. A mighty host of these came upon us; we struck a light, made a "reconnoisance in force," saw the great numbers of the enemy, and after reconnoitering another bed, took position in it where we remained all quiet till morning. When a colored gentleman came in with water, the following dialogue between him and the contributor took place:

Con.—"See here, did you hear of that man who went to bed in a hotel, and next morning his bones, picked clean, were found in the bed?"

C. G., (eyes protruding)—"No, sir."

Con.—"If you don't mind you'll have such a case in that bed. I went in there last night and a brigade of bed bugs came at me, and I had to leave the bed, or I should have been picked before morning."

C. G. eaxmines the bed and exclaims—"Well, I declare! I'll have them attended to."

We had an early breakfast, and were off for the cars again. On the train we met our old friend and former presiding elder, Dr. Wm. M. Daily, and after an hour of pleasant chat of things old new, we were at Jackson again. D.

SHUBUTA, MISS., Sept. 2, 1867.

REV. J. P. NEWMAN, D. D.:

The colored people, I think, in this county, number thousands. Just in this region there is a mission circuit of the M. E. Church South, with about a half dozen preaching appointments. The colored people became dissatisfied with the rule of M. E. South and declared that they would seek the "Northern Church." Thereupon Rev. Mr. Hurd, of the Church South, sent immediately to Mobile for an African M. E. preacher. In the meantime a local preacher from Meridian, Jessie Fearing, of the "mother church," was organizing. The whites opposed him, and said that they did not want the Northern church in their midst. Rev. Mr. Hurd told him (Fearing) if he "did not leave harm would come to him." He said, "If the Methodist Episcopal Church came into this region, their schools would come too, and the blacks would be reading the newspapers, and would not behave themselves." The African M. E. preacher, (James Harper,) came. He stayed at the houses of the planters, rode in their buggies, etc. The M. E. South preacher turned all the colored people over to him; he preached in the white church; the colored people declared they would not have him because he abused the North, and said "that they had done nothing for them, and that the southern white people were their best friends, and would get up schools for them, and furnish them teachers. That there were many southern white ladies who were poor and would accept the situation of teachers." To think that a colored man could thus talk! The contest waxed hot, and the attempt to force him upon the colored Sea Postage.

The new regulations in regard to international postage, and the transmission of mail matter between the United States and Great Britain, are liberal, and should be generally understood. Postmaster General Randall has therefore issued a series of rules to regulate the sending of printed matter, books, pamphlets, engravings, and patterns of merchandise. We published them yesterday, and we suggest that they are of sufficient importance to be preserved. Newspapers and unsealed circulars are taken to England at two cents each, books at six cents for four ounces, or lesser fractions, patterns and samples of merchandise at eight cents for four ounces, or fractions thereof; the postage in all cases to be prepaid. Attention should be paid to the directions in reference to wrapping the articles sent. As a general rule they must be so inclosed that they can be removed from the wrappers in order to inspect them and ascertain whether they contain written communications. The only exception to this necessity is in the case of seeds, which may be put up in small bags, fastened in such manner that they can be readily opened. The idea seems to be to guard against fraud, and any device in the preparation for transmission of newspapers, engravings, lithographs, books, patterns, or samples, which has the appearance of being made with a design to prevent examination of the contents, may cause a forfeitnre. The law is so liberal that any attempt to take advantage of it, by sending more than is paid for, would be ineffably mean. The new regulations will undoubtedly increase the number of communications between Great Britain and the United States; and it will be found, in the long run, that no revenue has been lost by the change, but that the receipts will be considerably increased.

The St. Louis Evening Dispatch pretends that quite a number of southern men have brought their families to that city to escape the effects of a negro uprising which they claim is meditated in many quarters.

Desperate Struggle of a Maniac—He Barricades Himself—Fasts Ten Days and Defies His Captors.

In consequence of the declaration of Vincent Camugli, who resides on Hospital street, between Chartres and Royal, that his nephew Anthoine Camugli is subject to fits of insanity, during which he is violent and dangerous, and that unless he was restrained he would do some great harm to deponent or his family, Recorder Gastinel, Lieutenant O'Donnell, Sergeant Douglass, and five policemen proceeded Tuesday, afternoon to the residence of the uncle for the purpose of restraining the nephew, who had locked the door and barricaded himself into a room.

Camugli, the insane man, had fasted for ten days, but his strength was not exhausted; and he was provided with a piece of iron that he had wrested from a door of the room; had collected together various missiles of crockery and glass, and was prepared for a stubborn resistance.

Great numbers of the neighbors who knew the man was insane and expected he would only be captured after a desperate resistance, collected around the house to see what they could see.

The door was burst open by the officers, and a short, sharp, and decisive struggle ensued, during which the maniac cut Officer Sass with a piece of glass, but the wound was not serious.

A thick blanket was at length thrown over the insane man's head and arms and he was promptly secured and sent by Recorder Gastinel to the Insane asylum.

Recruiting for New Orleans.

A few days since a rather good looking woman dressed in silk, and bespangled with diamonds, looking as gay as a butterfly, arrived in this city and took rooms at a first class hotel. There, as is supposed, without the knowledge of the inmates of the house she opened a regular recruiting office, at which glaring inducements were held out to young girls to enlist for a life of shame and sorrow at that "jumping off place," New Orleans. Wednesday, we unstand, six silly flies were caught in this spider's web, and supplied with funds and started for the Crescent City, there to end a very short life of questionable pleasure in everlasting remorse. Is there no means by which the authorities can put an end to such villainous traffic?—Buffalo Courier.

The awful fate of the hundred deluded women who were lost last year on the steamship Evening Star seems not to have been a lesson sufficiently impressive to warn others of the same class.

Sickness at New Iberia.

By the latest dispatches and letters, dated the 5th instant, there was no abatement in the number of cases or deaths at this afflicted village.

Six of the family of Mayor A. B. Henshaw were sick on the 5th, and about one hundred deaths in all had taken place in New Iberia and vicinity.

Yellow Fever at Corpus Christi.

Captain Magrath, of the steamship Reindeer, which arrived yesterday from Corpus Christi, reports the yellow fever abating at that place. No new cases and no new deaths for five days previous to the sailing of the Reindeer.

Deaths on a Steamship.

NEW YORK, September 4.—The steamer Mississippi, from New Orleans, reports, the second day out, Maines Cornell, L. Von Rensenfelt, Hugo Scolvisch, and two steerage passengers all died of yellow fever.

The above should have reached us some days ago. It confirms the judgment of the board of health that it is unwise to leave the city during the prevalence of an epidemic. Among other reasons, because they will be unlikely to get the services of experienced yellow fever nurses, and will go into a climate which will be even more fatal to the disease than that of New Orleans.

Military Items.

By order of General Hartsuff Private George H. Taylor, company G, sixth United States cavalry, is relieved from further duty as clerk at headquarters. He will rejoin his company without delay.

Under authority from the adjutant general's office, by letter dated June 18, 1867, the recruiting station of Brevet Colonel G. W. Schofield, major forty-first infantry, is changed from Chicago, Ill., to Buffalo, New York.

THE AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

The Wholesale Pardon of Offenders. Great Reduction in the Number of the "Exceptions."

WASHINGTON, September 8.—The following proclamation was issued yesterday morning:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in the month of July, A. D. 1861, the two houses of congress, with extraordinary unanimity, solemnly declared that the war then existing was not waged on the part of the government in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of the states, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several states unimpaired, and that as soon as these objects should be accomplished the war ought to cease; and

Whereas, the president of the United States on the eighth day of December, A. D. 1863, and on the twenty-seventh day of March, A. D. 1864, did, with the objects of suppressing the then existing rebellion, of inducing all persons to return to their loyalty, and of restoring the authority of the United States, issue proclamations offering amnesty and pardon to all persons who had directly or indirectly participated in the then existing rebellion, except as in those proclamations were specified and reserved; and

Whereas, the president of the United States did, on the twenty-ninth day of May, A. D. 1865, issue a further proclamation with the same object before mentioned, and to the end that the authority of the government of the United States might be restored, and that peace and order and freedom might be established; and the president did, by the last mentioned proclamation, proclaim and did declare that he thereby granted to all persons who had directly or indirectly participated in the then existing rebellion, except as therein excepted, amnesty and pardon, with restoration of all rights of property except as to slaves, and except in certain cases where legal proceedings had been instituted—but upon condition that such persons should take and subscribe an oath therein prescribed, which oath should be registered for permanent preservation; and

Whereas, in and by the said last mentioned proclamation of the twenty-ninth day of May, A. D. 1865, fourteen extensive classes of persons therein specially described, were altogether excepted and excluded from the benefits thereof; and

Whereas, the president of the United States did, on the second day of April, A. D. 1866, issue a proclamation declaring that the insurrection was at an end, and was thenceforth to be so regarded; and

Whereas, there now exists no organized armed resistance of misguided citizens or others to the authority of the United States in the states of Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Florida, and Texas, and the laws can be sustained and enforced therein by the proper civil authority, state or federal, and the people of said states are well and loyally disposed, and have conformed, or if permitted to do so, will conform in their legislation to the condition of affairs growing out of the amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibiting slavery within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States; and

Whereas, there no longer exists any reasonable ground to apprehend, within the states which were involved in the late rebellion, any renewal thereof, or any unlawful resistance by the people of said states; and

Whereas, large standing armies, military occupation, martial law, military tribunals, and the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and the right of trial by jury, are in time of peace dangerous to public liberty, incompatible with the individual rights of the citizen, contrary to the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and exhaustive of the national resources, and ought not therefore to be sustained or allowed, except in cases of actual necessity for repelling invasion, or suppressing insurrection or rebellion; and

Whereas, a retaliatory or vindictive policy attended by unnecessary disqualification, pains, penalties, confiscations, and disfranchisements, now as always, could only tend to hinder reconciliation among the people, and national restoration, while it must seriously embarrass, obstruct, and repress popular energies, and national industry and enterprise; and

Whereas, for these reasons it is now deemed essential to the public welfare, and to the more perfect restoration of constitutional law and order, that the said last mentioned proclamation so as aforesaid issued, on the 29th day of May, A. D. 1865, should be modified, and that the full and beneficent pardon conceded thereby should be opened and further extended to a large number of the persons who by its aforesaid exceptions have been hitherto excluded from executive clemency;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, president of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare that the full pardon described in the said proclamation of the twenty-ninth day of May, Anno Domini, 1865, shall henceforth be opened and extended to all persons who, directly or indirectly, participated in the late rebellion, with the restoration of all the privileges, immunities, and rights of property, except as to property with regard to slaves, and except in cases of legal proceedings under the laws of the United States, but upon this condition nevertheless, that every such person who shall seek to avail himself of this proclamation shall take and subscribe the following oath, and shall cause the same to be registered for permanent preservation in the same manner and with the same effect as with the oath prescribed in the said proclamation of the 29th day of May, 1865, namely:

"I do solemnly swear or affirm, in presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the constitution of the United States, and the Union of the states thereunder, and that I will in like manner abide by and faithfully support all laws and proclamations which have been made during the late rebellion with reference to the emancipation of slaves. So help me God."

The following persons, and no others, are excluded from the benefits of this proclamation and of the said proclamation of the twenty-ninth day of May, 1865, namely:

1. The chief or pretended chief executive officers, including the president, the vice-president, and all the heads of departments of the pretended confederate or rebel government, and all who were agents thereof in foreign states and countries, and all who held or pretended to hold in the service of said pretended confederate government a military rank or title above the grade of brigadier general, or naval rank or title above that of captain, and all who were or pretended to be governors of states while maintaining, abetting, or submitting to or acquiescing in the rebellion.

2. All persons who in any way treated otherwise than as lawful prisoners of war persons who, in any capacity, were employed or engaged in the military or naval service of the United States.

3. All persons who, at the time they may seek to obtain the benefits of this proclamation, are actually in civil, military, and naval confinement or custody, or legally held to bail, either before or after conviction, and all persons who were engaged, directly or indirectly, in the assassination of the late president of the United States, or in any plot or conspiracy in any manner therewith connected.

In testimony whereof I have signed these presents with my hand, and have caused the seal of the United States to be thereunto affixed. Done at the city of Washington, the seventh day of September, 1867.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
WM. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

General Griffin Assumes Command.

The following order has been issued:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT, September 6, 1867.

General Orders, No. 32.

The undersigned hereby assumes command of the fifth military district, relinquished to him by Major General P. H. Sheridan, in general orders No. 31, current series, headquarters fifth military district.

All existing orders will remain in force, and district staff officers will continue to perform their customary duties, at headquarters in New Orleans, La., until further orders.

CHARLES GRIFFIN,
Brevet Major General U. S. Army.

THE LOUISIANA LEVEES.

THE WORK TOO LONG DELAYED.

MILITARY ORDER CANNOT RAISE MONEY.

Reinstating Governor Wells.

HIS "TORTUOUS POLITICAL COURSE.'

[From the Washington Chronicle.]

We print elsewhere General Sheridan's order relating to the reconstruction of the Louisiana levees. This is just now a subject of vital importance to the people of that state, and of very great interest to the country at large. The present order has been issued pursuant to a report from the levee commissioners that they were unable to raise money on the bonds authorized by a law of the state passed in March last, and that therefore some other course would be necessary, the one suggested being that embodied in the order. The necessity of doing something, and doing it quickly, is pressingly felt by all classes of the people inhabiting the parishes subject to inundation, which embrace over two-thirds of the state. Unless the levees are rebuilt within the next three months it will be too late to repair them during the present season; the country will be again overflowed; the richest rice, cotton, and sugar lands in the world must remain for another season a watery waste; an immense amount of valuable produce for foreign export and a prolific source of revenue will be cut off, and the people, including the planters and the laborers who work the plantations, will be reduced to a condition of destitution painful to contemplate. Indeed it is impossible to see how the poorer classes will be able to subsist; and for the landowners we can see no alternative but the abandonment of their plantations. Each year that this work is delayed increases the difficulties attendant upon it. The state is daily sinking into a condition of more hopeless poverty, and as its ability to meet the immense expenditures required is thus diminished, the damages to be repaired are increased by each successive overflow, old crevasses being enlarged and new ones formed by every flood. The present order contemplates the adoption of active measures for the removal of present evils, but it is difficult to see how it is to be so effectively carried out as to accomplish the end in view. Partial repairs would now be next to useless, the damage being so general that nothing less than a general system of rebuilding will secure the state against inundation. For such a system we fear the people of Louisiana, in their present impoverished condition, are totally unprepared, and the great defect of a military order is that it cannot put funds in their pockets to enable them to do what it directs shall be done. They are overcome by the difficulties of their situation, and to bid them help themselves is a little like directing a man with a fractured limb to arise and walk to the hospital to get surgical assistance. It was in view of this impoverished condition that the state law was passed last March authorizing the issue of four million dollars worth of bonds on which to raise the necessary funds. It is, in fact, absolutely necessary to get the requisite capital outside of the state. The natural resources of Louisiana are so well known that it would have seemed as if this might have been accomplished without difficulty. But right at this point an untoward circumstance came in the way. The law provided that the bonds should be dated on the first of May, and signed by the governor of the state. But there was an unfortunate delay in their preparation, and when, on the 3d of June, Governor Wells was removed for his tortuous political course the bonds were still unsigned. The result is that capitalists will not touch them. They say that unless they bear the signature of the man who was governor of the state at the time of their date they will not be issued in conformity with the law, and will be worthless as securities against the state government. It has been suggested that the difficulty might be surmounted by reinstating Governor Wells long enough to allow him to sign the bonds, and active efforts have been made to that end. The country has full confidence in the reasons given by Sheridan for the removal of this official, and scarcely would sanction his permanent reappointment. The case is a perplexion one. On the one hand there are state considerations of a very grave character against his restoration. On the other there is the consideration of the most important industrial and commercial interests, and the very subsistence of hundreds of thousands of people, whites and blacks, in favor of the same measure—and this through the result of an accident. The question is whether the effect of that accident should be repaired by the temporary restoration of Wells. It is difficult to answer it; but the people of this country are always willing to give due regard to the claims of humanity, and, under the very peculiar circumstances of the case, they would probably excuse, if they would not approve, a measure having for its object the reclamation of the best part of Louisiana from the dominion of the waters, and the relief of an amount of distress which has never been equaled in this favored country.

General Steedman and Mr. Johnson.

WASHINGTON, August 30.—The arrival of General James B. Steedman this morning, and his visit to the White house at an early hour, where he had a lengthy interview with the president, excited much speculation in all quarters. General Steedman is a collector of internal revenue in New Orleans, and has been absent from his post, on leave, for some weeks past, ostensibly on business connected with his office. He was here a few days ago and then left for New York, whence he arrived this morning, and it is generally supposed he was summoned here by the president for consultation upon matters not connected with the revenue service.

General Steedman is on the most confidential terms with the president, having performed some important service in the south, along with General Fullerton, in trying to destroy the freedmen's bureau to advance Mr. Johnson's peculiar policy, and is looked upon as one whom the latter desires to reward with the position of secretary of war. A short time will determine whether this conjecture is correct or not. The impression prevails that the president is casting around for a successor to General Grant in the war department, and by common consent General Steadman is regarded as the coming man, and it would not excite surprise if he were appointed to that position in a few days.

He professes not to desire the appointment, for the fact that in the position he now holds he has been confirmed, and would be likely to continue in it for some time, whereas, he would he likely to hold the secretaryship by a very uncertain tenure, for in less than one hundred days he would have to vacate for Edwin M. Stanton, who will be reinstated by the senate beyond peradventure. But the president is believed to be desirous that General Steedman should accept it, and it will rest with him to accept or decline.

Some of Steedman's friends allege he can be appointed commissioner of internal revenue if he desires it, but as the present incumbent, Commissioner Rollins, is regarded as an efficient officer, and is protected by the tenure of office bill, the report that he will be decapitated is not generally believed, and is thought to be a "blind" to cover the more important movement in progress, to place General Steedman at the head of the War Department. A day or two will develop what foundation there is for this report.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Judicious Appointments.

Captain E. V. Hitch, formerly of the first Louisiana cavalry, a staff officer, and wounded in General Banks' Red river campaign, and immediately before he was mustered out of the service assistant commissary of musters at General Sheridan's headquarters, has received the appointment of chief clerk in the office of the chief of police. The writer of this has campaigned with Captain Hitch, and with him had "headquarters in the saddle," on a famous expedition from Cane river toward the back gate of Natchitoches, two consecutive nights and a day, with a cavalry brigade, accompanied by a "mosquito battery." We tried then to "subsist upon the country," but there was no subsistence.

From the N. O. Republican.

THE TWO BOARDS OF PUPLIC SCHOOL DIRECTORS.

The readers of the REPUBLICAN have already been informed that the old board of public school directors had enjoined these directors elected by the new city council against performing their duties, and had sued out a writ of quo warranto restraining the members of the new board from exercising the authority of directors of the public schools. The new board of directors then took a rule upon the old board, demanding that they show cause why the writ of injunction should not be dismissed.

The case came up for argument yesterday in the sixth district court, Judge Duplantier presiding. Judge E. Hiestand appeared for the defendants, (plaintiffs in the rule), and Thomas S. McCay and E. Bermudez for the plaintiffs in the suit.

On the openiug of the court, Mr. McCay asked to know how many of the defendants have answered to the writ of quo warranto. So far as the record informed him, only two had answered, to-wit: Judge Leaumont and Mr. Roberts; whereupon Judge Hiestand, on behalf of a part of the new board, filed an exception that the plaintiff had no capacity to stand in judgment because of the recent repeal of the ordinances governing the public schools.

It was then proposed that the motion to dissolve the injunction be proceeded with; whereupon Mr. Bermudez, one of the old board, objected because the rule, although taken in the name of all the defendants, could apply to him (Judge Leaumont) alone, he being by law prohibited from appearing for any other person than himself, because of his official capacity as one of the district judges. Mr. Bermudez proposed to introduce the evidence of Judge Duplantier to show that when Judge Leaumont made the motion to dissolve he was unaccompanied by any of the other defendants. Judge Hiestand objected to the introduction of any testimony to explain the records of the court.

Mr. Bermudez again expressed a desire that Judge Duplantier be sworn as to his knowledge of one or two leading facts in the case. The judge readily consented, was sworn, and wrote down the following:

On the 2d day of September, 1867, Judge Leaumont, one of the defendants, with L. Pessau, another defendant, appeared before this court, and after consultation with each other, Judge Leaumont drafted the rule taken on that day, and moved to be allowed to take the rule. The court therefore granted the rule, making it returnable on the Friday following.

After some discussion as to the admission of testimony, the judge admitted that the evidence sustained the point made by Mr. Bermudez, but continued the case until tomorrow to enable the counsel for defendants to make proper pleas on behalf of his clients.

The Next Presidency.

The New York Herald, in a long article on national and state politics, has the following:

Should any civilian be placed at the head of the next national radical ticket, we prophesy that it will be Governor Fenton, with some military or naval hero as his associate for the second place. The ticket may read: For president, Reuben E. Fenton; and for vice-president, Major General John A. Logan, of Illinois, who has a splendid record as a fighting soldier, and whose friends claim that he possesses the unqualified and most earnest enthusiasm of the entire west, and more especially of its military element—this military element distinctly holding the balance of power in the next contest, and being a vote of at least seven hundred thousand men, bound together by common recollections of the camp, the march, the battlefield, and the retreat, who will vote shoulder to shoulder as they have already fought, and who, as between any regular political division of Republicans and Democrats, can easily give the victory to either side by half a million majority. Admiral David G. Farragut is also looked upon with longing eyes by those friends of Governor Fenton who contemplate placing his name before the people for president; but we rather think that Admiral Farragut—upon this point resembling General Grant—would not enter upon any contest, even for the presidency, and certainly would not resign his dazzling position as chief thunderer and Viking of the American navy for the doubtful honor of becoming an abused and villified candidate for the second position on a ticket having Governor Fenton for its figurehead.

Ingratitude.

The president, it is said, is daily besieged by the united Democracy for changes in the cabinet, and it is also said that the general demand is that Seward shall be first deposed. Could there be any thing more ungrateful, when the fact is notorious that Johnson's own nomination to the vice-presidency was effected by the friends of Mr. Seward, and was a "conservative" movement?

Sickness of United States Troops.

By the special report for the morning of September 9, relative to sickness among the United States troops in this city, there are sixty-eight patients in the hospital. There were two deaths on Sunday, one from the military band and one from the Mahasca, seven returned to duty and 9 entered the hospital, leaving the same number in hospital as upon the previous day's report. Most of the patients are from the gunboat Mahaska.

Major Raymond H. Perry.

It will be recollected that about three weeks ago a report was current that a dispatch had been received in this city from Galveston, announcing the death there by yellow fever of Major Perry, recently appointed chief of police. We are glad to know that the report was incorrect, and that the major, through severely attacked, finally got well. A letter from him dated the 1st instant to a friend in this city was shown to us yesterday morning.

Postal Treaty with Spain.

Postmaster General Randall has had several interviews with the Spanish minister, during which the subject of a postal treaty with Spain was discussed at length, resulting in the submission of a formal proposition from our government for that purpose. We have but little mail communication with Spain, but our postage account with Cuba amounts to nearly $100,000 per annum. The main point to be obtained by the treaty will therefore be the establishment of a United States postal agency at Havana. It is probable that the negotiations will be brought to a successful issue before congress meets.—Washington Chronicle.

Collector Kellogg.

WASHINGTON, August 30.—Mr. Kellogg, collector of customs at New Orleans, arrived to-day in company with General Steedman. A strong effort has been made for some time past for the removal of Kellogg, but it is thought it will not be successful. He was one of President Lincoln's appointees, and one of his strongest opponents is King Cutler, who has been urging Secretary McCulloch's removal because he refused to join in a warfare against Kellogg.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Meeting of Loyal Governors Proposed.

ST. LOUIS, August 31.—The Democrat of this morning suggests, in view of the condition of affairs in Washington, that the governors of the loyal states meet together at an early day, and consult in regard to the political situation. It also suggests a similar consultation on the part of the grand army of the republic.

FROM LAFOURCHE PARISH.

[Correspondence of the Republican.]
THIBODAUX, La., September 7, 1867.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

At a mass meeting of the Radical Republican party of Lafourche, held at this place to-day, the Conservative element adopted a novel, and for them, dangerous method—if repeated—of interference.

A man, who said his name was Fisher, came on the ground where the meeting was to take place, about two hours previous to the time appointed for assembling, and finding some little colored boys there, conceived a scheme, which, if it had been successful, would have been damaging to the interests of the party. He succeeded in collecting together about thirty little boys, procured a banner for them from the Lincoln club, and had them march about town, and finally, after the meeting was being opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Merrill, he caused these little boys to march in front of the speaker's stand; then as if he thought his acts had already given him privileges extraordinary, he mounted the speaker's platform and seated himself.

The meeting having commenced business, of course the speakers occupied the attention of all, but after all the speakers present had given their views on the situation, this fellow requested permission to be allowed to say a few words to the people, which was granted, and Mr. Fisher was introduced to the audience. He said that he possessed a limited education, and could not say much; that he had been in the rebel army, and had fought to keep them in bondage; that he had taken the oath to support the government of the United States, and meant to live up to it; told them to beware of those galvanized Yankees; they could not be trusted, and advised them by all that was great and good not to nominate a white man for the convention, but to send all colored men, and that they ought to be ashamed of themselves if they could not find two colored men in the whole parish to represent them, and did not deserve to be called men. Then turning toward some of his own party who were on the ground, said with great emphasis that if he had "a checked shirt outside there was a white shirt inside."

But as his checked shirt was open at the collar, and no other could be perceived, I am inclined to think that he used a figure of speech which might be construed in different ways; however, as such a character cannot boast of a clean white shirt, and as he had no white shirt on, I must define the figure. His checked shirt meant of course, that he was for the colored man outside on that occasion, but otherwise he was for the white man. I don't know as I blame the fellow for trying to earn his living in some way, but I do think that those who sent him ought to be ashamed of themselves, and I advise them to mend their ways or they will meet with an exposure yet, which will make them blush. The colored people have not much faith in their old masters now, and such acts will have a tendency to destroy what little there is remaining.

Fisher had hardly got out of sight when a resolution was adopted unanimously to the effect that a white candidate and a colored candidate shall be nominated for the convention by the Republican party in the parish of Lafourche.

An Unexpected Delay.

General Hancock is in no hurry to avail himself of the doubtful honors in "district number five," which have been conferred upon him by the president. He hears of the yellow fever in the city of New Orleans, and avails himself of the calamity to obtain for himself a delay. Officers of the army ordered to New Orleans some time ago were granted privilege to delay their going until the 30th of October.

The order was intended to operate in ordinary cases, and could not have been issued with reference to such an important officer as a military commander. But, nevertheless, it is a standing order, and General Hancock chooses to avail himself of it. It cannot be supposed that this gallant officer, who has faced death so often, has any fear of the pestilence which would deter him from the execution of his duty. But in the present case he is ordered to a position which, from his reluctance to go there, it may be assumed he does not like. He, therefore, takes advantage of the existence of this order, and General Grant has given him the privilege.

For nearly two months, therefore, Louisiana will be governed by General Griffin, as next in command to General Sheridan. Griffin is as loyal as his superior officer, and the rebel element will make nothing by the change. The old programme will be carried out, and the spirit of Sheridan will still influence the condition of affairs in Louisiana. This unlooked-for condition of things is likely to produce vexation at Washington. It virtually continues the Sheridan administration until the 1st of November, a most unpleasant idea to the president. The result may even be a revocation of the order appointing Hancock, and the assignment of some other officer.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

New Postage Law.

The new postage treaty with England goes into operation on the 1st of October. Rates to the United Kingdom on newspapers and unsealed circulars, two cents each. Newspapers or other printed matter, except books weighing over two ounces, four cents for four ounces, or fraction thereof; books, six cents per four ounces or fraction thereof; patterns or samples of merchandise, eight cents per four ounces or fraction thereof. Postage must be prepaid. Wrappers of newspapers, pamphlets, books, etc., must be opened at the sides or ends. Books or sample packets must not exceed two feet in length or one foot in width. Patterns or samples must not be of intrinsic value, while the rule excludes from the mails all articles of a salable nature, or having market value of its own. The reduced price of twelve cents per one-half ounce on letters does not go into effect until January 1. The offices of exchange on the side of the United States are New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Portland, Detroit, Chicago, and San Francisco.

Carrying off Yellow Fever.

A dispatch from Memphis, dated the 8th instant, to the Louisville Courier says:

The towboat Mohawk arrived at noon from New Orleans with eight cases of yellow fever on board. The captain landed at the wharf boat, which created a great commotion in the city. The citizens were much enraged at the contemptible act. The mayor furnished the boat with medicine and doctor, and ordered the boat to leave the wharf, and would not allow any freight put ashore.

A passenger that had forced his way on board at New Orleans to escape the epidemic, died while lying at the wharf. The officers of the boat were all sick except the captain.

The Memphis Post says:

It was promptly decided that the boat should not land any freight or passengers. A few crates of crockeryware, which had been rolled off, were put on board again. Doctor Rogers found that the patients could be treated as well on the boat as if taken off here and put in a hospital, and advised the captain to take a physician on board. At his suggestion, Doctor Lebby, who has had experience in the treatment of yellow fever, was sent for, and he agreed to go with the tug to St. Louis, and take charge of the patients. A supply of medicine was furnished, and the boat pursued her way up the river.

The Life of a Newspaper Man.

For the information of those individuals who foolishly imagine that the life of a newspaper man is a paradise on earth, and is fraught with untold pleasures and privileges, we give the following sketch of the duties of this unfortunate individual, concerning whom such a wrong impression exists. It is taken from Mr. Hunt's volume on the "Fourth Estate:"

"The man who once becomes a journalist must almost bid farewell to mental rest or mental leisure. If he fulfills his duties truthfully, his attention must be ever awake to what is passing in the world, and his whole mind must be devoted to the instant examination, and discussion, and record of current events. He has little time for literary idleness, with such literary labors on his shoulders. He has no days to spend on catalogues, or in the dreamy discursive researches in public libraries. He has no months to devote to the exhaustion of any one theme. What he has to deal with must be taken up at a moment's notice, be examined, tested, and dismissed at once; and thus his mind is ever kept occupied with the mental necessity of the world's passing hour."

The Drowning of the Beecher Children—A Triple Funeral.

To-day, Thursday, August 27, has been a sad day, and one that from its mournful association will be long remembered in the history of the pretty village of Georgetown, from the fact that in the closing hours of it were committed to the keeping of the "faithful tomb" the mortal remains of three, who, but a moment ago as it were, moved among their friends and acquaintances in perfect health, and with every prospect of a long and useful life.

Some account of the disaster at Pentucket pond, Georgetown, by which the lives of three of the party were lost and two others narrowly escaped, has already been given. To go more in detail, it appears that a party of five persons, four members of the Beecher family, and one connected in marriage, left the home of Rev. Charles Beecher about nine o'clock on Tuesday forenoon, for a sail on the pond. They were seen about a quarter of twelve, and in a few moments after the alarm was given that the party were in the pond. The citizens quickly rallied, but three of the party had disappeared. The two daughters were the youngest children of Rev. Chas. Beecher, Esther Lyman, aged fifteen years, and Edith Harriett, aged thirteen years. They were very interesting children, and gave promise of much usefulness to their parents and friends. Albert Beecher, aged twenty years, was the youngest son of Rev. Edward Beecher, of Galesburg, Illinois, and with an older brother had arrived in Georgetown only the evening previous to the disaster which has carried so much sadness and gloom to a very large family and circle of friends. Eugene Beecher, an older brother of Alfred, was rescued, just as he was disappearing, in an unconscious condition. Lockwood Coffin, the fifth of the party, clung to the boat. The bodies of Mr. and the Misses Beecher were not recovered until nearly three hours after the alarm was given. Physicians and friends were in readiness, and every means known were used for their restoration, but to no purpose. The family in different sections were notified, and there were present to-day Rev. William H. Beecher, of North Brookfield, Mass.; Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. John Hooker, of same city; the venerable Mrs. Dr. Lyman Beecher, Professor William Smyth, of Bowdoin college, and Professor E. C. Smyth and wife, of Andover.

The church where Mr. Beecher officiates was opened for the funeral ceremonies, and was very beautifully draped with the emblems of mourning. Back of the pulpit was hung a heavy curtain, on the top of which were the words; "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," while the pulpit itself was covered with black cloth studded with white flowers, and in the centre of the covering a beautiful cross was suspended. Large bouquets were also placed on the sides of the pulpit. At three o'clock the remains were brought into the church after private services had been held at Mr. Beecher's residence, the Sabbath school class, of which Mr. Beecher's daughters were members, preceding them. The coffins were placed one at either side of the pulpit and the other directly in front of it, each of them bearing wreaths and crosses on their tops.

These deaths make five that have resulted from drowning in the same generation of this widely-known family within a short space of time, and adds another to the many disasters on the water the present season.

Dry Goods.

A very fair business is doing in dry goods, and it is likely to be greatly increased. Shipments to the south are much larger than those of last year, and greatly exceed the anticipations indulged in during the summer. The spring trade with the southern states was very light, for the reason that money could not then be raised on the coming cotton crop. The yield in this respect bids fair to be so abundant, however, that less difficulty is experienced in procuring advances, and southern dry goods merchants are arriving here in greater numbers than during any season since the close of the war. The salesmen, or "drummers," as they are usually called, who secure the southern trade for the large houses in this city, have fully canvassed the cotton and southwestern states, and have, to a very great extent, succeeded in rebuilding the trade destroyed by war. Prices of goods are generally firm; but the anticipated increased demand will probably result in a slight advance. A general assortment is being shipped southward; but the larger call is for a commoner class of goods. Serviceable wearing stuffs are being readily disposed of. Calicoes and heavy cottons are especially in demand. The shipments to the west are generally of higher priced materials, and the demand for these is gradually increasing. Silks, satins, and other imported goods are selling in fair quantities, though the call for them is by no means so great as it was during the war. Woolens very generally command fair prices, and an increased demand for them is perceptible. The change in the prices of these is less than that which occurred between the ruling rates of the fall of 1866 and the spring of this year. Sales of all kinds of dry goods are now effected, however, less promptly than they were last year. Buyers take more time, apparently, in selecting stocks, and, in many instances, ask for more time in which to make payments. In many lines of goods there has been a decline in values that offers inducements to country buyers. This decline particularly distinguishes cottons, which within the past few weeks have fallen from fifteen to twenty per cent. In many portions of the eastern and middle states the stocks on hand from last year are heavier than usual, so that a full revival of trade cannot be counted on before October shall have fairly set in. Taken altogether, though, the leading merchants expect that by the middle of September they will be doing a driving trade.—N. Y. Herald, August 25.

Civilians in Quartermaster's Employ.

The following order has been issued by General Mower:

Pursuant to general orders No. 76, current series, from the war department, all post, station, or detachment commanders within this district, will immediately discharge all civilians employed in the quartermaster's department, under their control, whose services can possibly be dispensed with, or whose places can be supplied by enlisted men. They will also, on the 30th instant, promptly report to these Headquarters, in tabular form, specifying the services performed, the necessity for their employment, the compensation allowed, and the authority therefor, the names of all citizens employed as clerks, agents, mechanics, laborers, or in any other capacity in the quartermaster's department. At posts where no civilians are employed, the fact will be so reported.

Can Yellow Fever be Banished.

The New York Express says the principal prevalence of this disease at the south brings to the Sun's mind the earlier years of the war, when this destroyer was confidently counted upon by the enemy to be their arch help mate in meting out death to the Yankees. But, asks the editor, what were the facts of the case?

"For years previously, as regularly as the season rolled around, New Orleans had been swept with the plague. General Butler became master of the city and enforced cleanliness and sanitary regulations to an extent unknown, and during Butler's control New Orleans was as healthy as any city in the Union and wholly free from yellow fever. This is proof, the Sun continues, that cleanliness is the great master, and that the disease is simply the lash with which nature scourges us for sanitary negligence."

Where are the Police?

How long has it been since the police interrupted a prize fight, or since anybody was prosecuted for his part in the riot? Is it not due to common decency that the guardians of public peace and good order should give some evidence that they have heard of all the late fights? Of course, it is difficult to know when the fights are to take place; but some hundreds of people generally find it out, and why cannot the police? Why not establish in the department a "sporting bureau," whose especial duty shall be to keep current with these great events?—N. Y. Herald.

An American Bridal Chamber at Saratoga.

A DESCRIPTION OF IT.

George Alfred Townsend, the Saratoga correspondent of the Boston Post, has lately slept in a bridal chamber at one of the largest hotels there, and thus describes it. He says:

When I had dried my tears I looked round me, and between the solemnness and the splendor of the bridal chamber, I was half charmed, half awed. Exactly in the middle of the room stood the bed, built low to the floor, with a mirror at the head, another at the foot, and a third in the circle of the canopy above. The canopy was silken and white, looped up with golden tassels, golden corded.

A couple of bronze cherubs were astride the headboard, looking away from the bed, and holding fast the curtains of the canopy; two others at the foot were saying silence with their fingers on their lips, and both their quivers were empty. The bedstead was of satin wood, delicately grained; the coverlet was pure white with knitted silk; the sheets were perfumed faintly; such pillows you never saw in size! each one a bed by itself, and the pillow cases were bordered with Spanish point lace, six inches wide. There was no daylight in the room, and the man had lighted the chandelier, so that a pure white flame made all the gildings in the window-corners glisten. They were plain arched cornices, except in the keystones, where two hearts transfixed with an arrow gave me a cruel pang for a moment; and, like the bed canopy, the white silk curtains fell in folds to the floor, with golden tassels swinging between. The carpet was white and blue Axminister, very rare, with a small design of a lady in it; a like pattern was the wall paper, without the blue; one gilt band ran round the ceiling; the only pictures were a copy of Titian's Venus, lying very cool and neglige upon a sheet, with her hair bound up in an old-fashloned basket braid, and no sign of clothes anywhere; and a lithograph of the King Candaules and his wife and friend—not very modest. A sandal-wood dressing stand and mirror reflected a case of smelling bottles in Bohemian glass; there were upon the brackets on either side statuettes in alabaster of Love and Psyche, and Diana and Endymion. The towel-rack was of sandal-wood shod with gilt feet. Out of the soft white splendor of the silence a canary bird in a cage at the window sang so shrilly that I was frightened the more. All the tints and patterns of the room were in pure and beautiful taste; but it was a seraglio that I had entered, not my husband's chamber. Had I dared show that I noticed these things I would have moved to some modest room and sat in the solitude of it among my trunks.

To add to the show-character of the place, champagne was sent up with the compliments of the house, and by the buzz of conversation around the doors I knew that men were walking to and fro there, if not to look to laugh.

In the interim I unlocked my trunks and laid my linens in the dressing-case drawers. It was warm and I put my feet in the white satin slippers you admired so much, undid my close-bodied dress with its long waist and "points," and wrapped about me the dressing-gown my brother gave, open at the neck, and of most white Marseilles from the broad boyish lapels to the pearl-buttoned hem. Everywhere I turned, so whitely attired, the frequent mirrors reflected me, showing whiter yet my pained, expectant face, and often giving me starts, as if in these long contrived sacrificial robes I came face to face with my past self—or worse, my passing self—so soon to surrender my existence to one loved but still human, perhaps changing affection.

As I placed away my many 'kerchiefs, my rival corsets of French and English, the handkerchiefs marked with the old family name, no longer mine, the embroidered skirts, the folded chemisettes, a doubt, the first and last, came to my mind, of the wisdom of my choice and its awful irrevocability.

I was disturbed by Larry. I knew that he had been drinking when he kissed me.

Mary, he said, if you pray to-night, ask that our home may be no bridal chamber. These nuptial menageries make men no prouder, women no purer.

We were dinned with music that night. But in the morning we quitted the American harem, and in our little, modest room, we pity the bridal parties that take our place.

ONE VICE AT A TIME ENOUGH.—A good story is told of the naval hero of the late war, Admiral Farragut. We cannot vouch for its authenticity, but give it as related by an eminent theologian and divine. Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, is eminent for his devotion to the interests of his diocese, and yet loves to unbend in genial society. One day he was recreating at Newport, and fell into the company of the admiral. The bishop was smoking, and politely offered a cigar to his companion. Turning his bronzed face upon the Bishop, Farragut soberly remarked: "No, thank you, bishop; I never smoke, but I sometimes swear a little." The answer took the bishop aback somewhat, but he quickly recovered himself, and replied: "Ah, I see—smoking and swearing don't go together!" It was "diamond cut diamond."

The Clerk's Baby.

One of our exchanges, who "had a clerk," credits the young man with the following witty family squib:

We once had a clerk who got married. Now there is nothing funny in that. His wife made him a very pretty present one day of a baby—and that is where the funny part comes in. He was in the office yesterday, and wished us to publish, for the benefit of inquiring friends, the following biography. Says he:

"We have had so many kind friends asking about that baby, that we have thought it necessary to briefly chronicle his condition, somewhat after the current style of the day.

"It's a boy.

"Weighs nine pounds, and wife tells us that he will grow heavier as his weight increases.

"He's our first baby, and of course is the only baby in town.

"The nurse says he is 'the very image of his pa.'

"'A little copy of his faithful sire,
In face and gesture.'

"But in justice to the youth we must say we think him an improvement on the original—a world of progress, you know.

"This young America is as old as could be expected, considering the time he was born, and will doubtless be too old for his father in a few years, if he has good luck.

"He is quite reticent on politics, and only wants to be let alone.

"We think he favors Mrs. Winslow's policy.

"We haven't named him yet. We want to give him a distinguished cognomen, but the fame of our great men is at present so precarious that we don't like the risk.

"It is perhaps unnecessary to say, as all biographers do of distinguished personages, that 'the subject of this sketch' was born at a very early age, 'of poor but respectable parents.'"

GILDED OBJECT GLASSES.—It is an important discovery of Fousault, a distinguished improver of telescopes, that a coating of gold or silver leaf upon the object glass greatly facilitates observation, enabling the eye to dwell for a long period upon the sun, and in no wise impairing the distinctness of vision. It is found, moreover, by experiment, that eyes which shrink from the common solar light are greatly relieved by wearing gilded or silvered glasses. These effect the color of the solar light differently; the gilding making it green and the silvering blue.

A CALL OF PROVIDENCE.—Father O., an old minister recently deceased, was asked, some years ago, how he decided when a call from a church was a "call of Providenee." He replied, naively, "God has sent me nine children to feed, clothe and educate; and he knows that I devote all my time to his cause, and have no other means to live on than the gospel. When duty bids me to change my place of labor, I regard that as 'a call of Providence' which is a call of pro*vide*-ance."

FEED MY LAMBS.—The celebrated Gerson, although Chancellor of the University of Paris, and the theological leader of the reformatory councils of Pisa and Constance in the early part of the fifteenth century, felt that he had a greater work to do, After taking a prominent part in all the leading questions of the age, he retired to a convent at Lyons, and found his chief delight in the instruction of little children, saying that it was with little children that the reformation of the church should commence. And on his death-bed he sent for the little ones, that they might pray for him.

"No D—d Nigger Shall Arrest Me."

These are the words of an excited individual by the name of John Tomley, and were uttered whilst engaging a lamp post in an earnest discussion of the existing dynasty. John was rather boisterous in his remarks, and attracted the attention of a "culled" police who was a short distance off. He approached John and advised him to keep quiet and go home or he would arrest him, when John told him to go to the devil, and uttered the above words. The "culled" star being a pretty muscular fellow got quite indignant and hoisted John into the guardhouse in short order. The youth was fined five dollars for his singular conduct.—Mobile Tribune, 5th inst.

A New England Cotton Factory.

A correspondent describes the Cocheco Print works at Dover, N. H., named after the river on which the town is located. These works are among the most extensive and profitable in New England, and afford a good average specimen of the manner in which all eastern manufactories are conducted. The company owning these mills was incorporated in 1836, with a capital of $1,300,000. The ground occupied by the print works, and the mills for manufacturing the cloths, embrace an area of six acres, the buildings forming a hollow square, seven stories high. The mills are now running 48,232 spindles and 1200 looms, and produce 12,000,000 yards of cloth, and use about 4700 bales of cotton per annum. The number of operatives employed is abont 1000, of whom 600 are women and girls. The average earnings of these range from four to eight dollars per week. The annual amount paid out by this company for the item of labor does not exceed a quarter million of dollars—a very moderate sum, considering the fact that the average dividends declared by the Cocheco company, for some years past, have been one hundred thousand dollars every six months, and that the net earnings over and above this enabled them on the 18th of June last to pay to their stockholders in cash $300,000 of their capital stock, leaving their present working capital $1,000,000. Four-fifths of the operatives were Irish. Of the remaining one-fifth there was a sprinkling of the tidy, intelligent-looking girls belonging to the surrounding country. The latter were mainly employed in the weaving department, where most intelligence is required, and where the pay is most remunerative. All seemed happy and contented. The hours of labor for adults and children under eleven range from six till six, and it will probably be a long day before the eight-hour system will become a fixed fact in these manufacturing districts.

Dummy Engines.

The following experience is given in regard to their use on frequented roads:

The dummies on the Bath and Coney island road have driven off nearly all the pleasure travel which formerly patronized it, and hardly a week passes but what some unwary individual, in attempting to drive over, is entrapped in meeting the nuisance, when a runaway, and in some cases a capsize, is the consequence, endangering both life and limbs. If you doubt this, inquire of the residents on the road and in the village of New Utrecht, and you will learn enough to satisfy you. Perhaps it would be better for you personally to try the experiment with a team of spirited horses not accustomed to meeting the machine; try it not only by day, but also meet it at night, presenting a face of fire with the sparks flying in all directions, and I think you will agree with me that dummies should never be tolerated on public highways in the country, that on them they are an intolerable nuisance. When trying this experiment stop at the toll-gate on the city line, and the attendant will inform you of the great falling off of the pleasure traveling since their introduction. It is true that some horses eventually become accustomed to the machines, but there are many that always fear them, and some in whom the dread appears to increase instead of diminishing.—Correspondence Brooklyn Eagle.

White Sulphur Well.

[From the New Albany (Ind.) Commercial.]

On Little Blue river, twelve miles from its mouth, and about the same distance from Leavenworth, Crawford county, there is one of the most remarkable wells of sulphur water of which we have any account. It is an artesian well, 480 feet deep, and the water, which is as clear as crystal, flows out in an uninterrupted stream four and a half inches in diameter. The sulphur is purely white, and although strongly impregnated, the water has a very pleasant taste, and is regarded by persons who have tried it to be highly medicinal.

The well was dug for the purpose of procuring coal oil. By means of tubes the jet of water has been thrown to the height of nearly thirty feet—with its present calibre it rises to the height of four or five feet.

Visitors have already begun to come to it as a place of resort. A temporary building has been erected for their accommodation, and it is expected that it will soon become an attractive watering place. The smell of the sulphur can be detected the moment you enter the grove where the well is situated, at a distance of several hundred yards. It is said to surpass the far famed White sulphur springs of Virginia.

A city called Cheyenne has been laid out on the line of the Union Pacific railroad of the Platte, which it is supposed will be the metropolis of the more northern plains. It is located on Crow creek, twenty-five miles below the Rocky mountains, at the base of the Black hills, on the head waters of the Platte. This is the railroad company's town—a second Altoona—where they intend putting up foundries, machine shops, etc., at an expense of $1,000,000.

Paris has been greatly excited of late over the appearance of a masked lady who rides daily in the Bois de Boulogne, with a sword and dagger dangling by her side. No one knows her; no one has seen her face; she is only spoken of as "the masked Amazon." She appears to be young, and is an admirable horsewoman. A story is current that she is the daughter of a Sclavic princess who was ruined by a Parisian gentleman, and died broken-hearted. The daughter is said to be searching for her mother's betrayer, whom she expects to recognize by his portrait, which the princess always wore. Within a week or two a second masked Amazon made her appearance, but instead of carrying pistols and a dagger in her girdle, she has hung an immortelle, with a withered rose entwined in it, to her saddle-bow. French ingenuity has not yet solved this second mystery.

The New York Times encourages the building of hotels after the fashion of the French familisteres. The French familistere is a large building composed of a number of suits of apartments for young married people—the idea being to furnish a comfortable house for two people at low rent. We fear that if the occupants were limited to two, our young married people of small incomes would not, as a general rule, occupy them long. A permanent visitor usually makes his appearance in the course of a year or so. The American familistere would have to be let at frequent intervals to very "newly-married people."

TREATMENT OF UNION PRISONERS.—General Shanks, member of congress from Indiana, and chairman of the congressional committee which is investigating the subject of the treatment of federal prisoners in rebel prisons during the war, is in town, and has rooms at the United States hotel. The committee, of which the general is chairman, are all hard at work, and their report, when fully prepared, will be accurate and reliable, and will constitute an important part of the history of the great conflict, that all future generations may see what our Union prisoners, who perlied their all for the nation, had to suffer and endure in its behalf. The report of this committee will embrace all the important facts and incidents of prison life in the south.—Wash. Republican.

The extensive fair of the New England agricultural society, to be held at Providence this week, will be conducted on the most magnificent scale, in Narragansett park, which embraces fifty acres and contains a covered gallery capable of seating twenty thousand people. It is believed that a larger attendance will be gathered at this exhibition than has ever been collected in the New England states.

THE COTTON CROP.—A German farmer writes that the cotton worm "has done not haf so mooch eat 'em up as we tink so."

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

President Johnson is in the bog of usurpation and reconstruction opposition up to his ankles; but he is in, as a friend of the Irishman was, who called for help to get him out. The story runs thus, and is an unquestioned fact: "How deep is the gentleman in?" asked the man solicited to help. "Up to the ankles," was the reply. "Then there's plenty of time, and we can wait." "No, indade, there's no time, for he's in head first."

The Paris, Illinois, Times says there are two men in that county over one hundred years of age. One of them, John Eagan, an Irishman, who fought in the revolutionary war, is in his one hundred and fourth year; the other, John Garvin, also an Irishman, is one hundred and ten. The editor called to see Garvin, but was informed that he had "just stepped down to his son's," only twelve miles distant.

The rebels in Maryland, since Montgomery Blair's last visit to that state, confidently assert that it is the president's intention to resist the impeachment by force. It is reported that Jerry Black is an advocate of this course.

The Davenport (Iowa) Gazette recapitulates the manufactures of that city as follows: Capital invested, $1,538,200; value of annual product, $2,284,500; hands employed, 1,309; weekly wages, $13,984.

Fair invalid—"Lor, Jane, I do feel that bad! Do, please, make me a tumbler o' brandy-and-water, as strong as you can—and—and just make me take it whether I will or not!"

A colored preacher at the south recently said in a prayer: "O Lord, be pleased to shake your great tablecloth over your hungry children, dat dey may be fed wid de crumbs of your love."

The Lake Shore Grape Growers' association has been in session at Northeast, Pennsylvania. The reports made indicate a crop of grapes above the average.

The president has directed the reservation for military purposes of the Peninsular islands in San Francisco bay, and a plat of 36 square miles at camp Goodwin, Arizona.

Eighty cigar manufactories in Havana have closed, being unable to pay the new government imposition. Hundreds of workmen have thus been thrown out of employment.

"Woman is a delusion, madam!" exclaimed a crusty old bachelor to a witty young lady. "And man is always hugging some delusion or other," was the quick retort.

Maryland rebels have driven from her own property a Union woman who had opened on her farm a home for disabled white and black Union soldiers.

Mr. Bonner says he will never trot "Dexter" for a dollar. "A gentleman can hold a fast horse," he says, "without gambling with him."

The receipts of cotton at Memphis, since September 1, 1866, the beginning of the cotton year, have been 216,812 bales.

Four Union men have been driven out of Smith county, Tennessee, because they had belonged to the state guard.

A residence, costing $30,000, is to be built for the president of the university of Vermont, President Angell.

A canary bird died at Lee the other day at the age of eighteen years, and was a great songster to the last.

In the western part of Texas there are said to be 5000 Germans who will vote the Republican ticket.

Chief Justice Chase is visiting New Hampshire. He received a splendid reception at Manchester Tuesday evening.

In central and southern Ohio all of the potatoes, except those planted late, have been nearly destroyed by the rot.

John Lusk, of San Francisco, made $60,000 this year by the cultivation of red raspberries.

Peninsular island, in the Bay of San Francisco, is to be reserved for military purposes.

The western rivers are higher now than they have been for several years at this season.

Houses on the Parisian Plan.

We are enabled to inform our correspondents and the public, who are interested in the construction in this city of large buildings upon what is called the Parisian plan, that the subject has already received the consideration of property owners in one or more instances; that plans have been prepared and completed in detail; that they would have been carried into execution but for the inordinate price of labor and building materials.

These buildings would cover several lots of ground, be of fine architectural appearance, and yet of the quiet style befitting an elegant private dwelling, and occupy locations of the best character, contiguous to and below the Central park.

They would supply each family with a complete suite of rooms, say from five to ten in number, upon one floor, entirely separate from each other, and opening by a front door upon a spacious fire-proof staircase. The lower floor would be occupied by a restaurant, and for the public rooms usual in a hotel. Each family would have all the seclusion and independence now enjoyed by being sole occupants of a house, and have all the advantages of hotel life. They would be able, at their option, to relieve themselves from the care of a kitchen, and take their meals in the restaurant, or have them served in their own rooms.

There can be little doubt that this plan will be acceptable in this city, particularly if it be introduced on a large scale and in such style as to attract the families who seek to live elegantly and free from ordinary housekeeping burdens; and once approved, the buildings can be varied in construction so as to suit the wants of all classes.—N. Y. World.

CAPITAL IS COMING.—A few days ago, a company of gentlemen of large capital from Massachusetts purchased the famous Shelby iron works and mines, in Shelby county, and who, we learn, intend rebuilding early these once extensive works. The sum paid the old company is said to be three hundred thousand dollars. This is one bold and gigantic movement of northern capital and genius, a movement made to be followed soon, no doubt, by many more.—Montgomery (Ala.) Sentinel.

THE BORDER STATE CONVENTION.—The border state convention, which is to assemble at Baltimore on the 12th instant, promises to be a considerable gathering. Delegations are to be present from Tennessee, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware. The object of the convention, as set forth, is "to advance the interests and cause of manhood suffrage, to demand of congress the passage of the Sumner-Wilson bill, and to direct the central committee to take steps to carry out this resolution, and to fix the day of the meeting of the convention."

PEMBERTON'S
"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."
This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.
It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.
The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.
This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.
Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.
It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."
Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.
His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.
One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.
N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.
Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

"THE WATCHER."

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

All night she sat by her baby's crib,
And watched and waited the whole night through,
In the light of the taper, white and dim,
And the chill of the night time cold and blue.

Over the prairie the slow moon swung,
And the star-flies fluttered their shiny wings,
And the moon so tender, so fond, so fond,— Thrust a white hand lovingly in
And rested it kindly upon that brow,
Drooping, and weary with watching for him.

Dark was that chambe., and cheerless and lone,
Watching all night by her baby's side,
Thinking of days now forever gone—
Days that beheld her a happy bride.
Little she dreamed in her far off home,
Where the dews lay cool and the stars were bright—
Little she dreamed that the great, wide world
Would give her never another so bright.

Lower and lower the pearl moon grew,
And the day star flickered like injured love:
The babe thrust forth one little hand
And smiled, in its innocent dream of love.
But mournful drooped that mother's face,
Set like a pearl in its wild, black hair;
Where, O where was her dream of love?
Broke like a wave on the boulder bare.

And the hours, they falter so slow, so slow,
And the moon hand, gloved in a glove of pearl,
Is the only hand that soothes her now,
In all the cold, dark, dreary world.
"Oh! come to me, darling, come home, come home,"
Is the prayer she prays to him o'er again,
Till the rose is dead on her cheek of snow,
And the eyes had grown so dim, so dim.

And when that prayer fore'er is still,
And drifted away on that far off tide,
He will think of the little form watching for him
All night in the chamber dim and wide.
He will seek her face on the pillow still,
Where it used to nestle so true, so true,
But never again will it watch for him
All night in the shadows, dim and blue.

But true, ah, truer than he has been,
The moon will not desert her dead;
But shed her tenderest, fondest beams
Where the watcher has laid her weary head.

GRADATIM.

BY DR. J. C. HOLLAND.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

I can count these things to be grandly true;
That a noble deed is a step toward God—
Lifting the soul from the common sod
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered of greed and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ill that we hourly meet.

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we trust,
When the morning calls to life and light,
But our hearts grow weary, and ere the night
Our lives are trailing the sordid dust.

Wings for the angels, but feet for the men!
We must borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray,
But our feet must rise or we fall again.

Only in dreams is the ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire walls;
But the dreams depart, and the vision falls,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillar of stone.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

From the Christian Advocate.

CAUSES OF THE CIVIL WAR.

BY REV. RICHARD WHEATLEY.

Among the many dissolving views the magic lantern offers to the gaze of interested spectators is not unusually that of some beautiful or majestic form disappearing in weltering chaos, from which in turn emerges a phantom horribly grotesque and ugly. Such an exhibition has our beloved republic presented to the eyes of wondering nations within the present decade. The world in blank amazement has beheld the states of our Union—once blent in harmonious entity, once rejoicing under an overshadowing constitution, whose weight, like that of the atmosphere, was unappreciable by the multitude, and whose existence was known only by its benefits—arrayed in deadly hostility, and spreading over their whole territorial area mourning, desolation and woe.

The first of Dr. J. W. Draper's three volumes on the history of the Civil War, published by the renowned Brothers Harper, is devoted to exposition of the causes that wrought out the war, and to narration of the events preparatory to it, up to the close of President Buchanan's administration.

The narration contains little if anything that is new or striking. The author places his reader successively upon the Southern and Northern stand points; teaches him to look alike upon past, present and future through circumambient media, and in terse and luminous style discourses condensedly yet comprehensively upon events as they transpire. In so doing he is careful to observe the Ciceronian rules of historical composition: "It is the first and fundamental law of history that it should neither dare to say anything that is false, nor fear to say anything that is true, nor give any just suspicion either of favor or disaffection; that in the relation of things, the writer should observe the order of time, and add also the description of places; that in all great and memorable transactions he should first explain the counsels, then the acts, lastly the events; that in the counsels he should interpose his own judgment on the merit of them; in the acts he should relate not only what was done, but how it was done; in the events he should show what share chance, or rashness, or prudence had in them; that in regard to persons he should describe not only their particular actions, but the lives and characters of all those who bear an eminent part in the story."

In American national life three distinct periods are perceptible. The first characterized by earnest acceptance of the idea of political unity; the second by the decomposition of the nation, embodied by that idea into two geographical and opposing political powers; the third by the conflict of those powers for supremacy. Tremendous outside pressure from the parent country gave rise to the characteristic of the first period; and, that removed, forces mainly internal originated characteristic of the second.

Foremost of those forces are the moral and social, generated by the difference of the original colonists. Immigrants to the south were materialistic, pleasure-loving, aristocratic; those to the north were idealists, reflective, laborious, and democratic. Climate aggravated their respective peculiarities, dictating to the cavalier on the one hand the slave culture of tobacco and cotton, and to the roundhead on the other the free cultivation of ordinary staples of domestic consumption. The progress of physical sciences and industrial art in Great Britain lent additional power to the decomposing tendency by enhancing the value of servile products, and in increasing the wealth of the planter, thereby enlarging his leisure and inclination for government and politics. Another, and not the least of those forces, was the ever-deepening conviction in the northern mind of the guilt of enslaving human beings, and the desire to purge itself of complicity in the "sum of all villainies." Add to this the apprehension of losing political control of the country, so rife in slave-holding circles, and the list may be nearly, if not quite, closed.

To the climatic element in this congeries of disintegrating forces Dr. Draper assigns too great prominence and power. But if, as we are compelled to infer from his language and argumentation, he belong to the materialistic school of philosophic realism, it is not to be wondered at. Climate, as related to the development and destiny of nations, is and does everything. Religious and moral forces are of very small account. These are the author's opinions. His speculations are wonderfully interesting. They reveal a vast amount of reading and philosophic research. Treasured acquisitions are poured forth with lavish profusion. Mrs. Partington would think he had "information on the brain." But while we gladly recognize the value of much that he advances, we can by no means concede the justice or accuracy of the inferences he draws from the premises laid down. Climate does unquestionably exert great influence on the character and fortunes of nations. But we must be excused from believing that "the springs of history" are to be discovered wholly or mainly "in the silent influences of nature," or that "the philosopher will often detect the true causes of great political and social convulsions, of sectional hatreds and natural attachments, in the shining of the sun and in the falling of rains." It was not by these agencies that the colossal fabric of Roman domination was overthrown, that paganism was subverted and Christianity seated on its throne, that France was thrown into revolutionary convulsions, or that the adherents of the papacy were compelled to imbrue their hands in the blood of Protestant brethren. In vain does the author asseverate that in Europe spiritual aspirations predominate, and in America physical; that the people of the former are under the influence of religious sentiment, and that "we shall be controlled by industrial pursuits," because the surface of their continent is convex to the sky, while ours is concave. The statement as to the skyward aspect of our country is true of the Mississippi Valley, and for that matter of every valley in the states. But is it not also true of every valley in the world? If we are to be more material and worldly than Europeans, because we have larger valleys, then, on the theory of physical influence, we shall be more spiritual and devout because we have higher and larger mountains.

By climate the author informs us he means "the aggregate of all the circumstances, natural and artificial, in which we live." Climate, then, is a very comprehensive term. But in his affirmations and reasonings he restricts its meaning almost entirely to the natural environments of life. He does this when he declares that "climate controls the thoughts and actions of men;" that it determines forms of religion and government; that the January isothermal of 41 deg. is the line of demarkation between Romanism and Protestantism, between systems of embellished and of simple worship. He forgets that Russia is north and that protesting Italy, to say nothing of Mohammedan nations, is south of that line. Foresight, method, caution, energy, perseverance, and their opposites, are not governed by isothermal lines; are not monopolized by the North nor scarce in the South. The late war has demonstrated that historic Africa and Asia are as near the Equator as our southern States; yet, says our author, "No climate zone on the face of the earth has produced greater men, or more profoundly affected the course of human affairs. Among soldiers it has Hannibal; among philosophers, Euclid; among astronomers, Ptolemy. Persia is a land of poets. Jerusalem, the holiest of cities, is the cradle of religion. Carthage disputed with Rome the empire of the world." Much more of the same kind we could add. It is needless; enough has been said to show that thought, action, and character, that forms of religion and government are not dependent on climate save in a very minute degree. Intellectual and religious forces, the Gospel and living Christians, change and elevate nations. Climate has little to do with it. The faana and the flora but slightly modify the action of moral agencies. The Draperian theory of climatic power, or rather the Buckellian, is inconsistent with the facts on which it professedly rests. We should not omit to add that in the author's opinion the differentiating influence of climate is, in its relations to nationality, best neutralized by national justice to each and all. His work, notwithstanding its manifest philosophical blemishes, and its refusal to acknowledge the supreme power of spiritual instrumentalities, is a rich contribution to the literature of this eventful epoch.

Beautiful Extract.

Some fifteen years ago, Rev. J. N. Maffit, then in his prime, delivered a lecture which closed with the following passage:

"The Phœnix, a fabled bird of antiquity, when it felt the advancing chill of age, built its own funeral urn, and fired its pyre by means which nature's instinct taught. All its plumage and its form of beauty became ashes; but then would rise the young—beautiful from the urn of death and chambers of decay, would the fledgling come with its eyes turned towards the sun, and essaying its dark velvet wings, sprinkled with gold and fringed with silver, on the balmy air, rising a little higher until at length, in the full confidence of its flight, it gives a cry of joy, and soon became a glittering speck on the bosom of aerial ocean. Lovely voyager of earth, bound on its heavenward journey to the sun! So rises the spirit bird of the body, the funeral urn which its Maker built; the death fires. So towers away to its home on the pure elements of spirituality, the intellect, to dip its proud wings in the fount of eternal bliss. So shall dear, precious humanity survive from the ashes of a burning world. So beautifully shall the unchanged soul soar within the disc of eternity's great luminary, with undazzled eye and unscorched wing—the Phœnix of immortality—taken to its rainbow home, and cradled on the beating bosom of eternal love."

Fine Music is not Worship.

The editorial leader in the May number of the New York Musical Gazette bears the following testimony:

At first thought this may seem to be a very needless assertion. But it is not. It is no man of straw to be knocked down by a paragraph. There are many people who make no distinction between musical enjoyment and religious feeling; who seem to accept the awakening of their musical sensibilities as the working of a genuine religious experience. A writer in a sectional paper, speaking recently of different concerts, made use of the following language: 'Moreover, oratorio is religiously welcome to our Sunday evenings, for it is the grandest form of sacred music, often the noblest utterance of holy writ. Who can preach more eloquently than Handell and Haydn? What sermon is so good as a chorus of the Messiah?'

This is no doubt but the reflection of a very general public opinion, but the position is a false one, and hurtful in its tendency. Who ever heard an audience, or any portion of an audience, on leaving a concert room where the Messiah had been performed, conversing about the Savior, as if their minds had been specially turned to him or to his work by the performance they had listened to? Who ever heard of a conversation resulting from the very finest possible rendering of any song or chorus in that wonderful oratorio? No, the effect is musical, and that alone, and we cannot but feel that anything which confirms the opposite impression must be exceedingly injurious. It is not necessary for us to express our faith in the elevating, ennobling and purifying influence of music as an art; but the existence of this conviction in the mind need not conflict with a sincere desire that the true position of the art should be well understood.

Music is the handmaid of religion, but it certainly is not religion itself in any sense. If if were so, then a Catholic Cathedral, where its performance is brought to the highest possible degree of perfection, in connection with sacred words, should contain the most worshipful assembly in the world. But that this is the case no one will claim. Yet, although the minds of Christian people revolt from any such extreme conclusion, they still seem unable to rid themselves of the idea that if music be well performed there must be some worship in it, merely on that account. But there certainly is no more religion in music itself than in any other art or science. And the use of sacred words does not interfere with the truth of this statement, unless the sentiment of the words are felt by the hearer. This test is a very simple and by no means a severe one; yet we fear its application would rule out a large proportion of the church choir singing in our churches. The actual spirit of the words is not given or received by choir or people. See how it is even where a choir have obtained a reputation for singing with an expression. The effect even then is musical rather than spiritual. This might be inferred from the very language by which the singing is frequently eulogized. As the congregation leave the church such remarks as these are heard: 'How beautifully our choir sang to-day! With what admirable expression! How finely the sentiment of that last hymn was brought out!' Strange, indeed, it is, that no one perceives how false is the basis of all this criticism! Strange that none should realize that they have merely been gratified with a fine performance, in which their religious feelings have not been awakened in the slightest degree! If this were not true their minds would be turned in an entirely different channel. Instead of thinking of the music and praising its fine adaptation, their thoughts would be occupied with the solemn truths contained in the hymn, and they would be filled with serious meditations upon such subjects as it had brought before the mind.

It will be observed that we have said no word against the cultivation of sacred music. We believe it is the very highest form of music, and that it is the duty of all congregations to provide every possible means for its improvement. But we do contend for the truth of the statement which heads this article, that 'Fine Music is not Worship.' It is not asserted that artistic music is incompatible with a worshipful spirit; but that in itself, it has not the essence of religion. When high musical culture is joined with a truly devout and consecrated spirit, then, indeed, the result is glorious. Most fortunate is the church which enjoys such a combination in its religious services. But the idea that the finest music without the spirit of worship is either acceptible to God or beneficial to the congregation, is a delusion and a snare.

What Ragged Schools have Done.

When Sheriff Watson, of Aberdeen, was leaving home one day, about twenty years ago, he met a beggar boy who told a mournful tale and sought relief; the sheriff gave him a ticket of admission to one of the free schools of the city and passed on. But the disappointed look of that boy would not leave my mind. "He asked me for bread," said the sheriff to himself, "and I have given him a stone."

To this thought we are indebted for the first Ragged School in Scotland. The sheriff gave effect to it by calling a meeting of influential friends, who subscribed a fund to open a school for vagrant boys, where they might have a simple diet, a plain education, and be trained to industrial habits. The cost of all this did not exceed four pounds a year after deducting the amounts received from the boy's earnings. A girl's school was next formed, and thenceforward the Ragged School became a public institution.

Looking back on the history of these and other schools of the same description in the city, the sheriff said, lately, "We appeal to thousands we have put into domestic service in various parts of the country, who are living witnesses to the truth of our statistics; and to me it is a marvel, which I can ascribe to nothing but the protecting hand of God, that none of those children have returned to us dismissed or in disgrace. Upwards of 3,000 children have attended our four Ragged Schools in Aberdeen since 1841, and of these 600 have gone into situations, and are, with few exceptions, known to be doing well."

A few months after the establishment of Sheriff Watson's school in Aberdeen, Dr. Guthrie opened a ragged school in Edinburg. An incident, also, led to this. One day the doctor sat down to rest, after a long walk, on a seat beside St. Anthony's well, near Holyrood. A few ragged boys, who gained a precarious living by handing water in their tins to visitors, offered the doctor "a drink." He was struck by their sharp and intelligent appearance. He asked if they would go to school if they were to get a breakfast, a dinner and a supper? "Instantly," says the doctor, "the eyes of the little fellows kindled up, and one of them said: 'I would come for a dinner only.'"

This scene laid hold of his mind. Like Sheriff Watson, he soon interested a number of benevolent friends in his project, and thenceforward Edinburgh, like the granite city, became famous for its ragged schools. But with what results? Hear the doctor on this point: "We have cleared the streets of Edinburgh of juvenile beggars, a feat which the magistrates and police, with cell and prison at their back, failed to achieve. We have rescued from certain ruin, by one school, in twelve years, 500 children, at a cost not worth naming; while we saved to the State £74,000, the amount which they would have cost had they grown up in lawlessness and crime. We have ever since gone on the same track, catching hold of every little fellow before he goes over the precipice, and now we are likely to have prisons to let, for when I was at Paisley, a short time ago, I heard a fiddle playing in a prison, and when I inquired of a friend what that could mean, he replied, 'Oh, there's naebody in't, and they have turned the jail into a dancing school.'"

At one of the annual meetings of the Ragged School Union, held recently, Lord Shaftesbury said: "When those four or five good men came to me and asked me to unite with them in their endeavors to stem the tide of juvenile crime and depravity, did any one believe, did any one dare to imagine that he would live to see such a day as this, to hear such a report as this, and be able to stand before thousands of his fellow men and declare the great work that had been wrought? how much evil had been rolled back? how much had been prevented? how many thousands had been called into life? how many saved to their country? how many saved from the grip of Satan to adorn Christianity in this life and to form part of the Savior's diadem in the world to come?"

THE FATE OF UNJUST GAINS, OR, "HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY."—In spite of the Emperor Adrian's epigram, that "money has no unpleasant odor," a fatality seems to attach itself to ill-gotten gains. Either because the illegal transactions by which immense profits have been harvested on a repetition fail to bring success, or because the sudden command of inexhaustible resources give rise to insatiable desires, in almost every case the plunderer fails to enjoy for a long time the fruits of their labors. Messrs. Van Wyck and Walker, members of the Congressional sub-committee appointed to investigate the cotton frauds during the war, have discovered that many of the largest speculators have squandered their gains by subsequent schemes or by the decline of the price of cotton. In this instance, retribution, although proverbially lame of foot, seems to have overtaken the horde of vultures which followed in the track of our conquering armies through the South. In many cases the information, either accidentally or wilfully, communicated to the enemy by this worst class of camp followers, caused the failure of the most promising expeditions. It is a cause of great satisfaction that these cotton-ghouls have received a fitting reward for their selfishness.

General Sheridan at St. Louis.

The following paragraphs are extracted from General Carl Schurz's speech of welcome to General Sheridan at the unparalleled demonstration at St. Louis, while he was en route to Fort Leavenworth:

"But in you, sir, the people see more than merely a man who can wield a sword, ride down hostile battalions, and handle an army on the rough edges of a battle. In you the people honor the glorious model of the American soldier; [cheers] the soldier who is no mere unthinking machine in the hands of a superior will, but he knows what he is fighting for, and whose brave soul will never rest until the victory of his arms has received its true value in the assured triumph of a great cause. [Great applause.]

In you they honor the man whose eagle eye not only never failed to seize the decisive moment on the field of battle, but seized with equal certainty the decisive points of the great problem of our day. Not only as the bold rider of Winchester, the hero of the Shenandoah valley and the Five Forks, but as the hero of the Fifth Military District, General Sheridan, we welcome you [applause] as an honest man, sir. You have achieved a triumph not inferior to your exploits as a soldier.

"You have not only shown to the enemies of the country the invincibility of your arms, but the very men who hate you have been forced to respect and esteem you in spite of themselves. Even now voices are coming up from the South—voices of men who abhor the authority you exercised — voices which say, 'We detest the laws which placed him over us, but Sheridan is a man!'

"Dark as the horizon may appear, the day is not far distant when the struggles we are now passing through will lie behind us on the records of history—the day when the whole American nation, North and South, willingly recognizing the beneficent results of this great revolution, will again be united, hand and heart—when the republic will throw her broad shield over the civil and political rights of all her citizens, whatever their birth place, creed or complexion; and when the people of these States—the people in the broadest sense of the word—again go on growing and prospering in the loyal exercise of local self-government. Yes, it will come in spite of the rebels, who have lost their fight, but did not lose their rancor—in spite of the insidious intrigues which seek to delay it, it will come!

"Then, General, you will gather your proudest laurels of triumph. The people of Louisiana and Texas will say, 'Blessed be the day which gives us the secure reign of hearty loyalty and impartial justice; and blessed be Sheridan, who so bravely broke the ground.' And the people of all the States will joyfully repeat what they already say, 'As the gleam of Sheridan's sword showed us the road to victory, so the gleam of Sheridan's mind showed us the road to peace!'

"As the champion of peace, through justice, as the representative of the popular thought, General Sheridan, we welcome you!"

WANT OF TACT.—The most agreeable associates in the every day intercourse of society are those who put us in a good humor with ourselves. Tactless people have a wonderful faculty of effecting the opposite. However well-tuned may be the instrument they touch, their rough, inconsequent fingers always strike some jarring string. Wounded sensibility exaggerates their bluntness into insult—confusion enters the doors where they pass in—discord follows in their steps.

From Mississippi.

PASS CHRISTIAN, MISS., Sept. 4, 1867.

Dear Advocate:

On last Friday evening our highly esteemed presiding elder, Rev. N. L. Brakeman, visited this part of our Lord's vineyard in search of the "lost sheep of the house of Israel;" he remained with us till Sunday evening. He preached an excellent sermon for us. On Saturday evening and on Sunday morning four happy converts were baptized by immersion in the Gulf of Mexico. This was something new for the Methodists of this place. Even our Baptist brethren were somewhat surprised to see (as they remarked) the Methodists "following Christ down into the water," etc. At 11 A. M. brother Roberson, from First Street Church, N. O., addressed the candidates in a very feeling and practical discourse from the text, "For thus it becomes us to fulfill all righteousness." At 3 P. M., elder Brakeman delivered a powerful sacramental sermon, and administered the Lord's supper to a large number, including some of our Baptist friends and brethren, and at night we had love feast. The Lord was with us throughout the day. Five serious persons came forward, and declared their intention to fight no longer against the Lord of hosts, but to lay down their arms and sue for peace in the blood of the atonement. This Society was organized March 25,1867, with 21 members, and now numbers 43. For the past three months, owing to the absence of the preacher in charge, and unfaithfulness on the part of the official brethren, the cause of Zion languished, and the people had become lukewarm; but the exercises of last Sabbath has infused new life and energy into the hearts of the people, and it is to be hoped that the impression left upon ther minds will be lasting. The elder's visit was truly providential; and much good was done by it.

The trustees have paid for the church lots, and have the deeds secured. We have also erected a small building for temporary use. We came near loosing the ground with the building and the 80 dollars that had been paid on them, the trustees having failed to meet the payments as they fell due, and an opportunity to sell at a better price being offered. The land lord was disposed to take advantage of us, and have the money cash down or we could not get the land. So the trustees borrowed the money and paid him, and now have the deed in their possession.

Last Sunday a week ago we organized a society about five miles back of this town, and received the congregation into the pale of the "mother" church.

This is a very interesting field; the people have erected a building 30x18, on a lot given to them by a colored brother named John Johnson, who, besides giving the ground, furnished most of the lumber, and assisted in erecting the building.

I am informed that there are persons there, both white and colored, that has never heard a sermon! How strange, in a land of bibles and free schools, and of boasted civilization—how strange to find men far advanced in age, who have never heard the story of the cross! But "mother" has sent the light of the everlasting gospel even into this dark spot of earth. O, pray that it may shine into the hearts of this people. The brethren there are living far apart, and they desire a bell of some kind that they may be summoned in time for service whenever there is any. Who among our friends will give them one? they are unable to purchase one, consequently they resort to begging. They are not particular what kind it is, so it will make a noise. An old steamboat or foundry bell will do as well as any other; any one desiring to give them one can do so by sending it to the preacher in charge of Pass Christian, who will convey it to them with many thanks.

A CURIOUS HISTORICAL FACT.—A curious question was discussed at a recent meeting of the British Royal Geographical society. Sir Henry Rawlinson expressed the opinion that the Sea of Aral—a body of water having an area of 23,000 square miles—had no existence in the long period between 600 years before Christ and 600 years after, and the rivers Oxus and Jaxartes, now flowing into it, both flowing into the Caspian sea. He said: "The sea first comes into notice in the seventh century, and these two are spoken of for several hundred years as emptying into it. Another change seems to have occurred between 1300 and 1500, and the rivers again flowed into the Caspian sea; but since the latter date they slowly changed their channels till they found an outlet in the Sea of Aral." This theory was combatted by Sir Roderick Murchison, the geologist, who affirmed that the mere absence of allusions to the Sea of Aral was no proof of its non-existence, and cited the geological evidences that whatever changes the sea had undergone they must have occurred long before the birth of history or tradition. Sir Henry Rawlinson, in reply, said that evidence exists in the writings of the fourteenth centuries, that a common highway of travel from Europe to Asia passed directly over the region now covered by the waters of the Aral. His opponent admitted that such evidence would be conclusive. Here the debate ended, with the understanding that Sir Henry is to collect and publish the proofs of his assertion.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 21, 1867.

REV. J. P. NEWMAN, D.D.

The principal Editor and Proprietor of this paper, we regret to say, has been seriously ill with the prevailing epidemic for nearly two weeks past. But we rejoice to be able to state, at the present writing, that he has passed the crisis—is pronounced out of all danger, and is rapidly recovering.

For the information of the Dr.'s numerous friends abroad, the readers of the Advocate, and his numerous correspondents, it is proper to state, that worn down by almost incessant labor as pastor of the "Ames' Church,"—visiting the sick, burying the dead, editing the Advocate, and supervising the various enterprises of the Church in this locality, he was rendered peculiarly vulnerable to disease. Consequently, on the night of the 4th, or rather the morning of the 5th inst., he was violently attacked with yellow fever. And after having been pronounced convalescent, he was seriously threatened with a typhoid form of fever, from some unknown cause. But under the blessing of God, through the skill of his physician, and careful nursing and attention of friends, that, too, has passed away, and there is now no further cause of alarm. Very soon the faithful watchman will be "walking about Zion, telling her towers, and examining her bulwarks," for the benefit of "generations following."

Dr. Newman may now be called fully acclimated to New Orleans, and the South—the same as if "to the manor born"—so that in all seasons he can with safety "go in and out" among the people, bearing aloft the banner of our Methodism, as a leader of "the Sacramental host," over all the moral and spiritual battle-fields of the sunny South. So mote it be.

The above notice, or apology, as with all other matter in the Advocate for this week, is without the knowledge or agency of Dr. Newman, or his Assistant.

Rev. Mr. Henry.

The Assistant Editor of the Advocate, is also down with the yellow fever, but we are happy to state is convalescent. So the "Advocate," for this week, must, in a great measure, edit itself.

THE EPIDEMIC—THE PREACHERS.

We deeply regret that so many of our preachers, who have been laboring so efficiently in the great mission fields of the South, should have found it necessary to be absent in visiting their friends, or on any other business, in the North or West just at this particular time. As many, very many persons, who are always but too ready to criticise ministers, will attribute their absence to a fear of the prevailing epidemic—and will talk loud and long of a "big scare" among the ministers, who have left their people to sicken, die, and be buried without "the benefit of clergy." No matter how unfounded the allegation may be, in fact, there will be found enough to ring the charges upon it, to the prejudice of such as may have been absent from their post during the ravages of the epipemic. And they are not of any one particular denomination—but ministers from various churches are in the same condemnation.

We must all have observed the strong hold upon the hearts of the people, and the commanding influence in the community a minister secures who remains with them through an epidemic—visiting the sick, burying the dead, attending funerals, and administering comfort to the sorrowing and bereaved families of his flock.

The writer has two marked instances of this in his mind's eye, now. One is Rev. Dr. Clapp, late of this city, who acquired an almost matchless influence over the entire community of New Orleans, and rendered his name immortal by his remaining here during epidemic after epidemic, and by unremitting attention to the sick—rich and poor, burying the dead, and ministering to the wants of the suffering and the sorrowful.

The other case is that of the late Rev. Dr Capers, of South Carolina, who, at the time of his death, was an honored Bishop of the "M. E. Church South." He first acquired his eminence, attracted popular attention, and secured a commanding influence throughout the South, by his constant and untiring devotion to the sick, the suffering, the dying and the dead in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, during the entire time of a long and fearful epidemic, almost without a parallel—when Dr. Capers was comparatively a young man. And this, more than his superior talents as orator, or divine, gave him an influence over all South Carolina, second only to Calhoun himself.

We call attention to these cases for the purpose of showing how important it is, even so far as popular reputation and influence are concerned, to say nothing of duty and usefulness, for a minister to remain at his post under all circumstances, and especially in times of greatest danger. And beside, we should not allow the children of this world to be wiser in their generation, in this regard, than the children of light. Especially in times like these the watchman should be constantly on the walls, crying aloud, "Be ye also ready!"

Rev. N. L. Brakeman.

The laborious and efficient Presiding Elder of this District, has been absent from the city for two weeks on a brief visit to his old friends and comrades in labor, in Indiana, and to participate in the religious festivities of a re-union of the four Indiana Conferences, which was to take place in Indianapolis last week; and it was supposed it would be a season of unusual interest to the brethren, who are now, or were formerly, members of either of the four Conferences. Brother Brakeman was for many years a member of the Northwest Indiana Conference, and his affection for the brethren led him to make a pilgrimage to Indiana, to mingle in the reunion of Conferences. He is now expected in the city every day, to resume his labors on the District as a standard-bearer of the Church. His field is large and laborious, and his responsibilities great, so that a couple weeks of respite from labor may greatly benefit and invigorate him, in body and mind. We sincerely trust such may be the case, as the work to be done will require all the energies of a vigorous, christian manhood For, "lift up your eyes and see! Lo the fields are already white to the harvest."

Sunday Theatre.

The epidemic frightened away a whole troupe of "Negro Minstrels" during the past week from our city, who thus forfeited what promised to be, to them, a lucrative engagement. But it has not yet closed the doors of our Sunday night Theatre. So demoralized and blunted have the moral sensibilities of a portion of our community become, in this city, where vice holds high carnival, that the warning voice of the Providence of God, although speaking in the thunder tones of the prevailing epidemic, is wholly unheeded. We have often wondered if another Jonah were commissioned of God to march through the city and cry, "And yet forty days, and the city shall be overthrown," whether it would cool down the ardor of our pleasure seekers, or effectually close the doors of our Sunday Theatres. Thousands of pleasure seekers still throng our streets, and we look out on the giddy, heedless masses, and exclaim, "Truly, the harvest is great, but the laborers are few."

REPRESENTATION IN GENERAL CONFERENCE.

We see from our various Church papers, that Annual Conferences, as they hold their sessions, are now electing their Delegates to represent them in the General Conference at its quadrenial session, to be held in Chicago, Illinois, the first of May, 1868. And we are pleased to see, so far as we are able to judge, that they are generally selecting their strong men. Ministers of age, experience, and sound in the faith of the fathers, as well as men of enterprise, who are not afraid of a healthy progress in Methodism, as in everything else.

But as we look on, and read with interest, the list of Delegates from one Conference after another, we can but inquire, who are to represent the Ministers and the people in the newly formed Conferences, in this Southern Mission field? According to the present letter of the Discipline, in the judgment of many, we must go unrepresented, at this particular time, when we most need representation. And we take the liberty, during the sickness of both, the Editor and the Assistant, to ask the questions, Is it fair? Is it Constitutional?

These Conferences have been formed by the Bishops, in a legitimate way, in the exercise of a power vested in them by the General Conference; and ministers of age, wisdom and experience—of sound judgment, piety and zeal, have been sent here, by Episcopal authority, to labor in an important field, and lay deep and broad the foundations of our Zion—where they have much to do with all the varied interests, and institutions of the Church. And now, we repeat, "Is it fair," to cut these men off from their legitimate representation in the General Conference of 1868, where they, and their field of labor, will have so much at stake? It seems to us that it is unfair, both to Ministers and people, and detrimental to the various enterprises upon which the Church is just entering, and the Institutions they are seeking to found and foster. In the name of a common Methodism, we would fain ask that the voice of the infant Conferences in the South—where Church and State are both being "re-constructed"—be heard in the General Conference at Chicago, in May, next. It really seems to us, suicidal, to refuse this much needed representation.

Again, Is it Constitutional, to deprive any portion of the Traveling Eldership of the Church of their proper and legitimate representation in the General Conference, the only conclave of the Church vested with legislative power? This, we admit, is a grave question to be propounded by a mere Pro. Tem., without the knowledge of either the Editor, or his Assistant. Still, we modestly, but earnestly ask that our wise and talented expounders of ecclesiastical Constitutional Law, give it a few moments of sober reflection and calm investigation, and let us hear from them through our Church Journals, before it is too late. At one time, our Discipline was so careful on this point, that it provided that whatever might be the ratio of representation, no Annual Conference should be deprived of at least two Delegates. And even now, although an Annual Conference may not have even the fraction of the ratio which would entitle them to a Delegate, yet provides that they shall have at least one Delegate. Now, why all this? It is simply to guard against the unconstitutionality of depriving any portion of the Traveling Eldership, of a representation in the only law-making power of the Church—the General Conference. To us, it is clear, that if there is a statutory law depriving these Mission Conferences of representation in General Conference, it is an unconstitutional statute, and should be null and void. And we trust the Bench of Bishops will so pronounce it—if they conceive they have such authority. And we are certain the whole Church would acquiesce in such a decision. From this standpoint, it seems to us that nothing, coming before the next General Conference, can be of more interest or importance to the Church at large, than the questions relating to, and bearing upon, the planting, the "reconstruction," and the enlargement of the old, bona fide, "Methodist Episcopal Church, in the United States of America," throughout the southern country. Why not, then, let our leading, enterprising men of mark, be heard in the councils of the Church? It is surely due them, and it is due the Church they serve, and the people they represent.

We dismiss the subject for the present, simply re-iterating the questions, "Is it fair? Is it Constitutional?" to deprive "Traveling Elders" of a representation in the General Conference?

POLITICAL CRUELTY.

A cotemporary of this city thus heads an article, which is a jeremiad of southern woes, and is a practical illustration of that Bourbon tendency of the old class of political writers of the South, to never learn or forget. It speaks of "further persecutions of a disarmed and afflicted people;" of "alienating permanently two sections;" of "keeping up a war against an unresisting people," and so on through the list of doleful whinings, which have become the peculiar characteristics of a certain class of southern writings, since the rebellion.

In newspapers of the class of the La Crosse Democrat, the New York Day Book, the Mobile Register, and the New Orleans Times, such articles do not seem misplaced. When skillfully timed, with a judicious interlarding of abuse, bad English, and villainously compounded epithets, they even add a sort of "becomingness," if we may be allowed the word, to their pages, just as the features of a certain order of criminals become their wearers.

Those interested in following farther the train of thought here suggested, are recommended to Bacon's essay on "The Wonderful Adaptibility of Nature, as shown in the fitness, in form and feature, of diverse orders of animals, to their several ends."

We suggest to our neighbor, however, that this sort of thing, in a respectable newspayer, is as unmanly as it is untruthful. The people of the South are not persecuted. Only a portion of them are prohibited from persecuting the other portion. Even of the late rebels, we see, by the registration lists, that not one-twentieth are excluded from voting.

The two sections are not being alienated. On the contrary, the large majority of the people of Louisiana, for instance, are more friendly united to those of the North by ties of interest, kindness and gratitude, than ever before.

There is no war kept up against an unresisting people. They are just as secure in the rights of liberty, property and life as any people on the globe.

None of these stereotyped complaints are true. Nor does the real grief of the late rebels lie here. They mourn, not because they are deprived of any of the rights of other people; they mourn, not because the colored man will not work; but because he will not work for them.

No conquered people were ever treated so leniently, nor repaid it with such malignance. No people were ever so thoroughly beaten; none ever so persistently sought to regain by political tricks what they had lost by an appeal to arms. No people ever lost so much overgrown power, or gained so much liberty, at once; none ever were so blind to what they had lost or what they had gained.

It is time to awake from the spell of the past, and look the present in the face. The South and the people are now the fast friends of the Union. A large portion of that people have been freed and enfranchised by Congress. So far, then, from looking upon Congress as their enemy, they are radical friends of Congress, and regard its policy as a blessing to them and their section. It rests with that minority who were once the people of the South, but are so no longer, to blend their interests and actions with those of the whole people, and earn a share in their coming prosperity, or, by keeping up their useless whinings over the privilege and power that is irretrievably lost, to keep alive distinctions and antagonisms which otherwise would be forgotten.

A Helper in Time of Need.

During the illness of Rev. Dr. Newman, the Pastor of the "Ames M. E. Church," of this city, and the sickness or absence of other ministers, the congregation desire to express their grateful obligation to Rev. Dr. Daily, late of Indiana, but for two years passed, Special Agent of the Post Office Departments for the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, with his head-quarters in this city, for his efficient services in the pulpit for two or three Sabbaths past. He has been to the Church a "Helper in time of need." May Heaven reward him for his "work of faith and labor of love."

To Correspondents.

The correspondents of Rev. Dr. Newman, on hearing of his illness, will see the propriety of exercising a little patience over what might otherwise seem to be a culpable neglect. In a very few days their communications will receive the personal attention of the Dr.,—as we have good hope, by the blessing of God, that very soon we shall have the pleasure of reading the announcement from his own pen, that "Richard is himself again."

Dedication.—Ross Chapel, the M. E. Church at Camp Parapet, about two miles above Carrollton, will be dedicated on Sunday, September 22d, at 3 o'clock P. M. Rev. Scott Chinn will preach the dedicatory sermon. There will also be service at 11 o'clock.

Rev. Joseph Gould, the pastor, informs us that the agent of the Jackson Railroad has agreed to send a train at one o'clock, and another at two o'clock, which will carry all passengers right to the church.

All are cordially invited to attend.

From Alexandria, La.—Rev. Samuel Small writes us that his work there is in a prosperous condition. The people have presented him with a bell for his church—the cost of which was $75.

Curtis Lewis made him a donation of two thousand feet of lumber for a church, and a brother Macclenan donated five hundred feet for the same purpose.

On the first day of August brother Small organized a large society in the pine woods, about 15 miles from Alexandria.

THE PAST WEEK'S BUSINESS.

The monetary and commercial reports for the past week show a less amount of business than at any other time during the year. Usually our merchants and men of business return from the north and west at this season, and on all sides throughout the city are witnessed indications of a revival of active, enterprising business. At this time, however, instead of a return of our citizens from their summer trips, we still see persons leaving for the north. Business, therefore, is stagnant, and no disposition is evinced to enter into the regular winter arrangements with any alacrity until the yellow fever dies out, which is confidently expected to be the case in about two weeks.

There is little, scarcely any, steamboating and less shipping. The few steamers plying between here and New York bring us some merchandise, but not as regularly and in such quantities as we would have had reason to expect had there been no epidemic this year. The railroads bring us, and carry away, comparatively nothing. The business reports of our newspapers tell us that the commercial week closes with a "quiet market," that money matters "exhibited little animation," "domestic exchange continues dull," the stock market was "dull," that city bonds were "inactive," and that the offerings for cotton were "restricted." Thus is seen at a glance the condition of our commercial affairs during this season. In the auction business no real estate is now sold or offered. The only visible life in the auction line are the sales of furniture, horses, mules, and buggies by Montgomery Brothers, and of dry goods, hats, boots, and shoes by Holz, Blohm & Co., which are regularly advertised in our columns. We hear, however, of large stocks of goods of all kinds on their way here from the north, which will soon be offered to our citizens at the wholesale houses or auction stores.

That thee pidimic has reached its climax and must now decline no one seems to doubt. That at the beginning of October our merchants will all have returned home invigorated for the business campaign, and that New Orleans during the coming winter will do an immense and prosperous business, we all hope and believe. Let our men of capital, business energy, and enterprise not be discouraged by the prevailing epidemic. It will soon be over, and then "new glories" will be before us in commerce, manufacturers, and the mechanic arts.

THE NEW OCEAN CABLE.

Dispatches are now beginning to appear in our news by the Havana cable. This is the second completed link in the great ocean telegraphic route in which the West India islands are but stepping stones to more important links beyond. It is the carrying forward of the undertaking of the International Ocean Telegraph company organized in New York city in 1865. Their first line was laid from New York to Key West. It is understood that the company holds a monopoly from Spain, so that no other can lay a cable between the United States and Cuba for forty years. From the West Indies the line will be extended across to Central and South America, bringing all those markets in direct communication with this and the Atlantic cities, or with the whole world. Let us hope that, though a monopoly, rates will be so fair and reasonable that the great public can make use of it.

Health of United States Troops.

Several on the medical surgical staff are sick, which operates badly upon those on whom the additional service falls. Gen. Wheaton is doing well. United States Surgeon Clements has been sick at the barracks since Sunday. There are three surgeons sick at Sedgwick or Greenville hospital: Assistant Surgeon Koerper, since Sunday; Assistant Surgeon Auerbach was taken sick Monday, and Assistant Surgeon Deal on Tuesday morning.

Captain J. W. Spangler, of company G. sixth cavalry, at the head of the troops detailed for escort and other mounted duty, died at his headquarters Tuesday morning, in the third district. Lieutenant Rossander, of the sixth cavalry, was taken sick Tuesday morning; also, one of General Hartsuff's orderlies, the first yet taken sick, though very much exposed by having to ride to all parts of the city.

The health generally of the troops is improving, however. No death occurred yesterday at Greenville hospital, while six of the patients from the ironclad fleet returned to duty, and eight from the army forces, leaving but sixty of the army and four of the ironclads still in hospital.

Health of Texas.

Never within our recollection has our sister state of Texas been so generally afflicted as during the present season. The seaport towns, such as Galveston, Indianola, Lavaca, and Brazos, have frequently been visited by epidemic yellow fever, and once or twice Houston has been attacked. But this year the Texas papers contain bad accounts of the health of nearly every town of any magnitude in the southwestern part of the state. Alleytown, near San Antonio, Texana, Lagrange, Columbus, Navasota, and numerous other towns have yellow fever, while the "black tongue" is prevailing in Limestone county, and in one or two places they are complaining of the appearance of the cholera. We hope these afflictions will soon pass away, and leave our Texas friends to the more cheerful task of reconstructing their great state in accordance with the wise policy of Congress.

Military Assignments.

The following orders have been officially promulgated:

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., September 16, 1867.
General Orders No. 33.

In accordance with instructions from the war department, the undersigned hereby assumes command of the fifth military district.

Existing orders will remain in force, and all officers on staff duty at the headquarters of the district will continue in the performance of their customary duties until otherwise ordered. JOS. A. MOWER,
Brevet Major General, U. S. Army.

New Orleans, La., Sept. 17, 1867.
Special Orders No. 141. [Extract.]

1. Brevet Major General J. J. Reynolds, colonel twenty-sixth United States infantry, having been assigned to duty according to his brevet rank, and appointed assistant commissioner of the bureau of refugees, freedmen, and abandoned lands, of the state of Texas, is hereby appointed to the command of the district of Texas. He will proceed immediately to San Antonio or Austin, Texas, as he may elect, and establish his headquarters, temporarily. He will establish them, permanently, at Galveston as soon as the yellow fever shall have abated at that place so far as to render it safe to do so.

By command of Brevet Major General Joseph A. Mower.
GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Brevet Brigadier General R. S. Mackenzie, colonel forty-first United States infantry, has been assigned to the command of the sub-district of the Rio Grande.

Brevet Major General A. Doubleday, lieutenant colonel seventeenth United States infantry, is to assume charge of the books and records of the office of assistant commissioner of the bureau of refugees, freedmen, and abandoned lands, and commander of the district of Texas, until relieved or otherwise ordered by Brevet Major General Reynolds.

Circular Letter from General Grant.

General Hartsuff is in receipt of a letter from General Grant, under date of 9th inst., asking for a report of all operations in this department for the year ending the 30th instant.

It is probable a similar letter has been sent to each department commander, for the purpose of getting full information from the whole United States army, to be embraced in his annual report accompanying the president's message on the opening of the congressional session.

Health of the Troops.

There were but three deaths among the U. S. forces here Wednesday—two soldiers and a landsman from the iron-clads—all at Greenville hospital. No deaths or new cases at the barracks, and but one new case at cavalry headquarters and one at the military prison—sent to hospital. One clerk taken sick at headquarters. There were in all nine soldiers entered Greenville hospital

The New Amnesty.

A person who was excepted from amnesty by the president's proclamation of May 29, 1865, but included in that of the 7th of this month, and who had never received a special pardon, has appeared before United States Commissioner Urban, at the United States court, and accepted the amnesty now granted, by taking the necessary oath.

Accident to the Robt. E. Lee.—We copy the following from the St. Louis Republican of the 8th inst.:

The accident to the steamer Robert E. Lee is not so serious as was first reported. Word was given, and the stern went off all right; but from some cause the forward truck refused to work. The workmen are busily engaged, and hopes are entertained that the boat will be all right in a short time.

From a telegram from Captain Cannon to Captain J. M. White, of the Grey Eagle, received yesterday, we learn the gratifying intelligence that the Lee had been successfully launched from the ways at Mound city.

Half-Mast.—The stars and stripes at all the headquarters were at half-mast yesterday in respect for the memory of General Charles Griffin, who died Monday at Galveston, Texas.

Captain Henrick has handed us a list of persons who have died of yellow fever at Hempstead up to eight o'clock yesterday morning. He says help can hardly be obtained to bury the dead, so great is their horror and dread of the disease. He also says that it prevails at Chappell hill, and that five persons died of it at Brenham day before yesterday.—Houston Telegraph, 15th.

General Hancock.—The Army and Navy Journal says: "We are desired to correct the report that Major General Hancock has applied for a delay in reporting at New Orleans. No such application has been made by General Hancock, who, we are informed by a dispatch from Fort Leavenworth of the 10th instant, expected to leave that place in two or three days from the above date."

A Fight in the Workhouse.

One of our reporters visited the workhouse this morning just in time to witness a desperate fight between two of the prisoners in one of the large cells, where as many as forty were enjoying their "otium cum dignitate."

The man who got the worst of it was a new comer, and the alleged cause of the fight against him was that he had appropriated more than his share of the bread rations.

One of the older occupants of the cell, a young, vigorous, powerful, athletic fellow, got his adversary in chancery, and was punishing him according to the most scientific rules of the prize ring, the other prisoners urging him to "give him —," to "break his — neck," "kill the thief," when suddenly, as our reporter was witnessing the fight through a window from the yard, inside spectators cried out, "Hold on!" "That's enough!" and an officer appeared at the door of the cell. Hostilities were immediately suspended, quiet was resumed, and the "cruel war over."

The victor was then marched out of the cell, across the yard, into the "pickery," where the "stocks" are prepared for refractory prisoners.

A colored employe raised the upper part of the machine, leaving a half circle for the limbs of the culprit, the prisoner was ordered to stand on his hands, first one leg was put into the groove, then the other, the machine was let into its place, and the prize-fighter was fixed in the stocks, where he had an opportunity to ruminate on the uncertainties of victory. Street Commissioner Baker also witnessed the fight in the cell, and the officer who appeared at the door saw the first part of it from the yard. It was conducted according to the highest rules of the ring. It would be well if other victors in prize fights tried the "stocks" after the fight. The example at the workhouse is worthy of commendation.

Attempted Escape from the Workhouse

In cells Nos. 1 and two of the city workhouse forty prisoners are lodged. They made a desperate attempt Friday night to escape. By some means they were provided with augers to bore through the partition separating the cells, and succeeded in making a passage at the bottom of the partition so that the occupants of No. 1 could crawl through into cell No. 2.

By similar means the occupants of cell No. 2 bored through the wooden wall, which is about a foot in thickness and opens into the yard, and made a hole some twenty inches squarc.

Through this aperture two of the prisoners made their escape into the yard, but instead of falling upon the ground and "lying low," they exposed themselves to the officers, and thus the scheme to escape was frustrated.

The prisoners in cell No. 2 had ripped up the flooring in order to find other means of escape.

Many of them had armed themselves with handles of the hammers used in breaking stones, and it enough of them had got into the yard the officers would have had no show for their arrest.

The wooden walls of these cells offer but feeble resistance to some of the accomplished rascals sentenced to the workhouse by the recorders' courts, but what these walls lack in security the officers of that institution fortunately make up in vigilance.

Since it is perfectly healthy in the workhouse and there is no sickness within its inclosure, it is almost astonishing that any of the inmates should attempt to escape into the wilderness of the city where they would be exposed to yellow fever and other diseases.

Third District Recorder's Court.

The following parties were arraigned before Recorder J. A. Letten yesterday:

Frank Adolph, charged by J. Hussy with larceny; A. Alvarez, by B. Wilinyer with burglary, were each remanded to the parish prison to await their trial before the first district court as charged.

Martha, charged by Mr. J. Landry with insanity, was sent to the Insane asylum.

Johnny Joseph, charged by Captain Robinson, of ship Pennsylvania, with leaving the same without orders, was discharged.

J. Blanchard and Henry E. Galway, charged by H. Doane with interfering in his duties as goat driver, and Fred Seymour, charged by Tom Cunningham with assault and wounding him, were all continued on bail for trial.

The immortal Happy Jack, arrested by Officer Reagan on Levee street for lying drunk on the banquette, was fined $5 or five days parish prison.

Thomas O'Neil, George H. Davidson, and George Burr, arrested by Officer Reagan on the levee, the former for being dead drunk and lying on the banquette, the two latter for fighting and disturbing the public peace, were all fined $10 each or ten days parish prison.

A Military Funeral.

Yesterday afternoon the remains of an army officer passed along Canal street on the way to the "city of the dead," under military escort, consisting of the detachment of the United States infantry. That officer was Lieutenant Cornelius, of the veteran reserve corps, whose duties lately have been connected with the freedmen's bureau in this military district. The deceased was highly esteemed by his comrades in the service, and was both a meritorious citizen and faithful officer. The prevailing expidemic was the disease from he died.

Death of an Officer.

Lieutenant Benjamin Abrahams, thirty-ninth United States infantry, died at Sedgwick barracks, Greeuville, at four P. M. yesterday. This officer was attacked about the 25th of August with a severe case of yellow fever, but through the skillful treatment of Surgeon Drol, was brought safely through, and until a few days since was thought to be out of danger. On Sunday, however, he suffered a relapse, from which he did not rally. Lieutenant Abrahams received his appointment in the thirty-ninth infantry on account of meritorious service in the field during the war. He served in east Tennessee upon the staff of General Burnside, and afterward in Virginia. At the end of the war he was appointed assistant paymaster in the navy; but preferring the army, resigned to accept the appointment which he held at the time of his death. Lieutenant Abrahams was an excellent young officer, greatly respected and beloved by his associates, who deeply lament his loss. He leaves a wife and one child.

To Housekeepers—Prepare for Inspection.

Your attention is called to the following resolution presented by Alderman Clay and adopted by the board of aldermen last evening:

Resolved, That the special officers of the mayor and those of the chief of police, and the police in general, be and they are hereby ordered to examine and inspect all yards, hotels, etc., and report to the mayor daily where disinfecting agents may be required, according to existing ordinances.

Another Policeman Dead.

Policeman John Sheedy, No. 373, of the third district police, died at his residence No. 123 St. Joseph street on the 16th instant.

Purifying the Atmosphere.

Tuesday, during the thunder storm, the expression mournfully came from the lips of many that it was bad weather for yellow fever patients. To-day we heard devout men express their gratitude to the Almighty that he sent the thunder storm to purify the atmosphere and relieve our suffering city from the ravages of the epidemic.

The School Board Suit.

The case between the old and new school boards was submitted yesterday morning without argument, and taken under advisement by Judge Duplantier, of the sixth district court.

Travel Discontinued.

We learn that for some days the usual travel on the shell roads to the Half-way house has been entirely suspended, owing to the numerous processions of mourners to the cemeteries. There has scarcely been an arrival at the above named place during the past week. Those who seek recreation in riding prefer some other route.

Suicide.

A man named Robert Yorston, residing at the corner of Spain and Victory streets, committed suicide about seven o'clock last evening by cutting his throat with a carving knife. He died in about an hour. He was confined to his bed at the time with billious fever.

Taken to Charity Hospital.

John Gillerez, found lying sick and destitute on St. Charles street, was taken to Charity hospital yesterday morning by Officer Taylor.

Coroner's Inquests.

An inquest was held on the body of an unknown white man found drowned at the Canal street ferry, age about thirty-five years, light hair, black sack coat, and pants. An inquest was also held on the body of Antonio Bertoli, of Italy, sixteen years of age, found dead at No. 76 Franklin street, of yellow fever.

Sent to the Marine Hospital.

Rofa, a colored woman, was sent to the freedmen's hospital, found by policeman R. Guethlin at the corner of Orleans and Dauphine streets in a sick and destitute condition.

Sent to the Workhouse.

Jenny Edwards, arrested on Franklin street, drunk, was sent by Recorder Gastinel to the workhouse for ninety days; Jackson Murray, colored, arrested on Treme street, for larceny, thirty days workhouse; Mary Ann Harrison, arrested in the Treme market, drunk and disturbing the peace, ninety days workhouse.

Yellow Fever at Bay St. Louis.

There were Tuesday, we are informed, five deaths by yellow fever at Bay St. Louis.

The Howard Association.

The Howard association is now in good working condition, and they are doing much toward relieving the suffering and sickness from yellow fever.

The applications to that association on Tuesday for assistance were greater than any other day this season. The excellent nursing which they secure for patients diminishes the degree of fatality.

Emigrating to California.

[From the Nation.]

There appears to be an emigrational movement from some of the more southern states into Maryland. It is an accession which, in its influence on politics, is likely to be welcome to the reactionists who already control the state. A writer in the Louisville Journal invites a similar emigration, not to Kentucky, nor yet to Brazil, but to California. In that land he himself sought refuge after serving in the confederate army, and the "situation" of the south seems to him to resolve itself into a general "sauve qui peut." The first attraction of the Pacific coast is, that "the negro is not there;" the second, that 'it will produce more breadstuffs, wine, brandy, and whisky than any state in the Union, and there is no reason why its liquors should not be the best of their kind." Except for the absence of the negro, this should be the paradise of the Democracy. But perhaps Mr. Nasby could make shift with the Chinaman, who "refuses suffrage and office." At all events, let it not be written for nothing that "a few thousand conservative (ex-rebel) emigrants can fix the political status in California on a solid basis." This is an end worthy the toil of escaping from military despotism. We are not sanguine, however, of the result. In the early settlement of California the experiment was tried. The south was nearer that territory than the north, and the roughest elements of the Democratic party joined her chivalry in the quest for gold. Brutality, crime, violence, lawlessness grew, held sway for several years, culminated, and then succumbed, while California rose as a free state. It is too late to reverse this decision; and the only good to be accomplished now by an exodus thither from the south is to make room for honester, more industrious, and more loyal citizens, and to facilitate reconstruction.

BE KIND TO THE INSANE.—General Mower to-day issued the following order:

Private Charles H. Waitz, of light battery K, first United States artillery, having been reported by the medical officer at Jackson barracks as insane, he will be sent without delay to the United States Insane asylum at Washington, D. C., and delivered to the officer in charge.

Hospital Steward Francis Baker, U. S. army, and Private Jeremiah Gormerly, company I, first infantry, are hereby detailed to take charge of Private Waitz and conduct him to the asylum. Upon the completion of that duty, Hospital Steward Baker will return to his post, and Private Gormerly is authorized to apply to the secretary of war for a furlough of thirty days on account of ill health.

The quartermaster's department will furnish the necessary transportation, and the commissary department will commute the rations of the above-named enlisted men for the period required to perform the journey.

CONVENIENT.—A late Montana Post represents the discovery of a small salt water lake above the head waters of the Yellowstone. The water continues at boiling temperature. Fresh antelope meat is thrown in and boiled in less than forty minutes.

NEBRASKA REPUBLICANS.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of Republicans was held in the courthouse on the evening of the 3d instant, in support of the registration law, which the Democrats bitterly oppose.

RAIL VS. RIVER.—The Memphis and Ohio railroad is competing with boats, carrying cotton through to Louisville at one dollar a bale.

A negro woman who was sold and separated from her husband twenty-three years ago, met him in the street in Louisville on Monday. They had a grand time over the reunion.

General News.

DEATH OF MAJOR GENERAL GRIFFIN.

MAJOR GENERAL MOWER IN COMMAND.

By a dispatch from General Doubleday to General Hartsuff, Sunday evening, intelligence was received of the death of General Griffin, who was temporarily in command of the fifth military district. General Doubleday sent the information to General Hartsuff, not knowing probably who was next in command. General Hartsuff immediately telegraphed the news to Washington for instructions, and this morning informed Major General Mower officially of the fact, the command devolving upon General Mower by seniority of rank. He will probably issue an order assuming command to-day.

The telegram was incorrect in stating that General Doubleday is ranking officer. He is only the highest in rank at Galveston, while there are several in Texas, among them Generals Reynolds, Oaks, Hatch, and McKenzie outranking him. He is, however, promoted to a colonelcy by the death of General Griffin.

Major General Griffin, whose sudden decease the Unionists of the fifth military district, and particularly those in the chaotic state of Texas, are called to mourn, was a native of Ohio, and appointed to the military academy from the same state, from which he graduated in 1847.

He entered the army as lieutenant of artillery, and the close of the war found him a captain of the fifth artillery. When the army was reorganized, he was made colonel of the thirty-fifth infantry, which regiment is now in Texas. He was brevetted major general in the regular army, and had been assigned to duty by the president according to his brevet rank. He served in the army of the Potomac during the war in command of a division in the fifth army corps, and when General Warren was relieved at the battle of Five Forks, General Griffin commanded the corps himself.

Major Gen. Joseph A. Mower, who succeeds to the command of the fifth military district, is a native of Woodstock, Vt. He was appointed to the first infantry in 1855, in which he remained until the close of the war, he being captain in the same, and colonel of the thirty-ninth infantry after the reorganization. He became major general of volunteers, and commanded the twentieth army corps at the close of the war.

No one fought with greater bravery than he, and no one is more distinguished by gallantry and courtesy than is Major General Mower. Though recently suffering from an attack of yellow fever, we are happy to say he is at present in good health and able to discharge the heavy duties devolving upon him.

Since writing the above our special correspondent, Payson, telegraphs from Washington that General Mower is assigned to the command of the fifth district for the present; and General J. J. Reynolds, who is now in Texas, and a ranking officer, to command at Galveston in the place of General Griffin.

Major General Reynolds will be recollected as commanding the defences of New Orleans during the war, and afterwards commanding the nineteenth army corps in the battles of Virginia. He is a native of Kentucky, and was appointed from Indiana.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT

THE T. J. EMERY SNAGGED AND SUNK.

SAFETY OF THE PASSENGERS.

We learn from one of the passengers by the Lafourche packet T. J. Emery, Captain King, that at about half-past twelve o'clock on the night of the 13th instant, when at a point on the Bayou Lafourche near Lockport, the boat struck a snag, which damaged her so badly that she sunk in about five minutes, in four feet of water.

The captain promptly made all efforts to save the cargo, which consisted mostly of barrels, with some boxes and a few hogsheads. When the boat went down she capsized, which caused one of the lamps to explode and set the cabin on fire. The mate, however, under the directions of Captain King, promptly extinguished the flames before much damage was done by burning. A number of flats near at hand were set to work saving cargo, and a large amount of barrels, boxes, hogsheads, etc., was finally secured.

There were some six or eight passengers on board at the time of the accident, including one lady, who were fortunately saved, although in several instances there were narrow escapes. All the papers of the steamer were saved.

Captain King and the mate deserve credit for the presence of mind displayed in saving passengers and cargo.

DEATHS FROM YELLOW FEVER.

Captain C. B. Chittenden.

We are called upon to announce that Captain C. B. Chittenden, late assistant quartermaster of the United States volunteers, has fallen a victim to the epidemic that is now afflicting this city. We learn that the attack was an unusually severe one, and that no favorable symptoms were developed during his very brief illness.

Captain Chittenden was born in the town of Stockton, New York, in the year 1836, and was, therefore, at the time of his death thirty-one years of age. He came to this city in General Banks' expedition, which arrived here on the 15th of December, 1862. At that time he was lieutenant in one of the companies of the one hundred and twenty-eighth New York volunteers, Col. Cowles' regiment. He was subsequently promoted to the rank of captain and assistant quartermaster, United States volunteers. He served for some time as chief quartermaster of the cavalry bureau in the department of the gulf, and afterward with distinction in the field as chief quartermaster of the cavalry division of the nineteenth army corps. When this corps was sent to the valley of the Shenandoah to reinforce Sheridan, Captain Chittenden was appointed disbursing officer of the quartermaster's department in this city, and won an enviable reputation for efficiency and integrity. In recognition of his services the war department conferred upon him the brevet ranks of major and lieutenant-colonel. But it is as captain that he was best known in this city, and the name of Captain Chittenden will be long remembered here as the synonym of official courtesy and the strictest honor. All who came in contact with him recognized in him a gentleman of high tone and upright and genial bearing.

On leaving the service of his country he went into business in this city, where success would surely have awaited him but for his untimely decease.

The funeral will take place this morning at eight o'clock from his late residence in Rickerville.

Colonel George Welling.

Of the firm of J. M. Winslow & Co., died of yellow fever about ten o'clock yesterday morning. He had been sick only since Saturday afternoon. Colonel Welling was a native of Louisville, Kentucky, was aged forty-six years, and had been in the city but eighteen months. His wife is also sick with intermittent fever. Colonel Welling was a member of Post 1, District 2, of the G. A. R., and will be buried at ten o'clock this morning from 90 Rampart street.

Colonel Welling, commanded in the war the fourth Kentucky cavalry, and was a gallant officer.

E. W. Sherbourne.

We regret to see the name of E. W. Sherbourne, special agent of the treasury department, among the list of deaths by yellow fever. We heretofore announced his having taken sick on the 10th instant.

He died on the 16th, and will be buried in the Girod (Protestant) cemetery at five P. M. His family and the secretary of the treasury were informed of the decease.

BY TELEGRAPH.

Ravages of the Fever in Texas.

HOUSTON, September 15.—Yellow fever is very prevalent here; at least a thousand cases in town; deaths, ten to fifteen per day. Yesterday Mr. Bowsel, deputy postmaster, and Captain Wallace, assessor and collector, late of United States army, died. The Reverend Mr. Reese and Dr. M. Cocey have died. The Firemen's charitable association provide the destitute with nurses and physicians at an expense of over two hundred dollars per day.

Yellow fever is very fatal in Hempstead, Navasota, Millican, Bryan, Chappell Hill, Brenham, Lagrange, Huntsville, and Alleyton. The charitable association of Houston are extending all the aid in their power to these towns. They require money, physicians, and nurses to send them. Colonel O'Connell, commander of this post, and family are all sick of the prevailing epidemic—all promise to recover.

General Griffin's order removing the judges of the supreme court in this state, and appointing others, has been revoked.

The heaviest cotton counties of the state will not make a bale to fifty acres. The cotton crop will turn out about one fourth to one third of a crop for the whole state, and will not reach above fifty or sixty thousand bales for gulf shipments. The yield of corn is ample, and in some counties enormous.

Death of General Griffin.

GALVESTON, September 15.—General Griffin died at 11 A. M. to-day. Major General Doubleday is ranking officer. Interments seventeen.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, September 15.—Negroes vote for the first time in this state to-morrow, when the citizens of Richmond vote on the subscription of two millions of dollars to the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. Colonel Mallory, of the freedmen's bureau, has returned from an investigation of the recent riot at Farmville. He reports the same facts as sent to the press.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, September 16.—General Spinner has withdrawn the surplus government funds from Mobile.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $526,000.

The land office commissioner has received specimens of rock crystal from Arkansas, sufficiently clear for lenses and equal to any imported.

General Sickles has been ordered to report at headquarters between the 17th and 20th instant.

The report of the house judiciary committee on the impeachment question is now being printed at the government printing office. The pressmen have all been sworn to secrecy.

The commissioners of the Antietam monument to-day accepted the design of J. G. Batterson, of Hartford, for a colossal statue and pedestal. Cost $30,000.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, September 16.—General Schofield to-day issued an order for an election for a state convention on the 22d of October. There will be one hundred and five delegates, of whom Richmond sends five and Norfolk and Petersburg two each.

Fourteen days previous to the election boards of registration will make a final revision of their lists.

In Richmond the polls will be kept open two days.

Colonel Burnham, detailed as judge of the hustings court, charged the grand jury this morning. He said no distinction on account of color or caste would be allowed in the court.

General Schofield issued an order this morning that registered voters and none others should vote on the city subscription to the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad.

The subscription of $2,000,000 to the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad was carried by 2000 majority. The negroes voted for it en masse. Its opponents intend contesting the legality of the election on the ground that negroes under the supplemental reconstruction bill have no right to vote except in case of election for office; also, that registration is not complete until final revision of the lists, therefore the negroes to-day were not registered voters.

From New York—News from Europe.

NEW YORK, September 16.—The bank statement shows an increase in loans of $3,936,000, specie $1,017,000, circulation increased $307,000, deposits decreased $2,097,000, legal tenders decreased $4,480,000.

Steamer City of London brings European dates to 5th. The daily News admits that England is liable for a million and a quarter on the Alabama claims, but says that British citizens have large claims against the United States.

The British government has taken six steamers from the New York lines for the Abyssinian expedition.

It is thought that Bismarck will soon do something to make the emperors of France and Austria show their hands. It is also said that Prussia promises to assist Italy if she makes the French position in papal affairs a casus belli.

The south German states show a strong disposition to secure a temporary severance from the rest of Germany.

Dr Harris, the register of the board of health, has written a long report of the condition of the patients suffering from yellow fever in the south. The report was compiled at the suggestion of the committee of physicians appointed last week to aid the sufferers by funds and medicines.

A special Omaha dispatch says the nortern hostile Indians have refused to meet the commission, unless they agree to withdraw all the troops from Powder river country.

WASHINGTON, September 17, 1867.

The city to-day is very dull. The reporters and correspondents in "newspaper row" are enjoying a day of leisure. There are no items of importance to be obtained, as most of the government officials, including the president, the secretaries of the treasury, the navy, and state, the postmaster general, and many members of the diplomatic corps—whose offices I visited in search of news—have gone to Antietam.

The arrangements made for the proper dedication of the National cemetery on the Antietam battle field have been of the most extensive order. Many men of prominence from all the neighboring states have signified their intention to be present, and no efforts have been spared to render the ceremonies impressive.

General Grant declines to recommend that the case of General Fitz John Porter be reopened and a new trial granted. He thinks a petition for relief should be presented to congress. It is supposed, however, that the president will order a rehearing in spite of Grant.

Sheridan was at St. Louis to-day, en route for Washington.

Reports from the eastern states represent the chances of Chase for the Republican nomination for next president as brightening. PAYSON.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, September 17.—The attendance at Antietam is estimated at 14,000. The governors of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maine, West Virginia, and Maryland were present. Ex-Governor Bradford was the orator of the day; his address concludes: "Con e peril to it, (the constitution) whence it may, from state rights, or consolidation, let me on the anniversary of its adoption, in the name of the men who made it, by the memory of the men who have died for it, upon this spot where blood has been so profusely shed in its behalf, appeal to you to protect, preserve, and defend it."

General Mulford, commissioner of exchange during the rebellion, is appointed collector of the third revenue district of Virginia.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $256,000.

General Hancock will soon proceed to his department, making his headquarters at some healthy locality.

General Sheridan is expected here shortly.

Cornelius Cahill is strongly recommended but not yet appointed collector at Corpus Christi.

The commissioner of internal revenue has recently rendered the following decision: A printer is liable to the special tax as a manufacturer, if the articles he prints exceed in volume when printed $1000 per annum. A printer is understood to be any person or firm whose business it is to take impressions from type or engraved figures upon paper or other material.

In determining the liability of printers to the special tax as manufacturers, the value of the articles of merchandise produced by them should alone be taken into consideration. Amounts received for inserting advertisements in newspapers are not therefore to be so included.

Pressing duties prevented Grant's visiting Antietam.

A Herald's special says: In view of anticipated trouble with the president there is a manifest disposition upon the part of the Radicals to cultivate Grant.

Secretary Seward goes home from Antietam.

After the regular programme at Antietam the president responded to persistent calls, as follows:

MY FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: In appearing before you it is not for the purpose of making any lengthy remarks, but simply to express my approbation of the ceremonies which have taken place to-day. My appearance on this occasion will be the speech that I will make; my reflections and my meditations will be in silent communion with the dead whose deeds we are here to commemorate. I shall not attempt to give utterance to the feelings and emotions inspired by the addresses and prayers which have been made, and the hymns which have been sung. I shall attempt no such thing. I am merely here to give my countenance and aid to the ceremonies on this occasion, but I must be permitted to express my hope, that we may follow the example which has been so eloquently alluded to this afternoon, and which has been so clearly set by the illustrious dead. When we look on yon battle-field and think of the brave men on both sides who fell in the fierce struggle, and who sleep silent in their graves, yes, who sleep in silence and peace after the earnest conflict has ceased, would to God we of the living could imitate their example as they lie sleeping in peace in their tombs, and live together in friendship and peace. (Applause.) You, my fellow citizens, have my earnest wishes, as you have had my efforts in times gone by, in the earliest and most trying perils, to preserve the Union of these states, to restore peace and harmony to our distracted and divided country, and you shall have my best efforts in vindication of the flag of the republic and of the constitution of our fathers." (Applause.)

The benediction was then pronounced, when the president, cabinet officers, Governor Swann, and others left the platform.

WASHINGTON, September 18, 1867.

It appears probable that President Johnson will now keep quiet until after the Pennsylvania

NEVER SAY FAIL.

Keep pushing, 'tis wiser
Than sitting aside,
And dreaming, and sighing,
And waiting the tide.
In life's earnest battle,
They only prevail,
Who daily march onward,
And never say fail!

With an eye ever open,
And a tongue that's not dumb,
And a heart that will never
To sorrow succumb.
You will battle and conquer,
Though thousands assail,
How strong and how mighty
Who never say fail!

Ahead, then, keep pushing,
And elbow your way,
Unheeding the envious
That would you betray.
All obstacles vanish,
All enemies quail,
At the might of their wisdom
Who never say fail!

In life's rosy morning,
In manhood's firm pride,
Let this be your motto,
Your footsteps to guide.
In storm and in sunshine,
Whatever assail,
We'll onward, and conquer,
And never say fail!

TREATMENT OF YELLOW FEVER.

We find in the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal a paper on the treatment of yellow fever cases by Dr. Francis Barnes, city physician for the first and fourth districts of New Orleans. Dr. Barnes has had many years' experience in the treatment of the fever, and as his views are considered worthy of publicity by the editors of the Medical Journal, who are among the best physicians of Louisiana, and all members of the faculty of the university, we republish them as a general guide to practitioners and the friends of patients:

I beg to be indulged while making a few suggestions in regard to the treatment of yellow fever. The alteration in the blood which takes place generally in this disease is a feature in its pathology which deserves most careful study.

The mutation of the tissues, secretions, and excretions is influenced in this disease in a remarkable manner by the condition of the blood. There is a period of variable duration in which the fluid is preserved in a normal or nearly normal condition. During this period remedies may be used and certain therapeutical effects ordinarily observed as their action may be expected to follow. During the first period of the disease blood-letting freely, tartar emetic, calomel, quinine, sulphuric ether, etc., have been used, and their champions assert with great benefit. But in the calm stage or when the hemorrhagic phase is reached it is difficult to foretell what will occur from the administration of any remedy. I knew a physician who, in Vera Cruz, in 1847, gave a great number of his patients sulphuric ether to relieve hiccoughs. So many died that he was afraid to administer that usually harmless remedy. I have known a dose of eight grains of blue mass given in one case on the fifth, the other on the eleventh day, cause death by profuse hemorrhagic stools; consequently, being in doubt as to the propriety of medication in the middle and last stages of yellow fever, we should be cautious how we use any, confining our active interference with the disease to the first stage, and applying depletion and antiphlogistic measures to such cases as call for them only with a view of preparing them for the second and last. Local congestions in the first febrile paroxysm should always be relieved with cups or leeches, the bowels well cleared out with castor oil or an injection, and perspiration encouraged to a moderate extent by the use of appropriate means. But the most important suggestion I have to make is that in relation to diet. Any one who studies the disease closely will be led to infer from observation that in all bad cases during a certain number of days, say from five to seven after the febrile paroxysm has passed, the stomach, although acid, does not secrete any true gastric juice, and pepsin is almost entirely absent. Now, when it is remembered how close a sympathy from nervous anastomoses there is between the brain and the stomach, we can understand how, in the peculiar condition the nervous system is in yellow fever, a patient can be thrown into a delirium or coma by a small error in diet. The Duke of Wellington died of apoplexy by overloading his stomach with venison which he could not digest; and how many such cases can nearly every physician number, when apoplexy has followed an imprudent meal. In cholera infantum we know that the infant stomach has lost its power of digesting from an irritation of the dental nerves transmitted by anatomosis to the nerves of that organ, and how commonly are convulsions and cerebral symptoms manifested; doubtless the result of indigestion. Last summer I lost two patients who had reacted thoroughly from cholera, and were passing through the typhoid fever which frequently follows the collapsed condition. One died on the sixth day of her disease, first delirious, then comatose, from a small quantity of milk punch, the casein of which she could not digest. As long as she was kept on beef-tea injections, with a little brandy, and allowed only mucilages and iced drinks by the stomach, she did well. The other case had been in collapse fifty-six hours before she reacted. During the fever which followed she vomited great quantities of bile. On the night before her death she slept soundly all night, awoke refreshed, and said she was hungry. She called for a soft boiled egg with some tea and toast, which she ate with great relish. In three hours after that meal she became delirious, and in six hours she died in profound coma, the whole surface livid from congestion and stagnation of the capillary circulation. This death occurred on the eleventh day of the disease. The lesson to be drawn from the observation of these facts is, to put on the stomachs of yellow fever patients, during the doubtful period, when the absence of pepsin is to be inferred from the condition of the patients, no aliment which requires any assistance in entering the circulation besides the force of endosmosis, and give your soups and broths and stimulants by the rectum, whose sympathetic nerves do not have that property of producing cerebral complications. A good rule is to allow the patient moderate quantities of iced mucilages, and to give one cupful of beef tea with or without one, two, or three teaspoonfuls of brandy, by enema, every three or four hours.

The Rulers of Mexico.

To give an idea of the number and variety of dynasties which have followed one another in rapid succession during the tumultuous epochs of the past forty-five years in Mexico, we append the following list of rulers in that country since the time of its independence in the year 1821:

1821. Iturbide, general-in-chief.
1822. Iturbide, emperor.
1823. Generals Bravo, Guerrero and Negrete, dictators.
1824. General Victoria, president.
1827. General Pedrara, president.
1829. Guerrero, dictator.
1830. Bustamente, president.
1832. Pedrazza, president.
1835. Santa Anna, president.
1837. Bustamente, president.
1840. General Farious, president.
1841. Bustamente, president.
1842. Santa Anna, president.
1843. Retirement of Santa Anna; successor not known.
1844. Santa Anna, dictator.
1845. General Cayalyo, president.
1847. Jose Justo Caro, president.
1847. Paredes, president.
1848. Santa Anna, president.
1849. Herrera, president.
1850. Arista, president.
1852. Juan Ceiallos, president.
1853. Manuel Lembardini, president.
1853. Santa Anna, president, April 20.
1853. Santa Anna, dictator, December 20.
1855. Alvarez, dictator.
1856. Comonfort, president.
1858. Miramon, vice-president.
1859. Znoloaga, president.
1860. Miramon, president.
1861. Juarez, president.
1864. Maximilian, emperor, and Juarez president.
1867. Maximilian fallen, and Juarez president.

A Touching Incident of the War.

I remember an old lady in Illinois, how she gave all she had to the cause of the nation. When the call for troops came in 1861, when Massachusetts blood had made red the pavements of Baltimore, when everybody in the west rose up to go, on the banks of the Mississippi there lived an old widow woman. Her husband was in his grave. She had but one child in the world, a noble boy, sixteen years of age. She took him from the plow and the harrow, and said to him. "You must go and fight for your country. This great river that flows by our farm must wash the shores of but one country on its pilgrimage to the sea."

The boy marched off to battle. He went with me through many a weary march, and bloody fight, and skirmish. He was a Christian boy, reared in the Sunday school, and he always carried his Bible with him.

In one of our engagements he was wounded, and the surgeon told him he would die. Charley said he would like to see his mother, but he hadn't money enough to send for her. The soldier boys of my escort—and generous souls they were—gathered around him and made up a purse and sent away out in the state of Illinois for his mother to come to see him. I remember when she presented herself at my headquarters, cheerful and happy, with a Bible and a Methodist hymn book in her satchel. I took her to the hospital. She took his hand, cheerfully thanking God that she saw him alive, and there she sat, day after day, watching all the child she had in the world—watching for him to die.

As I passed through that hospital one morning, looking at the cot of Charley, I saw the death damp on his brow; his eye was dim, his pulse was getting slow. I took him by the hand, and said, "How is it this morning?"

"General," said he, "I feel I am going to the front;" and his eye brightened. His mother stood by him, singing,

Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are.
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there.

She gave up her boy as cheerfully as you would give a dollar. We buried him in the swamp. She went to his funeral, and thanked God she had a son to give to the nation.

Such graves are scattered all over the country. They appeal to us to-day that we shall not let this government of the people, for the people, and by the people perish from the earth.

On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouacs of the dead.

GENERAL C. B. FISK.

The Decay of the Cherokees.

From the Moravian we gather the following interesting items about the Cherokee Indians:

The tribe numbers 14,000. The females outnumber the males more than 1800. Ten years ago the tribe numbered 25,000, but the ravages of war, the exposure of the refugees in northern climates when they were driven out from their homes during the rebellion, and other causes, have operated to produce this wonderful diminution of numbers. The Cherokees now own in fee simple about 4,000,000 acres of land, and the United States government holds in trust for them $1,000,000. The Cherokees are the most enlightened tribe of Indians in the west. They have made most commendable progress in civilization. Many of them are finely educated, and are men of culture and refinement. Before the war they had a number of good schools and academies, and the children of the more intelligent and wealthy were educated in eastern colleges. They have a legislative form of government, with a senate and house of assembly; a governor and head chief, elected by the people; courts and justice officers. Their country is divided into different counties. They held slaves, but in our western provincialism, that is "played out." Their former slaves are now treated with consideration and respect, and will soon become the principal men of the tribe, as they are industrious, and seem to have a greater desire to accumulate property than the native Indians. In proportion to their numbers, the Cherokees previous to the war were the wealthiest people on the face of the globe. They owned immense herds of cattle, horses, and hogs. Large shipments of cattle were annually made by them to New Orleans and other markets. One man owned 20,000 head of cattle, another 15,000. There were many that owned 10,000, 3000, 2000, 1000, and 500 head of cattle each.

Another Bank in Trouble.

The First National bank of Kingston, in this state, is in trouble owing to its president having appropriated more than $90,000 of its funds to his own uses. In consequence of this the drafts of the bank were refused payment by its correspondent in this city, the Fourth National. The capital of the bank was $200,000, and the amount said to be due to it by the president is $91,700. The latter has, however, it is reported, placed all his property at the disposal of the directors of the bank, by which it is expected the bank's loss will be greatly reduced. The frequency of such discoveries leads to the suspicion that the undiscovered instances of fraud among national bank officers are numerous, and it becomes very necessary that all the national banks should be periodically subjected to a searching examination, according to the provisions of the national currency act on the subject. One of the treasury examiners, Mr. Callender, is in charge of the bank at Kingston, and his report will determine its fate. It is due to the public that exposures of fraud and weakness, wherever found in national banks should be prompt and thorough; for the great mass of the people have an idea that because these institutions are called national, they are therefore safer places of deposit than private banks, whereas they are not so, except with regard to their circulation, which is secured by a deposit of government bonds at Washington. The small country banks should, in particular, be closely watched, as many of them were established merely to further the personal ends of speculators by strengthening their credit, and giving them the use of the bank deposits.—New York Herald.

GOOD TEMPER.—It is not within the domestic circle only that good temper should be exercised; it is an invaluable possession even amongst the most distant connections of social life. It is a passport with all into their esteem and affection. It gives a grace to the plainest countenance, and to the fairest is an ornament which neither time nor disease will destroy. Every day of life teems with circumstances by which it may be exercised and improved. Toward the husband, it is manifested by forbearance when he is irritated and vexed; and by soothing, comforting, and supporting him when under the pressure of deeper and more afflicting troubles. It is shown toward children and servants by willingness to promote their enjoyments, while superiority is mildly but steadily exerted to keep them in proper subjection. It is exhibited in every direction by unwillingness to offend; by not opposing our own opinions and pleasures to the prejudices of others; and it is above all demonstrated by the cheerful tenor of spirits that dwell within the well-governed mind, and renders it happy almost in spite of vexations and sorrows.

The concluding sentence of Fenelon's "Telemachus" is worth storing in our memory: "Above all things be on your guard against your temper. It is an enemy that will accompany you everywhere to the last hour of your life. If you listen to it, it will frustrate all your designs. It will make you lose the most important opportunities, and will inspire you with the inclination and aversion of a child, to the prejudice of your gravest interests. Temper causes the greatest affairs to be decided by the most paltry reasons; it obscures every talent, paralyzes every energy, and renders its victims unequal, weak, vile, unsupportable."

If one offend you, before answering, call to mind this golden sentence: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger," and you will save yourself hours of regret and repentance.

The late ex-Senator McDougal, of California, leaves a wife and two daughters, one a young lady, the other a child of seven years. His wife was the daughter of Murray McConnell, an eminent lawyer of Jacksonville, Ill.

The Chicago and Northwestern railroad is a good paying road. It is stated that it has 1200 miles of track, and that its earnings for the last fiscal year was $10,000,000; the net earnings being, after making all deductions for operating it, taxes, etc., $3,000,000.

Make Your Kitchens Pleasant.

The pride of any true housewife is her kitchen. It is fashionable for parlor and drawing-room and sitting-rooms to be neatly, tidily, tastefully furnished, arranged, and kept—therefore, there's no use of telling any one about the beautifying or ornamentation of them. But it is too sadly true, that oftentimes while the front picture—the parlor—is faultlessly elegant and every way attractive, the back ground—the kitchen—is a confoundedly slouchy, dismal, disagreeable place. Five minutes time, a little exercise of taste and good sense, and the mere use of what everybody can use will make a little paradise out of a gloomy-walled and unattractive kitchen, and save the expense of having a servant on especial duty to keep the kitchen door shut when you have company. What this work is and what the cheap ornaments are everybody knows without being told. We merely give directions for two very simple and pretty kitchen ornaments: Take a common tumbler, or a fruit can, fill it nearly full of soft water. Then tie a bit of coarse lace or cheese sacking over it, and press down into the water; cover it with a layer of pease. In a few days they will sprout, the little thread-like roots going down through the lace into the water, and the vines can be trained up on twine, or, what is prettier, a frame may be made for the purpose. The tumbler or jar should be set in a window where the sun shines. It requires no care, and you will have a delicate, pretty vine to rest your weary eyes upon.

You can make another pretty thing with as little trouble. Take a saucer and fill it with fresh green moss. Place in the centre a pine cone, having first wet it thoroughly. Then sprinkle it thoroughly with grass seed. The moisture will close the cone partially, and in a day or two the tiny grass spires will appear in all the interstices, and in a week you will have a perfect cone of beautiful verdure. It only wants a plentiful supply of water to be a "thing of beauty" all summer.—Des Moines Register.

The Printer.

The following beautiful tribute to the followers of the "stick and rule" is from the pen of B. F. Taylor, of the Chicago Evening Journal:

The printer is the adjutant of thought, and this explains the mystery of the wonderful word that can kindle a hope as no song can; that can warm a heart as no hope can; that word "we" with hand-in-hand warmth in it—for the author and the printers are engineers together—engineers indeed! When the Corsican bombarded Cadiz, at the distance of five miles, it was deemed the very triumph of engineering. But what is that range to this, whereby they bombard the ages yet to be?

There at the "case" he stands, marshals into line the forces armed with truth, clothed with immortality and English. And what can be nobler than the equipment of a thought in sterling Saxon—Saxon with a spear or shield therein, and that commissioning it when we are dead, to move gradually on to the "latest syllable of recorded time." This is to win a victory from death, for this has no dying in it.

The printer is called a laborer, and the office he performs is toil. Oh, it is not work, but a sublime life he is performing, when he thus sights the engine that is to fling a worded truth in grander curve than missile ever before described; fling it to the bosom of an age. He throws off his coat indeed, we but wonder the rather that he does not put his shoes from off his feet, for the place where he stands is holy ground.

A little song was uttered somewhere long ago; it wandered through the twilight feebler than a star; it died upon the ear. But the printer takes it up where it was lying there in the silence like a wounded bird, and he sends it forth from the ark that had preserved it, and it flies on into the future with words of peace, and around the world with melody, like the dawning of a spring morning.

The Home of Senator Pomeroy.

[Atchinson (Kan.) Correspondence Boston Traveller.]

It was on Tuesday afternoon when I called on the senator; it was not my first visit. Traveling bag in hand, I made my way to the house, a large stone structure, situated on the high prairie, commanding a view of one of the most fertile tracts of land in the wide world. I found the senator in the parlor, quite tired, he said, from plowing. Your readers will understand that he is quite as much at home following the plow as in the senate chamber. He takes as much pains in lapping his furrow as in starting the iron bands across the continent, and is in everything a practical man. His warning voice is heard and heeded on the western prairie as well as at Washington. To him, perhaps, more than any other man, Kansas is indebted for the proud position she occupies in the Union of states.

Before leaving this farm, let me say that could Kansas have a few more such men as Senator Pomeroy, a greater portion of her fifty millions of acres would be under cultivation. They want not only such men, but more such ladies as compose his household.

Specimens of Rebel Writing.

SAM. MCKEE COMMITTED SUICIDE.—Samuel McKee, radical ex-member of congress from Kentucky, committed suicide on the 26th of July last. So says an exchange paper before us; but we think there is some mistake about it. Samuel was living at our latest dates from Kentucky. True, he is too bad a man to live, and not good enough to die; and he is the last man to face death in any shape.—Hillsboro (O.) Gazette.

We regret to inform you, friend Pike, that your exchange was in error. Samuel still liveth. The devil isn't ready for him yet. Every furnace must be made white with heat to exterminate the negro stench that will be produced by Samuel, which is too intolerable for perdition under any ordinary circumstances.—Carlisle Mercury.

It Don't Pay.

Mr. Wicks, the gentleman who gave bonds together with the captain of the American bark Samuel Robertson, for bringing coolies into this country "contrary to the laws in such cases made and provided," called to inform us last evening that the said cargo of coolies, after getting a month's pay from Dr. Kittridge, on whose Tennessee plantation they were engaged, basely and ungratefully deserted, and are now in this city, at the corner of Hospital street, between Levee and Gallatin. Mr. Wicks thinks it a very bad speculation for all engaged, and will not embark in another of the same kind so long as there are six thousand able-bodied men already in New Orleans seeking official employment. He bids us warn others from contracting with these false men of the Orient.

Right Kind of Preaching.

Dr. Gilly related the following anecdote which was told by a well-known character, Thaddeus Conolly, who used to spend much of his time in wandering through Ireland, and instructing the lower classes in their native language. "I went," said he, "one Sabbath to a church to which a new incumbent had been appointed. The congregation did not exceed half a dozen, but the preacher delivered himself with as much energy and affection as if he were addressing a crowded audience. After the service I expressed to the clergyman my wonder that he should preach so fervently to so small a number of people. 'Were there but one,' said the rector, 'my anxiety for his improvement would make me equally energetic.'" The following year Conolly went into the same church; the congregation was multiplied twenty-fold; the third year he found the church full!

General Banks.

WASHINGTON, September 10.—General Banks had interviews with the president and Secretary Seward to-day. He was sent for by Mr. Seward to give his views on certain foreign matters now under consideration by the executive. It is understood that the president and Seward are preparing to make another purchase of foreign land, and that Banks was called on to advise. New York Tribune.

The President Backing Down.

Our Washington dispatches indicate that President Johnson is beginning to falter. His friends now state that he never intended to re-open the registry lists, and that the amnesty proclamation means nothing. It is very evident that the fear of impeachment has frightened him from issuing his orders to the district commanders; or it may be that he fears a collision with General Grant.—Chicago Republican.

Mrs. Stowe has already sent to the printer large installments of her new work, which is to be a sort of chronicle of old time folks in a New England village fifty or sixty years ago. Some of the characters are said to be as graphically depicted as those in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

A letter written to his mother by a little boy who is spending his vacation on the Penobscot bay:

Dear Mother—I am having a splendid time. Last Friday we went out after horse-mackerel. We got near to one, when Joe threw the harpoon at him. It struck him near the tail, and off he started, dragging the boat after him. Man never invented anything that could go as fast as we went then. We soon got him near the bow of the boat. We then killed him with a lance. He was nine feet long and five round. I had my pants washed for six cents when I got back. I read my bible every night before I go to bed, and every morning when I get up.

Your affectionate son, M. P. W.

Last summer a little boy, only five years old, invited me into the summer house to see his "Show." I paid a penny at the door, and gravely seated myself on a bench to wait for the performance to begin. There was a piece of twine stretched across the summer house, and Master Harry took his place beside it saying,

"These are my tame grasshoppers in this box, and I've teached 'em to walk on a tight rope; now you'll see."

He took a great, brown grasshopper from the box, placed him on the string, and, to my astonishment, he crawled slowly along it to the other side, and made no attempts to jump off. At last I solved the mystery, and found that his long legs had been removed, so of course he could do nothing but crawl.

"Why, Harry!" I exclaimed, "how could you be so cruel?"

"It didn't hurt him a bit, auntie," was his confident reply; "those great fings were just in his way, and he never could walk like folks."

"But it did hurt him, Harry," I explained; "his long legs were a part of his body, just as much as your legs are a part of you."

"Wasn't a speck of juice in 'em, anyway," persisted Harry, looking rather soberly at his tame grasshopper, "and I thought if it hurt him, he'd a said someting about it."

"A great many little insects have no power to cry when they are in pain, but they feel pain, just the same as others."

"Oh," said Harry, "he's deaf and dumb, ain't he? Well, I won't tame any more grasshoppers; but these two are spoilt already, and I guess we'll go on with the show."

BROKE HER PLEDGE.—In a certain "Ladies' Moral Reform society," existing not many miles from the bank of a certain river, the members were required to sign a pledge not to "set up," as it is termed, or do anything else that might be supposed, to have a tendency, however remote, to immortality. One evening as the president was calling over the names to know whether each member had kept her obligation, a beautiful and highly respectable lady burst into tears, and on being questioned as to the cause, said she feared she had broken her pledge.

"Why, what have you done?" asked the president.

"Oh?" sobbed the young lady, "Dr. —— kissed me the other night when he waited on me home from meeting."

"Oh, well, that is nothing very bad," said the president; "his kissing you does not make it that you have broken the pledge."

"Oh! that isn't the worst of it," exclaimed the conscientious young lady, "I kissed him back again."

INDIANS SUING FOR PEACE.—The Omaha Herald states that thirty lodges of Brule Sioux Indians, under chief Iron Shell, arrived at North Platte to-day, to place themselves under the protection of the government. They are from Red Cloud's camp, and say they have left the war path, and will remain friendly.

PEMBERTON'S
"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."
This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.
It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.
The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.
This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute
Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.
It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."
Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.
His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.
One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.
N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.
Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

SERMON,

BY REV. M. B. AVERY, (COLORED,)

Of Pass Christian.

Thou believest that there is one God; thou dost well:—The devils also believe, and tremble.—ST. JAMES, 2, 19.

Dearly beloved—The proofs of the being of a God strike with so bright an evidence upon the minds of men, that they are constrained to believe, and cannot deny their assent to this great important truth. But the corruption of nature prevails so far, and their affections cleave so fast to their vices, that they endeavor to persuade themselves that the bare belief of a God is sufficient for them; and desire to rest in the profession, without the practice of religion.

To prevent the fatal effects of this erroneous notion, the apostle St. James speaks against it with becoming warmth and earnestness of expression, and the utmost force of argument. He shows that faith without works is dead; entirely unprofitable, and ineffectual to salvation; and very far prefers the man who shows his faith by his works, before him who shows his faith "without works." And at length applying himself to the latter, he offers a dreadful, but certain and weighty truth to his consideration: "Thou believest that there is one God; thou dost well: the devils also believe and tremble." He commends him for believing; but tells him the devils do the same, and if it cannot avail for the abatement of the torments of hell, it can never avail for the attainment of the happiness of heaven.

That this powerful argument may make a due impression upon us, I shall, by the assistance of the holy spirit, show—First, that the bare belief of a God is ineffectual to salvation. And, secondly, that it will serve only to aggravate our guilt, and sharpen our punishment. And, first, it is ineffectual to salvation, because it is not properly a virtue. It rests in the mind without exerting itself, and lies dormant there without inclining the will to obey, or bringing the affections into subjection to God.

Mark the language of the text: Thou believest. As if the apostle had said, "Be thou either Jew or christian, thou believest that there is a God, and assentest to the articles of religion; herein thou doest well; but this is no more than what the devils do; for they also believe and tremble." Aye, well might they tremble! Sinner, would to God that you also would tremble, but differently; for if thou hast no better faith than they, thou hast the same reason to tremble which they have. The devils have it, yet they have no hopes of salvation, their doom is sealed, already sealed. They believe that there is a God, but not for them, and the more they know of him the more they dread him.

We may illustrate the weaknes and insufficiency of a bare belief of a God, by an obvious and plain instance. Should a subject acknowledge his sovereign to have a lawful and undoubted right to his crown, and declare it to be his constant opinion, and yet withhold his obedience from him, and refuse to make the due returns for protection, we should certainly and most reasonably think his demands unreasonable if he claimed a place of profit or honor, as a just reward of his vain acknowledgment and empty declaration. And we should think him yet more unreasonable if he not only neglected his service, but (like some of the people of the South) engaged in rebellion against him, and yet expected that owning of his title should be deemed an undeniable plea for pardon. And if the slight acknowledgment of an earthly sovereign falls short of duty to him, how much shorter must as slight an acknowledgment fall of our duty to the King of Heaven!

Moreover, the barren belief of a God is not a virtue, because we are almost compelled to believe that there is a God. To assent to a well attested truth is not a matter of choice, but rather a necessary operation of the mind. For truth is its natural object; and when it presents itself, supported by authentic testimony, as readily receives it as the eye does the light when it springs forth from its fountain.

We may indeed confine ourselves to a place of darkness, or shut our eyes that the light may not shine upon them; and we may be so perverse as to argue that there is no such thing as light, that it is only a pleasing vision, and exists only in the imagination. But, at the same time, we cannot but know that we obstinately confine ourselves, and suffer violence and torture, that we may not behold the light. And the same perverseness may tempt us to reject all the proofs of the being of a God, and guard every passage to our minds, that no argument may enter them. And whilst we suspend our reason, and disdain to hearken to the voices of our consciences and the reports even of our senses, we may insolently affirm that there is no God, and attempt to laugh away the belief of him. But still we know that we offer an unnatural violence to ourselves, and cannot withstand the proofs that surround us. For we live in the midst of them; they cry unto us whithersoever we go, and continually "put forth their voice:" they offer themselves to each of our senses, and "meet us in every thought."

If we consider the heavens, and the beatiful order of the moon and the stars, the "heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work"

If we could go down to hell, and view the prisoners that "are held in everlasting chains," the very devils there would tell us, that there is a God; for those accursed spirits "believe and tremble." If we could but draw aside the veil that hides from our view the "dwelling place of the most high," the far off home of Deity, and behold the millions and millions of glorified intelligencies standing round about the throne on high, and hear their voices as they cast their crowns at his feet, and cry "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of Sabaoth," or "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain," &c. (Surely this would be sufficient.) And if we should behold the dawning of the day it will proclaim this Being to us, "For the outgoings of the morning praise him." And when the darkness spreads itself over us, our own hearts assure us that "He maketh darkness, and it is night."

If we think upon the wonders of the great deep, they constrain us to acknowledge Him who "lifteth up the waves thereof, and who maketh the storm a calm."

The time would fail me, brethren, to speak of "the cattle upon a thousand hills"—armies of creatures, that move upon the face of the earth—the swarms of insects, and the seeds of plants, infinitely exceeds all the works of art, and sufficiently proves the wisdom, and power, and goodness of God. But were there no other creature but man, then he would himself prove a world of wonders, and effectually confute his own arguments, whilst he attempted to disown his maker.

His eye contains almost as many beauties as it beholds; and the man that curiously examines its artful frame, may be tempted to dwell forever upon it, and say, as the surprised disciple did, "It is good for me to be here."

The tongue that too often blasphemes the name of God, does yet, in spite of the sinner, proclaim His glory. And how much soever degenerate man may endeavor to deface his reason, yet it still will bear the image and superscription of God. And though he may sink himself into the depth of corruption, and become little more than dust and ashes, yet sparks of the heavenly fire will remain within him; some tokens of the Deity will be left in the ruins of human nature. And the proofs of his being, which we find within and without us, which attend us everywhere, are abundantly confirmed by the testimony of every age and nation.

Where, then, is the virtue of believing, if we only believe? The impious, the profane, and the devils do the same. What can we claim for believing that there is a God? When every thing in the heavens and under the earth is a proof of his Being, and so clearly attest it, that we cannot but believe it, unless we renounce our reason.

If we believe it just as we believe the histories of ancient times, or the descriptions of distant countries; if we think it concerns us no more than the ages that we can never recall, or the nations that we shall never behold, it would have been better for us if we had never heard of the name of God—or were Atheists in opinion as well as practice. For, in the second place, it will serve only to aggravate our guilt and sharpen our punishment.

It is as necessary to "confess with our mouth as to believe in our heart" that there is a God. But this necessary profession of our religion will certainly condemn us, unless it is confirmed and enlivened by our practice. For it adds hypocrisy to sin; and the more we boast of our faith, so much the louder will our sins cry against us.

The speculative Atheist (if there is any such person) hopes that there is no God, because he has affronted Him. But the sinful believer continues to affront Him, though he knows there is one. The former will not acknowledge Him to be his Lord; but the latter calls him Lord, and then disobeys him. The former acts without principles; the latter acts against them. One denies God's being, the other tramples upon His perfections. We have a lively remembrance of the sinful believer in the soldier that bowed the knee before Jesus, "and then spit upon him, and smote him upon the head." Though he pretends to receive him as his King, yet he pays his homage by giving him a crown of thorns; and his specious declarations are no more than a solemn mockery.

If we lay his words and actions in the balance together, and allow them to be of equal weight, yet even upon this favorable allowance his religion is reduced to nothing. For if his words acknowledge God, his actions absolutely deny him. He declares that God is infinite in knowledge, in goodness, and in power. But yet he daily commits abomination in the sight of Him who discerns "the secrets of the heart," and observes the rise, progress, and consummation of sin. He lives, moves, and has his being through the goodness and mercy of God; but yet he delights to grieve his spirit, abuses the endearing instances of his loving kindness, and wearies his patience and forbearance. He boasts of being the servant of a just and righteous God; but yet he transgresses the eternal rules of his justice, and passes on from one degree of iniquity to another, until he falls into hell. He knows that there is a great and terrible God, whose power is able to destroy him for ever and ever, and whose vengeance he can neither escape nor resist; and yet he trifles with the Almighty, and "treasures up wrath against the day of wrath."

How vain and foolish is the man that imagines that the God of wisdom will accept of his fruitless professions! While he imagines this, he must also think that his knowledge is blinder than the ignorance of men, his goodness a fond and foolish pity, his justice an irresolute weakness, and his power an insignificant terror, bearing the sword in vain. Though he says of him, as Elijah in derision did of Baal, He is a God, yet certainly it is only in derision. And while his sins call for the vengeance of God, he most impiously concieves that either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is on a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awakened. His faith is so far from extenuating his guilt, that it renders it inexcusable. He believes as "the devils do," and he will also tremble with them. The time will shortly come when pains and diseases will take hold of him, and Death will set all his terrors in array against him; then his sins will compass him about, and make his head uneasy in his sickness. His false professions will reproach him, and his ineffectual belief will upbraid him. His body will quake like the earth at the approaches of its dissolution; the rock of his heart will be rent, and the multitude of his vices, that were buried in forgetfulness, will "arise and come forth."

But behold the impious, impenitent and profane sinner in a yet more miserable state,—when the trumpet calls to judgment, and he is constrained to leave the dark hiding place of the grave! He will see the judge of all the world sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven attending upon him. The books will be opened in which his sins are recorded in everlasting characters, and the sentence ready to be passed. The very heavens will be on fire, and the elements will melt with fervent heat, and the general destruction will fill his soul with horror. The ministers of vengeance will stand prepared to serve their wretched prey as soon as he receives his eternal doom. How can he stand in that dreadful day? and whither can he fly? He needs no witness to accuse him, a righteous judge condemns him, and legions of evil spirits torment him; and now he "believes and trembles," but in vain!

Consider this, all ye who pretend to believe, and yet forget God. Let those especially consider it who triumph in blaspheming the living God, and glory in profaning his holy name. If they are determined to go on in their evil ways, my God hath also determined that he will not spare them, but cause his anger and his jealousy to smoke against them. He hath sworn in his wrath that unbelieving and impenitent sinners should not enter into his rest. Oh! then fly, fly to that repentence which alone can save you from his wrath! Hasten without further delay to the foot of the cross, and seek salvation through the atoning blood of Jesus.

Finally, brethren, let us who profess sincerely to believe that there is a God, show our faith by our works. Let us serve the Lord with reverence and Godly fear; as he hath given us the knowledge of himself, and the light of his saving truth, so let us walk worthy of his rich grace and favor; let us eschew, avoid the works of darkness, that we may escape his fiery indignation, which shall devour his adversaries; and let us add to our knowledge Godliness, and therein also abound, that so an entrance may be ministered unto us abundantly in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—to whom be all honor and glory, now and forever, amen.

GOLD MINING IN THE SOUTH.—Gold mining is likely to become an important enterprise in some of the southern states. The existence of gold in Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia has been known ever since the discovery of the country, and mining has been prosecuted to some extent for many years. It now seems that a new interest has been awakened in this matter, and we have reports of companies forming in various places to prosecute the business on an extensive scale.

A Fredericksburg (Va.) journal states that there will probably be seventeen mines in operation in the counties of Spottsylvania, Culpepper, Orange, and Louisa (Virginia), before the 1st of November. Enterprises of a similar character are announced in the other states before mentioned. It may be that northern energy, which is at the bottom of the new movement, will discover gold in paying quantities. The mines have never been thoroughly tested, and it is not improbable that gold will yet form an important feature in the production of the south.—Cairo Democrat.

ANOTHER DEDICATION IN LOUISIANA.

According to the notice in last week's Advocate, the new church built at Camp Parapet (on the Mississippi river, two miles above Carrollton,) was dedicated. It is 35 by 55 feet, and one story high, plain, but commodious and substantial, and will serve the people for years to come. It was built by Mr. Clifford Edwards, one of the official members of the society worshiping there, and who is a good workman both temporally and spiritually.—The Ross Chapel society was a child of old Wesley Chapel, and named after its venerable and worthy pastor, father Ross. It was located upon the Mason plantation, where they had built for themselves a rude chapel, but which was always too small. This year Rev. Joseph Gould was appointed pastor, and he has labored successfully among them, but hitherto under many disadvantages. Now a better day has come.

Last Sabbath at 11 o'clock A. M. Rev. E. Rayal, pastor of the La Harp street church, preached from 1 John, 4th chapter, 8th verse: "He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love," and discoursed upon the love of God as shown in the gift of his Son, the revelation of his will, and the outpouring of his spirit, the establishment of his church, and the providential care he exercises towards his people, and over all things. A good sermon, and the people heard him gladly. After the sermon eleven persons joined the church.

At 3 o'clock P. M. came the great convocation, and the dedicatory services. Brother Gould had chartered a special train on the N. O., J. and G. N. railroad, which conveyed the people from the city to near Camp Parapet. Nearly all the city churches were represented, but by far the largest delegations were from Wesley Chapel and Marais street, led by their pastors, Revs. A. Ross and Scott Chinn, two of our "Fathers in Israel." Rev. Henry Green, another of the "fathers," was invited, but was detained by sickness.

Arrived at the church the crowd was immense—enough for a young camp meeting. Many could not get into the house, and, in anticipation of this, awnings had been spread to shelter them from the sun. While the congregation were becoming seated and quiet, several songs and choruses were voluntarily sung; and we wish that some of the artistic, unconverted, operatic quartets who, for a consideration in greenbacks (and after they have screeched themselves hoarse, through the week, at the theatre) condescend, on Sunday, to do all the "praising of the Lord" for some churches, could have heard them. They were sung, as Dr. Eddy of the Northwestern would say.

At half-past three o'clock P. M. the services were commenced by Rev. A. Ross, who read, in solemn and reverent tones, our beautiful service, commencing:

"DEARLY BELOVED—The scriptures teach us that God is well pleased with those who build temples to his name," &c. &c. Then was sung the 964th hymn, followed by a voluntary prayer by Rev. Mr. Campbell. Then the reading of the scripture lessons by Rev. N. L. Brakeman. Then followed the 965th hymn. Then came the dedication sermon by Rev. Scott Chinn, a report of which we give elsewhere. We doubt whether he ever preached a better or more powerful sermon. It will be long remembered by all who heard it. His text was: Numbers, 23d chap. and 10th verse—"Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." And his theme was: "The increase and prosperity of the church, and the triumphant and happy death of its members." After sermon came the collection, in all amounting to $138 40. There would have been still more received but, as we were in the midst of the work, the cars whistled for return to the city, and many had to leave. But a good congregation still remained. Rev. A. Ross then read the 122d psalm, then Rev. E. Royal, on behalf of the trustees, presented the building for dedication to the presiding Elder, who concluded the services.

Thus closed one of the most interesting and profitable dedications we have attended. The house stands upon a historic spot, has a rich and populous region around it, and the society cannot fail to be prosperous and strong. Bro. Gould has now an open field before him, and will, with God's help and the support of the church, do an excellent work.

Camp Parapet has a history. Here in 1861 the Confederates built a strong fort, commanding the Mississippi, and erected earth-works extending from the river nearly to Lake Pontchartrain, making it one of the defences of New Orleans. After the battle of Baton Rouge, in August, 1862, and the evacuation of that place by Gen. Butler, his forces encamped at Parapet, under command of Gen. Phelps. The writer of this was then a chaplain in the Federal army and on the spot. Soon multitudes of escaped slaves gathered to the army, and a "contraband camp" was formed, embracing thousands, of all ages and conditions. All lay upon the ground, some under tents made of bed clothing brought from the plantations, some in huts constructed of cane or boards, and some under booths. Large arbors were built, which at night (and every night) were used as places of worship. Disease and death soon made sad havoc among them. Their condition, physical and moral, was deplorable, their character was a study, their worship a novelty, their future an enigma. We were deeply interested in them, sighed over their sufferings, mingled in their devotions, preached to them, visited their sick and buried their dead, and did what we could for them, and often wondered what would become of them. How little did we then think that five years later would find these people enfranchised citizens, the M. E. church planted among them, and ourselves resident in Louisiana, and identified with the work! How little did we then think that upon that same spot we would, five years later, meet the same people and behold the scenes of last Sabbath! (There were those at the dedication who remembered us as "chaplain," and gratefully referred to our labors then.) It is memories like these which have rendered this sunny, southern, though pestilential land, and these trying labors, in a measure, dear to us.

An incident or two, and we will close. As we were leaving the church to return home, Rev E. Royal pointed out to us the identical spot upon the bank of the great river where, "in slave-times," as he called it, he had been driven from his devotions, chased into the cane-field, and shot at by his pursuers because he would pray! His heart had leaped for joy (and he had referred to it in his morning sermon) to see a church erected and himself privileged to preach in it in sight of the same old "bower of prayer," and no one now daring to molest or make him afraid! Surely it was a great triumph, and a privilege worth recording, and we are glad to make a note of it for the readers of the Advocate.

There are those who tell us these freedmen are an ungrateful, inappreciative people. There may be some such among them, (and we think we have known some white people troubled with the same complaint) but the most of them are grateful to God, and their country, and the church, and to those who labor among them, and do appreciate what has been done and is being done for them. If any doubt it, let them go among the freedmen, visit them at their homes, listen to the sermons of their preachers, and the prayers and conversation of their people, visit their schools, and they will be no longer faithless but believing.

An item personal, if it be lawful in this connection: The first Sabbath in September found the writer of this preaching in Pass Christian, and baptizing converts in the Gulf of Mexico. The second Sabbath, Sept. 8th, found him, having traveled through eight states, standing upon the peninsula of the great Northern lakes, and preaching the gospel in central Michigan. The third Sabbath, Sept. 15, found him at the seat of his old conference in Danville, Ind., where twelve years before he was stationed as pastor. The fourth Sabbath, Sept. 22d, found him (according to an appointment made before going north) back in Louisiana, dedicating a church on the same ground where five years before he had served as chaplain in the army. Four appointments, and three thousand miles travel in eight states, in three weeks! A good, old fashioned circuit!

General Joseph A. Mower.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, who signs himself "A Soldier," gives the following from his own knowledge, concerning the character of the present comm ande of the fifth district:

General Mower is a graduate of West Point, and, at the beginning of the rebellion, was a captain in the regular army. In the fall of 1861 he was appointed to the command of the eleventh Missouri infantry—a regiment raised in Illinois. For gallantry on the battle-field of Corinth he was made a brigadier general. Early in this action he was shot from his horse while commandiug a skirmish line, and taken prisoner by the rebels. In less than two hours after his capture, and while the battle was raging at its height, seeing an opportunity presented through the carelessness of the soldier set to guard him, he escaped to the Union lines on the guard's horse, and was again at the head of his command with blood yet pouring from his wound.

On his appointment to the rank of brigadier general he was assigned the command of the second brigade of the third division of the sixteenth corps, and throughout the whole army was known as "Fighting Joe." Soon after the fall of Vicksburg, he was made a major general and given command of a division which accompanied General A. J. Smith on the Red river expedition.

One of the last official acts of the lamented Lincoln was to call this distinguished officer to the command of the twentieth army corps, and in the march to the sea he was the right-hand man of General Sherman.

Such is a brief history of the officer who now commands the fifth military district. It is safe to say that he reflects the views of the hero of the Shenandoah valley, is a warm supporter of the reconstruction policy of congress, and in his hands the fifth military district is safe.

Hon. Samuel B. Ruggles corrects the misapprehension that the recent international monetary conference at Paris (of which he was a member) sought to substitute the gold five franc piece of France for the gold dollar of the United States. He says that the proposition actually submitted for the consideration of the nineteen nations represented is, to reduce the weight of the minimum gold coin of each nation to that of the gold five-francs piece of France, each to be nine-tenths fine. The United States dollar and the French five francs, thus becoming equiponderant, will be mutually convertible. Each will become, in effect, the monetary unit. A similar result would practically follow from the reduction of the British "sovereign" in weight and value to twenty-five francs. The conference has not sought or proposed, in any way, to discontinue or disuse the "dollar" or the "sovereign," nor to adopt "French money" exclusively, as the coin of the world. Each nation is to retain its own names and emblems for its coins, which are simply to be made uniform in weight and value, to pass side by side, in perfect equality, throughout the world, without recoinage, brokerage, or other impediment, thereby materially cheapening international commerce and intercourse.—New York Times.

EMPHATIC UTTERANCES.—The Chicago Evening Journal says, we would like to see the day "when senators of the United States will no more tolerate a drunken man in their chambers than they would a viper in their beds." To this the New York Tribune responds as follows:

"We echo this wish. The senate is now happily rid of open and confessed debauchees. It has so deeply learned the lesson of disgust that we trust it can not easily suffer the disgrace of any other case of sottishness. It is bad that the highest deliberative body of the land has ever entertained rum incarnate, while so many good men everywhere have been endeavoring to lift our politics above the brandy bottle. Against the honor and dignity of the nation's legislature drunkenness is treason. As well have a traitor in Washington as a drunkard. A sot in senate or house is in every sense a national humiliation."

ANECDOTE OF FARADAY.—An English paper says: "Faraday's language was always simple, and the only poetry in which he ever indulged was the earnest expression given to some of those great truths of which he was the discoverer. He sought to reach the mind of every hearer through more senses than one. He never told his listeners of an experiment; he always showed it to them, however simple and well known it might be. 'If,' said Faraday once to a young lecturer, 'I said to my audience, This stone will fall to the ground if I open my hand, I should not be content with saying the words; I should open my hand and let it fall. Take nothing for granted as known. Inform the eye at the same time that you address the ear.' And this was the great secret of Faraday's success. Every one left the theatre of the institution in Albemarle street satisfied that he had really acquired some useful knowledge, and that he had gained it pleasantly and without toil or labor."

Up Again.

Thanks to Almighty God for his great goodness to us! Through his gracious blessing we have passed through a severe and dangerous attack of yellow fever, and are again at our post of duty. Since our sickness, many have fallen, and some who were dear to us, and whose virtues we would have chronicled. For some wise purpose we have been spared, and we hope to devote our returning strength to the good of others, and the glory of God, to whose love we are indebted for life. We especially return thanks to the Church for their unceasing prayers for our recovery. Thank God for prayer! And thank God fon a skillful physician, a good nurse, attentive friends, a clear conscience, and a hope of heaven.

Thanks.

We desire to express our gratitude to the gentleman who kindly volunteered to edit the Advocate while its editor was prostrated with yellow fever. Such kindness and willingness evince the generosity of a noble heart, and the editorials furnished are proof of the culture of a superior mind. "A friend in need is a friend indeed." We sincerely hope that our distinguished friend may never have the yellow fever, or any other fever, but he may rely upon our good intentions and firm resolve to reciprocate his kindness whenever opportunity is afforded.

Rev. Dr. Newman,

the pastor of the Ames M. E. Church, is so far recovered as to resume his visits to the sick and dying, and attend funerals, as he had done prior to his sickness. His residence is 205 St. Joseph street.

Rev. Mr. Henry

is slowly recovering from a severe attack of yellow fever. Let the Churches continue to pray for this valuable young minister of Christ.

Rev. Mr. Brakeman

has returned from a brief visit to his friends in the Northwest, and is again at work on his district.

Rev. Mrs. Green.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Rev. Mrs. Henry Green. She was an excellent lady, a most benevolent woman, and a devoted christian. She died while absent from home, but her end was full of peace. A more extended notice will be given next week.

Rev. Levi Johnson, from the Mandeville circuit, is in town, and reports a new society at Warren, about fifty miles back from the lake, where they have 225 members and a log church. The third quarterly meeting for that work, by request of the presiding elder, was held by Rev. E. Williams, whose labors were highly appreciated by the people, and greatly blest of God.

There have been seven conversions in the LaHarp street Church, E. Royal, pastor. One was a remarkable case of a young man who came to church for no good, but was prostrated by the power of God and went away shouting.

Mr. Evans Green, pastor of the Poet street M. E. Church, informs us that within a week and a half 51 converts have joined his church, and that within the past month 120 probationers have been received into the church. This is a good work. God bless the pastor and his flock.

Carefully compiled statistics show that 60,000 lives are annually destroyed by imperance in the United States.

LOOK TO YOUR CANDIDATES

Capacity, fidelity to party, energy, industry, are all most important qualifications to be regarded in the selection of public officers. But in the case of most offices if the people should err, as they do, and select an incapable or unworthy man, the mischief is not irreparable. His term is limited; and besides, he can, for sufficient cause, be removed. The evil which he does lives but a short time, and forms but a speck of imperfection amidst the large mass of benefits flowing from our system of popular elections. But not so in the elections just approaching.

All other elections are in fact but the choice of servants of the people, who have limited powers, and prescribed duties, and are responsible to superior authority for their conduct. The officers we elect on the 29th will, during the continuance of their session, hold in their hands the sovereign power of the state of Louisiana. They, for the time being, stand in the place of the people. They are properly subject to no authority but their own, and have only one limitation to their power, that of conformity to the Constitution of the United States.

They hold in their hands the destinies of the state, its children, and its children's children. The rules of civil polity they lay down are permanent, the influence of their actions reaches far into the future. We hold that for our guidance in the selection of men to wield so vast and extensive powers, every good citizen should make as an indispensable qualification in every candidate the possession of a high moral character. Ignorance, want of social standing, partisan objections, all may be overlooked or remedied, but a want of this cardinal quality cannot be remedied, and will inevitably lead to mischief. If a candidate, no matter how learned, how respectable, however strict a radical, is a gambler, a drunkard, a debauchee, or a corrupt man, let his name be scratched, and an honest man's put in its place.

If all the good and sober-minded citizens of this state were to act upon this principle, all the rascals could be defeated.

Louisiana once made the experiment of sending to convention men destitute of moral principle, but supposed to be sound on party questions. And what was the result?

These men belonged to the party which trusted in them, and by their whiskey and cigar bills, their notorious debauchery, their infamous and open corruption, and their shameless squandering of the public money on their favorites, made that convention a bye-word and a reproach among our enemies, and earned for themselves the title of "bad men" from friends and foes.

And besides all this, they betrayed the party of the Union and of human rights, sold out the state to rebels, continued the oppression of race which sprung from slavery, paved the way for the atrocities of July, and set Louisiana at least ten years back of where she ought to stand to-day.

In this connection we do not wish to include all the members of that convention, for there were good men among its members. We believe that the majority of its members honestly strove to do right. But the moral which points their history is the evil which a small number of rascals combined can do in such a body.

We say, then, to our friends, bring the moral character of every candidate, white or black, to the test. If he comes under any of the classes we have named, reject him at once.

Teach party caucuses that they must respect public virtue and public sentiment, or they cannot hope to have their selections ratified at the polls.

As a partisan we wish to see none but radical republicans elected, because we believe that none but radical republicans can be trusted as in full sympathy with the Congressional plan of reconstruction.

But we would have our friends remember that, as one bad egg will taint a hundred, so one dishonest, bad man, can vitiate the efforts of many good ones.

We repeat, scratch off every drunkard, every debauchee, every man who can be bought or sold. There are plenty of honest republicans to put in their places.

The world of arts recently suffered a most irreparable loss by the destruction of the famous chapel of the Madonna del Rosario, in Venice. Among other works of considerable note which were burned was Titian's celebrated picture of the martyrdom of St. Peter.

MINISTERIAL TRAINING.

We are not of the number who look alone at the glory of the passed, and can see no good in the progressive movements of the Church, and who are forever wailing out that "the glory of the latter house is not as the glory of the former." Far from it. We rejolce in every step of progress, in the introduction of any and every improvement calculated to foster and facilitate "the rising, spreading glory" of our Zion. And especially do we rejoice at the vastly increased and increasing facilities for the education and improvement of our ministry. We only regret that there should be any ground to fear that the real improvement in the general tone, ability, power and efficiency of our ministry, does not, in all cases, correspond with the improved and enlarged faciliiies for their culture and training.

With a commendable zeal and liberality, the Church has built and endowed, and is building and endowing, Biblical Institutions—in each of which she places a constellation of her brightest lights, in learning and piety, where young men preparing for the ministry have ample opportunity for the most thorough theological learning, and complete training in all that goes to make up the enchanting speaker, and efficient minister of a powerful pospel. But it is a grave question, often anxiously asked, "Is the general, or average standard of our ministers, advancing in a degree to correspond with the increased facilities for training?" We fear it is not. But why?

Is there not too great a reliance placed upon the mere training of the Books, and the oral instructions of the Professors, and too little reliance upon the exercise of the orginal powers of the mind? There is such a thing as relying so entirely upon the books, and the honored Professors, as to beget a servility in the mental habit, utterly destroy all self-reliance, and make the man purely mechanical in all his performances. Genius is thus cramped, if not crushed out—mental and moral cowardice is engendered, and he fairly trembles at the thought of venturing out upon an original train of thought. And how poorly qualified is such an one for an efficient, successful Methodist Preacher, who is expected to be ready, always ready, under all circumstances and in every place, for every good word and work.

Let us, then, have a little more of the practical in our Institutes, and in our systems of training. We would not curtail, but rather enlarge our Biblical Institutes—and strengthen the Faculty in each and all. Still we would insist on our ministers not relying solely on their advantages. But let each minister remember that at last, he must rely upon himself—to make himself, under the blessing and grace of God, an able minister of the New Testament—or a "star of the first magnitude," in the pulpit—according to the bright examples set us by our fathers.

Say not we have no time for study, while performing the regular work of a Methodist Preacher. We have in our mind now, one whom we would name, only that he is a living man, and still an element of power in the pulpit, who assures us that he studied—that is memorized every word of both the Latin and Greek grammars on horseback, while traveling a four weeks' circuit with thirty-eight appointments, or preaching places. He preached at least forty times every four weeks, met as many classes, traveled from five to fifteen miles between each appointment—kept up his Conference studies—and yet memorized his grmmars on horseback, to save time, and used his Lexicons and his Virgil and Greek Testament, &c. at night, and before day in the morning. We mention this to show what can be done by our ministers in the regular work. "Where there is a will there is a way," is a homely adage, but true to the letter. The minister just referred to, reached not only eminence in the pulpit, but also in the world of letters, as any of our ministers may, by proper indstry and diligence—especially in view of the greatly increased facilities for ministerial training. But dont forget that, after all, every man must carve out his own fortunes—and notwithstanding the great number of professedly man and minister-making institutions, every real man, or minister, under the blessing of God, is a "self-made man," or minister, so far as his training is concerned.

Helping Hand.

It is estimated that not less than ten thousand persons are down with the yellow fever in this city. Included in the number are the rich and the poor, the citizen and the stranger. The majority of the sick are foreigners, and of the poorer class of society. Their sufferings are aggravated by their poverty, and the condition of their homes. We know of a family of seven, all sick in one room and in one corner, one of the number, a little boy, lies dying. This is but one of a hundred like cases. What we now need are ward committees to visit every house and report to the "Howards" and to the Mayor, all really destitute cases. To accomplish this, every person who is physically able should lend a "helping hand." It is generous in our Northern friends to send us help; but there is a work to be done, which we only can do. The rich need us not, but the poor call for us. Let every one become a "good Samaritan." Let charity inspire our every act. Let time and money be given to relieve the sick and bless the dying.

Orphans' Home.

Our friends will be pleased to learn that the managers of our Orphans' Home have purchased a large and excellent plantation for the Home, near Franklin, La., and adjoining the plantation on which is to be located our Institute and University. A more complete account will be given next week.

Under date of September 16, Rev. James Haywood, of Baton Rouge, writes brother Brakeman as follows:

"I was out at the appointment on the Comite river yesterday, (Sunday), where brother Winfrey has a society of sixty members, and will soon have a new church.

"It is now well under way, so that I preached in it for the first time. It will be finished soon. I had a good congregation, and baptized twenty-one persons—some of them were immersed, some sprinkled, and some by pouring. My text was 1 cor. iii., 7th verse: "So then neither is he that planteth anything, nor he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." After sermon we had Love Feast, and at the close I received three into the church.

"In Baton Rouge we had a mourners' meeting for eight nights, and there have been twenty-one accessions to the church and eleven conversions. Thank God! The old church has her sails all set and a fair wind, and is making good time for the kingdom!

"Our bell is nearly paid for. Our people are very poor but they are working for God, and are in good courage. Pray for us."

Brother Brakeman will preach at the Sixth Street Church Sunday (tomorrow) Sept. 29, at 3 o'clock P. M.

Suffering in Texas.

The Crescent learns from a private letter that out of 500 citizens of Lagrange, Texas, as many as twenty-four have died in two days of yellow fever. The average deaths are eight. On the 9th instant there were no provisions in the town, not even corn meal to make gruel. Prompt assistance is necessary, and the sympathies of the people of New Orleans are appealed to for aid.

Why the Republican Majority in Maine was not Larger.—"Warrington." in the Springfield Republican, says of the Maine election: "We have got only ten thousand majority, but we can give twenty thousand next year if we want to. It does not follow that because Dr. Winship sees fit to lift only a fifty-six pounder to-day he cannot lift half a dozen like it to-morrow. What we want to get at is the strength, not the exhibition of it, and a blow which knocks down a man is enough, even if sufficient force to knock down an elephant is not put into it."

How the People are Swindled by their Representatives.—The United States senate stationery bill for 1861 amounted to $30,000. Some of the items are interesting: 909 pocket knives, $2224—eighteen to each senator; 1840 pairs of shears and scissors, $1514—thirty-seven pairs to each senator: 210 pairs of kid gloves, $525; 446 pocket books, $1019; 309 brushes, and 556 pin cushions, besides cork screws, eyelet machines, combs, cologne, soap, pomade, toilet powder, and lemons.

Appointments.—Governor Flanders has appointed the following persons to the position of mayor and town council for the town of Tangipaho: Robert Y. Burton, mayor and justice of the peace, vice John Paris Wall, resigned; L. L. Taylor, T. C. Bradford, C. E. Kennon, Thomas Kron, William Daniel, aldermen. Zacharia Strain has been appointed constable for the justice's court, sixth ward, in the parish of St. Tammany, in the place of A. T. Carpenter, who refused to act.

The Bangor Whig says some twelve thousand or fifteen thousand Republicans staid away from the polls at the Maine election. This is undoubtedly the fact.—Buffalo Courier.

If this be "undoubtedly the fact," Mr. Courier, are not you and the other Democratic organs who crow over the late result in Maine making a large display on small capital? A party which can carry a state by fourteen thousand majority in a vote of one hundred and five thousand, while twelve thousand to fifteen thousand of its members "stay away from the polls," is certainly not in a very feeble condition.—Albany Evening Journal.

The Inception and Progress of the Yellow Eever.

The first death by yellow fever this season of which we have any information occurred at the Charity hospital on the 29th of June. The victim was a coal-wheeler who, it was supposed, wheeled coal into the hold of some steamer from which the disease was imparted to him.

Three yellow fever deaths were reported for the week ending June 30. Three other deaths were reported up to July 14; one of these occurred at Algiers, being Captain Melville Hooper, of the bark Florence Peters, from Havana on the 13th of July; Henry H. Thomas, of Maine, also belongiug to the Florence Peters, died at the Charity hospital of the same disease about the same time.

The Florence Peters was quarantined ten days, but notwithstanding this the disease was undoubtedly brought here by that vessel.

On the 8th of July William Bright, a German, died of yellow fever in the third district.

For the week ending July 21 there were two deaths by yellow fever; the week ending July 28, nine deaths; the week ending August 4th, nine deaths; the week ending August 11, fourteen deaths.

We present a daily report of the yellow fever deaths from the 13th of August, as follows:

To Aug. 11	40	Sept. 3	25
" 13	5	" 4	28
" 14	5	" 5	44
" 15	2	" 6	30
" 16	1	" 7	45
" 17	2	" 8	49
" 18	6	" 9	51
" 19	12	" 10	52
" 20	11	" 11	67
" 21	10	" 12	61
" 22	4	" 13	43
" 23	7	" 14	41
" 24	19	" 15	53
" 25	14	" 16	49
" 26	15	" 17	66
" 27	14	" 18	46
" 28	15	" 19	55
" 29	20	" 20	66
" 30	26	" 21	63
" 31	22

Including the yellow fever deaths from the week ending June 29 to the date of our daily report the whole number of deaths by that disease in this city up to yester day morning's report is 1214. Of these 92 were natives of Louisiana, 213 of other parts of the United States, 212 of Germany, 166 of Ireland, 119 of France, 59 of Prussia, 39 of England, 22 of Italy, 14 of Austria, 13 of Scotland, 13 of Canada, 11 of Sicily, 10 of Switzerland, 10 of Russia, 9 of Poland, 6 of Spain, 4 of Sweden, 4 of Finland, 3 of Denmark, 2 of Bavaria, 2 of Malta, 2 of Wales, and 1 each of Greece, Norway, Sandwich islands, Jamaica, Hungary, and Mexico.

The disease may have been imported from Havana by the Florence Peters. If so, it is fair to date the first deaths from that vessel as the commencement of the epidemic. These occurred on the 13th of July. It is seventy-one days since that time, and if the theory is correct that this, like other epidemics, has ninety days to run from its beginning, its ravages may be expected to continue at least nineteen days more.

Commendable.

Among the numerous employes of the customhouse, there are many unacclimated persons who are prostrated with yellow fever. We are pleased to be enabled to record the fact that the larger number of natives or acclimated employes, who have been chosen for their loyalty as well as competency, have shown the greatest kindness and attention to their unacclimated associates throughout the trying times of the epidemic. No sooner do their office hours close than they repair to the sick-rooms of their fellows, and render every assistance in their power, and with kindest hearts. Almost daily, too, subscriptions are taken up among the well employes for burial and other expenses of the departed, and though each has to depend alone upon his salary for subsistence, a respectable amount is always raised by these employes, of course headed with liberal sums by Deputy Collector Stockdale, Auditor Whitaker, and other heads of the departments.

It is with pleasure, also, that the fact can be stated that among all the old and acclimated citizens a similar character of good Samaritanism is exhibited. "Send for me the moment you get the fever, and I'll see that you come through it right," is the kindly remark of almost all with whom it is our good lot to meet. Truly, this is hospitality.

A Coward and Shirk.

One of our reporters was walking along the street yesterday when he heard accidentally a part of the conversation addressed by a healthy looking young man, standing near the door of a house, to two ladies. The words heard were: "It don't take the right ones—it don't kill the Yanks." He was alluding to the epidemic.

Our reporter's indignation was justly aroused, for he is a Yankee, and pausing he asked the miserable creature if he meant that, or was gasconading. He replied that he meant it.

The rejoinder came, "Any man who will give utterance to such a devilish sentiment ought not to be permitted to live an hour."

The fellow said he would be willing to die if the yellow fever would kill the Yankees.

This incident is alluded to for the sole purpose of exhibiting the fiendish spirit entertained by a few wretched creatures whom God permits to pollute the earth, perhaps as living exemplifications of the doctrine of total depravity, rather than for any other purpose.

The utterance of this infamous sentiment was at a time when the benevolent people of the north are contributing money by thousands of dollars to assist those who are suffering from the terrible epidemic that is desolating the south.

Whoever the miscreant was, we are happy to declare that he does not represent the sentiment of the south. If he was in the confederate army he was a coward, a straggler, a shirker, or frequently "run the block," as the Virginia rebel soldiers were wont to express it when they went to their homes within the confederate lines and abandoned their starving comrades to the fate of war. He is a disgrace to the name of man.

"Dry Times."—That will be the exclamation of the gentlemen who are in the habit of visiting coffeehouses for their whisky, brandy, and other plain and fancy drinks, for the mayor has ordered all coffeehouses to be closed from nine o'clock this evening to Sunday morning.

This will cover the time during the election as well as a few hours before and a few hours after that important event in the annals of this state. It will be "dry times," but every one will yield to the necessity for it and comply with the imperative command of the mayor.

If a writer is remarkable for his long sentences, never elect him to a judgeship. He would be too hard upon prisoners.

Origin of the Idea of Impartial Suffrage.

Now that impartial or negro suffrage is a fixed fact, not only in Louisiana, but in all of the late slave states except those bordering on those that have always been free since the adoption of the constitution of the United States, namely: Missouri. Kentucky, Maryland, and Delaware, an allusion to the origin of the idea may prove to be interesting. By this term we mean the time when men of influence and high position began to think seriously of urging negro suffrage, not only as a matter of right to the colored race, but as a measure of safety for the country. The following letter, written by Honorable Owen Lovejoy to Governor Hahn, of Louisiana, is among the earliest documents on the subject which could be considered as foreshadowing the future settled policy of the Republican party. It was written but a few days previous to Mr. Lovejoy's death, and was possibly the last letter on public affairs from the pen of that true patriot and philanthropist. The writer, it will be seen, testifies that the great and good President Lincoln was in entire accord with him on the subject, but not entertaining so exalted an idea of his prerogative as his successor, desired to have the good work accomplished by undoubted authority.

One of the remarkable points in the letter is the allusion to "Governor Johnson, of Tennessee," now President Johnson. It will be seen that Mr. Johnson, true to his character, succeeded in deceiving Mr. Lovejoy, as he since has Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania, and Major Stearns, of Boston, with both of which gentlemen he held conversations on the subject. The latter, with the consent of Mr. Johnson, published the details of their conversation, and the result has proved that Andred Johnson on that occasion, as on many others before and since, talked directly opposite to the way in which he intended to act. His language to Mr. Lovejoy really meant this, and nothing more: that he would favor negro suffrage, or anything else, provided he could be assured it would pay.

Washington, D. C., March 14, 1864.

My dear Governor—I have just been reading with great satisfaction a brief notice of your inaugural, and the address you made on the occasion. I am very glad that you propose to make clean work of slavery.

Will you allow me to suggest one thing more? We can not go to the bottom where the granite is in order to build without giving the elective franchise to the negro. I am satisfied that if we stop short of that, it will be found that our house is built upon the sand, and when the floods come, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, it will fall, and great will be the fall thereof. The sense of justice which has been awakened in the nation by the rebellion will not rest satisfied to have forgiven rebels who have fought to overthrow the government, and drive away loyal black soldiers who have fought to sustain it. It is not necessary at first that all should vote. You can allow those who can read and write to vote; or you can allow black soldiers to vote. The privilege of voting given to the latter class, to wit: the soldiers, would commend itself, I think, to the whole nation. You may think that this is owing to my overweening anxiety for the blacks, but it is not that alone, nor chiefly. I am satisfied that Providence will not let us settle this question until we settle it on the foundation of equal and exact justice to all, in accordance with the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and of the constitution, which know nothing of black or white, rich or poor, but regard the rights of men, as such, as sacred.

I was much gratified the other day in a conversation with the president to find that his views on this subject accord with my own. He does not feel that he can require this, as a delegation requested him to do. Still he desires it to be done by the action of the people themselves.

If Louisiana takes the lead I think all the other states will follow, and then we shall have settled this question on deep and broad foundations, against which the gates of hell can not prevail. The number of those who are at first admitted to the privilege of the elective franchise does not to me seem essential, for if you let any portion of the colored people vote the rest will follow in time.

I had a conversation with Governor Johnson, of Tennessee, on this subject. He feels right, personally, but is a little timid as to the public sentiment. I do hope you will see your way clear to take the lead in this matter. You will thus not only do a good thing for your country, but immortalize your name, for I am satisfied the nation will grow to this, if it has not already reached it.

Excuse me for having intruded my views upon your attention. The brief but pleasant acquaintance I had with you has encouraged me to do it.

Very truly yours,
OWEN LOVEJOY.

Governor Michael Hahn, New Orleans, La.

Views of Wendell Phillips.

Wendell Phillips is just now spending a summer vacation remote from all the din and turmoil of cities. He has pitched his eyrie away up among the hills of Sterling, Worcester county, Massachusetts, some fifty miles from Boston. A correspondent of the Herald, traveling in the vicinity, called upon Mr. Phillips at a late hour on Saturday evening. The conversation which ensued naturally turned on the absorbing topics of the day—Grant, President Johnson, congress, impeachment, the presidency, candidates, etc. On all these Mr. Phillips touched freely, but very briefly, though notes were taken in his presence and he knew the "chiel" would surely "prent 'em." The correspondent's suggestive reference to General Sheridan drew out the following criticism on "Little Phil":

I do not think, without wishing to detract from the merits of Sheridan, that he carried his rule in Louisiana to any extreme extent. Many of the police of New Orleans, who attacked and murdered the conventionists and other unoffending men in that city, were retained on the police force, and are there to this day. This showed great moderation, and, indeed, culpable forbearance, on the part of Sheridan; so I contend that Johnson's resistance to reconstruction south is not resistance to extreme Radicalism there; it is merely the pretense. His resistance is meant not primarily as against the southern disfranchised classes, but directed with a view of breaking up the Republican party there. General Sheridan is hardly the man at present. I think Gen- mas would make a very available candidate. He is able and honest, and above the seductions of party influences.

Increase of Yellow Fever.

The last two days' reports show an increase of forty-three yellow fever deaths over the two corresponding days of last week. The increase during the whole of last week over the preceding week was only forty-five. The disease is steadily diffusing itself over every part of the city, and every day adds new cases of sickness from the epidemic.

It has not probably increased in virulence or fatality, but the number within its embrace has been gradually enlarged, and, though the proportion of deaths compared with the entire yellow fever patients is no larger than it has been, the aggregate number of deaths from the disease has increased.

The Yellow Fever.

The oldest physicians, and those most conversant with yellow fever, express their belief that the type of the present epidemic differs from that of the ordinary yellow fever. Whether that be so or not, it yields very readily to intelligent and careful treatment.

Its ravages are among men, women, and children of all nationalities. Old men and young children are prostrated by it. There are estimates that ten thousand cases are under treatment now in this city. These estimates may not be extravagant, however large the number may appear.

How much longer the epidemic will run it is difficult to predict. It will be likely to continue, according to the opinion of physicians, until a frost shall sweep it away. Whether it will increase in extent or fatality the future must determine.

Like the ravages of fire over a forest of pines, which is checked only by exhausting the material, the present epidemic may not cease its ravages uutil the material which supplies it is exhausted.

In the meantime we counsel prudence. Prudence in clothing; prudence in diet; prudence in the abstinence of stimulants which are injurious to the health of the individual.

Yellow Fever in Texas.

At Lagrange, Huntsville, Hempstead, Millican, Alleyton, Navasota, and other places the fever is at its height. At Warrensburg it is subsiding. There were 100 cases in all and 40 deaths at Huntsville, and 60 cases and 8 deaths at Brenham.

At Hempstead the doctors are all dead or down with the fever. Not one physician in the place fit for duty.

At Alleyton the same state of affairs exists. No physician, and not a drug store in the place.

Great need exists for ice, lemons, mustard, etc., and good nurses. The Galveston Howards have sent 87 nurses and several physicians to the interior, but there is a constant demand for more.

At Millican the mortality is seventy per cent. At Houston, on the 20th, eighteen deaths, of which twelve by the fever, among them Dr. R. Haynes, Mrs. Dreyfus, Mrs. Mary Turner, and L. J. Warner, chief clerk of freedmen's bureau.

The Houston Telegraph is reduced to a half-sheet, on account of sickness among its printers. Nine of them are absent—six sick, one has just died, and the other three are acting as nurses.

At Galveston the epidemic appears to have run its course. On the 22d, the deaths by it were seven; for the week ending the 21st, sixty-six; from the commencement of the fever to September 22, total deaths 1128, of which 999 were by yellow fever.

The Howard Association.

The Howard association are doing much and excellent service in rendering assistance to those who are suffering from the prevailing epidemic.

Members of the association perform their duty with personal sacrifices to themselves. Not only that, but by contact with the disease they have introduced it into their families, and in one or more instances the loss of cherished children has ensued from contact.

We understand that this association affords relief, and very properly, too, to all who are suffering from the epidemic, without regard to nationality, race, or color.

It has been suggested that there are many Italians and other foreigners here who understand neither the French nor English language, and that it would be wise for the Howard association to distribute circulars, or post handbills in Spanish, and perhaps in other languages, for the information of such foreigners as have been named, so that they may obtain knowledge as to where relief can be had. The suggestion is worthy of consideration.

The Schools.

The statements of two of the New Orleans papers to the contrary, yet it is a fact that not one-fourth of the educable white children of New Orleans are in daily attendance at the public schools. An examination yesterday showed that in one room where there are usually about fifty-five there were only fourteen, and on Friday last, in the same room only twelve. Another room that usually has from fifty to sixty had but fifteen, and still another, where the average attendance is forty-five, had yesterday but twenty. Many of the teachers are sick, and some of the pupils have been sent home with the fever, which they probably contracted in going to and coming from the schools in the hot sun. Opening the schools in the midst of an epidemic is not only a foolish but a wicked piece of obstinacy. It is not unlikely that the directors will yet be called to an account for their part in the business.

Two Young Ladies Burned to Death.

A dispatch from Boston dated 16th inst. says that on the night previous the dwelling house of Jarvis Keene, at East Abington, was burned. Mr. Keene's two daughters, his only children, aged nineteen and twenty-one years, were burned to death. Mr. Keene is in New Orleans, and his wife and daughters were alone in the house.

The New Atlantic Telegraph.—It was announced some time ago that the French government had authorized an Anglo-French company to lay a telegraphic cable from Brest to the American continent. The Patrie says that the preliminary soundings commenced four months ago are complete. The cable will be laid from Brest to St. Pierre Miquelon, it having been ascertained that the bottom of the ocean along that line is favorable to the design. From St. Pierre it will go along the coast of New Brunswick and the shores of the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut.

A direct line from Brest to New York would offer many difficulties, owing to the tremendous depth of some parts of the ocean, where the officers employed have been unable to find soundings, and where, consequently, immense quantities of cable might be sunk without result. The immersion of the cable now making in London is to begin in May next year, and the Great Eastern is to be employed to lay it. It is hoped that a month will suffice for the work, and that in July, 1868, at latest, France and the European continent will be in direct telegraphic communication with America.

No More Washing Dishes.—A Michigan genius has invented a machine that will wash a dinner's dishes in double quick time. All the kitchen maid has to do is to drop the plates into a machine, edgewise, give two turns of a crank, and take out the clean article as it rises from the sudsy bath, without the least danger of scalding her fingers or even getting more than the tips of them wet.

Women Have Characters, You Know.—Jones was traveling with his wife, and was so gallant in his behavior to cara sposa that madame became uneasy, and remonstrated against his attentions as too marked for public observation. "The deuce," said Jones, "we're married, I suppose?" "Yes," said the lady, "but judging by your deportment, the folks will think we are not." "Well, what of it?" "Why, not much to you!" said the candid dame. "You are a man; but we women have our characters to take care of."

BY TELEGRAPH.

FROM WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, September 20, 1867.

Generals Grant and Hancock had an interview with the president yesterday. They conversed over the condition of reconstruction matters in Louisiana and Texas.

The president freely admitted that he had no power to interfere with the details of registration and the election, and that these matters were committed to the discretion of the district commanders exclusively.

General Sickles arrived here at twenty minutes past ten o'clock this morning. He met with a friendly and enthusiastic reception, but there was nothing formal or prearranged about it.

One of Sheridan's staff, Colonel Crosby, has arrived here. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 20, 1867.

General Sheridan arrived here at half-past six o'clock this evening and proceeded quietly in a carriage to Willard's hotel, where a splendid dinner was laid out, at which Generals Hancock and Sickles, Governor Fenton, Hon. James T. Brady, and William E. Robinson, of New York, and others were present.

Governor Orr, of South Carolina, has written a letter indorsing General Sickles, and expressing his regret for the course which President Johnson is pursuing.

It is now positively ascertained that General Hancock will not go south for several weeks to come. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 23, 1867.

General Hancock has received permission to delay his departure for the south until the 15th of October. In the meantime he will go to St. Louis.

The president had quite an interesting dinner party yesterday. General Hancock and staff, Secretary Welles, General Frank P. Blair, and ex-Congressman Cooper, of Tennessee, were present.

Generals Sickles and Sheridan are to be serenaded to-night by the Grand Army of the Republic. It will be a grand affair, as many persons of all shades of politics will turn out to see and hear the patriot Sickles and the dashing cavalryman, Sheridan.

Sickles is holding an informal levee, his room at the hotel being constantly crowded by friends with whom he has fought in politics and in war.

Sickles has not yet visited the president; nor has Sheridan.

The National Intelligencer, Johnson's organ, states that the president and General Grant have agreed that they have no power to interfere with registration and holding of elections, but that Grant will recommend the holding of elections the same day throughout the south.

The Republicans do not believe the last part of this statement, and think that Grant will allow the district commanders to exercise their own judgment in such matters.

It is stated here, however, by the Conservatives that the Louisiana election has been postponed until the 1st of November.

Nothing positive is yet known, except that General Hancock agrees to the postponement of all elections as above. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 24, 1867.

General Hancock talks all right about Louisiana affairs. He says that three months ago he would have agreed to the proposition to appoint one day for the election in all the southern states, but that he will not interfere now. It is positively ascertained now that General Grant will not take any steps to put off the election in Louisiana, nor advise General Hancock to postpone it. The administration papers, however, continue to insist to the contrary, and declare that he will.

Senator Patterson, of Tennessee, Johnson's son-in-law, and General Kyle, also of Tennessee, had a fight at the Ebbitt house, in consequence of a disagreement in political matters. Patterson got pretty badly licked, and threatened to shoot, but did not. The belligerents were at last separated by friends, and some adjustment of their quarrel was effected which was pronounced an "amicable arrangement." A few drinks of whisky settled all the differences.

General Sickles, the "hero-statesman," as he is called, has been invited to Philadelphia. General Sheridan was also invited, and while he did not accept the invitation, stated, however, that he would be in Philadelphia on Wednesday, and that he would not be responsible for any public demonstration. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 24, 1867.

General Sheridan goes to Philadelphia at noon to-morrow, where a grand reception is said to be awaiting him. The general was examined by the pay department investigating committee to-day. He testified that he had advised the arrest of Lowenthal, but Bryce did not do so.

The serenade to General Hancock to-night was gotten up by the Johnsonites, but at the request of the general he was introduced to the meeting by a Radical—Mr. Cobb, of Wisconsin.

The whole affair turned out against the administration, and the Copperheads failed in their efforts to speak, as well as to carry out their intended programme. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 25, 1867.

Sheridan left here to-day for Philadelphia, where he expects a grand reception to-night. He will reach New York Saturday. He will have a great reception by the Union League there on Monday.

General Sickles will go to Philadelphia to-morrow, and will make a speech there.

General Hancock will leave for St. Louis on Friday.

The president will refuse Sickles a court of inquiry. He will muster him out of the volunteer rank.

Frazer, Trenholm & Co. are here trying to settle with the government. They are in a tight place.

R. King Cutler has written to the war department urging a postponement of the election in Louisiana.

No attention is paid to his request. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 20.—Sheridan and Sickles are here. Hancock leaves in a few days for St. Louis. The cabinet meeting to-day lasted two hours. Grant was absent.

Revenue receipts to-day $260,000. Brevet Lieutenant Colonel C. A. Reynolds, quartermaster, is assigned to duty at Mobile.

Chief Justice Chase has gone to Ohio.

Dr. Luke Blackburn has left Canada for New Orleans under the amnesty proclamation.

The bureau of Indian affairs has received nothing confirmatory of the report of the extraordinary demands of Indians on the North Platte.

The national council of American mechanics assembles at Baltimore on the 24th inst.

Hancock, Sheridan, and Sickles dined together to-day. Their presence creates little sensation.

A. T. Stewart is dead. He leaves an estate of $70,000,000.

Governor Fenton had a prolonged interview with Grant to-day.

WASHINGTON, September 21.—A suggestive question has arisen in the city council. The lower board which went in on negro votes give the collector of taxes who went in with them two per cent., the upper board who represent the white vote on account of holding over have a majority in favor of one per cent. A committee of conference was appointed which fixed the commission at one and a half, the upper board refuses to concur, and the city finances are at a stand still.

General Sheridan is summoned and will testify before the committee on frauds in the paymaster's department. It is expected that Sheridan's testimony will throw some light on the Lowenthal complications.

Custom receipts for the week ending 14th, $3,342,000.

The Express says that it is understood that Hancock will not assume command of the fifth district until the 15th proximo.

Revenue receipts to-day, $387,000. Receipts for the week, $1,868,000. For the fiscal year to date, $5,225,000.

WASHINGTON, September 21.—It is urged upon Hancock at headquarters that there is no immediate necessity for his presence in the fifth military district.

The president expresses confidence that notwithstanding appearances, the elections south will occur simultaneously.

The Tribune's dispatch from the North Platte says that peace has been declared with the Brusie and Agallallah Sioux Indians.

They are to receive powder and ball. Pawnee Killer left the council in anger. The commissioners have left for Omaha.

WASHINGTON, September 23.—A dispatch from Lancaster says that Thad. Stevens is very sick, and supposed to be dying.

The counsel in the case of the United States vs. Frazer, Trenholm & Co., are endeavoring to close the matter.

The war department has a dispatch from the Dry Tortugas, which states that Major Stone's wife, Dr. Smith's son, and Lieut. Orr, are dead, and Major Stone is sick. The fever is not abating.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $500,000.

Commander Geo. W. Young, commanding United States steamer Suwanee, died and was buried at sea.

Register Colby, of the treasury department, is dead.

WASHINGTON, September 24.—Commissioner Taylor telegraphs to the Indian bureau from Omaha that the prospects for peace are more flattering now than at any previous time, the council at North Platte having been entirely satisfactory.

R. G. Horton, editor of the New York Day Book, is dead.

A pardon has been granted to Ex-Secretary Mallory of the late confederate navy.

Hancock will not assume command of the fifth military district until he arrives within its limits.

WASHINGTON, September 23.—Generals Sheridan, Sickles, and Hancock were serenaded to night by the military organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic, on which occasion speeches were made by all three.

WASHINGTON, September 24.—Five cholera deaths at Omaha yesterday.

Special dispatches from the North Platte reiterate that the conference was very unsatisfactory, and Indian affairs are threatening as ever.

The cabinet held a two hours session to-day.

Stevens still improves.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $281,000.

Sheridan had a prolonged interview with Grant to-day.

Our consul at Malaga writes that the Spanish government has declared the whole United States affected with cholera and yellow fever, and all vessels arriving thence will be quarantined.

Hancock is being serenaded to-night at the Metropolitan hotel, which is brilliantly illuminated and blazing with fireworks. It is expected the president will speak. Hancock said he intended to operate not for partisan purposes, but for his country, and he trusted for the benefit of the people intrusted to his care.

The following is Hancock's speech:

Citizens of Washington—I thank you for this testimony of your appreciation of my services, and confidence in my ability to perform my duty in a new and different sphere. Educated as a soldier in the military school of our country, and on the fields of the Mexican war and American rebellion, I need not assure you that my course as a district commander will be characterized by the same strict soldierly obedience to the law there taught me as a soldier, I know no other guide or higher duty.

Misrepresentation and misconstruction arising from the passions of the hour and spread by those who do not know that devotion to duty has governed my actions in every trying hour, may meet me, but fear them not. My highest pride will be to perform the duties of my new office not in the interest of parties or partisans, but for the benefit of my country, the honor of my profession, and I trust also for the welfare of the people committed to my care. I ask then, citizens, that I may not be judged in advance, and that time may be permitted to develope my actions. Judge me when I act by the deeds I may perform, and conscious of my devotion to duty and my country, I shall be satisfied with your verdict; and if a generous country shall approve my actions in future as it has in the past my highest ambition will have been achieved. As a soldier, I am to administer the laws rather than discuss them. If I can administer them in spirit with due charity to the governed and to the satisfaction of my country, I shall indeed be happy in the consciousness of a duty well performed.

I am about to leave your city, the capital of our country, bearing the proud name of Washington. As an American citizen, the rapid development and increase of its wealth, beauty, and prosperity is a matter in which I, too, am deepiy interested, but far, far beyond this, citizens of Washington, I rejoice with you that in the trying hour of the rebellion the capital of our nation contributed as freely in proportion as any state in the Union to the brave volunteer army which has demonstrated to the world the strength and invincibility of a republic. I shall carry with me the recollections of this occasion, and when I return may I not hope that none who are here present in person or in spirit will regret their participation in the honor you have done me to-night.

Among the resolutions adopted by the Grand Lodge of the United States, I. O. O. F., at the annual session held in New York last week, were the following:

Resolved, That it shall not be legal to expel or suspend members of this order for non-payment of dues.

Resolved, That any member of a subordinate lodge or encampment of this order failing to pay his regular dues as required by the by-laws of such subordinate until the arrears thereof, exclusive of fines and assessments, are equal in amount to one year's dues, shall be held to have voluntarily resigned his membership in such subordinate, and shall be dropped from the roll thereof, and he shall take rank in the order from and after such dropping from the roll as an Ancient Odd Fellow; provided, however, that no member shall be thus dropped while under charges for misconduct.

Resolved, That any person thus dropped may be readmitted to membership either in his former subordinate lodge, or in any within the jurisdiction of this order, subject to the general and local laws regarding residence, upon application in the same manner as may be required of a candidate for initiation; and he shall pay an admission fee in no case to exceed the customary initiation fee provided for by the by-laws of the subordinate lodge to which such application may be made, and he shall take such rank only in such subordinate lodge as he may prove himself entitled to.

Resolved, That the provisions of these resolutions shall apply to all persons heretofore suspended, expelled, or dropped from membership for non-payment of dues and for no other cause, and to members of subordinate lodges or encampments.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions shall have the full force and effect of a positive law, and shall go into operation from and after the adoption thereof by this grand body. State bodies are hereby directed to promulgate the same for the instruction of their subordinates without unnecessary delay, and further to make all local legislation necessary to give effect hereto in their several jurisdictions.

WASHINGTON, September 25.—It is said Stevens has dropped off the chest.

Dispatches from Nashville to the president and Grant state that the city authorities intend holding the city elections under the charter in defiance of Brownlow.

The state authorities are equally determined to hold the election under the new franchise laws.

Thomas has been ordered to Nashvill with instructions to maintain order, but not to interfere otherwise.

CABLE SUMMARY.—It is rumored that Kelly and Deasy escaped from Liverpool in a steamer.

A special commission willl try the Manchester rioters.

A collision had occurred at Limerick between the people and the soldiers.

Seven of the former were bayoneted, one killed. The soldiers' action is condemned.

The Roman government is concentrating troops. Italy is sending troops to the frontier. Many arrests are being made in Rome. Troops have left France for Rome.

A Florence dispatch says Garibaldi was arrested by the Italian forces when crossing the frontier.

Bismarck declared in the north German parliament that if the German nation wished to unite there is no power strong enough to prevent their union.

Periere has resigned the presidency of the credit mobilier.

A special Florence dispatch says Garibaldi is confined in the fortress of Alessandria, his Italian companions are prisoners and his munitions seized. Intense excitement prevails.

TOULON, September 25.—Transports and war vessels are ready to go to the Pope's assistance if necessary.

WASHINGTON, September 25.—The state department is by no means despondent of a fair settlement of the Alabama claims, although it is delayed by the death of Sir Frederick Bruce.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $395,000.

Hancock had an interview with both the president and General Grant to-day.

Depredations attributed to the Crows were committed by the Arrapahoes.

A bet of six to four thousand was made here to-day on Pennsylvania going Democratic.

WASHINGTON, September 25.—Secretary Seward writes to the United States consul at Toronto to-day, returning Dr. Luke Blackburn's oath of allegiance. His letter concludes: "The president's proclamation offers no immunity in this case."

The following letter was dispatched to-day:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 25, 1867.

D. Thurston, Esq., United States Consul, Toronto:

SIR—Your dispatch of the 17th of September, No. 223, has been received, with an accompaniment, which is an affidavit containing an oath of allegiance subscribed by L. P. Blackburn, and verified by yourself. I remit that paper to your care, with permission to restore it to the affiant.

I assume that this paper was made and delivered to you with a view to its being filed in this department under the provisions of the president's proclamation of pardon issued on the 7th of September, instant. The affiant is understood to be the person who is called Dr. Blackburn. Nothing is known by this department concerning him as having directly or indirectly participated in the late rebellion. All that is known is that he lies under the charge of felony in this, that he conceived and put into execution within a foreign jurisdiction a plot to disseminate contagion and pestilence in this and other cities of the United States by clandestinely transmitting for an unsuspicious market here masses of infected clothing taken from the corpses of persons who had died of yellow fever in the tropics.

It is not easy to understand how an offense of that character, which is a detestable crime against mankind, can be supposed, even by the felon himself, to be entitled to be regarded as an act of insurrection, rebellion, or civil war. The president's proclamation offers no immunity in this case.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
W. H. SEWARD.

From New York.

NEW YORK, September 20.—The Hudson river steamers Dean Richmond and Commodore Vanderbilt collided near Rondout at one o'clock this morning. The Richmond sank in an hour. The Vanderbilt was but little injured. No lives lost.

NEW YORK, September 20.—There are reports here of trouble in the Bank of Stonington, Connecticut. The cashier is said to be missing.

The steamer Arizona from Aspinwall brought $1,351,000 in specie.

Panama dates to the 12th are received.

A. A. Burton, late minister to Colombia, denies negotiating for the annexation of the isthmus to the United States.

Two Americans were killed and one badly wounded in Carthagena.

Nothing new from South America.

NEW YORK, September 23.—The bank statement shows an increase in loans of $630,000. In specie, $430,000. Increase in circulation $42,000. Decrease in deposits, $7,480,000. In legal tenders, $7,460,000.

The Merchants' Union express company have recovered the missing $70,000. The messenger was crazy. He wrote the superintendent what he had done, and finally returned.

NEW YORK, September 25.—The Republican convention at Syracuse nominated General McKeown for secretary of state, Calvin T. Hurlburd for controller, and Theodore C. Gates for treasurer.

From Boston—Destructive Fire.

BOSTON, September 21.—Mount Hope iron works on the Taunton river, covering three acres, have been destroyed by fire, loss $150,000, mostly insured. The works employed 250 men.

The Hartford depot, of the Hartford and New York steamship company, with its contents were also destroyed, loss $100,000.

From Chattanooga—Destructive Fire.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., September 20.—The Crutchfield house was totally destroyed by fire at six o'clock this evening. The fire was caused by the breaking of a number of kerosene lamps in the oil room. The flames communicated to the oil barrels and spread over the house in ten minutes. Little property was saved except in the lower stories.

The fire originated in a wooden addition and ascended to the upper story of the brick building. There were several narrow escapes, but no lives lost. No water was near. The fire engine at the machine shop of the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad served water through five hundred yards of hose, but too late for any effect. Other houses near were damaged, but not seriously. The loss is estimated at $150,000; insured for $45,000 in the Etna of Hartford, Home of New Haven, and other companies.

CHATTANOOGA, September 23.—J. J. Nelson, treasurer of the Wills Valley railroad, died at Trenton, Ga., on Saturday, 21st instant.

From General Pope's Department.

AUGUSTA, Ga., September 20.—The Republican of this morning contains an order from General Pope, ordering an election to be held in Georgia commencing Tuesday, Oct. 29, and continuing three days, at which registered voters may vote for or against a convention, and also for delegates to constitute said convention in case a majority of votes so decide. The senatorial districts established by the state laws are adopted for the purposes of representation.

The convention will consist of 169 delegates. Instructions are generally the same as issued for the election in Alabama.

From Savannah—Trouble with the Freedmen.

SAVANNAH, September 20.—On Saturday last Colonel E. Bucks and his overseer, Mr. Lancaster, of Camp Pickens, Charlton county, Georgia, had a difficulty with the negroes working on the place, which resulted in the shooting of a negro in the thigh. Next day two armed negroes went to the house to demand satisfaction of Lancaster.

Several shots were exchanged, and one negro killed and the other wounded. Mr. Lancaster was badly wounded and his horse killed. Lancaster and Mr. Nugazer left Monday for St. Marys. An armed band of thirty negroes seized them. Nugazer escaped by swimming a river. Lascaster was left in the hands of the negroes, and it is feared they killed him.

From Richmond—Republican Nominations.

RICHMOND, September 21.—The first nominations by the Republicans for the state convention were made to-day in Hanover county, being Mr. James, late revenue collector, and John B. Crenshaw, a Quaker minister. The city politicians are holding meetings to make nominations. All the names publicly mentioned so far are those of persons who have become residents since the war ended.

RICHMOND, September 20.—Another negro to-day entered suit against the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac railroad for non-admittance to a first class car on a first class ticket purchased in New York. The company has determined to stand the suit as a test question for railroads south.

From Raleigh, N. C.—Political Matters.

RALEIGH, September 20.—The Register, the recognized organ of the Republican party, denounces the recent Radical convention in bitter and scathing terms, and excommunicates Holden and his coadjutors.

The constitutional Union men will hold a mass meeting on Friday the 27th instant. All the most prominent and influential citizens have signed the call.

From Cincinnati—Donation to the Howard Association of New Orleans.

CINCINNATI, September 20.—In response to a telegram from the Howard association of New Orleans for assistance, the chamber of commerce donated $500, and appointed a committee of sixteen to solicit subscriptions from the citizens generally for the same object.

CINCINNATI, September 23.—The fall meeting at the Buckeye club course opened to day with an attendance of nearly ten thousand people. The first race, Buckeye stake, for three year olds, mile heats, was won by Swigart's Fannie Chatham, taking the last two heats. Time: 1:49—1:51. The first heat was won by Alexander's Newry. Time: 1:46½.

In the second race, Burnett house stake, $1500, three mile heats for all ages, Revolver, Lee Paul, Lancaster, Duke of Orleans, and Extra started. Extra won in two straight heats. Time: 5:32—5:36. Lancaster was lamed in the first heat, and was withdrawn in the second. Duke of Orleans was second, Revolver third, and Lee Paul fourth.

From St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, September 21.—Omaha dispatches confirm the report of peace with the bands mentioned. Great fears are felt for the safety of parties of engineers on the road between Fort Smith and Virginia city.

The Indians have notified the contractors that the road shall not be built beyond Fort Hays.

There is much excitement along the track and the laborers are leaving.

What the Indians Demand.

NORTH PLATTE via OMAHA, September 19.—The commision held a council with Spotted Tail, Turkey Leg, and other chiefs to-day.

The Indian ultimatum is the withdrawal of all the troops from the Powder river country and the abandonment of the Smoky Hill route of the Pacific railroad.

They also demand guns, ammunition, and presents. The commissioner will reply to-morrow. War now seems inevitable.

From Galveston—Decrease of Yellow Fever.

GALVESTON, September 21.—The epidemic is declining here from exhaustion of material. Interments for the week 69. The disease is desolating the chief towns in the interior, whither nurses and assistance have been dispatched. The Howard association issue an earnest remonstance against the return of unacclimated persons. A shipload of emigrants have arrived, but are not permitted to land.

Foreign News.

MANCHESTER, September 19.—A strong police force, taking the Fenians Kelly and Deasy to the depot, was attacked by a mob, and the prisoners rescued.

One policeman was killed and several injured. Many of the rioters were seriously injured.

MANCHESTER, September 20.—Another policeman is dead from injuries received during the riot. Kelly is still at large.

LIVERPOOL, September 20.—The Broker's Circular reports the week's cotton sales at 75,000 bales, of which 16,000 bales were for export and 5,000 for speculation. Stock 837,000 bales, of which 270,000 American.

LONDON, September 20.—Bismarck addressed the diplomats a note regarding the Salsburg conference, in which Prussia accepts the French representation in regard to the conference as a pledge of peace.

He makes many allusions to the unity of the German states which provoke comment from the French press as ignoring the treaty of Prague.

DUBLIN, September 21.—Arrests of suspected Fenian emissaries continue. The latest apprehension is that of James Walton, supposed to be from the United States and agent of the Fenian brotherhood. He has been imprisoned and will soon be examined on a charge of treason.

BERLIN, September 21.—The north German parliament has agreed upon a bill for the establishment of a consulate in New York. The appointment of representatives of the interests of the confederation will shortly be made.

King William, of Prussia, has determined upon a tour through south Germany, and will, during his journey, visit the sovereigns of Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and Baden.

COPENHAGEN, September 21.—The European squadron under command of Admiral Farragut is still lying in the harbor. A superb entertainment was given yesterday at the royal palace in honor of the admiral and the American minister, Hon. G. H. Yeoman, by the kings of Denmark and Greece. A speech of welcome to the distinguished guests was made by both sovereigns. King George, of Greece, in his remarks, alluded to the action of the American congress in regard to the Cretan affair, and expressed grateful acknowledgements for the sympathy shown by that body for the suffering Christians of the island of Crete. The greatest friendship toward the United States was exhibited by all present, among whom were the most noted men of the kingdom.

HEARTS CONTENT, September 21.—The cable of 1866 has been repaired and is working well.

A Shred of History.

[From the Washington Chronicle].

Among the dark revelations which from time to time are being made through published correspondence between rebels during the war, we find the following letter addressed by F. W. Pickens to General Beauregard, under date of April 8, 1861. It will be remembered that Beauregard was then in command of the rebel forces at Charleston, and Pickens was governor of South Carolina, and was about that time valiantly occupied in cutting off the market supplies from Major Anderson and his little command at Sumter:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Headquarters, April 8, 1867.

DEAR GENERAL: I inclose the within, and have no doubt Governor Houston will claim to be governor of Texas, and has made a requisition on the government at Washington for troops to suppress insurrection and repel invasion, and the government use it as a pretext to enter troops on the west part of Texas, and subjugate the state through the solicitation of their own governor.

The true way to stop it is to hang Houston immediately for treason. I have no doubt that some invasion is contemplated, and also with a view to control the province of Mexico next to the Rio Grande, so that if Spain and France take possession of Mexico, the government at Washington intend to prevent an extension and jurisdiction beyond the Rio Grande. Respectfully,

F. W. PICKENS.

General Beauregard.

A volume could scarcely express more faithfully the infernal spirit in which the war upon the government was commenced than does this savage and characteristic note of the traitor Pickens, who, with all his bloodthirstiness, it will not be forgotten carefully kept himself out of harm's way during the whole war. While his note is as cowardly as it is truculent, the country will accept it as the highest compliment which could have been paid to the patriotism and honor of General Houston.

Mr. Hunt, in his volume on the "Fourth Estate," thus sketches the peculiar duties of a journalist:

The man who once becomes a journalist must almost bid farewell to mental rest or mental leisure. If he fulfills his duties truthfully, his attention must be ever awake to what is passing in the world, and his whole mind must be devoted to the instant examination and discussion and record of current events. He has little time for literary idleness, with such literary labor on his shoulders. He has no days to spend on catalogues or in dreamy discursive researches in public libraries. He has no months to devote to the exhaustion of any one theme. What he has to deal with must be taken up at a moment's notice, be examined, tested, and dismissed at once; and thus his mind is ever kept occupied with the mental necessity of the world's passing hour."

Romance in Real Life.

[From the Chicago Republican.]

Many are the stories that have been told of rapid courtships, whereby two hearts have been brought to a realization of love in but a few hours time; improbable tales, too, have been related of queer matches, constituted by that eccentric little god, Cupid, and were it not that "truth is stranger than fiction," the most credulous could scarcely believe them. Chicago boasts now of the "best time on record," in the matrimonial line, the foundation for which is a strange and almost inconceivably short courtship and marriage. There are, though, romances in real life more astonishing than the pen of novelists has ever depicted. The end of romances in general is marriage, which is said to be the beginning of true happiness in life, but idealism does not always end when married life begins, as is exemplified by this story.

There came over from Germany several months ago a young girl, like Jeptha's daughter, "passing fair," accompanied by a man named Frederick Hermann. The impecuniosity of the latter caused the purse of the lassie to suffer somewhat, as she paid his fare. He was to marry her, but failed to do so, and on August 26 she instituted suit against him for the recovery of the money. The case came before Justice Schoenewald, but there was a sad termination to it. Hermann dropped down dead in the saloon below the office of the justice, No. 145 Randolph street, just as he was about to be arraigned for final examination. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that he had died from mental excitement. Now, the mention of the case in the daily press attracted the attention of a lone widower in Aurora, Illinois, who saw an opportunity to once more enjoy the bliss of wedded life. Mary Foesser, the German lassie alluded to, became the star of his fancy. He would win her though the heavens fall. Bereft of worldly aid, as he thought she was, he could secure her with little trouble.

Chicago was overflowing with sight-seers from the fair village of Aurora on Wednesday last, and among the number was Mr. Charles Deitrich, independent farmer, etc., the matrimonial inclined personage in question. He cared not for the tall spires, the oriental structures of marble, nor for the thousand attractions of the city; he was led on to the unseen inamorate by an impulse of his heart, and he could go in no other direction. Justice Schoenewald was visited by him yesterday, and to his hurried questions about the little German girl for whom he was searching, the stern man of the law could return only a crushing answer, and that was that Mary Foesser was married. Necessity is the mother of invention, and Mr. Deitrich resolved not to be balked by the advent of so trivial an adversity, so he eagerly inquired as to the chances left for obtaining a wife. The justice kindly aided him in his strange purpose, and went below into the saloon, where he had a brief conversation with a comely girl therein employed as servant. He stated to her the whole affair, and she acquiesced. The man and the willing lass met in the office of the justice up stairs a few moments later, and after a courtship of but three or four minutes were married. The name of the young lady is now Mrs. Deitrich nee Hilda Heering. But the story has not reached a finale. The bridegroom is about 45 years of age, rather prepossessing, and is well to do in the world's goods. Many years ago he married his first wife, who went the way of all flesh. His second was given to the flowing bowl so excessively, and to castigating her husband so fearfully, that the latter obtained a divorce. The twice-made widower is now in his glory, having, as he says, an affectionate better-half, a counterpart of his first love of long ago. The happy couple spent the night together at a hotel, and will to-day leave for the blooming town of Aurora.

What novel can equal such a romance in real life? Great improbabilities become facts, which, when known cause a passing wonder, and are soon treated as natural occurrences; while the writer of fiction is obliged to work up an improbable situation with the most plausible touches of art to give his pen-picture the air of truth. This wonderful tale of marriage on the wing is vouched for, and is perfectly true. Long may Cupid wave!

We once knew a man whom neither care nor sorrow seemed to affect; who, at sixty, had the disgestion and flow of spirits of twenty-one; who had acquired a large fortune apparently without an effort; who, in short, was the happiest of men, and the envy of all who knew him. "How is it," we said to him, "that you are so fortunate? What talisman secures to you all these advantages?" He smiled as he answered, "I have no talisman, unless it is to make the best of everything."

To make the best of everything! Like a key to a problem, the answer unlocked for us at once the whole of the great mystery. Life is too short and happiness too precious to consume the one or throw away the other in idle, unavailing regrets. Even if ill fortune swells into a flood, threatening to undermine the very ground on which we stand, is it not wiser to strive to bridge the torrent than to wait, bewailing our fate, till the waters swallow us? The weak and unstable succumb to destiny and are washed into oblivion. The wise and brave, accepting circumstances as they present themselves, plunge boldly, like Horatio of old, into the stream, win the further shore in safety, and earn immortal guerdon and renown.

Few men, if any, ever succeed in life who have not learned to make the best of everything, and generally, their success is in exact proportion to their adherence to the rule. Does a debtor fail? Every merchant knows that it is the best course, if the debtor is honest, to accept the offer of compromition, and not squander money in useless litigation. Have you became insolvent yourself? The worst thing you can do is to give up in despair, and say that it is folly to try and redeem yourself. Has a friend misjudged you or an enemy done you a secret harm? Don't lose precious moments in sentimental grief over ingratitude, or passionate threats at your wrong-doer; but go to work on the instant to shame your friend or to disarm your foe.

Had Astor when he was a poor German emigrant made up his mind that the attempt to be a millionaire was absurd, he might have died a beggar in the almshouse. Had Washington when Cornwallis pursued him across New Jersey with thirty thousand troops, said that it was hopeless to save America with his fragment of an army, we might all this day be in slavery to Great Britain; but he said, "If the British cross the Delaware, I will cross the Alleghanies, and if they are victorious there, I will fly to the wilderness beyond;" and this resolution never to give up, but always to make the best of everything, led to the victory of Trenton and the freedom of the republic.

We are familiar with people who whine continually at fate. To believe them, never was lot so hard as theirs; yet those who know their history will generally tell you that their life has been but one long tale of opportunities disregarded or misfortunes otherwise deserved. Perhaps they were born poor. In this case they hate the rich, and have always hated them, but without having emulated their prudence or energy. Perhaps they have seen their rivals more favored by accident.

Beer Drinking in Europe.

The Hopfen Zeitung (Hop Gazette), of Nuremberg, gives some curious statistics respecting the consumption of beer in Europe. The average quantity consumed by each person in the year 1866 was 27 quarts, but it differs greatly in the various countries. In Bavaria the average is 134 quarts; in England 113; in Wurtemberg, 104; in Belgium, 80; in Brunswick, 68; in Thuringia, 60; in Saxony, 39; in Holland, 39; in Baden, 31; in Austria, 32; in Switzerland, 20; in Prussia, 19.6; in France, 15; in Sweden, 11.5; in Spain, 2; in Russia, 1.3; in Italy, 1; and in Portugal, 6.8. Of the capitals of Europe, Munich relatively consumes the most beer, the average drank by each of its inhabitants being 426 quarts a year. The Londoner drinks on the average 188 quarts a year; the Viennese, 131; the Frankforter, 43; the Berliner, 28; and the Parisian, 22.

HOW TO USE WEALTH FOR THE BENEFIT OF YOUR COUNTRY.—Horace Greeley proposes that an appropriate building be erected at New York for the perpetual exhibition and encouragement of American manufactures, and he offers to devote to this purpose his accumulated savings for forty years—the sum of $200,000—guaranteeing that the edifice should be opened on the 4th of July, 1876. By that time he hopes that America, through the auspices of the American institute, will be able to challenge the world to competition in the production of the mechanic and other arts.

Gen. Butler's Financial Views.

General Butler, still in Washington, has thought it proper to take some notice of the rather free strictures upon some views lately expressed by himself and published in the Boston Advertiser. The following appears in a late issue of the same journal:

To the editors of the Boston Daily Advertiser—The correspondent of the New York Evening Post of September 5, signing himself "A Hard Money Radical Republican," has coupled the views upon finance which I cursorily expressed with those set forth in the speeches of Mr. Pendleton of Ohio.

At the time of my reported conversation I had not seen Mr. Pendleton's views and only a resume of them since. The difference between Mr. Pendleton and myself is radical and cannot well be overlooked without intellectual blindness.

Mr. Pendleton desires the government by an exercise of its supreme power to issue an amount of its promises to pay on demand without interest i.e., legal tenders, and force its creditors by interest-bearing bonds to take such issue in payment. Of course such issue would at once depreciate the currency, and would be virtual repudiation, which I have not favored either directly or indirectly.

My proposition is that the government shall offer to the country a new loan, secured by interest in currency bonds, payable at long date, to which all future issues of government loans shall be assimilated, so as to make one class of government securities only, instead of the nineteen different classes we have now, and with the proceeds of such loan pay off our highest class of interest gold bearing bonds as they become due; not to increase and thereby depreciate the currency, but to render the currency and credit of the government more stable and therefore all the more valuable by reducing the debt by a reduction of interest and increase of taxable property, causing our loans to be taken up in our own country so that we may not be obliged to pay tribute to foreign capital as we now do, at a rate of interest exceeding three times what they charge their own governments.

To the assertion of the correspondent that "a dollar is a dollar, containing twenty-four and three-quarters grains of gold," I answer that the value of that dollar, both in silver and gold, has been three times changed by the government, and that a dollar in silver or a dollar in gold now is worth not so much as the early coinage, to say nothing of legal tender dollars.

To the assertion that by this course the public creditor by 5-20 bonds is injured, I reply that I propose to pay him when his obligation falls due in precisely the same currency or money which the government has provided for every other creditor, public or private, to be paid in, and that which it is declared upon the back of every legal tender note he may be paid in, the best and most valuable money that the credit of the country can sustain, bearing relation to-day to gold as 1.43 to 1; while the money that these 5-20 creditors lent the government (being the best which the then credit of the government could afford) stood in relation to gold as 2.00 and 2.85 to 1. If the government pays them in a currency from 50 to 100 per cent. better than they lent the government, of what have they to complain? save that the government will not tax the people to pay them a usurious shave, or, in other words, will not tax the people to enable the capitalist to make a speculation out of the war necessities of the government.

History tells of no government that has yet paid its creditors all they loaned to it and thus made them whole, and I doubt whether good faith, good conscience, or equity requires this government to pay creditors three times what it received from them, with interest at six per cent. on the treble amount. Of course if any contract to do that be shown, the Jew shall have his bond, but not one drop of Christian blood.

It is not true that I have "called for the issue of any more legal tender notes," save to take the place of bank notes withdrawn from circulation, and thus save the people the interest thereon. I do not intend to argue these questions—only to correct misrepresentation.

I beg leave, in closing, to repeat that I do not propose to depreciate but to enhance the value of the currency, not to do injustice to the public creditor, but to pay him according to the letter and spirit of his obligation, and to secure him from the danger of repudiation, which will surely follow an attempt at enforcement upon the people by their own votes of an unjust and unconscionable transaction under the guise of a contract.

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

The Walled Lake.

A correspondent of the Chicago Journal, writing from Des Moines, Iowa, says:

I saw not long since an innuendo in a Chicago paper that the walled lake of this state was probably a myth. It is not only a fact, but two facts. There is one in Wright county, and one in Sac county. They are indeed wonderful, and the former is almost incomprehensible. H. C. Ripley furnishes the following description of the one in Sac county: He says it is situated in the north part of township 87, range 36, and south part of township 87, range 36. Its greatest length is about five miles, and from one-half to two miles in width. It is a beautiful sheet of clear water, with a nice gravelly bottom.

At the northeast end of the lake there commences a beautiful gravel bank, gradually sloping into the water, and continues around on the north side for about one quarter of a mile. The wall then commences, the banks become steep, and average from three to six feet in height. The lake gets wider, and as it widens the walls are heavier, and at its greatest width the walls are very thick, containing great bowlders. About one mile and a fourth from the east end of the lake, up the north bank there is a levee from two to five feet in height across a low piece of ground resembling very much the levees on the lower Mississippi river, with this exception: next to water is stone. The levee gradually ascends to the top, dirt being thrown on the stone, and a person can ride round on the top of it in safety.

Further west, along the shore, there is a slough over one hundred yards in width, and the levee across it here is from five to eight feet in height. The lake, a short distance west of this, begins to grow narrow, the walls cease to be so thick or to contain such great stone, and as you approach the west end stone is not so frequently seen in the banks. At the west end of the lake a slough comes in from the Boyer. The lake then makes quite a circle around to the south, and forms a most beautiful peninsula of nearly two hundred acres of high, rolling, excellent prairie land, and approaches so near the main waters of the lake as to leave room barely wide enough for a wagon to pass. A settler has put a pair of bars across the isthmus, and in this manner has obtained a pasture of two hundred acres securely fenced all around. The wall commences on the east side of the Boyer slough, and continues around the south side of the lake to the northeast corner, and levees are thrown up at all the low places. The levee is so complete that a person can walk almost entirely around the lake on it.

At several places on the south side, on high ground, embankments were thrown up, as though they intended to form breastworks. They made splendid places for a person to walk up from behind unseen to shoot ducks and geese on the lake. I don't know whether they were built for that purpose or not; but I think the design was splendid, and it is fine fun to lie behind them and shoot aquatic birds as they swim in the lake or light in it. The levee in many places is built of stone, gravel, and dirt, all combined—in other places of stone covered from the north or south side with dirt, the real rich black soil. It is in fact a real curiosity, and the more you look at it the more you wonder who did it. How came those great, large stones, of two or more tons in weight in the banks, and in many places lying upon top of the smaller stones. Who made such perfect and complete levees all around the lake in the low places? The walls resemble very much the cobble-stone fences seen around farms in Pennsylvania, western New York, Michigan, and Indiana. It is a splendid place for fishing, and abounds in the very finest quality of fish in great abundance.

Cavalry soldiers in the English army are obliged to serve twenty-one years, instead of eighteen like the infantry—before they receive a "medal."

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

THE ADIEU.—Our missionaries for India and China were met by a large audience, on the evening of September 10, in the Seventh-street Church. The opening exercises were conducted by Rev. Brothers Woodruff and Reed. The several missionaries, that is, Rev. J. L. Humphrey, Robert Hoskins, F. M. Wheeler, and E. S. Todd, were introduced to the audience by the corresponding secretary, and addressed the meeting in the order in which their names here appear. It is sufficient to say, that the narratives they severally gave of their conversation, call to the ministry, and choice of the foreign mission work, most satisfactorily impressed the Church with the conviction that, so far as human agency was concerned, no mistake had been made in the selection of these men for "the high places of the field." Rev. Dr. Andrews, in behalf of the Church, which is our Missionary Society, ably and affectionately addressed the missionaries and their wives, who were present with them, assuring them of the remembrance, the sympathy, and support of the Church, at the same time uttering, what is of moment to be ever on the hearts of missionaries, that the Church at home is largely dependent upon the zeal and fidelity of her sons and daughters abroad. Rev. Dr. Butler, the founder of our missions in India, being unexpectedly present, was called upon to say a few words, which he did, though the evening had worn away to ten o'clock; holding the deeply interested audience, while he told them of the fruit which had already been won in our mission in the persons of converted natives, who are now preachers of the word in India, and members of our conference there; and how, on the very ground from whence he had to flee in the time of the Sepoy rebellion, and on which there lay about him the bodies of forty-seven slain Christians, there was now a Christian Church, and there a session of our annual conference had been held! A few remarks from the corresponding secretary, followed by an expression from Brother Humphrey, of gratitude to the corresponding secretary and to the board, for attention to himself and associates, was succeeded by the doxology and the benediction. A more edifying and altogether effective missionary meeting than this proved to be, the people said, "we have never attended."

THE MISSIONARY RECORDER.—This periodical is published monthly by our mission in Foochow, China It is an octavo form of sixteen pages, well printed on good paper, and is full of useful matter about China and missions in the east. The editorial articles are well written, and the selections are judicious. We have just been reading number 7, for July, and have been instructed and interested, particularly with the first article, original, on "Native Agency in Missionary Work," and on "The Cotton Plant in China." We would be glad if we could extend its circulation. One dollar per annum, gold, of course. Send us subscriptions, paid.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—The departure of the three missionaries, Humphrey, Wheeler, and Hoskins, for India, occurred on the 11th of September, at half-past one o'clock. They were met on board the good steamer Manhattan, Williams & Guyon, agents, by the officers of the board and many friends and relatives, which made the occasion one of great interest, many having been attracted to the place, both of our ministers and members, from the reports made to them of the meeting held on the previous evening. The Manhattan is one of a fine line of in the Rising Star, from the foot of Canal street, at 12 o'clock.

AN ORPHAN'S OFFERING.—We have at hand three dollars from an orphan boy who has just entered college. He is the son of a missionary whose mortal remains sleep in the bosom of the great deep. This lad, his only child, has been sending us missionary money ever since he was able to earn any, his first gift being one dollar, while yet a very small boy, which he earned by sawing wood. The Church may encourage herself with such sons growing up in her midst, and "be not weary" in the support of the missionary cause, seeing the sons of her servants come to take the place of the fathers.

RACINE SCANDINAVIAN.—Rev. A. Haagensen, of the Racine and Milwaukie appointments, writes that the conference year has been one of prosperity. Sixty-five have been received on probation, seventeen have been received with certificates of membership from our missions in our foreign Scandinavian missions. Our collections for the year: $61 for missions, $11 53 for fifth collection, $3 22 for tract cause, $1 50 for Sunday School Union, $9 45 for Bible cause, $11 15 for Extension Society, $200 for renting churches.

The Bangor Whig says Miss Blake, who alone was saved in the Mt. Desert disaster, was not informed of the extent of the disaster for several days, and up to that time supposed that she washed off the boat by a wave, and that no others were involved. She says the last she remembered was one of the gentlemen standing by the mast and exclaiming, "isn't this glorious!" At that instant the boat went over.

"Open Thou My Lips."

There is a deep experience indicated by the above words of the Psalmist. Concious guilt seals the lips. The disobedient child stands mute before its parent; the criminal is silent before the judge; and it is on this principle that, at the final day, every mouth shall be stopped, because all the world will be guilty before God.

David had sinned greviously: his soul was stained with blood-guiltiness; and though when the prophet charged home upon him his crime, he was ready to confess his guilt, yet this did not remove his sense of it. He was dumb; he opened not his mouth when God visited upon him his iniquity, because he was concious that the chastisement was deserved. But neither chastisement nor confession, nor sacrifice, could remove the sense of guilt which shut his lips to that joyful praise and adoration which he had been accustomed to render to God. Hence he prayed 'Open thou my lips.' Remove this sense of guilt which shuts my lips and palsies my tongue. Neither tears or burnt offerings could do it. God only could do it by such a renewed manifestation of his love as gave assurance that the sin was pardoned. That done, and his tongue should sing aloud of God's righteousness.

This is among the deepest experiences of the human soul. Bunyan's pilgrim experienced it when, at the sight of the cross, his burden fell from off his back; the broken-hearted sinner experiences it when God manifests himself to him as reconciled through the death of his son, and the wandering Christian experiences the same when God brings him back from his wanderings, and restores unto him the joy of his salvation. How readily, then, does the heart burst forth in praise! The soul is humbled in the dust before God, but its crushing sense of guilt is removed, and though the voice may not be heard, yet the soul leaps for joy.

How many professing Christians need to offer this prayer of the Psalmist! How many have their lips sealed by a consciousness that they have wandered from God! They cannot praise him as they once could; they cannot speak to others of the love of Christ; they cannot call upon them to taste and see that the Lord is good, as they once did. And they never again will do this, unless God opens their lips. It is not a work which either men or angels can do. The guilt of one sin is sufficient to sink a world to hell; to cancel such guilt requires the sacrifice of the cross; to remove a sense of it from the soul requires the infinite love and compassion of God. 'Against thee, thee only have I sinned,' is the cry of the spirit, and none but God can take away its anguish. When he does this, when he removes the guilt of a whole life, and ordains praise from lips defiled with cursing and bitterness, what a wonderful work does he perform.—Recorder.

The Father of Thirty-Seven Children.

On Thursday last, a German named John Haeffler, living in Lancaster, followed to the grave his thirty-third child; and he was the father of thirty-seven children. Haeffler was married three times. His first marriage took place in Germany, when he was twenty-one years of age. With this wife he had seventeen children. At four successive accouchments triplets, twins twice, and the last a single birth. Shortly after the latter event the wife died. He was again married; and the issue of the second wife was fifteen children—seven twins and the eighth a single birth. This wife also died shortly after the last birth. His third and present wife has thus far presented him with five children, one at a birth. The sex of the children were nineteen boys and eighteen girls, only four of whom are now living—but whether the living are all issues of the last wife or part of the previous wives, we have not ascertained. Haeffler is now fifty-two years of age, of medium size, and of hardy, vigorous constitution. In some sections of Germany a premium is awarded people who produce a certain number of children. Haeffler lived in that section, and was the recipient of one hundred guilders previous to leaving. He apparently labors under the impression that a similar reward awaits him in this country. If there is any State in the Union providing for such cases, the authorities had better send along the greenbacks.

Good Advice.

We recommend the following extract from a late speech of ex-United States and confederate states senator from Mississippi, Hon. A. G. Brown, to the digestion of our rebel friends. It will do them good. He says:

"And now, in conclusion, just one word. Let us conquer our prejudices. Instead of inviting emigration from Europe, let us invite it from the north. We want Yankee capital—Yankee enterprise—and to get all of this we must agree to accept Yankee politicians. After the Yankee comes his politics won't be much in his way; when he sees the dollar he will throw politics, like physic, 'to the dogs.' Let him come with his money and all his go-aheadativeness. There is no danger of his tampering with the negro now, and I promise him a cordial welcome so far as I am concerned. I want these fields cultivated; I want workshops; I want commercial vim; I want life in this dear land of ours, and to get all this I am ready to forget the past and look only to the future."

If the southern people will rise so far above their passions and prejudices as to respect the rights of all men, and welcome thrift and industry from every direction, the south will soon be the most prosperous section of the country.—Memphis Post.

Military Order.

The following important order was issued from headquarters yesterday:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT, New Orleans, La., September 19, 1867. General Orders No. 34.

All persons subject to parole under the terms of the surrender of the rebel armies, who, after the 9th day of April, 1865, exiled themselves from the United States, and have since returned, and who are now, or may subsequently become domiciled within the limits of the states of Louisiana or Texas, are hereby required to give to the nearest military commander, within thirty days after a knowledge of this order shall reach him, the parole required of the rebel army surrendered by General Lee on the 9th day of April, 1865. The parole will be given in duplicate—one copy to be retained by the person giving it, the other to be forwarded by the officer administering it to these headquarters.

By command of Brevet Major General Joseph A. Mower.

GEORGE L. HARTSUFF, Assistant Adjutant General.

General Sheridan.

A St. Louis correspondent of the New York Herald, under date of September 10, in giving an account of the reception of General Sheridan at St. Louis, says:

General Sheridan knew of this intended political demonstration being prepared for him before he left New Orleans. Had it been Grant or Sherman he would have flanked the Radicals by proceeding to Quincy and going west unexpectedly by the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad; but Sheridan came straight to St. Louis. One thing is evident to-day: personal contact with General Sheridan has dissipated any idea on the part of the leading Radicals that the general will ever be a candidate for president. They say he is true to congress, and can be relied upon in a military capacity, but that he is so thoroughly wrapped up in military duty that he won't do for a presidential candidate. Perhaps he was never thought of in that connection by the party generally; but it may not be known that one paper in Kansas and two in Missouri have his name flying at the head of their editorial columns as a candidate for president.

Cotton for Okra.

"What do they intend to do with so much okra?" exclaimed a member of the recent Camp Hunt party while they were going through a large cotton field en route for Blount county. The boys laughed heartily at his mistake, and found it hard to convince him that it was cottou. He got out of the ambulance and examined the stalks carefully, still insisting on his opinion. He had seen too much cotton in Louisiana to be deceived as to the crop before him. True, the pods were exactly like what grew in Louisiana, still the stalks and leaves resembled okra. He supposed for some time that his companions took him for a "green horn," and were trying "to put the bug on him." With much reluctance, however, he yielded when a pod was broken open and the white silky contents were exposed. When seen growing, the resemblance between cotton and okra is so great his companions need not have laughed at his innocent and natural mistake. They ought to have remembered there is a species of cotton called the okra cotton, it being so much like okra. We venture the assertion that some of them know as little about okra as our unsophisticated friend does about cotton. All of us are liable to be mistaken, especially the cooped-up denizens of a populous city when we stray off into the rural districts. We, ourselves, once in Pennsylvania, in July, mistook buckwheat for cotton.—Montgomery Sentinel.

A Modest Widow.

The following story concerning an amiable and modest widow lady who resides in Mason county, and in which our old friend, Fred. Weeden, the sheriff, figured conspicuously, was told to us a few days since, and which we think is too good to be lost. It appears that soon after the widow's husband had paid the debt of nature, leaving her his legatee, a claim was brought against the estate by his brother, and a process was served upon him by our sheriff, who by the way happened to be a widower of middle age. She was much alarmed, and meeting with a female friend, she exclaimed with agitation, "What do you think? the sheriff has been after me!" "Well," said the considerate lady, with perfect coolness, "He is a very fine man." "But he says he has an attachment for me," replied the widow. "Well, I have long suspected that he was attached to you, my dear." "But you don't understand; he says I must go to court." "Oh, that's quite another affair, my child; don't you go so far as that—it is his place to come and court you."

AN ASTONISHED EFFENDI.—In one of Lady Duff Gordon's sprightly letters from Thebes, the annexed incident is related:

I settled my accounts with no men, and made an inventory in Arabic, which Sheykh Yusuff wrote for me, and which we laughed over hugely. How to express a sauce boat, a pie dish, etc., in Arabic was a poser. A genteel Effendi who sat by, at last burst out in uncontrollable amazement: "There is no god but God; is it possible that four or five Franks can use all those things to eat, drink, and sleep on a journey?" (N.B.—I fear the Franks will think the stock very scanty). Whereupon Master Achmet, with the swagger of one who has seen cities and men, held forth: "O Effendi! that is nothing; our lady is almost like the children of the Arabs; one dish or two, a piece of bread, a few dates, and peace," (as we say, there is an end of it). "But thou shouldest see the merchants of Scandareeh—three tablecloths, forty dishes to each soul, seven plates of all sorts, and seven knives, and seven forks, and seven spoons, large and small, and seven different glasses for wine, and beer, and water." "It is the will of God," replied the Effendi, rather put down; "but it must be a dreadful fatigue to them to eat their dinner."

SUMMER UNIFORMS.—An "old soldier" makes a strong plea in the Army and Navy Journal for summer uniforms. He says:

The heavy woolen clothing which the rank and file of our army are condemned to wear under the burning rays of a midsummer sun, whether upon the western plains or in the southern portion of our country is almost unendurable during the months of June, July, and August, and I, as well as numbers of the best men in our army, believe that it is only necessary to bring this grievance—for assuredly grievance it is—fully before the eyes and minds of those who have the power to grant relief, and it will be done. I do not presume to suggest what material should be used. I would simply ask, as a special favor to the poor, sweltering, melting, perspiring humanity—at least that portion serving our government, and willing to fight and die, if necessary, for the honor and glory of our stars and stripes—that we might obtain the boon of "lighter clothing" during summer. Anything under God's heavens would be better than the heavy woolen cloth we are now compelled to wear, both summer and winter.

Those who have worn Uncle Sam's blue at the south during mid-summer will sympathize with the complaint of this old campaigner.

A General Council at Rome.

The New York Journal of Commerce, speaking of the general council which is about to be summoned by the pope, to convene at Rome, says:

The purpose is commonly believed to be, the assertion, in the most solemn manner, of the infallibility of the church as represented by its bishops and other dignitaries, and its papal head. This is an old doctrine of the Roman Catholic church, the very foundation of its power; but the effect of reaffirming it will be in all probability temporarily, at least, to strengthen the church.

The dogma of the immaculate conception of the virgin was one generally entertained by Catholics for centuries, but its promulgation in the form of a decree in 1854, though actually adding nothing new to the volume of Catholic doctrine, was not without a visible effect upon the apparent prosperity of the church.

The Cholera in Italy.

The consul at Palermo, under date of August 30, writes to the state department as follows:

I have to report the continuance of the cholera epidemic in this city from the ninth to the eighteenth. It increased to five hundred cases daily, but since then it has gradually decreased, so that we had only about one hundred cases yesterday. The city is re-assuming a cheerful aspect, but the havoc that this dreadful disease has caused among the lower classes is incredible. The number of dead is thus far estimated at five thousand, which, added to five thousand one hundred and thirty-two last fall, makes a loss of about ten thousand persons in less than one year, or five per cent. of the population of the city.

THE CHINESE.—The Chinese were burning coal before the Christian era; they were printing A. D. 581 with black, and lithographing about three centuries later; yet another century, and they were using movable types of terra cotta. Porcelain, watertight compartments in ships, portraits for catching criminals—all these were known to them in those days. And it even appears that 119 years before Christ, these celestials used leather money. The Chinese had also the tradition of the Madonna and child. The symbol was the Tien-How, the queen of heaven represented as nursing her infant son, who holds a lotus-bud in his hand as a symbol of the new birth. There is a model of this group in porcelain in the Ethnological museum of Copenhagen.

The little I have seen of the world and know of the history of mankind teaches me to look upon the errors of others with sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it has passed through; the brief pulsation of joy; the feverish inquietude of hope and fear; the pressure of want; the desertion of friends; the scorn of the world; threatening vices within—health gone—happiness gone—I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellow-man with him from whose hands it came.—Longfellow.

It is calculated that Europe maintains four millions of soldiers in time of peace. The average annual value of the labor of these idlers is estimated at $1,500,000,000. The cost of maintaining them is $700,000,000. The result is that the world is $700,000,000 poorer every year, instead of being $800,000,000 richer from the profits of their labor, which would otherwise be employed. This is only the cost of armies in times of peace. In war the expenses are increased prodigiously.

Information Wanted,

BY SUMANTIA FIELDS, LIVING IN THE town of Belton, Texas, of her two Sons, JAMES and DOLPHOS, who were living when last heard from with William Wells, near Pontchatula, La. Any information concerning them addressed to Rev. T. B. Ferguson, Belton, Texas, will be thankfully received. se26

INFORMATION WANTED—BY ANSLEY Moore, from Pitt county, North Carolina, who did belong to one Mr. Able Moore, a farmer. Ansley Moore was sold from North Carolina about forty years ago; her mother's name was Silvia Moore, and she also belonged to the said Mr. Moore. Her father, two sisters, Julia and Ellen, and two brothers, Stephen and Lewis, belonged to a Mr. Joseph Daniels. She has uncles named Dublin, Prince, Pompe, and Jermey, all out of the Moore family.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF HARRISON ANDERSON or York Emanuel Anderson. Harrison formerly belonged to Mr. G. W. Squires of New Orleans, La.; also his mother. Harrison was taken away from here a day or two before the Federal army arrived before this city. He is supposed to be in some part of Texas. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his mother, Rosanna Anderson, New Orleans, La. se27

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

Light Beyond.

Beyond the stars that shine in golden glory,
Beyond the calm, sweet moon,
Up the bright ladder saints have trod before thee,
Soul! thou shalt venture soon.
Secure with Him who sees thy heart-sick yearning,
Safe in his arms of love,
Thou shalt exchange the midnight for the morning
And thy fair home above.

O! it is sweet to watch the world's night wearing,
The Sabbath morn come on,
And sweet it were the vineyard labor sharing,
Sweeter the labor done.
All finished! all the conflict and the sorrow,
Earth's dream of anguish o'er;
Deathless there dawns for thee a nightless morrow
On Eden's blissful shore.

Patience! then patience! soon the pangs of dying
Shall all forgotten be,
And thou, through rolling spheres rejoicing, flying
Beyond the wayless sea,
Shalt know hereafter where the Lord doth lead thee,
His darkest dealings trace;
And by those fountaids where his love will feed thee
Behold Him face to fabe!

Correspondence from Mobile.

MOBILE, Sept. 19, 1867.

Dear Advocate:—This year had promised to be one of plenty, but present indications are that we shall fall far short of our former hopeful anticipations. There is a cause, however, and it is this: about the time the crops were ready to lay bye, registration began, the newly-fledged citizens as a matter of course registered. This inflamed the minds of the planters, and the result was that a great many were driven away from the plantations. Now, the "harvest time," the "picking" season is upon us, but the field-hands have most of them sought and obtained employment elsewhere, and their services cannot be had on the farms from whence they were driven. The cotton crop is now in danger of being destroyed for want of hands to gather it. The planters blame the radicals, and say that the freedmen have been induced to leave the plantations by designing politicians, while they themselves are to blame for it all.

The "Confederates" have adopted a new plan, by which they expect to bring the "Rads" to ruin. They advocate (and are doing it to some extent) discharging all colored laborers, cotton-samplers, store porters, &c., and filling their places with whites. This is what they call retaliation for what Mayor Horton has done for colored men by appointing them on the police and on corporation work.

The Union Republicans of Mobile city and county held a Nominating Convention on yesterday, and nominated the following ticket to represent them in the Constitutional Convention:

A. Griffin, Col R. Buck, and G. Horton, (whites,) and John Carraway and Ovide Gregory, (colored.)

Carraway represents the American and Gregory the Creole portion of "American citizens of African decent."

About two or three months ago the powder magazine was broken open, and a large amount of powder stolen. Day before yesterday the powder was found near the outskirts of the city. Several men, "conservatives," were arrested, and are now in custody, charged with the robbery. Taking this in connection with the spirit and tone of the rebel press of the city, it is evident that another bloody massacre was intended about the first of October. When the trial takes place I shall give you items of whatever facts shall come to light regarding the affair.

Correspondence from Texas.

BELTON, Aug. 31, 1867.

Editor Advocate—I informed you some time ago that I had succeeded in organizing a society in Belton, and that I had purchased a house and lot there for church and school purposes. Since that time the good Lord has carried on his work among us, the devil and our Southern brethren notwithstanding. We number there now seventy-seven members, and have a day and a Sunday school. At the Three-forks of Little river, 8 miles below, we have a society of ten members, with the prospect of having a large church, in the future.

Some three months ago we extended our operations as far down the river as Cameron, which is thirty-five miles below Belton. There, amidst much opposition and slander, we succeeded in organizing a society of twenty-eight members. Here I wish to record to the praise and credit of Bro. Peter Jackson, a layman in the Church South, for much and timely assistance. He is open, candid, generous, brave; a loyal man to the Government, and a friend to the old Church and her missionaries. May the Lord raise up many such to the church.

Some time ago I received from the Church South Rev. A. C. Fairnan, formerly member of the Rio Grande Conference, and put him to labor on Marlin mission, at the falls of the Brazos.

Also, Ruce Brown, (col.,) a good man, and a very good preacher, who is assisting me here on the Belton circuit.

Both of these brethren contemplate connecting themselves with the Conference at its next session.

I heve just closed a camp meeting at Aikin, twelve miles above Belton, on the Leon river There were quite a number of conversions, and twenty-eight accessions to the church. On yesterday I baptised fifteen—one by effusion and fourteen by immersion.

At my last appointment at Cameron, I failed to get there, on account of sickness in my family; and from an account confidentially given me by a friend a few days ago, it seems it was a fortunate thing for me that I did not go, for arrangements were made by a mob to accommodate my neck to a halter. But, sir, none of these things move me, neither ount I my life dear unto myself, and shall continue to go wherever duty calls.

Our cause, sir, is bound to succeed in Texas. Our church has grown here beyond all precedent and the most sanguine expectations of her most active missionaries. It is true our work is mostly among the colored people; they are a great deal better material to build up a church out of than people are apt to imagine—naturally religiously minded, active, zealous, and liberal to a fault.

But there are many whites who have joined us, and many more who are preparing to come. The Church South has and is rapidly doing away with some of the greatest peculiarities belonging to Methodism. This has wounded deeply some of her best members, who are determined to seek the "old land marks." May the good Lord hasten the time when all shall return to the simplicity of the faith as it was taught and practised by the fathers of the church.

Yours, &c., T. B. FERGUSON.

Robert Peel and John Wesley.

The father of the distinguished statesman had high esteem for the great Methodist leader; and Mr. Dunn gives the following incident in their intercourse:

When the first Sir Robert Peel was solicited to give ground for a Wesleyan chapel at Tamworth, near to which was his mission, he said to the applicants, some of whom were his own workmen, "My lads, do not build your chapel too large; people like to go to a little chapel well filled better than a large one half full. I often go into your chapels at Manchester, Liverpool and London, and have no wish to find myself alone in a large pew, and pointed out as Sir Robert Peel." He also added, "I have left most of my works in Lancashire under the management of Wesleyans; they make most excellent servants. Also, when I resided in Lancashire I asked Mr. Wesley, at one of the Manchester conferences, to come to breakfast with me. He agreed, on condition that he might bring some of his children, and he brought thirty-six of his preachers with him." Wesley refers to the occasion in his journal thus: "Aug. 27, 1787, I was invited to breakfast at Berry by Mr. Peel, a calico printer, who, a few years ago, began with five hundred pounds, and is now supposed to have gained fifty thousand pounds. O what a miracle if he lose not his soul!"

"The Faith Once Delivered to the Saints."

BY PROF. J. B. JAQUES, A. M.

Jude exhorts the Church to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." "Once delivered unto the saints," does Jude say? Yes, "once only," "once for all"—for so means the original term. The faith or doctrine of Christ was then fully delivered, needing no repetition, no modification, no improvement. The faith or doctrine is "delivered" or recorded in the New Testament, and to the "spiritually minded," who alone are qualified to judge, this spiritual revelation is clear, consistent, beautiful and perfect, harmonizing perfectly with the Divine character, and meeting perfectly the wants and woes of the human soul.

The central, fundamental ideas of this venerable old "faith once delivered to the saints," are—

1. The divine and infallible inspiration of the Holy Scriptures.

2. The depravity of the human soul, desperate and incurable by any human artifice, and the consequent divine and merciful provision of a complete regeneration of the soul.

3. The vicarious atonement of Christ to meet the past requirements of the violated divine law.

4. The divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, qualifying him to be our perfect Saviour.

5. Repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, as the absolute condition of salvation.

6. Everlasting life in heaven as the reward of the persevering believer, and everlasting death as the punishment of the persevering unbeliever.

This is, substantially, the faith once delivered—its one side radiant with the smile of mercy—its other side shadowed by the stern brow of Almighty Justice.

These are the primal doctrines of the New Testament. Abolish these and the whole doctrinal structure of Christianity falls to the ground, a shapeless mass of ruins! These are the mighty old gospel truths that inspired apostles, alarmed sinners, developed stalwart Christian character, educated men for sublime living and sublime dying. These are the forces that operated through the early Church, sweeping over the whole Roman world and prostrating every pagan temple.

But the apostle proceeds in the next verse to tell the Church that there were "certain men crept in unawares," who were corrupting this wonder-working old "faith once delivered to the saints." As it was then, so it is now. "Certain men have crept in unawares" to rob us of our old gospel faith, and then in its place offer to our starving souls nothing but the husks of a "philosophy, falsely so-called." And yet, wonder of wonders! these men have the cool audacity to call themselves christians, whilst absolutely denying every one of these very fundamental doctrines, to deny which is to spring headlong into infidelity! So the world has ever thought till now. This is "Modern Infidelity," "Broad Churchism," "Liberal Christianity" that has 'crept in unawares.' You see it "creeping unawares" into our popular books, into our monthly magazines, into our weekly and daily secular newspapers, and, of late, into a leading public journal, professedly religious, and even a denominational organ; and, finally, into the christian church and pulpit, so called.

They affirm that the faith was not "once for all" delivered to the saints, but needs correcting, revising, liberalizing, modernizing to adapt it to this age of progress. They say they are not infidels, they are not skeptics, they are Christian reformers. The reform they seem to be endeavoring to effect is to broaden the doctrinal platform of the Church, so as to make room for Unitarians and Universalists, Rationalists and Infidels, Skeptics and Scoffers! This is Broad-Church theology carried to its logical results.

While theoretically and professedly denying all need of creeds and confession of faith, yet practically they adopt a creed, and propagate dogmas as zealously as any advocates of orthodoxy. With a wholesome dread of outraging the christian sentiment of this nation, they dare not throw off their disguise. With honeyed phrase they compliment the beauties of Christianity, while they are stealthily bleeding out its life-blood, and murdering immortal sculs in the Church and out of it.

When they have denied the infallible inspiration of the Bible, it is a sorry compliment to the Bible to say it is in a certain degree inspired. So is Milton's great epic poem in a certain degree inspired. But where is the solid rock on which the weary soul shall rest its faith? When they have denied the need of regeneration and of a Divine Saviour, it is a poor compliment to Christianity, and a Satanic mockery to the sincere penitent, to extol Christian culture as a means of eradicating sin from the human heart. A soul thoroughly awake to its desperate condition, and terribly in earnest for salvation, will instinctively spurn such physicians as these, and cry out for an Almighty Saviour.

When they have stripped from our adorable Christ his all-glorious crown of Divine Royalty, it is a blasphemous compliment to offer him a paltry human crown. While they deny that our Christ is the Supreme God, they condescend to admit that he is the supreme man! Oh, this cruel kiss of Judas! For conscience sake, betray not the Son of Man with a kiss.

The advocates of this false Faith are coming into line of battle. The Unitarian and Universalist churches are disintegrating and their members are affiliating with the movement. The forces are organizing. By the grace of God, the Christian Church is ready to meet them and "fight it out on this line." Is there doubt as to the result? Consider, then.

1. The inherent imbecility of this enervated and enervating Faith. It never converted a soul from the error of his ways—it never will—it never can! This whole experiment has been repeatedly tried in the past—and the Broad Church cannot point to a single soul saved by its doctrine—no, not one. Consider.

2 The inherent Almightiness of "the Faith once delivered to the Saints." (1.) It meets the approbation of a soul thoroughly humbled, penitent and prayerful. (2.) It accomplishes what it proposes, just so far as permitted, in individuals, families, communities and nations—giving perfect power over passion—giving perfect rest to the soul—affording sublimest bliss—developing all beautiful affections—making genuine philanthropy—divesting death of its terror—and, in fine, meeting all the requirements of a perfect system of religion.

A Volume in a Word.

When Madam D'Arblay was Miss Burney, and in the first flush of her literary glory, a gentleman of the beau monde seated himself very familiarly beside her in the box at a concert, and commenced conversation with her. After some wearisome compliments on her own works, he asked her if she had read a certain French book, the very name of which was suggestive of impurity. She replied that she had not read it, neither did she wish to do so.

"O," he replied, "the reading of it would not hurt you"

"It will not do so, for I would not look into a book that I knew would hurt any one," she replied.

The gentleman of easy morals shrunk away, abashed under this just rebuke. He had desired to know the character of this young favorite of fame; and, with a true knowledge of human nature, took the surest way to find it out—to learn what books she read.

As the tiny needle points to mines of magnet, so a very little act may reveal great depths in the human heart, of good or of evil. We need not know a person very long to learn his character, his talents; one question may reveal the whole; as persons are sometimes surprised into confessing, in an answer, what under certain circumstances they would fain conceal.

A young man of standing in society and in business circles recently met a lady who greatly pleased him at first sight. Her conversation was as interesting as her person and manners were agreeable; and the friend who introduced them said she was a member of an evangelical church. This last statement was a recommendation indeed, as he desired to choose as a partner for life one who would help him on his heavenly way.

He was to leave the city shortly to return to his distant home; and he felt very anxious to know whether or not it would be well for him to carry that fair young image away in his heart, in hope of continuing the acquaintance.

So, as they sat chatting at a social gathering the third time they had met, he asked her,—

"Have you heard Ristori?"

"O yes," replied the entrapped little beauty; "and I was charmed with both her singing and her acting. Wasn't the death-scene admirable last evening!"

"I did not see it," replied the young man, sadly.

"Too bad," exclaimed the lady, in a tone of sympathy.

"And have you seen 'The Black Crook!'" he asked.

"O yes; everybody must see that, unless he wishes to be regarded as an outside barbarian," was the reply.

"Ah? But were you pleased with the play?"

"Yes; wer'n't you?" replied the unsuspecting girl.

"I have not seen it," was the answer.

"Not seen the Black Crook, and been in New York a month! Why, Mr. L., when you go home your friends will think you've been in the pine woods, instead of our great and gay city!"

"They are entirely welcome to their thoughts," he replied in a subdued tone. "But tell me if professors of religion patronize such amusements here?"

"O yes—that is, all who are not old fogies do. Of course 'the pillars of the church' and the ministers don't like it, but 'the world moves;' and so the world and the church are getting nearer each other every day," replied the lady.

"Does the world move churchward, think you?"

"I fear not."

"Then the moving is that of the church towards the world, is it not?"

"O, I hope not so bad as that," replied the young lady; "but where were you last evening, that you did not join our party?"

"I was not invited; and had I been I should not have gone, as I had a more agreeable engagement. I went to the prayer meeting in your church, and a thin meeting it was, I'm sorry to say."

"Our people have too many meetings; they can't expect to have more than one in the week well attended; people have so many other engagements now-a-days."

When the young stranger was leaving his friend, he asked him, "And shall you not write soon to hear more of Miss B.?"

"I shall want very much to hear that she is honoring her Savior and becoming crucified to the world," answered the young man.

"Is that all?" was asked in a tone of disappointment. "You seemed greatly pleased with her, I thought."

"I was at first, but I asked her one or two questions which revealed her heart to me. I could not even respect, much less love, a woman who could acknowledge, without a blush, that she had seen and was charmed with the 'Black Crook.' I have known young men who were ashamed to say they had seen it. I could not honor a woman who, professing godliness, has time for every thing but the service of God; and who regards her faithful pastor and his spiritual helpers with scorn, and calls them 'old fogies.'"

Truly indeed do the books we read, the friends we choose, or the amusements we select, reveal what is in the heart, to those around us.

Two Death-Bed Scenes.

Years ago, when in early springtime of my life, I stood by the bedside of a young man who, in the vigor of his youth, with massive intellect and powerful frame, had been smitten by the fell hand of disease, and, in spite of all the medical skill within reach, was dying; and, O how sad to add! dying without Christ.

He laughed to scorn his poor mother when she endeavored to lead his mind to Jesus, and the white-haired minister had been driven with fearful curses from his bedside. Yes, he had dared to curse the holy man of God, had dared revile in these last hours of his life the name of the blessed Saviour, who had suffered and died that he mignt live.

"Begone!" he cried, "I want none of your cant!" when he showed him the great need of repentance. "I am not going to die, and if I were, I would die as I have lived!

Alas! alas! must he, will he go, with that awful load of gult upon his soul? "O, my poor boy!" sighed the woe-stricken mother, "must I give you up forever? Can there be no hope of a blessed re-union beyond the grave?" Then, nerved with a great hope, she strove to lead his mind to the great mystery he was about to solve.

But how vain! "Mother," he said, "you have always been a darling mother to me, but you mus'n't talk this way any more now. Some time when I get well I'll go to church with you; won't that do for now?"

Just then the physician entered, and he knew at a glance that the last hour to that poor sinner had come. As he advanced to his bedside, the young man looked up with a slight gleam of anxiety in his eye, and the tones of his voice were not so confident.

"Doctor, you don't think I'm going to die, do you?" and as the doctor hesitated, while a troubled look gathered in his eyes, he repeated, "O tell me I'm not dying! I will not die!"

"My poor friend, I cannot speak falsely to you; your soul will, ere long, be with your God."

"My God!" he said; I have no God save the world; I have stifled conviction, I have fought against God, I have resisted my mother's pleadings, and now you tell me that I must die. "Do you know," he added, in an awful whisper, "what all that means? If I die to-day I shall go to hell! Take it back; tell me I'm not going to die."

How anxious the doomed soul looked through those wild eyes, but a sad shake of the head was his only answer.

"Father," he said, "'twas you who taught me this, you who led me on in this way, and now you say I'm to die. Stand back," he shrieked, "I will not die!" and a torrent or invectives issued from his fever-parched lips, so terrible in their madness that it seemed like a wail from the sea of woe.

Let me vail the scene. No wonder the poor mother was borne, fainting, from the room; no wonder the father's brow was corrugated, while great drops of agony rested there. Ah, that infidel father! how must his heart have bled in that dreadful hour, when, in the midst of dire cursings, his gifted son fell back a corpse! God in mercy help us to avoid such a fate.

Time had flown by on rapid wing; far away from my native home, on the prairies of Iowa I dwelt. My heart had known ecstatic joy, and keen and bitter sorrow. Sweet little Rosa had just learned to lisp papa, mamma, when God called her to a better, brighter world, and our home was silent and lonely; and our hearts had felt how hard it was to say, "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done."

Sweet Lizzie H., like myself, was far away from home and friends, and the friendship born of sympathy, soon grew to be a strong tie between us. How I loved and admired the dear, self-sacrificing christian!

Ofttimes we conversed together, and laid plans for the future, when we should visit our much-loved parents, and home; and yet oftener we conversed of that happy shore, where we both hoped and trusted to land our frail bark at last. One morning I was summoned hastily to her bedside. On entering the room the first glance showed me that the destroyer was there before me. Dear Lizzie was dying. When I bent tearfully over her, she clasped her hands about my neck and whispered, "Dear R., I'm going to a better place than mother's; 'tis sooner than I thought, yet none the less welcome will be the rest in heaven. My Saviour, blessed Jesus, I shall soon behold his face; the way is all bright and peaceful before me." Her eyes wandered with a mute appeal to the sweet babe, over whose head but a few weeks had passed, and I laid it in her arms. She pressed it to her bosom, kissed its sweet lips, while great tears came from her eyes, and I knew that here was the great agony; but when I took it again she whispered, "God will care for my babe." Well was her trust repaid; a few short weeks, and it rested by her side Then again she drew down my ear to her lips, and through the fast choking utterance I could distinguish one single word, "Music!" Swifter than the meteor's flash, my mind flew back to a conversation of a few weeks before, when she remarked, "When I am dying I want that beautiful hymn sung by my bed:

"O, sing to me of heaven, when I am called to die.'

With trembling voices we tried to sing, and in the second stanzas she joined in, but her voice was almost gone; she clasped her hands upon her breast, her fast-dimming eyes were raised toward heaven, a sweet smile was upon her lips, and with the words,

"Then sing of heaven, delightful heaven,
To waft my soul on high,"

her purified spirit escaped its clayey tenement, and winged its way to a brighter, fairer world on high.

Thus have I tried to delineate the two death beds—that of the infidel scoffer, all storm and threatenings; that of the sanctified christian, all calm rejoicing. God help us, that our last moments may be as hers! Death came suddenly, and without warning, but found her ready, her lamp trimmed and burning. Happy Lizzie! happy friend! thy lot was lovely here; but O, how more than glorious there, where I shall see thee, when this struggling life is o'er!

A Spurgeon Anecdote.

The last London correspondence of the Chicago Tribune has the following paragraph:

"I was one of a congregation of twenty-five thousand people in the Crystal Palace one day—a Good Friday—the preacher being Rev. Mr. Spurgeon. I was underneath the pulpit which had been erected, and near me was Mrs. Spurgeon and the 'deacons.' When the preacher went up the stairs into the pulpit, he looked over the dense mass of people with perfect composure, but his wife grew nervous and frightened, and her tears fell fast in the excitement of the time. This was observed by Mr. Spurgeon, who beckoned one of his frinds to him, and sent an entreaty to his wife that she would sit a little closer under, so that he should not witness a feeling which he could do nothing to check When this wish had been carried out and the lady could not see her husband, she soon regained her composure. On that morning everybody heard. Without the slightest exertion, and speaking apparently in the tones he would use in a room, Mr. Spurgeon sent his words out rounded and complete, not one falling short of the entire space. A little while ago I heard Prof. Jewett preach in the nave of Westminster Abbey, and, as an admirer of that learned and excellent man, I was in pain during the whole of the sermon, for I thought he would really break a blood-vessel, so much did he strain his voice in the generous endavor to reach every ear. But Spurgeon's voice is of that quality which is independent of physical effort. At the close of the service he gave the Doxology, and after it had been sung he got up, shook his head and waved his hand, and said in the easiest way imaginable: "No, no; that won't do at all. Not half of you sung that time. Mr. Organist, let's have that again, please; and this time let everybody sing." The organist was at the extreme end, looking like a bird, or a mouse. But he turned round on his stool, put his hand behind his ear, and when Mr. Spurgeon had finished his say, wheeled round to the keys and played Old Hundred again. That time all appeared to sing, and the effect was wonderful. It was as though a huge block of sound had come from somewhere. Get Mr. Spurgeon to visit America, and see how you like him. He is not of, my school; but he is a remarkable man, thoroughly honest, and achieving a singular amount of good.

An Angel Standing By.

We have read of a certain youth in the early days of Christianity—(those periods of historic suffering and heroic patience and legendary wonder, to which I call your attention)—we read of a Christian youth on whom his persecutors put in practice a more than common share of their ingenuity, that by his torments (let those who can or will, go through the horrible details) they might compel him to deny his Lord and Saviour.

After a long endurance of those pains, they released him, in wonder at his obstinacy. His christian brethren are said to have wondered too, and to have asked him by what mighty faith he could so strangely subdue the violence of the fire, as that neither a cry or a groan escaped him.

"It was indeed most painful," was the noble youth's reply, "but an angel stood by me when my anguish was at the worst, and with his finger pointed to heaven.

O thou, whoever thou art, that art tempted to commit a sin, do thou think on death, and that thought will be angel to thee! The hope of heaven will raise thy courage above the fire-cast threatenings of the world; the fear of hell will rob its persuasions of all their enchantment; and the very extremity of their trial may itself contribute to animate thy exertions by the thought that the greater will be thy reward hereafter.—*Bish. To Subscribers.

About a year ago, several preachers of the Ohio, Illinois, Detroit and Michigan conferences subscribed for the New Orleans Advocate. The year is nearly expired. Shall we continue to send the Advocate, brethren? We hope so. You need the news from the Southwest in these stirring times. You should support a loyal church paper in the South. We shall continue to send the Advocate unless otherwise directed; and if not otherwise directed, we shall send the bill for 1868.

Doctrinal Church Bells.

Colonel B. spent a winter in Lexington, Ky. A friend of his went out to visit him. "Come, Sunday," says the Colonel; "I want you to hear our church bells here. There's four of 'em. Each of them sounds out its own denominational call. There's the Episcopal. That is a heavy, deep-toned, sonorous bell. Now, you see if that don't ring out, 'Postolic succession! 'Postolic succession! Then the old Presbyterian—that's most as deep sounding, and that says—Eternal dam-na-tion! Eternal dam-na-tion! The Baptist is quicker—a sharp, snappy bell—and that says rapid—Come up and be dipped! Come up and be dipped! But the Methodist—that's a crowner; it talks right out—Room-for-all! Room-for-all! Room-for-all!

Revival of Business.

New York has been remarkably full of country merchants for the last few days. The hotels are crowded to overflowing, and some of the large establishments are as populous as towns of considerable magnitude. The merchants find themselves overrun with buyers, and trade springs up into fresh life and activity. If prices were not somewhat relaxed, and if there was not a feeling of doubt as to the future, the immediate trade done here would be beyond all precedent. While the business is large, it is, however, kept down by these circumstances. There is a disposition on the one hand to make small purchases for cash, and on the other the old system of credits is sought to be re-established.

In one thing all these strangers agree, and that is that a large crop rewards the labors of the farmer in all parts of the country. The southern merchants estimate the cotton crop at a half more than that of last year, while the south has, at the same time, not been unmindful of other crops, and has laid up a store of grain and provisions for itself. From the west comes a similar tale of abundance. Out of this abundance will come the prosperity of the country and a return of confidence. Debts and taxes will be paid, consumption will be increased, the entire country will feel the stimulus, and there will continue to be a certain demand for all the products of our manufacturers and all the cargoes that come to our importers.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The St. Joseph, Michigan, Herald makes this note of the amount of peaches being shipped from that place: "The number of baskets of peaches shipped from this port up to to-day is about 125,000. Ten times as many more will be shipped during the peach season."

"THE SWORD OF THE LORD, AND OF GIDEON."

Such was the battle cry, as given out to his ardently loyal troops, by the great patriotic hero, who led the armies of Israel against the embattled hosts of Midian—"The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon!" As much as to say, "On my brave fellows to the fight, assured of success while "the sword of the Lord" is wielded in conjunction with "the sword of Gideon." Only another way of crying out, "God, and our native land!"

But, not so with our Gideons—the loyal leaders of our patriotic people. They seem to ignore, or leave out of sight, the "sword of the Lord" altogether, and rely, solely, on the "sword of Gideon." For example—a few days ago, the great state election was pending, fraught with the gravest consequences. And now, very properly too, our Gideon, or Gideons issue a "Proclamation," closing up all drinking Saloons, Coffee Houses, and Bar Rooms, during the two days of the election. But even in this act, so proper in itself, see with what apparent emphasis, they seem to ignore "the sword of the Lord," or show their utter want of respect and reverence for the authority of the Nation's God. Such is their regard for the sanctity of the ballot-box—such their estimate of the sacredness of Election Days—as though it had been uttered in thunder tones from Sinai, "Remember Election Days to keep them holy," that all drinking saloons, &c., are closed up by our Gideon's order, from "9 o'clock Thursday night," until, when?—until just the "dawn of day Sunday morning"—With the rising sun, which ushers in the holy Sabbath, the "Lord's Day," the doors of Saloons, Bar Rooms, and Drinking Houses, are thrown wide open, that the thirsty ones may come and drink. As much as to say, "The election days are over—you have denied yourselves to "keep them holy," and have wielded "the sword of Gideon," at the ballot-box, now, this is only the Lord's Day—now "eat, drink, and be merry"—run riot, if you will—hold high carnival now—the election is over. No matter about the Church—the sanctuary of God, its peace and quiet—or the sacredness of the Holy Day—this only concerns "the sword of the Lord"—while we cry, only, "the sword of Gideon." Thus do they seem to have forgotten that God has said, and written it on tablets of stone, to all people—to all rulers—to all nations, "Remember the Sabbath Day, to keep it holy."

It will be a mercy of Heaven if our Gideons are not doomed to a shameful defeat, and be overthrown by the Midianites, at last, unless they adopt the battle cry, as above—"The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon"—"For Righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people."

Such have been some of our cogitations over the late Proclamation of the Mayor.

THE ELECTION.

A state election has been held in Louisiana, and thousands of citizens voted for the first time in their lives, by the authority and under the protection of the laws of Congress. This is one of the marvels and triumphs of our advanced christian civilization. So far as we have been able to ascertain up to this writing, the colored people appreciated their right of suffrage, and voted. Some, both in the city and in the country, were intimidated by their employers with threats of dismissal, and did not vote; but this intimidation cannot be often repeated, when a people are rising in intelligence as rapidly as the blacks.

As a rule the whites did not vote. The white Republican vote in this city was reduced to almost nothing by the prevailing epidemic. Not a few of the leading Unionists were either sick themselves or detained by the bedside of some relative or friend. The white anti-Republicans absolutely refused to vote.

These Reconstructionists have been playing their old tricks—that is, they have been managing. When the registration was being made, they urged and demanded that every one of their party should register, that they might vote for a convention or against a convention as their interests required; but since the registration has been completed, and it was ascertained that the colored vote was so much in excess of the white vote, the Reconstructionists concluded not to vote, and did not vote. The object of this refusal was to create by force a "negro party," and make the impression in the North that the Republican party in the South is the black man's party; that the "poor blacks" were in power, and that noble, refined, intelligent white men were trodden down in the dust by their former slaves, and that the only hope for the South was a reaction in the North, and a final repeal of the reconstruction laws.

Such was the programme, but it will prove abortive. The North will understand that the present state of things, about which such an ado is made, is the result of "malice aforethought, with intent to kill." The keen intelligence of the North will penetrate the guise of political hypocrasy and will stand by Congress. The white people of Louisiana have thrown away a golden opportunity, over which they will weep tears of blood in the coming years. Had they resolved to accept the situation and entered the canvass in earnest, they might have modified, although they could not have controlled the results of the election. They stand in their own light.

As to the candidates elect, we cannot now speak certainly. A large number, if not a majority, are men of color. Of the candidates elected in this city, we prefer the colored delegates to the whites, both for common-sense, intelligence, and moral character; to this, however, we may except such gentlemen as Messrs. Waples, Crane, Mushaway, and one or two others, who will prove an honor to any deliberative body.

THE EPIDEMIC.

It is believed that the prevailing epidemic has reached its hight. There are still new cases every day, and the number remaining sick is very considerable, yet the gradual decrease in the mortality for a week indicates a gratifying diminution—yet many are destined to be numbered among the victims of the epidemic of 1867. They will leave their homes no more till borne hence to the house appointed for all living; and others, now walking our streets, will soon dwell in the city of the dead. But we earnestly trust that many of the present invalids will speedily recover, and again engage in life's active duties.

It is a peculiarity of the present epidemic that not a few of our native-born citizens have fallen victims to this terrible disease. It was supposed that only the "stranger within the gates" was exposed to its fatal effects; but the results make a different showing. Those to the "manor born" have suffered and died, while many strangers have been successfully treated and have recovered. This is a lesson to those contemptible Southern souls who have prayed for "Yellow Jack to come and kill off the Yankees." This seems hard to believe as it is hard to write against poor humanity; nevertheless, we suppose it is true, and we now refer to it to condemn the foul and inhuman spirit that inspired the prayer, and to warn those who offered it against praying for evil to come on others. Yellow fever is no respecter of persons. He claims for his victims the Southerner, the Northerner, the foreigner, man and woman, helpless children, strong men, those enfeebled with old age, the good and the bad, the saint and the sinner, the pastor and his flock. So, God help us to be kind to all, and to be ready for our summons to the grave and to the judgment.

MRS. LOUISA GREEN.

Mrs. Louisa Green died at Springfield, La., September 18, at 2 o'clock in the morning, of rush of blood to the brain. She was born in Virginia, Franklin Courthouse, in the family of Mrs. Hale, with whom she came to Louisiana. After remaining here two or three years, she accompanied Mrs. Hale to Jackson, Tenn., where in 1853, she was happily converted to God, and joined the M. E. Church. Returning to this city some time afterward, she united with the First street M. E. Church, of which she remained a consistent member up to the day of her death. On the 12th of December, 1865, she was united in marriage to the Rev. Henry Green, her pastor, by the Rev. Scott Chinn.

Sister Green was an excellent woman, and beloved by all who knew her. Of a bright complexion, she was exceedingly neat in her person and kind in her deportment towards others. A woman of good judgment she manifested her mental qualities by her tastes and general conduct. A peace-maker herself, she avoided quarrels, and even sought to reconcile those who were at variance with each other. As a wife she was affectionate, attentive, and devoted, and the tidy appearance of her house showed how much comfort she contributed to her beloved, but now afflicted, husband. As a christian she was sincere, devout and consistent. She loved the courts of the Lord's house, and her great delight was to be with God's people. It was her greatest joy to labor for the Lord's cause, and when festivals and Sunday school anniversaries are held, no one will be missed more than the subject of this memoir. As one of the managers of our "Orphans' Home Society," she took a deep interest in those parentless children; she was the orphan's friend, and in her death the "Home" has lost an earnest worker.

Sister Green died away from home. She had gone to Springfield, La., to visit sister Joseph, a near and dear friend, and while there was attacked with rush of blood to the head, which terminated in her death. Drs. Richardson and Kinchie attended her, but could not save her. Among her friends who were with her, and who did all they could for her, were sisters Joseph, Reynolds, Carter, and Anderson. But there was one thing which troubled her dying moments. She had left home against her husband's wishes, and felt that she could not die without his forgiveness. But it was not her privilege to see him again, as he did not arrive there until after her death. Yet she gained the victory in her last moments, and died triumphant. Just before she departed, she got a "peep" into glory, and then passed away to the shining shore. Thus died Louisa, wife of Rev. Henry Green. May we meet her in heaven.

The First Sacrament of our New Charge, Sixth Street Church.

The epidemic had attacked and prostrated nearly all of the students of the Biblical Institute, so that we could not get a quorum to do our common church business. But in the midst of our gloom, we were much comforted at the return of our presiding elder, Rev. N. L. Brakeman, who preached for us in Sixth Street Church on Sabbath, Sept. 21. Every word that fell from his lips seemed to the hearers entirely new, and the little congregation was overjoyed; whereupon he proposed and appointed to administer sacrament to us on the following Sabbath. All eyes looked forward with great anxiety to the coming blessing, for the Lord's Supper seemed to be something new. At last the appointed day came, and we were all seated and ready, our hearts swelling with joy to see our little church once more filled with souls. As we sat gazing upon the Lord's table, with every thing clean and white, news came that the presiding elder was also prostrated by the fearful malady. A melancholy disappointment truly. What to do next was unknown—all our principal warriors, the Rev. Dr. Newman, Rev. W. M. Henry, and others were engaged in a most desperate battle with Yellow Jack. (Notwithstanding Yellow Jack is a very successful warrior, yet we have every reason to believe that the Doctor has whipped him in a fair battle.) Our attention was then directed to Father Green, who was at that time almost weighed down with trouble occasioned by the death of his wife.

After waiting until hope was will nigh exhausted, it was with joy we beheld the affectionate old pastor of First street Church step in and move up the isle toward the pulpit. Our hearts were again animated, and we received the Lord's supper with gladness, from the hand of the old and venerable servant of God, father Green. The number that received sacrament in our little church was about one hundred and twenty-five souls—and we left the church feeling like young giants, refreshed with new wine—this being the first we had ever taken in our new charge. Fourteen persons joined the church that day.

Thus passed a day long to be remembered.

John Lea, Superintendent.

A PROLIFIC LETTER WRITER.

Mr. P. T. Beauregard, late major in the United States army, seems to have been better qualified for letter writing than for commanding men in the field. We never heard that he made his mark as a soldier, or performed any deed that is likely to hand down his name to posterity as one of the renowned heroes of the nineteenth century. The military education he received at the expense of the United States is not such as is likely to reflect much credit upon either the benefactor or the protege. But as a letter writer he is more successful. All the papers copy his little notes of explanation, whether there is much point in them or not. As a post prandial speaker however, he is one of the most unfortunate of men. Every time he attempts to make a speech, especially justafter a dinner, or at a reception of congressional excursionists, the unlucky reporters are sure to commit some serious blunder in their endeavors to commit the words of wisdom to paper. In this respect he is as unlucky as George Law was after James Gordon Bennett had got tired of him and gave instructions to the Herald reporters to report him verbatim. George never succeeded as a speaker after that event; and as the papers could not afford to print his long cards of explanation free of charge he finally subsided as an orator altogether. But Beauregard being a better letter writer, if not a better speaker, than Law, has always been able to define his position and have it published soon after, simply because he makes his notes brief. He made a speech the other day at the New York hotel, in the room where some time ago the proprietors took down the portrait of Washington and put up that of Lee in place of it, which was reported by some admirer of the class of people who frequent this hotel. The report of this speech, which was made at a "private dinner," where there were not more than one hundred and fifty guests, exclusive of servants, and guests who may have been sitting in the adjoining room, like all former reports of his speeches, "conveys an erroneous impression of the views expressed by him on that occasion."

It is likely that he discovers in his printed speeches many errors of diction, if not of political views, which he can very easily correct while sitting quietly in his room, or at least persuade some friend to do for him. At any rate, however vague his speeches, his notes are remarkably clear and unambiguous, as the following will show:

Baltimore, September 19, 1867.

To the Editors of the Baltimore Gazette:

Dear Sirs—I notice in your paper of yesterday an article copied from the New York Express, of the 17th instant, in which certain political opinions are stated to have been expressed by me at a dinner given to me by a friend at the New York hotel. The dinner was a private one, and the statement of the Express, being but a brief and incomplete abstract of the remarks which I made while conversing with the few friends present, conveys an erroneous impression of the views expressed by me on that occasion.

Being still an "outlaw" in my own native country, I do not feel called upon to publicly uphold its government, especially at this time, when the country is divided in opinion as to whether congress or the executive constitutes "the government." But I am free to state that unless the conservative element of the nation soon awakens to the dangers which threaten the liberties of the country, I confidently believe that its form of government will ere long be changed to a military despotism, after a period of anarchy more or less prolonged.

Yours, very truly,
G. T. BEAUREGARD.

The same "outlaw in his own native country" was equally explicit in a little note which he wrote to William P. Miles, of Richmond, Virginia, in 1862, showing that time has not impaired his abilities as a perspicuous writer, if it has modified his views somewhat as to the propriety of raising the "black flag" and using the "garrote." We hope that the editors of those papers who are compiling the writings of the "Prolific Letter Writer" will not omit the following humane little document:

Charleston, S. C., October 13, 1862.

Hon. Wm. P. Miles, Richmond, Virginia:

Has the bill for the execution of abolition prisoners, after January next, been passed? Do it, and England will be stirred into action. It is high time to proclaim the black flag after that period. Let the execution be with the garrote.

G. T. BEAUREGARD.

PROGRESS OF YELLOW FEVER.

The following table exhibits the progress of yellow fever deaths in this city from week to week since July 13:

Week ending July 13	3
Week ending July 20	2
Week ending July 27	5
Week ending August 3	8
Week ending August 10	14
Week ending August 17	12
Week ending August 24	69
Week ending August 31	126
Week ending September 7	212
Week ending September 14	354
Week ending September 21	398
Week ending September 28	492

The increase has been gradual and steady during the whole time, with the exception of two weeks, one the week ending August 17, when there was a decrease of two deaths by that disease. How much longer it will continue to increase baffles the judgment of the most skillful physicians to determine. Three deaths by yellow fever were reported for the week ending June 29. Since that time it is more than ninety days. If the existing epidemic owes its origin to the deaths of the captain and other officers of the bark Florence Peters, from Havana, one of which occurred July 13, and many of the physicians are of the opinion it does, then seventy-seven days have elapsed since the seeds of the disease were planted in our city.

Let us hope and pray that the ravages of the prevaling epidemic are nearly at a close. Until that time we again counsel prudence and moderation in all things, and a firm reliance in him who controls the universe and "doeth all things well."

The disease prevails among all classes and all nationalities. It does not seek out for its victims those only who have resided here but a short period. They who have escaped other epidemics in New Orleans have lost their lives by that which is now sweeping over our beautiful city. The figures which follow are very suggestive:

Of those who died of yellow fever last week 78 were natives of Ireland, 74 of Germany, 40 of France, 19 of Prussia, 19 of England, 11 of Italy, 9 of Scotland, 7 of Canada, 4 of Switzerland, 3 of New Brunswick, 2 of Austria, 2 of Russia, 2 of Spain, 2 of Belgium, 1 of Sweden, 1 of Maine, 4 of Vermont, 2 of Massachusetts, 2 of Connecticut, 14 of New York, 1 of New Jersey, 8 of Pennsylvania, 2 of Maryland, 1 of Washington, District of Columbia), 2 of Wisconsin, 4 of Ohio, 1 of Indiana, 1 of Illinois, 1 of Tennessee, 11 of Mississippi, 1 of South Carolina, 6 of Virginia, 2 of Georgia, 3 of Missouri, 4 of Kentucky, 5 of Alabama, 42 of New Orleans, and 5 of other parts of Louisiana.

Decease of a Worthy Man.

A notice of the death by yellow fever of Rev. Dr. J. B. Smith appears in another part of this paper. This will be painful intelligence to the hosts of his new made friends in this city and those to whom he was known elsewhere. This gentleman was modest and unobtrusive, possessing excellent talents, and maintaining and defending enlarged, intelligent, and liberal views in reference to the important political questions of the day.

He was educated at the north, and was a thorough and accomplished scholar. His color was darker than that of many other men, but wherever he was known he won the esteem of those who made his acquaintance.

Dr. Smith was a fine speaker. His address of welcome to Hon. William D. Kelley, of Philadelphia, on his arrival in this city, was his first public effort here that brought him into prominence. His speech on that occasion we published, and it was read with unalloyed pleasure. On the thirtieth of July he was one of the orators at the Mechanics' Institute, and his remarks were listened to with profound interest.

When the city council elected a new school board Dr. Smith was chosen as one of the number, and his zeal in the cause of education would have rendered his services most valuable to the children of those who until after the war began were debarred the privileges of public schools.

Dr. Smith was formerly a resident of Boston, from which city he came here only a few months since. His death is a public loss.

The Election in Jefferson City.

A DISTURBANCE AT THE POLLS.

SEVERAL MEN KILLED

At a quarter to four o'clock yesterday afternoon, just as the polls were about to close at the first district precinct of Jefferson city, a bloody affair occurred.

Seven hundred and sixty-five registered men had voted, only thirty of whom were white, when the disturbance commenced, caused by a white ruffian named Henry Rolland—known as "Harry Rolland"—a fireman and former soldier in the confederate army. Rolland, after presenting himself at the polls and showing that he was registered, insultingly scratched out a ticket bearing Republican names, re-wrote and deposited it. Then drawing his revolver he commenced threatening the inspector of elections, Mr. Frederick Frye. The latter stepped to the door and ordered Policeman Joseph Fluery to arrest Rolland. Before this could be done, Rolland shot Officer Fleury, the ball passing through his hand, fired two other shots promiscuously at the crowd, and flourished his revolver with the remaining three shots in it. By this time Rolland was arrested by another policeman (Richard Hetherton), assisted by citizens, and taken toward the prison. A policeman, Henry Davis, who had him in charge at the prison door, neglectful of his duty, said Rolland was his friend, and he would not imprison him. To the credit of Major Frye, be it said, he at once deprived Davis of his star and baton. In the meantime, a rush of Rolland's friends was made for his rescue; a man named Henry C. Reese, with a derringer in each hand, being conspicuous in this crime.

These friends commenced an indiscriminate firing upon the innocent citizens, three of whom were immediately badly wounded. One of them, Wm. Alexander, (colored), an ex-Union soldier, living on Live Oak, between Austerlitz and Constantinople streets, the doctor reports "wounded in the fleshy part of the upper right thigh—the ball entering obliquely from upward, imbedded itself in the fleshy part of the buttock." Another, Gabriel Lawson, (colored), on Milan, between Jersey and Laurel, the doctor also reports "shot in the back, the ball striking the vertebral column, following the lateral track of same;" and another, Joseph Bisain, colored, on same street, was reported by the surgeon as "shot through the left forearm, the ball entering and imbedding itself in the muscle of the upper arm of same side; wound painful but not dangerous. Wounded also by ball entering, and imbedding itself near the joint of the right shoulder.

The colored citizens returned the fire, and Rolland was shot through the brain, and soon died. His principal co-rioter, Henry C. Reese, was also shot in several places during the melee—once through the abdomen. He was living at nine o'clock last night.

Major Fry acted most manfully on the occasion. He sent a messenger with a note to the military post at Greenville for aid in saving bloodshed. He was seconded in this by Mr. D. C. Woodruff, mayor of Jefferson, who also did his whole duty throughout the trying and disgraceful affair.

The summons for the military was promptly met by Captain B. B. Keeler, of the thirty-ninth infantry, who brought out every available man at once—three companies, thinned by the epidemic and guard duty. Though they had to march a mile to the cars, and then ride two miles further, they were on the ground and pieces loaded in twenty minutes after receiving the word! How unlike the singular conduct of the military under Sheridan and Baird in the riot of July, 1866!

Previous to the arrival of the troops, the fire and other bells had been rung, and the populace by hundreds had collected, armed with guns, revolvers, and bludgeons, under the terrible excitement of the mob. But at sight of the military, a general skedaddling to their homes was observed, with muskets rapidly hidden away. Captain Keeler being informed that squads of these armed men had taken refuge at different points, sent officers in charge of men to each point, and dispersed them. The captain also visited headquarters of General Mower immediately after this, and received orders relative to further proceedings. He and Lieutenant Buckland, with a portion of the men remained on the ground all night to insure order, while the residue returned to the post.

We saw a statement of the case in writing by Mayor Woodruff, which accords all honor to the troops in quelling the disturbance, and thus probably preventing another July riot of great dimensions.

Texas Juries.

General Mower has modified the military orders relative to juries in the state of Texas so as to render it practicable to obtain juries in that state. He has adopted the views of Governor Pease and Judge Sabin. The following is the order:

Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., September 28, 1867.
Special Orders, No. 151. [Extract.]

* * * * * * * *

2. All persons duly registered as voters under the reconstruction laws of congress, in the state of Texas, and no others, will hereafter be considered as eligible for jurors in any the courts of that state.

No other oath will be required except that taken upon registration. The county courts of the state of Texas will immediately revise their jury lists and make the new lists conform to these directions.

* * * * * *

By command of Brevet Major General Joseph A. Mower.
GEORGE L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The Petersburg Index, asserting that General Pryor, now of New York, is "as good a Radical as Theodore Tilton," says that there are in that city "twenty respectable witnesses to the fact that he has long since indorsed the congressional action in reference to the south."

THE JEFFERSON CITY AFFRAY.

Report of the Commissioners of Election.

Major Frye, chairman of the commissioners of election, has sent to the board of registrars the following report of the disturbance at one of the election precincts of Jefferson city, on Saturday:

Gentlemen—To the returns of the election in the first district of Jefferson parish, held on the 27th and 28th September, at the courthouse in Jefferson city, I am sorry to be obliged to add the account of acts of violence of a serious nature.

At about half-past three P. M. on the twenty-eighth ultimo, a white man named (on the registry list) Harry R. Rolland, stepped up and took what was called a Radical Republican ticket, open, and took a pen and scratched it completely, and voted the same. This elicited no remark from any one, and he stepped a few feet off while a negro named Patrick Henry, also a registered voter, stepped up and presented an affidavit of the loss of his certificate of registration, and while we were examining the same, Rolland, after making a noisy demonstration, drew a revolver. I immediately ordered his arrest, but in an instant he fired at the negro Henry, and also at the police officer, Joseph Fleury, whom he wounded in the hand, and again fired indiscriminately at several black and white who were running. Five police officers were present, two of whom refused to act, inasmuch as Rolland was now joined by a white man named Henry C. Reece, armed with a pistol in each hand, and these two officers said that Rolland and Reece were friends of theirs and they would not arrest them. I took the club and star from one of them; the other went away.

The two remaining officers with the assistance of one or two citizens succeeded in securing Rolland, but Reece and some other friends succeeded in rescuing him, and Rolland and Reece chased by three police officers, another having come up, running at two negroes who were across the street, struck one of them, but the negro with a piece of board, which he picked up at the time, struck and staggered Rolland; at the same instant all parties clenched, eight or ten shots were fired simultaneously, one of which hitting Rolland in the head he fell lifeless. Reece was also hurt by both club and pistol, and escaped, but is not seriously wounded. Officer Richard Heatherton was shot in the hand, and two negroes were shot, one seriously. I saw no revolvers in the hands of the negroes, and up to this time the negroes had not interfered, and I feel quite satisfied that those of the whites who were there wounded were so wounded by either their friends or the officers in the promiscuous firing. The mayor and myself were near to them, and I took more particular notice in order to identify the rioters. Hereupon, however, the negroes gathered from all quarters, and so did the whites. Some one unauthorized rung the general fire alarm and the negroes rung their church riot alarm. Firemen and whites, many of them armed with revolvers, and negroes, many and most of them armed with muskets came running from all quarters. More shooting was heard a short distance off, and more men were reported wounded.

Meanwhile and as soon as the alarms were sounded having called for assistance upon the mayor, who was present during the whole time and was seconding me in my efforts to quell the disturbance, and who told me he was unable to get civil force, I sent a messenger to Greenville barracks with a hasty call for military aid. It was nobly and promptly responded to; but during the three quarters of an hour before the messenger could go and return, affairs were very serious. Squads of negroes, with muskets and bayonets fixed, marched in from every direction; but in almost every case being met by the mayor or myself at either end, before they could form a junction with the crowd, who were armed with clubs, were induced to go back; and most of them did go back upon the assurance that the troops were coming. The whites gathered a short distance below—one or two with shot guns, one or two with large knives, and a number of them with revolvers. All the police had disappeared; neither the chief nor the lieutenants were there, and but very few citizens ventured to aid us in our pacific efforts. Soon, however, the detachment of United States forces were on hand, when both blacks and whites suddenly melted away, like snow beneath a noonday's sun, and quiet was restored; patrol squads of the military were thrown out, and families again rested contentedly.

All good citizens and men of judgment feel satisfied that but for the timely appearance of the troops a most fearful and indiscriminate massacre and burning would have taken place, and they wish to express to the commanding general their heartfelt thanks to him and his officers for their prompt response to the call of duty.

They would also call attention to the laxity of discipline or manliness in the present police, endangering public safety and the disgrace that five officers can not or will not arrest two men, though they be armed.

As to its bearing upon the final result of the election, the commissioners do not know of but one besides the negro Henry who was deprived of his vote, or who offered, or intended, or wished to vote; and it was about four P. M. when we secured the box and closed the polls. Nor do we think that there was any premeditated plan or intention of any number of citizens to interrupt the election, but that it originated and was carried out by Rolland and a few of his backers, who put him forward as the bully, and while we can not but regret the untimely death of a human being, all, I believe, without exception, concur in saying it was the result of his own rash acts.

Respectfully submitted.
FREDERICK FRYE,
Chairman Commissioners of Election.

The Pay of Delegates.

The following, from the Atlanta New Era, touches on a point of decided interest to members of constitutional conventions and their constituents in the other southern states as well as of Georgia:

There is no doubt the convention will be held. Consequently the delegates elected at the approaching election will take their seats. No election so pregnant for the good or evil of the state has ever been held in Georgia. Hence the extreme necessity of attention to our friendly admonition of yesterday, as to selecting citizens of learning, wisdom, and integrity. Let them be the best citizens eligible, who can support the dignity.

On reference to the supplemental act of March 2, we find the following as forming a part of the same:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the convention for each state shall prescribe the fees, salary, and compensation to be paid to all the delegates and other officers and agents herein authorized or necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act not otherwise provided for, and shall provide for the levy and collection of such taxes on the property in such state as may be necessary to pay the same.

No provision having been made for the payment of the delegates, and as some months will be required to levy and collect a tax for the purpose, members elect must provide themselves with means with which to defray their expenses during the session of the convention, which may last two or three months.

It is to be regretted that the want of means, or the facilities for raising them, may prevent the candidacy of many of our best citizens, of whose services the state will be deprived.

The Tobacco Crop.

The St. Louis Democrat has compiled the following statement of the tobacco crop:

In Missouri is is reported at from 12,000 to 15,000 hogsheads. This is far beyond an average crop, but it is said that the quality of the tobacco is unusually good. In Virginia the crop has fallen off one-third—it is reported at 70,000,000 pounds—but is "the best ever made as respects quality." In some counties of North Carolina, lands which had been previously devoted to tobacco were this year planted with cotton. The yield for that state is 35,000,000 pounds. The yield for Maryland is placed at 35,300,000 pounds; Tennessee at 39,500,000; Kentucky at 61,000,000; Texas at 90,000; Alabama at 270,000; Arkansas at 1,700,000; Florida and Georgia each 600,000; Louisiana at 40,000; South Carolina at 35,000; and the northern states at 52,150,500.

Several Austrian department secretaries have been detected in the nice business of selling diplomatic decuments to foreign papers. The richest part of the development in this affair is the discovery that four-fifths of the dispatches thus sold were forgeries.

BY TELEGRAPH.

[Special Dispatch to the Republican.]

FROM WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, September 27, 1867.

General Grant has received an anonymous letter, warning him against an intended attempt at his assassination.

General Sheridan is to be received by the Union League in New York on Monday.

General Steedman will be here to-morrow.

The case of Messmore, the deputy collector of internal revenue implicated in the whisky frauds, is still undecided. In case he does not resign he will be removed.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 28, 1867.

Messmore, who has been requested to resign his position as deputy collector of internal revenue, on account of complicity in whisky frauds, has put on a bold face and gone to New York without complying with the request. He will certainly be removed on Monday.

General Steedman has not yet arrived, but is expected on Monday.

Commissioner Rollins learned to day that there was no one left in New Orleans to attend to the duties of collector of internal revenue or inspector of internal revenue, General Steedman being still absent, and Mr. Woolley, chief deputy, ill with yellow fever. The commissioner thereupon telegraphed instructions to Mr. Sumner, one of the clerks in the collector's office at New Orleans, to qualify as deputy collector, and take charge of affairs for the present.

Mr. Fox, who came here on a mission connected with the office of inspector of internal revenue, has not been successful. No appointment has been made, and, although the office is said to be vacant and no one to attend to the public interests, the commissioner shows no disposition to be in a hurry to act.

More evidence of Johnson's duplicity and anxiety to obstruct the reconstruction laws has just come to light. He wrote a letter to S. F. Rice, of Montgomery, Alabama, advising the latter to test the constitutionality of the military bills by attempting to register under the provisions of the amnesty proclamation, and if refused the rights of a voter, to resort to the civil courts. He tried to register, was refused, and then brought suit before a United States commissioner. Judge Richard Busteed will finally have to decide the question.

A similar programme is to be put forth and tried in Virginia and North Carolina, where Chief Justice Chase may be required to act.

General Hancock has made a very favorable impression on the leading Radicals here, as a modest, accomplished, and gentlemanly officer. He is now on a visit to his mother at Norristown, but will leave for St. Louis on Monday.

PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, September 30, 1867.

When Jeff Davis's case is called up for trial in Richmond the prosecution will probably ask for a postponement on the ground that the government is not ready with its evidence. His counsel will then move to quash the indictment, and the motion to this effect will be argued early in the term. It is not yet certain whether Chief Justice Chase or Judge Underwood will preside.

Fifty thousand dollars of three per cents are to be re-issued.

The treasury statement for this month will show no reduction of the national debt since the last statement.

It is rumored that there has beeen an over-issue of a million of dollars in fractional currency.

The Louisiana election is the theme of conversation. The figures received here are vague, and give no satisfactory result. Different constructions are given to the third section of the law. Telegrams have been received, and are creating much comment, that Sheridan's appointees mismanaged the election.

Johnson has prohibited the removal of Messmore, charged with whisky frauds.

WASHINGTON, October 1, 1867.

It is now conclusively established that the president encouraged and sustained S. F. Rice, of Alabama, in his attempt to prevent reconstruction, the particulars of which I telegraphed you on Saturday.

Johnson no longer conceals his programme in case of impeachment. He contends that the president can not be suspended from his office pending the charges and trial for impeachment, and that the constitution allows a removal of the officer impeached only after a conviction.

He says if he is impeached he will maintain his constitutional rights and hold on to the office until a judgment is rendered by two-thirds of the senators ordering his removal, and in the meantime he will resist by physical force any invasion of his rights.

Congress will, however, first pass a bill providing for the suspension of officers immediately on a presentation of articles of impeachment by the house of representatives. As soon as this bill becomes a law the judiciary committee will present the charges and evidence against the president and demand his impeachment. A vote of the house in favor of the report will of itself suspend the president.

General Grant and the military commanders, and both houses of congress will then recognize Hon. B. F. Wade only as president notwithstanding the threats of Andrew Johnson and Governor Swann. PAYSON.

WASHINGTON, October 2, 1867.

General Canby has ordered the military authorities at Wilmington, North Carolina, to abstain from any interference with the execution of the process of the federal courts. The impression is sought to be made by the president and his friends that Sickles was relieved by Canby principally for following a different course.

Johnson's friends issued a circular some time ago advising the rebels to test the constitutionality of the reconstruction laws by getting some who were disfranchised by Congress but lately amnestied by the president to offer to register, and when not allowed, to appeal to the courts.

The statement published by the copperheads that Stanton agreed to let the Maryland militia have cannon is positively untrue. When Stanton was asked by Johnson he refused and told the president that he must issue the order himself if he wanted

The excitement relative to the war office is reviving. Steedman will not accept the war office, but urges General F. P. Blair or Hon. Thomas Ewing, Jr., for the position.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—Customs receipts for the week ending yesterday, $4,108,000.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $441,000.

Professor Ferguson, of the United States naval observatory, is dead.

The United States consul at Palermo reports the continuance of the cholera, but in a milder form.

The cabinet was in session two hours to-day. Members all present.

Secretary McCulloch has issued a circular forbidding his subordinates communicating treasury news to correspondents.

As an illustration of the arguments upon which the elections in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New York are expected to turn, the following from to-day's Herald is telegraphed:

THE ELECTION IN LOUISIANA TO-DAY.—The negro supremacy views of congress will be carried into practical effect in the state of Louisiana to-day. From early dawn this morning until to-morrow evening 83,000 semi-savages will go up to the polls, led by unprincipled white men, and by sheer force of numbers sweep from power the wealth and intelligence of the state. The 35,000 or 40,000 whites who have been permitted to register will, we are told, content themselves with simply depositing their votes against a convention, thus protesting against the execution of a political doctrine they have no power to avert, and the success of which they feel assured will entail irreparable injury upon themselves and their posterity.

The call for a convention having thus been carried by the negro hordes, let us see of what material the convention itself will be composed. Not a prominent Louisianian will be there. Not a man of standing in the community. The Republican nominees, who will certainly be elected, stand as four negroes to three whites—four illiterate, semi-barbarous negroes to three white adventurers. This will be the composition of the convention called to frame a constitution for the state that gave a Taylor for president of the United States. Is not this entire thing utterly revolting? Can we of the north palatably swallow so gigantic a fraud upon rights and so beastly a caricature upon human liberty?

Forty-five or fifty negroes assembling in convention, to do what? To perform an act of the very meaning of which they are most ludicrously ignorant. And who are their assistants—a handful of white men whose very course in consenting to such an affiliation stamps their character as being thoroughly worthless. There is one instinct which can not be eradicated from the mind of a white man, and that is the supremacy of his race above all others. Prejudice against color is but the natural instinct of the superior against the contaminating, and try what theorists may, the barriers which caste in that sense has erected can never be broken through successfuly.

The present farce in Louisiana will be successful for a while, but the signs of the times too plainly indicate that the hour is approaching when it and all kindred dogmas will be swept away in the torrent of public indignation. We can not stand quietly by and witness the debasement of our own race in Louisiana. California, Connecticut, and Maine have already rebuked the effort at negro supremacy before its practical effects have been seen; and we tell the radicals of these United States that their cheers of joy at the success of their dogmas in Louisiana this day will be answered back by the people of the loyal west in October and November next in such tones of indignation and disgust as will inform the world whether our recent war was fought for the preservation of the Union, or for the exaltation of the negro, and the enslavement of men of our own color.

WASHINGTON, September 27.—The case of Frazer, Trenholm & Co. has been settled, but the terms are not known.

General Crawford's command has left Louisville for Nashville.

A Herald special says the Union Leagues in Virginia are being abandoned.

New York Constitutional Convention.

WASHINGTON, September 26.—The following are among the resolutions adopted by the Syracuse convention:

Resolved, That as Republicans of the state of New York, recognizing the obligations of consistency and straightforwardness in support of the great principles we profess, we unanimously declare that suffrage should be impartial; that it is a right which ought not to be limited by position or by color.

Resolved, That the course of the congress of the United States in carrying out measures of reconstruction on the basis of freedom, regardless of the seductions of executive patronage, meets our hearty approval; and that, unreservedly, we do hereby assure them of our determination to stand by them through this struggle and in all measures necessary to place liberty and peace on lasting foundations, even to the severest remedies known to the constitution.

Resolved, That no person shall be by law deprived of the right to public or private recreation or pastime on any day of the week; provided that no person, in exercising this right shall violate public order and decorum, or the proper respect due to public worship; and that the excise and all other existing laws should be maintained accordingly.

Alluding to the last resolution quoted the World's special says: The committee on resolutions decided to ignore the question of changing the excise laws. The proposition was brought up under the regulations (?) of the Germans and strongly pressed by one member of the committee, who declared that it was necessary to recognize the demand of the German element, but they decided by a vote of all the members of the committee but one that the question should not be touched.

The resolution adopted by the Germans in convention yesterday was subsequently presented as an amendment to the report of the committee on resolutions by Dr. Schuetz.

Mr. Cole then declared that the excise law as now enforced in the Metropolitan district was a cruel farce and a failure, and proposed a resolution which pretended to look toward pledging the convention to a change in the excise law, but really meant nothing but a flourish of words. It was voted down, and afterward presented by Dr. Schuetz, and adopted by the votes of the New York delegation. The question was not brought up until to-night, when nearly all the members from the rural districts had left for home. Its adoption was greeted with cheers by the New York delegation, and with hisses by those from other sections.

WASHINGTON, September 28.—The settlement of Frazer, Trenholm & Co., is entirely satisfactory to the government. The defendants' counsel acknowledge the correctness of the principles claimed by the government and have provided for securing the property claimed. Further action, however, is necessary in the federal and British courts.

Judge Underwood and District Attorney Chandler are consulting relative to the trial of Mr. Davis, whose friends and bondsmen represent him as anxious for trial.

Congressman Shanks has gone to Richmond in pursuit of evidence regarding the treatment of federal prisoners.

WASHINGTON, September 28.—Revenue receipts to-day $477,000. Receipts for the week $2,500,000. For the year, to date, $54,750,000.

Lieutenant Commander Charles E. Fleming is dead.

WASHINGTON, September 30.—Senor Don Luis Molino, minister plenipotentiary for Nicaragua, presented his letters of recall to the president to-day. The parting ceremonies evidenced good feeling between the countries, and a strong personal friendship between the president and Senor Molino.

Our consul at Demarara reports August 3, that the yellow fever has reappeared there, principally among the seamen in the harbor.

The report of the commissioner of agriculture for August and September represents that the wheat crop is not as large as was anticipated in July. Corn promises a fair crop if the frosts do not injure it. The army worm made its appearance in the cotton fields about the 1st instant and caused considerable apprehension in some sections for the safety of the crop. Potatoes are rotting badly. In many of the large potato growing states the yield will be less than last year, owing to the severe weather last winter.

The wool clip this year is five to ten per cent. less than last year.

James M. Murphy, a Nashville negro, has been appointed by the sergeant-at-arms of the United States senate a member of the capitol police force.

A strong pressure is being brought to bear to secure the modification of the recently promulgated cotton regulations. Numerous letters have been received representing the routine for obtaining permits impracticable in many instances, and generally inconvenient. The treasury department has the matter under consideration.

WASHINGTON, October 1.—The secretary of the treasury, considering the act of congress of March 2, 1867, as mandatory, has issued the following:

Notice is hereby given that the assistant treasurer at New York is prepared and has instructions to issue three per cent. certificates in denominations of five and ten thousand each, in redemption of compound interest notes maturing in October and November next. The accrued interest on all notes presented for such redemption will be paid in currency.

The land lines connecting the cable are down.

NEW YORK, October 1.—Sheridan's reception by the Union League was a showy affair. Sheridan said:

I have scarcely language to express the very great appreciation I have for your very warm and hearty welcome. I only hope that I may hereafter be able to deserve the same approval in my acts. I only know that heretofore, and I believe hereafter, I shall never, by any act of mine, attempt to make rebellion honorable. (Loud and long applause.) Rebellion is a crime and it shall not be made honorable. (Cheers.) Gentlemen I thank you.

Central and South American correspondence furnishes the following items:

Political affairs in Panama were unsettled, but business was reviving. No events of importance had occurred.

The news from Peru sets forth that Colonel Prado was proclaimed constitutional president on August 31. The Peruvian government had granted to Dr. Mariano Arosemana and associates the exclusive right for fifty years to organize telegraphic communication between Panama and Peru.

The Peruvian squadron was still at Coquimbo awaiting orders to return to Valparaiso.

In Ecuador congress assembled on August 23. Senor Ortela, a brother-in-law of the late General Flores, had been installed president of the republic.

Late advices from the Colombian states show that order has not yet been restored and that pretty nearly all the states are in arms against their present ruler.

The health of Havana and the island of Cuba is quite bad, cases of typhoid fever and black vomit are increasing.

The New York Times of this morning says: That the public mind has become disgusted with the extreme measures of many prominent men in the Union party, we have little doubt. The evident determination of some among them not only to see the colored race in the enjoyment of equal rights, but to give them absolute ascendancy in the government of the country, has repelled very many who have hitherto acted with the Republican party.

There is no doubt, moreover, that the violence and reckless partisanship which has marked much of the action and more of the speeches of Republican leaders, the disregard of constitutional obligations, the manifest determination to keep political power in their own hands by whatever means, and the evident purpose to exclude the southern states from the Union until they can rely on their support of the most radical measures of public or party policy, have caused very many members of that party to distrust the wisdom and the patriotism of those who have usurped its leadership and control.

From Virginia.

RICHMOND, Sept. 30.—The registration list will be opened for final revision on the 8th of October.

Shanks, of the congressional committee to investigate the treatment of prisoners, addressed a crowd of blacks this evening at the capital.

A split in the Republican party here is becoming more marked. The Republican ward meetings called for to-night are repudiated by Mr. Hunnicutt, the acknowledged leader of the blacks, who, in a speech this evening, warned the blacks to beware of northern doughfaces who have settled among them, and pretend to be Republicans.

Colonel J. A. Bates, who has returned from Europe, has been ordered to relieve Major Stone as bureau commissioner.

PETERSBURG, Va., September 30.—Franklin Stearns, a conservative Republican, was nominated for the convention by a Republican meeting for this county.

From Georgia.

SAVANNAH, September 30.—One Bradley, a Boston mulatto, who has been several times arrested by the military and civil authorities for swindling negroes and exciting disturbances, had a gathering here to-day of some thousand negroes mainly from the country. In the course of a harangue against white men and in favor of distribution of lands, he was interrupted by a conservative negro, when a melee occurred.

A large force of police charged through the crowd, the military came to their aid, and together they cleared the square. Muskets, brought in by a large band of country negroes, were taken by the police and turned over to the military. A large proportion of the colored population disapprove of Bradley and threaten to assassinate him. The entente cordiale between the city government and the military affords great satisfaction to all classes except the insurgent adherents of Bradley.

The city is now quiet, though disturbances threaten to-night between the country negroes and the conservative colored men of the city. General Anderson, chief of police, has given orders to arrest every disorderly person, regardless of color or politics. The military remain under arms, but their services will probably not be needed. A large number of arrests of rioters have been made, including several of the ringleaders, who will probably be sent to Fort Pulaski by the military.

From Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., October 2.—In this city the result of two days voting is 4539. The first day in Selma, 3300 votes polled; first day in Opelika, 1500; first day in Wetumpka, 1000, and all for a convention.

MOBILE, October 2.—The second day's vote stands 820 blacks, 24 whites—for the convention, with very few exceptions. No disturbances whatever.

Cotton—sales, 50 bales; receipts, 1893 bales. Demand chiefly for better grades. Market closed quiet and steady at 18@18½c. for middlings.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 2.—Hon. Alexander Rives and a colored man were nominated by the Republicans of Albemarle for the convention yesterday. Last night they were burned in effigy by the opposition.

Congressman Shanks, of Indiana, addressed the blacks here this evening. He said he spoke as one of a party who had power when he said that the southern states would have been in the Union long ago if they had given rights to the blacks, and that they never would get in till they did. Johnson, if guilty, would be impeached, and even with the aid of the Maryland rebel militia, which was arming, would be powerless to do anything. The men of the north were ready at the tap of the drum to quell him and his militia. He predicted 30,000 majority for the Republicans in Ohio.

From Charleston.

CHARLESTON, S. C., October 2.—General Canby has issued an order prohibiting provost courts from exercising jurisdiction in any case involving the titles to land or in any civil cause where the claim exceeds three hundred dollars. He has also signified his intention to modify General Sickles' order closing the barrooms throughout the second district.

From Missouri.

ST. LOUIS, September 30.—General Sterling Price died here yesterday morning of disease contracted during the Mexican war.

A committee was appointed some days since by the Merchants' exchange to solicit funds for the Howard association of New Orleans. They have collected over $7000.

From Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, September 30.—The city was perfectly quiet Saturday. The voting was confined mainly to negroes and strangers. The mayor receded from his determination to hold a poll under the charter of 1858, but the present officials will hold their places until ousted by the courts or bayonets.

From New York.

NEW YORK, September 30.—The national bank of Whitestown, New York, is reported to have failed.

NEW YORK September 30.—A great trot came off on the Fashion course to-day for $1000, mile heats, best three in five to harness, between Lady Thorn, Mountain Boy, Bruno, and Lucy. Lady Thorn won the first, third, and fourth heats, and Mountain Boy the second. Time: 2:25½—2:24½—2:24—2:24, the fastest average time for four heats ever trotted.

NEW YORK, October 2.—The Scotia brings European dates to the 22d.

The London Times says Bruce's death is a peculiar misfortune pending the present intricate and delicate negotiations with a government not always disposed to approach Great Britain in a spirit of generosity and forbearance. The position near that government is most onerous, and each occupant finds his labor more exacting than his predecessors.

Foreign News.

LONDON, October 2, Noon.—No further telegrams relative to the result of the recent disturbances in Italy have been received. Many rumors are afloat and it is said that a serious revolt has broken out at Rome and the pope has been obliged to fly to Civita Vecchia for safety.

The Opinion, a semi-official journal of Florence, says that Rome will soon belong to Italy, and that without broken treaties.

GLASGOW, October 2.—Buchanan & Co., largely engaged in the American trade, stopped payment to-day.

FLORENCE, October 2.—Garibaldian riots of a serious nature at Viterbo have been quelled.

RESULT OF THE ELECTION.

The following gentlemen are the successful candidates for delegates to the convention at the recent election. They received nearly all the votes, those opposed to them having been complimented by so few that we do not deem it necessary to publish the figures:

FIRST DISTRICT.—Charles Smith, R. H. Isabelle, W. R. Crane, H. Bonseigneur, Thos. Isabelle, Solomon Moses, Simon Jones, L. Rodriguez, David Wilson.

SECOND DISTRICT.—P. B. S. Pinchback, G. M. Wickliffe, S. Belden, R. I. Cromwell, Ed. Tinchant.

THIRD DISTRICT.—A. Bertonneau, C. B. H. Duplessis, O. C. Blandin, David Douglass, Lieutenant J. A. Massicot.

FOURTH DISTRICT.—Rufus Waples, Charles Depassau, James Mushaway.

It is reported that the regular Republican tickets were also successful in Algiers and Jefferson city.

First District.

The poll boxes of this district were not all received at the registration office last night. The last that reached there came in a little before midnight. Poll No. 2, precinct 4, remains to be heard from, which gave on Friday 156 votes. Without this the total vote in the first district on the convention question is 3808. The 156 previously polled swells it to 3964. The entire vote of the district will reach 4000.

A majority of all the registered voters would be 14,273. The votes polled now fall 2529 short of that number.

Madeira Wine—How Prepared for the Market.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

Our consul at Funchal, island of Madeira, in a communication to the state department at Washington, gives a detail of the process by which the Madeira wine is prepared for the United States market. He says that the Madeira wines now mostly sent to this country are prepared by the method he describes. These are generally the low priced article which find the readiest sale in this country, such as do not bear a greater market value where produced than from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars the pipe of one hundred and ten gallons.

Many of these wines, though pure, are brought to a marketable state by a process of artificial heat or cooking, and are known in the market where prepared as estufed wines. The result of the estufed process is to make a wine which is only one year old appear as if it were three years old, or as if it had acquired the flavor of a three-year old wine in the natural way. The cooking process is after this fashion: The wine is put in casks in which the bung or stopper is left out. In this condition the liquid is subjected for several months to an artificial heat of about one hundred and fifty degrees Fahrenheit, during which period a kind of second fermentation takes place. After the wine has remained in the estufa, or heated room, a sufficient length of time to have acquired a marketable age in taste, it is racked off, and then offered for sale, or shipped to foreign countries; and much of the wine shipped to the United States is said to be of the estufed kind, doubtless the most of it.

This wine, when offered for market or shipped, is in no respect adulterated other than by the process indicated, which can scarcely be called adulteration. If adulterated at all, such of it as is shipped to this country, it is done after it gets into American hands, and there is little doubt that this is done to considerable extent by some American liquor dealers so as to increase the quantity at the expense of the quality. Such, at least, is the prevailing notion. The flavor of the estufed wine is said to be quite different from that which is left untouched, and allowed to acquire mellowness and flavor by the lapse of time alone. The difference, it is said, may be readily detected by an expert. But as there are comparatively few experts in our country, because the opportunities to test the aged article are very few, the estufed wine passes current. It would be well if this were the only doctoring which our Madeira wine gets.

The Order of Odd Fellows.

The grand lodge of the United States independent order of Odd Fellows is in session in the city of New York. This, we believe, is the first time that this body has ever assembled in that city. For many years the headquarters of the order has been in Baltimore, where resides the grand secretary, and are kept the archives of the organization. The present grand master is a citizen of New York, and that fact probably accounts for the determination to meet in that city. The grand lodge of the United States was received by the grand lodge of the state of New York, and after the customary interchange of courtesies, business commenced. The sessions being secret, the newspapers are not likely to publish the transactions. Before the adjournment of the first meeting, however, it was given out that there are in this country, including Canada West, which is attached to the jurisdiction, five hundred and eighty-one subordinate encampments, with thirty-three thousand one hundred and eleven members, and two thousand seven hundred and nineteen subordinate lodges, with two hundred thousand nine hundred and sixteen members. The amount of the receipts is very large, and the sums spent for the relief of widows and orphans, for assistance to the sick, and burying the dead, are also very great.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Cotton Crop for 1866-'67.

We have received from the office of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, at New York, a statement of the cotton crop of the United States for the year ending September 1, 1867. It says:

We are now able to give our figures showing the total crop and movement of cotton in the United States for the year ending September 1, 1867. The receipts, as will be seen, very nearly approximate those of last year, the total reaching 2,019,271 bales, against 2,193,987 bales for the previous twelve months, indicating a decrease in the receipts this year of only 174,716 bales. It would be impossible to state with accuracy what proportion of this aggregate was the product of the last year, estimates differing so widely with regard to the amount of the old crop not brought forward at the close of 1865-6. We think however we may safely take this old surplus at 300,000 bales, and shall then have left about 1,700,000 bales as the total product of the past season. The new year begins with an unusually small stock in the interior, and we must therefore look almost entirely to the new crop for our receipts during the coming twelve months.

A SORROWFUL ERRAND.—Yesterday we saw a gray haired father who had come to the city in the hope of finding his erring daughter. Though she was no longer the innocent child that had gladdened her father's heart for years, yet the love that he cherished for her had not gone out, and he wanted to find her and take her back to her home. Poor father, and poor child. Another wreck to add to the long list of unfortunates who haunt the dens of infamy that abound in every city. Another home made desolate by the absence of her of whom it would be a relief to know that she were dead. Another name never to be spoken in the family circle but with the heartache and blinding tears. Whether he found her or not we did not learn, but the sight of that old man with his heart-misery so plainly written upon his face, with his form bent by a power greater than the passing years, with his voice tremulous with unspoken grief, will linger in our memory for years to come.—Louisville Journal.

The Fort Wayne (Ind.) Gazette says that the bones of three mastodons have been discovered near Huntertown, Allen county, Ind. No one skeleton is complete, but enough of each has been found to determine that they are the remains of a male, female, and calf. The lower jaw of the calf was exhumed entire. The teeth, small and little worn, are the unmistakable signs of "veal." A quantity of older and larger teeth and part of a larger jaw were found. Also five upper bones of the fore leg, two upper bones of the hind leg, two thigh bones, shoulder blade, fragments of tusks, parts of a skull, a quantity of ribs, and many other smaller bones. The skeletons were found in a corn field, in what was once a deep marsh. Twenty or thirty years ago, the proprietor says, it would not have been safe for man or beast to enter it. The bones were found in an area of about forty feet in diameter, from three to four feet below the surface, in a stratum of light clay covering a layer of blue clay. The top soil is a black muck, even now fit for cultivation only in dry seasons.

To show to what extent the stagnation of business has reached in France, it may be mentioned that in the first five months of last year the exportations were for 1,492,000,000 francs, while for the same period this year they amount to 1,293,000,000. In 1866 the importations were 1,170,000,000, in 1867, 1,303,000,000; so that the exportation has decreased by 200,000,000, and the importation has increased 133,000,000. The increase in importations is represented by 99,000,000 for articles of consumption, 12,000,000 for raw materials, and 16,000,000 for other goods. The exportation of silk, wool, linen, cotton, hides, artificial flowers, furniture, paper, books, glass, perfumery, etc., has diminished.

A story is told about the late W. Hope, the banker of Amsterdam, that he had bought a picture as a Rembrandt, and given two thousand guineas for it. Finding that it did not fit the frame, he sent for a carpenter to ease it a little. While watching the operation, he remarded how wonderfully the picture was preserved, considering that it was nearly two hundred years old. "That is impossible," said the carpenter. "This wood is mahogany, and mahogany had not been introduced into Europe at that time." Mr. Hope burnt the picture.

THE MAINE ELECTION—A Parable.—A good-for-nothing cuss who had been kicked down stairs by a respectable old brick, was boasting of it among a lot of swell loafers. "But, why do you boast of being kicked down stairs?" inquired one of the aforesaid. "Because I expected the old man to have kicked me clear out of the front gate," replied the g.-f.-n. c.

ELOPEMENT IN HIGH LIFE.

A Sensation in High Life in Toronto—The Young Couple Spend Their Honeymoon in Milwaukee.

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel.]

We are not among the number of those who encourage in the young a disposition to disobey parental wishes, especially in a matter which concerns them through life. An incident has but recently occurred, however, which almost persuades us to advocate such a course. We will relate it, as it will interest our readers.

One of the most beautiful and accomplished young ladies in Toronto, C. W., was Miss ——, a niece of the honorable postmaster general of the Canadas. Her parents were pecuniarily independent—if a fortune of several hundred thousand dollars would make them so—and were, besides, highly connected. For the past four or five years their daughter has been in attendance upon a school in a neighboring city, where she has stored her mind with useful knowledge.

During one of her visits to her home in Toronto she met a young man about her own age, the son of a prominent banker there. Having met, they loved, and having loved, their first impulse was to testify that love by wedding, as to them there seemed to be no reasonable objection. In the happiness of their new-found affection they applied to the parents of the young lady for their consent to the union, no obstacle being interposed on the other side of the house. What was their dismay to meet with a positive, unequivocal refusal. The parents declared that such a connection could never take place; that although the young man bore an unexceptional character, he was the son of a banker, and himself a banker, while they were people of quality. No prayers or entreaties on the part of the young folks availed anything—they were inexorable. They had resolved that their daughter should marry another—a lawyer of great wealth and of good blood, but one whom the young lady detested.

Finding matters in this condition, the young couple did as many others have done before—resolved to elope. Although the young man was forbidden to enter the house, they managed to hold communication with each other, and arranged all the preliminaries.

The young lady's parents gave a large party on the eve of her departure for her last term at the seminary where she had spent the latter years of her life. All the quality of Toronto was present, among them the previously mentioned lawyer, destined by her parents to wed the heroine of our story. Dancing had commenced, and the gayety was at its height, when a servant handed a note to the belle of the party. Hastily excusing herself to the lawyer, to whom she was engaged for the next set, she hurried to her room, changed her clothes, and packing a few articles necessary for her journey, left the house and was received in the arms of her young lover. Together the two proceeded to a carriage not far off, drove to the railway station, embarked on board the car, and were soon speeding away to Kingston. Arriving at that point they lost no time, but, procuring the aid of a clergyman, were soon made one flesh. They were now joined together in bonds that no man can put asunder, and their minds were at last at rest. Taking the next train for the states, they crossed the border and came directly to this city, where they had friends. For a couple of weeks they remained among their friends here, evidently taking the greatest enjoyment in each other's society. All who saw them could not help remarking the deep affection they seemed to entertain for each other, and all unite in wishing them a long life of happiness and prosperity. We unite with their friends in hoping that they may never regret the step they have taken. They returned to Toronto on Saturday, and the husband will take his station once more behind his father's counter.

Cotton.

We give yesterday, from the Financal Chronicle, a statement showing the amount of the cotton production and consumption in the United States. Readers of that statement were no doubt struck by the fact stated that the consumption of cotton in this country was last year considerably less than it was fourteen years ago. In fact the lapse of twenty years, with all our increase of population in the interval, shows no increase in the consumption of that article. In this connection we may refer to an elaborate article in the Round Table, which presents some details of the history of cotton, with speculations on the prospects as regards its culture in the future.

The writer is no doubt correct in assuming that the world is not dependent on the United States for its supply of cotton. As to quality, the truth is that, though our sea islands furnish a cotton superior to anything grown elsewhere, Egyptian and Brazilian cotton both average above American. It is, however, no doubt true that, taking in view breadth of soil and conditions of climate, the capacity of America for cotton raising is superior to that of any other region of the world. This country could have commanded the markets of the world had it not been for our suicidal civil war. Before that woe befell us the production here was rapidly increasing. New lands were being taken into cultivation and fresh labor applied to them.

In ten years from 1850 the crop showed a steady increase amounting to about 70 per cent.; and in ten years from 1860 the crop would probably have reached seven millions of bales, and this year, with favorable weather, would not have fallen short of those figures. We have seen that, with weather not deemed very unpropitious, this year's crop will not, it is supposed, exceed 2,500,000 bales, with the prospect of its falling below this estimate. After some pinching of no long duration Europe found a supply in sources foreign to the United States, and the results were that whereas in 1861, out of 11,000,000 cwts. received in England, 7,000,000 came from this country, only 4,000,000 being furnished by other countries; in 1866 7,000,000 were supplied from other countries and only 4,500,000 by the United States.

The writer notices the prediction that our cotton product will be doubled at the end of ten years, meaning, of course, twice the large yield recorded before our civil war. He does not accept this conclusion, and broadly scouts it with the emphasis it deserves. Heretofore the cotton crop was made almost exclusively by slave laborers—men, women, and children. Of these women and children but a small proportion will hereafter be engaged in growing cotton. Its cultivation compared with many other articles of southern products, particularly those which afford food, is disagreeable. Hence black men will, as far as possible, shun it.

As the writer has been informed, correctly enough, "after the plant is above the ground the laborer must be in the field before sunrise, wet to the waist, with his clothes permitted to dry upon him as they may, and his labor is not ended till nightfall." He suggests the introduction of coolie labor; but the sensitive prejudice against help from that rich source cuts off all hope of supply thence. Hereafter, owners of farms at the south who till their own land will vary their industry, and make cotton but one and very likely a small item in their whole list of crops.

Notwithstanding receding prices, the market there has been sold down much lower in 1867 than last year. The stock on hand, September 1, this year, is only 83,155 bales against 281,179 same time last year. The new year begins with an unusually small stock in the interior, and the receipts for the next twelve months will be almost entirely from the crop of this year.

The supply on hand and immediately anticipated in England is now very large, and consequently prices are low, twenty-five cents currency now against thirty-five last year at this time, with the prospect that before next spring prices will be still lower. Computations as to the actual cost of raising cotton, put it at a figure which, added to all other charges, leaves the planter without a profit. Among these charges is the government tax, which, it is rightly assumed, comes out of the pocket of the planter. We can not but think that the loud call which will be made upon congress for the repeal of this tax will not be without its effect.

Sectional Bitterness.

The Bulletin in an editorial on that subject remarks:

The Yankees conquered us because their system gave them money, numbers, and skill. We are their bondsmen because we despised those pursuits to which modern nations owe their freedom. What has happened to us has befallen others. We shall certainly not be fools enough to quarrel with civilization or progress because the Yankees have employed their agencies.

MISCELLANEO

GOING TO SCHOOL.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

He helped her over the meadow brook,
While her feet she timidly set
(Twin lilies they were!) on the mossy stone
With the cooling ripples wet.

They passed the brook, and it seemed to sing
With a sweeter, merrier sound,
As the two with their school-books wandered on
O'er the clover-laden ground.

O little maiden! how fair you were,
With your eyes of heavenly blue;
And the dimples played on your cheeks as play
On a rose the drops of dew.

As play on a rose the drops of dew,
When the breezes merrily blow!
And your lips they were tints of the ripening peach:
In the morning's ruddy glow.

Bare feet, how they twinkled among the grass!
Did you know whenever you took
The path for school, that he waited for you
By the willow-shaded brook?

Since then, the fragrant blossoms have come
To the boughs, ah! many a time;
And a bridge is over the brook that sings,
As of old, its pleasant rhyme.

And two are straying upon the bank,
As I pen these wandering words;
And they talk of the happy school-day time,
And they watch the building birds.

But a stream there is with a grander flow,
With a sterner, sadder song;
And lovers will cross to a different school,
And help each other along!

"Her Price is Above Rubies."

The best actual example of what a wife should be, according to the charming picture drawn in the Proverbs, are by no means the ones to publish their own excellences, and we may safely conclude that the living instances of model women are far more numerous than they appear. A Kentucky farmer furnishes the following evidence of the money value of a wife. The companionship of such a wife was, however, more precious than her industry and economy, and though the testimony here given to her worth may perhaps sound mercenary, and comes most certainly from an interested party, we gladly call attention to the Blue Grass farmer's wife, and help to "pass round" the record of her good example:

I have been farming twenty-two years. The first four years I was unmarried. I began farming with two hundred and fifty acres, in the Blue Grass region. I handled cattle, hogs, sheep and horses—principally the two first named—and lived, I thought, tolerably economically, spent none of the money for tobacco in any way; never betting a cent or dissipating in any way, and yet, at the end of the four years, I had made little or no clear money. I then married a young lady eighteen years of age—one who had never done any housework, or work of any kind, except making a portion of her own clothes. She had never made a shirt, drawers, pants or waistcoat, or even sewed a stitch on a coat, and yet, before we had been married a year, she had made for me every one of the articles of clothing named, and knit numbers of pairs of socks for me—yes, and mended divers articles for me, not excepting an old hat or two. She had also made butter, sold eggs, chickens and other fowls, and vegetables, to the amount of near $600 in cash, at the end of the year, whereas during the four years that I was single I had never sold five cents worth; besides making me purely happy and contented with and at my own home. And so far as to making of money, we have made money clear of expenses every year since we were married, in every thing that we have undertaken on the farm, and she has made from $350 to $500 every year except one, during the time, selling butter, eggs, and marketing of different kinds. My yearly expenses for fine clothing, &c., before I was married, were more than my yearly expenses were after I was married combined with the expenses of my wife and children, and our farm has increased from 250 to 650 acres; and I believe that if I had not married it never would have increased but little, if any. I have not been absent from home six nights, when my wife was at home, since we were married, and her cheeks kiss as sweetly as they did the morning after I was married.

Western Humor.

The following is a good illustration of broad Western humor, such as our English friends think is indigenous to American soil:

A traveler in Arkansas stopped at a shanty in the middle of a clearing, and on inquiring, was told that the building was a "grocery store." Expressing his wonder as to the sources of its custom in a country where the nearest neighbors lived ten miles off, the proprietor of the "store" proceeded as follows to enlighten him as to the mode of carrying it on:

"The fact is, me and the old woman is the best customers yet; but we 'spects these diggins will improve, in course business will improve too. Hows'ever, we do suthin now, even. Me and the old woman took the cart t'other day, went to town; bort a barrel of whiskey; and arter we come home and begin to count the balance on hand, we found there warnt but one solitary picayune left. As she allus carries the pus, in course she had it. Well, I sot the barrel agin one side of the room, and shortly after the old woman says, 'Sposin you tap your end of the barl?'—and I did; and she bought a drink and paid me the picayune. Pretty soon I began to get dry, and says I, "Old woman, 'sposin you tap your end of the barl?—and she did; and she sells me a drink; and the way that picayune traveled back'ards and for'ards over that barl is a caution to them as loves "red eye." But, stranger, losses is apt to come in every business; and me and the old woman has lost some in the grocery line; and I'll tell you how it was. The boy Bill, our oldest son, he see how the liquor was goin', and he didn't have nary red to join in the retail business; so one night he crwls under the house, and taps the barl atwixt the cracks in the puncheon floor, and I r'ally believe he's got more than me or the old woman either."

Stop! For Your Soul's Sake, Stop!

A bold boy, while wandering among the Alps, saw some flowers on the side of a fearful precipice. The guide saw him stand on the dizzy edge, and shouted, "come back!"

"Not yet; I see some flowers just below, which I want to get," replied the boy.

"Stop! responded the guide, you will be lost."

"I must have the flowers," rejoined the boy.

The guide, with the boy's friends, hurried toward the infatuated youth as he leaned over the edge of the dreadful gulf. They heard him say, "I almost have them;" and then, "I have them;" but the words were scarcely uttered before he lost his hold, and fell a thousand feet on the pitiless rocks below. He had given his life for a flower, for a flower that perished with him!

"Shocking!" exclaims my young reader. I am glad it is so, because it may help you to see your own danger. Are you not seeking a greater risk, to pluck a flower? What is that desire you cherish for a place in that circle of giddy youth to which you are invited? What is that habit that brings a blush to your cheeks whenever it is hinted at? What is that resolution to enter the charmed ring of forbidden amusements? Are not these things your flowers?

Are not your desires the reachings of your soul over the edge of innosence? Dear youth, take care! The gulf below your flowers is bottomless. It is hell!

If you pluck your flowers you will fall, and perish with them in that fearful realm of darkness and death. Seek them no longer, but stop! for your soul's sake stop!

The Pious Baker.

"A word spoken in due season, now good it is."—Prov. 15; 23.

A baker who traveled the country disposing of his bread, stopped at a public house, where he was waited on at dinner by a young girl. When opportunity offered, he asked the girl if she loved the Saviour. She answered that she did not. He then, in earnestness and simplicity, unfolded to her the way of salvation, and urged her to accept Christ as her Saviour. The words were but few, and he returned home. Again he found himself at the same public house; but now an old woman served at the table. She recognized him, and asked him if he remembered the former visit. He did. "Do you remember the girl that served you!" "I do." "She was my daughter; and oh! how I thank you for the few words you said to her on the subject of religion. They were the means of her conversion; and, oh! dear sir," bursting into tears, "they prepared her for a sick and dying bed, to which she was suddenly brought. She often referred to the interview, and she passed away in triumph. She is now with that Saviour you made known to her.—Sudbury Leaflets.

LECTURE ON YELLOW FEVER.

Its History, Character, and Treatment.

[From the New York Sun.]

Dr. Warren Stone, of New Orleans, delivered a lecture at Bellevue college yesterday morning, before a large number of medical gentlemen and students, on the origin, nature, and treatment of yellow fever, on which disease the doctor's extensive experience and high reputation render him excellent authority. Dr. Stone is a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of Berkshire medical college, but since 1833 he has resided in New Orleans, and has for many years been regarded as the leading surgeon of the south. He now holds the position of professor of surgery in the Medical college at New Orleans, connected with the University of Louisiana.

Dr. Stone was introduced by President Austin Fluit, and after a graceful acknowledgment of the kind reception he had met in this city, which he had not visited for seven years previously, he took up the subject of yellow fever, in which he said there were many points open for discussion. It was a disease peculiar to warm latitudes, but its limits could not be defined by any exact temperature or climatic conditions, for exceptions would frequently occur to falsify any such restriction. Nothing more definite could be said than that it was a disease incident to warm climates, and induced by a peculiar poison totally intangible and disconnected from any known causes of disease. There was no combination of filth—no combination of circumstances calculated to deteriorate health and excite typhoid or typhus fevers, that had anything to do with the generation of yellow fever. This remarkable fact was not generally known. Some federal officers had taken credit to themselves for keeping yellow fever out of New Orleans during their occupation of that city; but it was a notorious fact that the city was not cleaner then, in the suburbs and low regions, than it had often been before. The weather happened to be cooler, and there was less rain; but there was no material difference in any other respect. They had had six years of exemption previously, when there was no quarantine whatever. Yellow fever fixed upon high and healthy localities, and proved as virulent there as in the low regions. The Magnolia ridges, back of New Orleans, was one of the healthiest regions in the world; yet the yellow fever proved quite as destructive there as in less favored regions. Indeed, the disease was always more violent in the country, when it once prevailed there, than in cities.

In regard to the ætiology or causes of yellow fever there had been much dispute. It had been a question whether it was imported or of local origin. It certainly was not imported in ships. The epidemic influence was wafted through the atmosphere in waves or cycles, and always made gradual and regular approaches; so that in New Orleans they knew when it was coming by its prevalence in islands in the gulf. In the year 1851 it began in Brazil, and after passing over the northern part of South America and the West India islands, it reached New Orleans in 1853. In 1855 it had traveled as far as Memphis, and was severe in many of the interior towns. Its history in New Orleans the present year was remarkable. It first appeared in a mild form and in several places at once, in June, and though the weather was favorable to its spread, it did not increase in intensity, and only about nine cases occurred per week. These cases evidently originated in the city. But later in the season a fresh wave approached from the direction of Mexico, appearing in a violent form in Indianola, Galveston, and New Iberia, and lastly in New Orleans, where it appeared in a severe form and in increasing ratio, though the weather was of the kind considered unfavorable to its propagation.

This was the general history of the disease. It fixed upon a place and ran its course, increasing in a definite ratio, declining in the same way, and finally disappearing, but for the time being affecting all who were exposed to its influence. It was true, however, that debility and other reasons rendered some persons much more susceptible than others to the peculiar poison; but this was the case with all diseases.

The question of its contagiousness was of great importance, and which ought to be settled, both for the interest of sufferers from the disease, and a guidance in the matter of quarantine. "I am perfectly convinced," said the doctor, "beyond all doubt or hesitation, that personally it is not contagious; I know that it is not." If the disease were contagious once it would always be so, for it was the same disease in all places. It was a specific disease, and the same person had it but once; acclimation was perpetual, but it was very hard to convince the human understanding where. There were exceptions to these rules, as there were to those governing small pox. He had observed honestly at least, if not closely, and the result of his observations had led him to believe yellow fever noncontagious. In 1833 he arrived in New Orleans, and went into the Charity hospital on duty. The hospital became full, and as there was great scarcity of help it became filthy. The passages were often filled with bed sacks covered with excrement and black vomit, so that a sort of typhoid fever was generated, yet the persons employed there escaped yellow fever, and he did not have it himself until late in the season, after these conditions had been remedied. In 1853 he had an infirmary in which were three hundred cases of yellow fever, treated by ten or twelve Sisters of Charity, all of whom were unacclimated, yet they were the very last to get the disease, because the atmospheric influence did not prevail where the hospital was situated. In 1847, in 1853, and 1854, and in 1829, the experience had been substantially the same. In 1859 some forty cases of yellow fever were placed in the Charity hospital among a number of other patients, who were unacclimated, and though a large number of the forty died, not a solitary new case occurred in the house. Cases were constantly occurring of persons who went into infected districts, took the disease, were taken to uninfected regions, treated and nursed, and yet no one took the disease from them. In 1856 and '57 yellow fever of a severe character prevailed in New Orleans, but was strictly confined to six squares. No intercourse with vessels had taken place, and it was evident the disease originated there. In the country the doctor had made diligent inquiries, and with the same result. It did not spread from person to person. It was quite possible that a quantity of the poisoned atmosphere might be conveyed in the hold of a ship to distant places, and that persons breathing that atmosphere might have disease, but they could not impart it to others. Just how much air would suffice to render the fever portable, it was impossible to ascertain.

The disease itself varied in the mode of attack. The most favorable cases were those where it was ushered in at once with the prominent symptoms, which consisted of a rigor, followed immediately with pains in the limbs, back, and head, with heat of the skin and fever. But many of the cases were insidious, and the patient continued up and about, complaining of pain in the limbs and a chilly feeling. The disease was progressing all this time, and the physician was not likely to see the patient until it was too late to do anything. It was for this reason that more violent attacks were really more favorable to ultimate recovery than the milder cases. The mild cases were just as sure to kill as any other if they were neglected. Almost all cases would prove fatal unless the patient was properly managed and kept quiet. In the well marked cases there was rigor, pains in the head, back, and limbs, and sometimes a peculiar capillary engorgement, particularly in the eye. If the patient is placed in bed at once, with a little assistance he breaks into a sweat, as in common intermittent fever. This gives some relief, but not much. The pains continue, but if the case is favorable it will go on until the sweating and heat subside together at the end of three days. The patient must be kept perfectly quiet, and if he is then nourished he will have no return of the suffering. He must not even be allowed to raise his head. If he gets up a faintness comes over him and the whole process is often renewed, with the addition of nausea and loathing of food. In this case he almost certainly dies. This is the history of favorable cases. Purgatives are not essential and may do much harm. A mild dose of oil may be given if there is anything in the stomach likely to ferment and prove irritating. A simple injection may prove useful. If patients are seen in the beginning the doctor gave them, as soon as perspiration began, a full dose of quinine. There was no doubt of its good effect in quieting pains and promoting perspiration. Sometimes a second dose was advisable the following morning. This was all that could be done, beyond regulating the drink and nourishment. There was nothing more to do. There was no organic disease; nothing was revealed by dissection. The poison caused a peculiar condition of the blood, which afterward showed itself in the skin. There were many little points in the treatment which, in the aggregate, were of vast importance. In regard to the application of ice to relieve the pains in the head, it was common, but not advisable, and afforded only very temporary relief. The reaction from it is dangerous. Cups to the head, stomach, and back were much used at one time, but only in cases of plethora were they of service. Simple applications of mustard were generally sufficient to relieve the pain in the back. Absolute rest and nourishment were of the highest possible importance. Any form of stimulant may be given that the patient prefers, but malt liquors were the best. Brandy may often be given even with the fever. Beef tea was necessary, and if the stomach could not retain it, it must be given by injection. Where there was acidity of the stomach, small doses of bicarbonate of soda, combined with the 1-32 of a grain of morphia had oftenan excellent effect. Sponging the patient with cold water was grateful and appropriate, but on no account must be he disturbed by the treatment. There was much in anticipating certain symptoms. If there is a disposition to delirium and wandering, it may be guarded against by mild anodynes and stimulants. If this delirium is allowed to continue, the patient becomes comatose and dies. It must be remembered that yellow fever patients are wholly irresponsible, and though they may talk reasonably, they do not appreciate their own condition. It was exceedingly difficult to keep patients quiet in bed, yet it was the most essential part of the treatment. The doctor told a story of an intelligent sea captain, whose life he saved during one of the epidemics by threatening to cut his throat if he dared stir from a given position in the intervals of his visits. The treatment of yellow fever was simple. In old times people thought because it was a mighty disease it needed mighty remedies, and when he first went to New Orleans it was customary to give sixty grain doses of calomel, and even more than that; and yet some patients did even then get well. With rational treatment a large proportion would recover. The chief difficulty lay in preventing the patient from committing fatal acts of indiscretion in the absence of his physician. It should be remembered that everything depended on rest and nutrition, and that nothing could be gained by depletion. It was even better to allow the bowels to remain unmoved for five or six days than to run the risk of giving active purgatives.

The remarks of Dr. Stone were received with profound attention, and a vote of thanks was tendered him at the conclusion of the lecture.

A SAILING CARRIAGE FOR THE PLAINS.—We were on Saturday shown a model of a "sailing carriage," designed for crossing the plains to New Mexico. It has two upright jib sails, and a sail on each spoke of the two wheels on one side of the wagon, with steering gear acting on the forward wheels, and provision for transferring the wheel sails to the opposite wheels. The inventor is Chas. P. Maczowitzky, a German, who has been a sailor, and has since spent several years in traversing the plains. The long and tedious voyages of the trains led him to think of and perfect this contrivance, which he seems earnest in thinking must succeed. When the model is placed on a plane and blown upon, it is moved readily by the wind. He relies upon the ascertained constancy of the prevailing winds on the great plains, over the route named. A full sized sailing carriage has just been finished for him by Messrs. Westlake & Bodden, at Biddle and Main streets, and is to be, we understand, exhibited at Fourth and Poplar streets to-day. The wheels are ten feet high, the wagon box shaped like a long boat and hung low, and with the jib sails the whole concern presents an odd and formidable appearance. The design is to take passengers and mail matter only—not freight—and it is expected that the carriage will suffice as a boat for crossing streams. The thing is decidedly curious and interesting.—St. Louis Democrat.

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin: all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE

From the Advocate and Guardian.

"Get thy Spindle and thy Distaff Ready, and God will send Thee Flax."

BY ANNA MONTAGUE.

Place the spindle, hold the distaff,
Waiting one;
Ply thy hands as at the spinning
To be done,
And in full, abundant measure,
God will give, in His good pleasure,
Flax for all thy need.

Stand not thou so idly lingering,
Faithless one;
Mourning want of flax for labor
To be done;
Up! and gird thyself for duty,
And thy work shall grow in beauty,
Till God says—"complete!"

Art thou longing for a mission
In the earth?
For a noble, high endeavor,
Springing into birth?
Let thy dream be wrought in living,
And thy God, by richly giving,
Will thy needs supply.

If thy heart be nerved for doing,
Thou shalt find,
All around thee, in thy pathway,
Poor and blind.
Take and lead them to the glory
Shining out from Calvary's story;
Lift them from their sin.

List! the sounds of the great city!
Wailings sore
Rise from young and stricken children
Evermore.
They are crying in their sorrow,
"O, the weary, sad to-morrow
Cometh as to-day!

"Let us die! the grave is quiet
In its rest;
Want and crime, with clutching fingers,
Never there molest.
Would you live? The earth is dreary,
And our hearts are very weary
In our toil and woe.

"Love? we know not what it meaneth?
But the frown
Of our mothers, and their curses
Weigh us down.
Our child-laughter—hushed its tone—
'Tis the echo of a moan;
Let us quickly die!"

Dare ye stand in idle lingering,
Christian one?
Mourning want of flax for labor
To be done?
Lo! the flax which God hath given;
Shall not some soul find his heaven
Through your tears and toil?

Lead these sorrowing, blinded children
To the light;
Let love lift the heavy shadows
From their sight;
Train their voices to sweet laughter,
And their souls for glad hereafter
In the sunny skies.

And when thou hast finished labor
At His word,
For thy work, complete in beauty,
Shall be heard
Tones of love, in golden measure—
"Child, it is thy Father's pleasure, Rest for aye in heaven."

A Cheering View of the Times.

An article in the British and Foreign Evangelical Review, presents, in a forcible manner, the gains of humanity from the wars and revolutions of the last eighteen years. We give the annexed extract:

First of all came the revolution of 1848. The wars consequent on that event planted constitutional government in Sardinia, and opened the door to the Bible in Piedmont. In 1854 came the war in Turkey. It had as its special issue the Sultan's firman, proclaiming toleration in the Mohammedan empire, and repealing the death penalty attached to the profession of Christianity. In 1857 came the mutiny in India, followed by a great war. The British arms triumphed, and with that triumph came an edict of toleration to all the tribes and languages of that great continent, in the shape of the Queen's proclamation, declaring Christianity to be the religion of that empire of which India had now become a part. Next, war broke out in the far East, and that war put an end to the complete isolation which China had maintained for so many centuries, and opened that distant land to the Bible and the missionary. Having touched the limits of the farthest East, war returned westward on its steps, and in 1859 broke out again in July. This, the war of independence, as it has been termed, opened the whole country, from the Alps to Sicily, the Papal states excepted, to the circulation of the Scriptures and the preaching of the Gospel. War had, for the time, accomplished its mission in the Old World. It now crossed the Atlantic, and there, with its hoarse voice, it proclaimed liberty to the captive. Amid fields of unexampled carnage, it struck down one of the most accursed systems of slavery the world ever saw. Having done its work in the New World, it returned again to the Old, and its thunder peal was next heard in the heart of Germany. This very summer, after a campaign of only nine days, Austria was overthrown, and ceased to exist as a German power; the last vestige of the once famous holy Roman Empire was swept out of existence, the strongest political bulwark of the Papacy was thrown down, and by the rise of a great Protestant kingdom in Germany, the balance of political power was turned in favor of liberty and evangelical truth.

This is a marvelous chain of events. It conspicuously reveals the foot prints of Him who is the church's Head and the world's King. Within the short period of eighteen years, Satan's kingdom of idolatry has been smitten all round, and toleration has been proclaimed as law to the ends of the earth, to be afterwards worked into the usages of government and the opinions of the people.

Religious Statistics.

Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie, in the Saturday Night, has compiled a very interesting column from the Presbyterian Historical Almanac. We make use of the following, which is well worthy of study:

The Methodists, who have a total aggregate church accommodation for 6,259,769 persons, in 19,833 churches, are the most numerous of all the sects in the United States. Next are the Baptists, 4,054,220 in 12,150 churches. Third, the Presbyterians, 265,949 in 6406 churches. Fourth, the Roman Catholics, set down as having 1,404,437 persons in 2250 churches. Fifth, the Congregationalists, 956,351, and 2234 churches. Sixth, the Protestant Episcopal, 847,296, and 2145 churches. There are 269,084 churches, with 826 places of worship, and only 34,412 Jews, with 77 synagogues. There are 6275 Spiritualits; 5200 Shakers; 15,395 Swedenborgians; and 13,100 Mormons, with 21 churches in Utah and 1 in California.

The different religious persuasions are variously distributed. For example, there are more Methodists in Ohio than in any other State; more Baptists in Georgia; more Presbyterians in Pennsylvania; more Roman Catholics in New York; ten times more Unitarians in Massachusetts than in any other state; more Congregationalists in Massachusetts; more Protestant Episcopals in New York; more Quakers in New York, also more Jews, Dutch Reformed, Universalits, and Shakers. There is not a single Spiritualist church in Pennsylvania. In this estimate through senses-takers, I believe that the Roman Catholics and the Protestant Episcopals are understated. There must be nearly 3,000,000 of former and over 1,000,000 of latter.

The result is, 54,009 churches of all denominations in the United States; giving an aggregate accommodation to 19,128,851 persons; the aggregate value of this church property being $171,398,532. Of this the proportion does not accord with the respective church accommodation of each—the Methodist, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Episcopal, Baptist, and Congregational having the most value—New York having the greatest amount of this church property, and Pennsylvania next; the value being $35,125,287 in New York, and $22,581,479 in Pennsylvania. But Pennsylvania has more churches than any other state, namely, 5337, while New York has 5287. On the other hand the church accommodation is for 2,253,820 persons in New York, against 2,112,920 in Pennsylvania. The average value of each church differs very much; as low as $441 for a Spiritualist place of worship, and as high as $16,433 for the Unitarian, $14,744 for the Jewish, and about $10,000 each for the Protestant Episcopal, Roman Catholic, and Dutch Reformed. The average value of a Methodist church is set down at $1664, and of a Baptist at $1734. The value of all the church property in Utah is $888,760.

In Pennsylvania there is one church to every 544 of the population; in New York, one to every 734; in California one to every 1297; in Massachusetts, one to every 752. The aggregate of persons in the whole Union for whom there is no church accommodation, is 12,314,580. There is accommodation for 19,128,751, and the whole population is 31,443,321; therefore, where there is room in the various houses of religious worship for 19 out of 31, as many as 12 more have no place to hold public worship in. There really ought to be 75,000 places of worship instead of 54,000.

Religion is the most costly in Utah, where every inhabitant has to pay an average of $22. This is $18 in Rhode Island; $14 in Connecticut; nearly $13 in the District of Columbia and Massacusetts; over $11 in New Jersey; $9 in New York; and nearly $8 in Pennsylvania. It is almost as expensive in Delaware. The value of church property, which was $87,000,000 in 1850. had risen to $171,000,000 in 1860—being an increase of $84,000,000. The increase in church accommodations in the same decade exceeded 5,000,000.

That considerably more than one-third of the whole population of the United States should have no church accommodation is a fact to be lamented. The remedy is—build and endow a sufficient number of churches, in which every seat shall be FREE. At present, many churches are not half filled, because people will not, very often can not, afford to pay heavy pew rents. So long as churches are erected as joint-stock establishments, out of which a handsome percentage of profit is annually paid as an interest on capital invested, and so long as a favorite clergyman is put up, like a theatrical "star," to draw large audiences into a church, himself receiving an enormous salary, so long must there be a want of accommodation for the multitude. Free churches, the ministers of which would be paid their salaries of fixed and permanent endowments—these are what we need in this country.

American Exaggeration.

Whence comes that tendency to exaggeration, or, as it is delicately termed, "embellishing the truth," which is so observable in men? Dr. Johnson used to say that the hardest thing to obtain in this world is a fact, and lawyers tell us that nothing is rarer in their experience than to meet with a witness who, in describing an occurrence, can a "plain, unvarnished tale deliver," without a bit of "red in the bush." Every one loves to draw the long bow occasionally, if only to show the thews of his imagination. We Americans are especially fond of "piling up the agony" in our own statements. As our mountains, lakes and rivers are all on a gigantic scale, we seem to think our speech must be framed after the same pattern. Even our jokes are of the most stupendous kind; they set one to thinking of the Alleghanies, or smack of the immensity of the prairies. A Western orator, in portraying the most trivial incident, rolls along a Mississippi flood of eloquence, and the vastness of his metaphors makes you think you are in the age of the megatherium and saurians, and listening to one of a pre-Adamite race.

Ask a friend what he thinks of the weather in a rainy season, and he will tell you that "it rains cats and dogs," or that "it beats all the storms since the flood." If his clothes get sprinkled in crossing the street, he has been "drenched to the skin." The days are "as dark as Egypt," and the mud in the streets is everywhere "up to one's knees." If a Yankee makes a shrewd or lucky speculation, he is said to have cleared "heaps of money," and everybody envies him "the doubloons he has bagged." All our winds blow a hurricane; all our fires are conflagrations, even though a hencoop is burned; all our fogs can be cut with a knife. Nobody fails in this country—he "bursts up." As our orators rival Demosthenes in eloquence, they beat Chillingworth in logic; and their sarcasm is more "withering" than that of Junius himself. Who ever heard of a public meeting in this country, that was not "an immense demonstration"—of an actor's benefit at which the house was not "crowded from pit to dome"—of a political nomination that was not "sweeping the country like wildfire?" Where is the rich man who does not "roll in wealth," or the poor man who is "worth the first red cent?" When is a carriage upset without being "knocked into immortal smash," or who ever experiences a smart breeze at sea, which does not make "the waves run mountain high?" All our good men are paragons of virtue—our villains monsters of iniquity. Our barbers are all the Napoleons of their profession, and our boot-blacks are beginning to be spoken of as artistes. Listen to the conversation of a fashionable young lady, and you will find it to be stuffed with exclamations, expletives, and senseless extravagances, as untasteful as the streamers of tattered finery which you sometimes see fluttering about the person of a dilapidated belle. Interpret it literally, and you would infer that within the compass of twenty-four hours she had met with more hair-breadth escapes and disastrous chances, had passed through more distressing experiences and seen more gorgeous spectacles, had endured more fright and enjoyed more rapture than would suffice for half a dozen common lives.

Many of our public speakers and writers seem incapable of expressing themselves in a plain, calm, truthful manner on any subject whatever. It has been said of Rufus Choate, who "drove a substantive-and-six" (adjectives) whenever he appeared in public, that he would be as pathetic as the grand lamentation of Samson Agonistes on the obstruction of fish-ways, and rise to the cathedral music of the universe on the right to manufacture India-rubber suspenders.

Seriously, when shall we have done with this habit of amplification and exaggeration? Is it not evident that, by applying super-superlatives to things petty or common-place, we must exhaust our vocabulary, so that when a really great thing is to be described, we are bankrupt of adjectives? As a hill which would hardly be noticed in Vermon, would tower like a mountain on an Illinois prairie, so a superlative is never so telling as when it stands out in bold contrast to the general temperance of one's language. Not only the strongest thinkers, and the most logical reasoners, but the most persuasive rhetoricians of modern times, have been remarkable rather for moderation than for exaggeration in the expression of their thoughts. Prof. Marsh remarks that it was a maxim of Webster's, that violence of language is indicative of fullness of thought and want of reasoning power, and that he used rather to understate than to overstate the strength of his confidence in the soundness of his own arguments, and the logical necessity of his conclusions. He kept his hearer constantly in advance of him, by suggestion rather than by strong asseveration, by a calm exposition of reasons which ought to excite feeling in the heart of both speaker and hearer, not by an undignified and theatrical exhibition of himself.—Who can doubt that this temperance was, in a great measure, the secret of the New Hampshire giant's great power?

Thoreau, describing an interview he had at Concord with John Brown, notices as one of the latter's peculiarities, that he did not overstate anything, but spoke within bounds. "He referred to what his family had suffered in Kansas, without giving the least vent to his pent-up fire. It was a volcano with an ordinary chimney flue." In reading the admirable letters of the late Rev. F.W. Robertson, we were forcibly struck by some comments of his on a letter, full of strongly-expressed religious sentiments, pious resolutions, &c., which he had received from a fashionable lady. The letter, he says, "is in earnest so far as it goes; only that fatal facility for strony words expresses feeling which will seek for itself no other expression. She believes or means what she says, but the very vehemence of the expression injures her, for really it expresses the penitence of a St. Peter, and would not be below the mark if it were meant to describe the bitter tears with which he bewailed his crime; but when such language is used for trifles, there remains nothing stronger for the awful crimes of human life. It is like Draco's code, death for larceny, and there remains for parricide and treason only death." Let us, then, be as chary of our superlatives as of our Sunday suit. To create a sensation, our bagged fox must not be let out before every crowd.—Northwestern Presbyterian.

"Be not Forgetful to Enerttain Strangers."

One pleasant Sunday morning, a few months since, a young man left his boarding-house with the intention of taking a stroll in the upper part of the city.

He was a stranger in Philadelphia. Only a few weeks before he had left his quiet New England home, left the dear mother who had watched over him and prayed for him from infancy, to seek his fortune in the great city. All its dangers, its temptations beset his pathway, but as yet the love of that mother had proved his shield and safeguard.

Before leaving home he had promised her that he would attend church, but three Sabbaths had passed over his head and his promise was still unfulfilled. More than once he had lingered near the entrance of some stately temple of God, but as he noticed the throng of fashionably-dressed people pouring up the broad stone steps, he had said within himself, "I shall not be welcome in that grand church. Very probably I would be regarded as an intruder, so I had better stay outside."

On the morning in question he was strolling aimlessly along, when his eye was attracted by the fanciful Gothic architecture of a church in —— street. As he approached it, he heard the full rich tones of the organ, and being passionately fond of music, concluded to step inside of the vestibule, and listen for a few minutes.

While standing thus, a young member of the church entered, and noticing the stranger, greeted him warmly, and invited him to come in.

"No, thank you," was the reply. "I only stopped for a few minutes to listen to the music. I did not intend to go in, as I am a stranger here."

"But we are always glad to see strangers in this church," said the young member—"we try to make them feel at home. Is it not so, Mr. J.?" he continued, turning to his Bible class teacher, who had just entered.

"Yes, indeed," said the gentleman addressed, as he warmly grasped the hand of the youth, "strangers are always welcome here. Come into my pew and I think I can prove it to you."

Such an invitation was not to be rejected, and the NewEngland youth, with some little hesitation, followed his new friend up the broad isle into one of the best pews.

At the close of the service the gentleman asked, "Well, how did you like it?"

"Very much," was the answer; "the hymns were familiar, the tunes also; they reminded me of home;" and his voice slightly faltered.

"I knew you would be pleased," said the gentleman with a smile, "but now come with me. I want to introduce you to two or three of my Bible class. You must make friends of them; they are good lads, every one. By the way, he continued, I should like to have you come to my Bible class this afternoon. You do not attend any Sunday school, I suppose?"

"No, sir," answered the young man, looking somewhat surprised.

"I see how it is. You think you are too old to go to Sunday school; but we have an adult Sunday school here numbering about four hundred, so you will have plenty of company. Will you come?"

"I do not know," said the young man, hesitating. "I will think about it."

His new friend, however, was not to be put off so easily, and at length yielding, he promised to come in the afternoon.

That day proved to be the turning point in his life. He was soon persuaded to enter the prayer meeting, and in a few weeks his faithful teacher had the joy of knowing that he was safe in the fold of Christ.

When relating his experience before the church, he told the story of his Sunday morning walk, his casual stepping into the church door, and the invitation he had received——"Stop just there," said the pastor, who had been listening attentively. "Do you think you would have entered the church if this youug brother had not invited you to come in?"

"No, sir," was the reply. "I should have waited till the music ceased, and then have continued my walk."

"You see, friends," said the pastor, turning to the deeply-interested listeners, "the value of a simple invitation. Those few kind words to a stranger youth have been the means, in God's hands, of saving a soul from death. I need only add, go ye and do likewise."

Charge of the Light Brigade.

Any particulars concerning the famous "charge" at Balaklava, during the Crimean war, which Tennyson has finely immortalized in verse, must be of general interest, although it is now several years since the gallant Six Hundred rode up to their death, while

"Cannon to right of them, cannon to left of them, Cannon in front of them, volleyed and thundered."

We gladly give place, therefore, to the following personal and graphic account of the affair, which has never before been made public. It came substantielly from the lips of the Earl of Cardigan, the commander of the Eleventh Hussars at Balaklava, in 1854, who actually led the celebrated "charge," and was related to Mr. Stephen Massett during his recent visit to England, after he had recited Tennyson's stirring epic to Lord and Lady Cardigan, with an effect which may be easily imagined by all who have ever heard his recitations.

At about one o'clock on that memorable day, after the Heavy Brigade had been attacked by the Russian cavalry, the whole of the cavalry division was considerably advanced towards the enemy, and the Light Brigade had been ordered to dismount to relieve their horses. Suddenly they were again ordered to "mount," and aid-de-camp Capt. Nolan came forward and told Lord Lucan, commanding the cavalry, that the Light Brigade were to attack the Russians in the valley. Lord Lucan rode up to Lord Cardigan and said: "It is Lord Raglan's order that the Light Brigade is to attack the Russians in the valley." Lord Cardigan replied, saluting with his sword: "Certainly, my Lord, but you will allow me to inform you that there is a Russian battery in front, one on each flank, while the ground on the flank is covered with Russian riflemen." Lord Lucan answered: "I cannot help that, it is Lord Raglan's positive order that the Light Brigade is to attack them."

Lord Cardigan then formed his brigade of five regiments, with three regiments in the front line, and two in the second, while Lord Lucan ordered Lord Cardigan's own regiment, the Eleventh Hussars, back, so as to form a support on the left rear of the front line. Lord Cardigan immediately ordered the advance. After going about sixty yards, Capt. Nolan rode obliquely across the front, when a Russian shell fell upon the ground near him, and not far from Lord Cardigan. Nolan's horse then wheeled about and carried him to the rear, and Lord Cardigan led the brigade down to the main battery in front, about one mile and a quarter distant. On arriving at about eighty yards from the battery, the fire became very severe, and the officers were considerably excited, and had to be ordered to "be steady."

Lord Cardigan, at the head of his brigade, passed close by the muzzle of a gun, which was fired as he entered the battery, and rode forward through the Russian limber carriages until he came up close to their line of cavalry. His brigade did not follow him, and he was attacked by two Cossacks, slightly wounded, and nearly dismounted, but he fenced them off, and gradually retired from them and others who were attempting to surround him. When he got back to the battery his command had retired and verged to the left, and he slowly retreated until he met Gen. Scarlett, commanding the Heavy Brigade of cavalry. He told him that the Light Brigade was destroyed, and mentioned the fate of Capt. Nolan, after bringing the order for the attack, when Gen. Scarlett said that he had just ridden over Capt. Nolan's body.

Lord Cardigan then had his brigade counted by his staff officer, and found that there were only one hundred and sixty-five present out of the six hundred and fifty. He then immediately rode off to Lord Raglan to report what had taken place.

The first thing that Lord Raglan said was, "What, sir, could you possibly mean by attacking a battery in front, contrary to all the usages of warfare, and the custom of the service?" My Lord I hope you will not blame me, for I received a positive order from my superior officer in front of the troops to attack them, although I was quite well aware of the unusual course of proceeding ordered." Lord Raglan then inquired what he had done, and was told that he led the brigade into a Russian battery; that he had ridden up to the Russiah cavalry; that he was not followed by the brigade; that he was wounded and nearly dismounted, and had some difficulty in getting away from a number of Cossacks; that the brigade was nearly destroyed, there now being only one hundred and sixty-five left out of six hundred and fifty; and, finally, that the whole had occupied the brief space of twenty minutes.

Spurgeon's "Naturalness."

Apart from the undeniable power of genius, there is evidently nothing so sure of success in a preacher as naturalness, the artless expression of an intelligent mind and a feeling heart. Books written on the "art of preaching" are all conceived on a false idea. A London correspondent of the Christian Intelligencer has heard Spurgeon, and speaks thus of his manner and appearance:

He is a plain, rather thick-set man, apparently about forty years of age; has an eloquent voice, and strength of lungs sufficient to fill the vast area of his tabernacle. The first impression you get of the speaker is the absence of every thing like art; extreme naturalness, so to speak, characterizes his whole manner. Nobody would suppose that he felt that he had any special responsibility to discharge, or felt the least concern of how the task before him should be disposed of. His prayers indicated depth of feeling and breadth of view, as well as ease and versatility in the use of language; and yet they expressed nothing more than the common and ordinary wants of a human soul. No soaring flight to the clouds, nor rhetorical description of the vale of woe. Heaven is an ordinary, plain habitation for the just, and hell but the abode for the damned. Plainness in expression, plainness of thought, and plain and common illustrations make up the body of his devotion. But no class, condition, or character of men are forgotten in his plain, homely, but eloquently uttered prayers. The babe in its mother's arms, the father in his infirmities of age, the youth in his temptations, those in the toils, cares and ambitions of middle life, and the sons and daughters of sorrow, are all commended to God's mercy and grace.

What is here said of his apparent age (observes a cotemporary) forms a singular incidental contradiction to the impression of executive ease conveyed by the preacher's manner. Mr. Spurgeon is thirty-three. The labor he has performed, and does perform, might well add seven years to his looks. The gout from which he now suffers may have aided in deepening the lines, though he pleasantly speaks of the infirmity as one of the "good qualities" inherited from his father, and in no way whatever affecting his tongue.

Anecdote of Wendell Phillips.

The following will show that the great orator, in spite of his austerity on the platform, and the appearance of fanatical acrimony in his speeches, posseses a heart of singular gentleness:

One day during the war he spoke before the lyceum at Gloucester, and returning home by the cars the next morning, fell in with a lady who got upon the train at a way station. She was a southern refugee; had been suddenly reduced from affluence to poverty; and she was supporting herself and her fatherless children by giving an occasional lecture before a country audience. It was a hard struggle, for the field was full, and she was almost unknown and friendless; but with a brave heart she worked on, never asking a dollar of aid from any society or individual.

Mr. Phillips saw her get upon the car, and asked to take a seat beside him. It was a winter day, and she was thinly clad and shivering from the exposure of a long ride in the open air of the cold morning. Obeserving this, Mr. Phillips asked:

"Where did you speak last night?"

She told him it was in a town distant about ten miles from the railway.

"And—I wouldn't be impertinent—how much did they pay you?"

"Five dollars and the fare to and from Boston."

"Five dollars!" he exclaimed; why, I always get fifty or a hundred, and your lecture must be worth more than mine—you can give them facts, I only opinions."

"Small as it is, I am glad to get it, Mr. Phillips," answered the lady. "I would talk at that rate every night during the winter."

He sat for a moment in silence; then he put his hand into his pocket, drew out a roll of bank notes and said, in a hesitating way,

"I don't want to give you offence, but you know I preach that a woman is entitled to the same pay as a man if she does the same work. Now, my price is fifty or a hundred dollars, and if you will let me divide with you I shall not have any more than you, and the thing will be even."

The lady at first refused, but after a little gentle urging, she put the bank notes into her reticule. At the end of her journey she counted the roll, and found that it contained fifty dollars—every dollar that he had received for his lecture at Gloucester. It may add point to this incident to say that the lady was, by marriage, a niece to Jefferson Davis.—N. Y. Even. Gaz.

The Judge and the Liquor Sellers.

Judge Maxwell, of the District Court at Des Moines, Iowa, recently rendered judgment in several liquor suits, and gave the offenders almost as plain a statement of his opinion of them as they cared to hear. He said:

You have contemptuously bid defiance to the law and its officers. Now, it is time we had some understanding about this matter. It never was the policy of the criminal law to persuade men to do right, or to hire them to obey the laws. You, however, have been kindly talked to by my predecessors, and warned of coming trouble. You have shown yourselves to be incorrigible criminals. Moral reasoning and kind treatment have had no other effect upon you than to make you bold and defiant. It has become very manifest that your determination is to brave it through and defy the law and its officers to the bitter end. The time has therefore fully come when you must be dealt with as criminals by the stern and rigid demands of the law. Your position is a humiliating one; aside from its moral turpitude, it is covered with the blackest infamy; your crime is the source and fountain-head of all others. Nothing but continual misery follows in your train. Some of the most revolting sights along our railroad lines, of mutilated human bodies, are but the smallest part of your work of destruction. You have no plea of self-defence or mitigating circumstances to offer; nothing but a love of money has prompted you to such a course of life. I have taken a solemn oath to enforce this, as well as all other criminal laws, and while I do not act vindictively in this matter, I have no disposition whatever to trifle with that oath. It is my object so far to enforce this law as to compel men to obey it. When this is done, I shall be perfectly satisfied, without inflicting any more punishment than is necessary to secure that end.

is receiving from the Northern people a magnificent ovation. Wherever he goes he is received with the greatest enthusiasm. The people honor him who honor them. His great military and civil deeds are gratefully remembered, and the man who will not make "rebellion honorable," and who carried out the congressional plan of reconstruction in Louisiana, with such wisdom and impartiality, will never be forgotten. No man in the land is more worthy of an ovation.

Pittsburg Female College.

A notice of this excellent institution may be found in another column. Located in the city of Pittsburg, it is one of the most popular and well sustained female colleges in the country. Dr. Pershing, its president, deservedly ranks among the foremost educators in the nation, and the teachers who assist him are eminently qualified for the positions which they fill. We hope our friends, who purpose sending their children North to school, will send them to Pittsburg, where they will enjoy all the advantages of a thorough college course, and be surrounded with a home-like influence.

BALDI

Rome is moved to her centre. Italy claims the eternal city. The arrest of Garibaldi has quickened the desire and strengthened the determination. Garibaldi is Italy. From the snows of Monte Rosa to the fires of Vesuvius, his spirit animates the land. Present or absent, he commands Italy. He is king of the Italians, and Victor Emmanuel is his secretary of state. The seeming opposition of the latter to the plans of the former is a pretense; the two are in full accord, and each has pledged the other to sup together in the Quirinel and chant the Te Deum in St. Peter's. So may it be! Our latest advices say "Italy is to take possession of Rome, the Pope to remain till his death, when the temporal power of the Pope will terminate." So decides the Conference of Biarritz. Gloria in excelsis.

Col. Charles S. Fox, late special inspector in the internal revenue service here, has arrived in the city. The vacancy created by his removal has not yet been filled, and he declares an intention of making stubborn fight for reinstatement when Congress reconvenes. He says he has laid a statement of his case, with a record of his past military services, before several prominent western Congressmen, and has been promised their support.

OUR PREACHERS and THEIR CONFERENCE STUDIES.

In about two months our Conference will again meet in this city. On the Monday and Tuesday previous to the session, the candidates for admission into the Conference will be examined in those books named in the course of study, and which may be found in our Book of Discipline. We suppose the candidates have been preparing for their examination during the year, and will acquit themselves like men. We are aware that some of the preachers are now old men; during most of their lives they were held in slavery, and were not allowed the means of education; yet, by great effort, they have learned to read and write, and are now among our most useful and influential pastors. While from such men we should not expect too much in their examinations, yet we shall expect them to know something of the studies assigned them. Each book should be carefully read, so that the candidate can express the views of the author in his own language. No doubt some of the preachers cannot well afford to purchase these books out of the pittance allowed them for salary; while those who are able cannot find these books in the South. These difficulties will doubtless be well considered by the examining committees and due allowance made. Yet, we hope the presiding elders of the Conference will afford such aid to the candidates as they can, to place within their reach the books under consideration.

But the committee will be exacting as to the Bible and our Book of Discipline. Every preacher has these books, and is therefore expected to pass a good examination in the same. The mode of the examination in the Bible will be as follows: Let us take, for instance, the examination in the doctrines of the Bible for the First Year. The first point is—"The existence of God." The candidate will be required to state what is meant by the existence of God, and then give Scripture texts to prove it. Candidates for the Second Year are to be examined in the Bible as to the Sacraments—Baptism and the Lord's Supper. They will be required to give Scripture proofs touching the nature, design, obligation, subjects and mode of Baptism, and the nature, design and obligation of the Lord's Supper. The Discipline recommends that "To prepare for this he should read the Bible by course, and make a memorandum of the texts upon each of these topics as he proceeds." The committee will also be exacting as to the examination in Discipline; for while the preacher is to take the Bible for his guide in preaching, he must also take the Discipline as his guide in governing the church of God. We lay the more stress on these studies, because they are the most important in the course; and we feel authorized in saying, that candidates who do not pass a fair examination in the Bible and Discipline, will find it hard work to gain admission into the Conference.

TO OUR PREACHERS.

We earnestly call the attention of our Presiding Elders and Preachers to the subscriptions due the Advocate. We have not found it necessary to say much on this subject heretofore, but now, that the long summer is past, and the people are beginning to receive returns from their crops, we trust that all arrears will be paid and the money remitted at once. We have now entered upon the fourth and last quarter of the year, and the Conference will soon meet, when each preacher will be expected to report on this subject. If the brethren will give their immediate and earnest attention to this matter, it will save us from embarrassment, and we will feel ourselves under many obligations to them. Let the preachers call upon the people at once and collect what is due.

The Advocate is accomplishing much good. It is read in nearly all the villages of the state, and is a light where otherwise darkness would prevail. It is the defender of our church, and the educator of our people. Then let our preachers awake to the importance of sustaining the only loyal church paper in the lower valley of the Mississippi.

Judge Fisk.—This gentleman called on us this morning. The Judge has returned from New Orleans, where he has been residing for some time. He will not return until the yellow fever abates. The Judge made a speech last evening in favor of manhood suffrage. He is not opposed to female suffrage, but thinks it a side issue, and that negro suffrage should not be endangered by its advocacy at this time.—Leavenworth Bulletin.

BISHOP CAMPBELL.

From the Methodist Home Journal and the Christian Recorder, we learn that Bishop Campbell, of the A. M. E. Church, addressed the Preachers' Meeting of Philadelphia on Monday, Sept. 16. Both papers more than intimate that the Bishop said some hard things against the preachers of this conference, and especially against the editor of this paper. We very much regret that the Bishop's strictures were not published in extenso in the Journal and Recorder; and we now respectfully request the editors of those journals to publish the Bishop's speech. Let us have it. Give us a chance to defend the truth and our church in the Southwest. It will then appear that there are "two sides to every story."

Neither the Bishop nor any of his preachers can give a single instance of aggressive oppsition on our part to hiso and their churches; while in every district in Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi, our preachers have been opposed, and some times with violence, by the emissaries of this Bishop Campbell.

The Recorder represents Rev. Joseph Welch, who is in charge of our work in Texas, and who was present at the Bishop's speech, as approving the Bishop's remarks, and as disowning his connection with his brethren in the Southwest. We are free to say, that we don't believe a word of it. Mr. Welch has, himself, suffered too much from Campbell's men in Texas, to deny the truth and applaud the persecutor of our church. Besides, he is a man of sterner stuff. He is one of God's heroes.

In alluding to this subject, the Journal, of Sept. 28, makes the following sensible remarks, for which it will accept our thanks:

"Bishop Campbell, in the face of his speech before the General Conference of the M. E. Church South, and his numerous letters published frequently in both religious and secular papers, cannot convince intelligent men in Philadelphia that he has acted throughout in good faith with either his own antecedents, or our well known character, history, and religious aims in extending to the enfranchised millions of the South a helping hand. We have deplored his decidedly unfriendly attitude to our organization, and yet, hoping for a better state of feeling, we have never before called him in question, or uttered a harsh sentence bearing on the aspects of this case. We greatly prefer harmony of views and action between the two bodies, and toward a restoration and the preservation of this state of unanimity, we are disposed to direct all our energies and influence."

JOHN BROWN.

The real founders of a nation are sometimes not recognized for centuries. A nation is a growth; it cannot be manufactured like a clock or framed like a house. It is an organism, like a tree, and has its seed, roots, trunk, branches, sprouting, youth, maturity, and old age. In the case of most nations now on the earth, their period of growth reaches so far back of the era of authentic history, that little genuine or coherent information can be obtained of that period of their existence. The philosophy of the birth and growth of peoples is yet almost a terra incognita in the domain of science. It is, however, an accepted proposition that there are laws of the life of nations analogous to those of the life of man, and that nations spring into being, develop their powers, perform their divers functions, grow old and die like all organic creations, in conformity with these laws.

One of these laws is that the seed of nations is an intermixture of distinct and antagonistic races. Without such intermixture no great enduring nationality was ever planted. And as a rule, the more hostile and diverse the elements thus sown together, the more vigorous and long-lived the plant which sprung from the sowing.

As the winds of the storm and the waves of the tempest are the great planters of the primeval forests, so wars have been the old-time servers of nations.

The violent casting upon one shore, by the waves of the ever-drifting tide of war, whose ceaseless swell forever rolls around the globe, of distinct discordant, hostile tribes of men, from birth-places widely separated, and with languages, customs, laws and religions not less widely dissimilar, has been the manner of sowing of almost every nation. The time occupied in thus casting upon the soil race after race was the seed-time. The time occupied in the assimilation of manners, tongues, institutions and religions was the sprouting time, a season of ferments, strifes and transitions. Then came the seedling, the sapling, and the full-grown tree.

When the historian shall come who is to write the birth and growth of the great nation which is yet to be born, grow up in, inhabit and possess this continent and its two bordering oceans, we believe that he will class the era in which we now live as its seed-time.

On his pages three representative characters will stand out most prominent thus far as respectively marking three great epochs in this era of our seed-time—Columbus, Washington, and John Brown. The first was the pioneer of that wonderful emigration of the races of the Old World hitherward, whose commingling on these shores was to procreate a new race, infuse young blood again in the earth, and give birth to a nation, fitted for emergencies yet hidden in the womb of time. The second was providentially made by circumstances the representative man of the first movements of life in the swelling seed, as they finally cut loose from their dependence on the parent stem.

The third, by force of the rare clearness of his moral vision, his singleness of purpose to follow his faith with acts in a great emergency, and his dauntless courage to do so in the teeth of a people's prejudices and temporary interests, struck the blow which broke the shell that isolated the race-seeds from each other, and thus made way for the next great pre-requisite of birth, Union.

All three were representative men; that is, they were merely types of certain great movements which had influenced the minds and passions of men long before they came, and continued to influence them long after they departed, and which neither originated with nor were controlled by them. But they each became the representative man of the movements of his times by virtue of certain great personal qualities, which fitted and incited him to take such part in these movements, as in the emergencies of the times, made him prominent before the eyes of all generations to come, as a type and representative of his respective epoch.

In the first, there were the genius which could conceive of the true shape of the globe and the courage to follow his conception to its consequences. In the second there were that rare eveness, greatness and moderation of character which could win and hold the confidence of a people during a revolution, and which thus enable him to retain their leadership through all its trying vicissitudes, without either losing or abusing their trust. In the third it was that great moral genius which grasped the great truth of human brotherhood and equality as a fact, the honesty of purpose which led him to act squarely up to his faith, the intrepid courage which led him direct to his object, in face of the prejudices, the beliefs, and the institutions of his time, and the purity of motive, which carried him through all the stormy scenes of such a struggle, even to the gallows, without a single emotion of anger or revenge, and without a single concession to partisan or personal considerations.

The greatness of Columbus was that of a philosopher; of Washington, that of a lawgiver and founder; of Brown, that of a prophet and a martyr.

New Orleans, the Queen of the Mississippi and the Mistress of the Gulf, twin daughter of the land and of the sea, is destined soon, through the influence of John Brown's deeds, to stretch her iron arms into the great wheat zones of the North, to the vast mineral ledges of the Rocky Mountains and to the golden slopes of the Pacific, and to become the commercial centre of the West and South. She is the first state redeemed from slavery by his daring blow at that mailed giant while yet in the pride and bloom of his strength. In the halls of her capital, the first sovereign convention, holding the political power of a state, constituted without distinction of class or color, in accordance with his principles, is to meet. Louisiana will be made by that Convention the first fruits of the blood shed in the great contest which he initiated.

Nothing could be more fitting. Nothing could more honor New Orleans and Louisiana than that during the sitting of the Convention, his anniversary should be suitably commemorated, and officially honored by the highest political power of the state.

The first martyr of human equality and brotherhood on American soil should be thus honored by the first state re-organized on the basis of these great truths. Let this be done, and at some no distant day, in the centre of her noblest park New Orleans will rear to his memory a pure and stately monument, and her children, as they gaze upon it and ponder the moral of his life and deeds, will be proud that their fathers were the first to anticipate the verdict of a world's admiration in such a tribute to the memory of the man who "remembered them that are in bonds as bound with them."

BLACK JUDGES.

Don't the world move? Just think, that in the year of grace 1867, His Hon. O. J. Dunn, assistant recorder, whose African descent cannot be questioned, presides in one of the courts in the refined, intelligent city of New Orleans. To be sure, old Judge Abel, of the July massacre notoriety, solemnly protested, "that, according to the laws of Louisiana, a man of color could not thus act," but Recorder Dunn, like a sensible man, overruled the exception. And notwithstanding the protest, we are inclined to think that Judge Dunn is a smarter and a better looking man than our esteemed friend, Judge Abel. There is something about Abel's nose that we could never fancy as really classical.

The New Orleans Republican gives the following account of the case:

"Ernest J. Wenck, attorney at law, made an affidavit against one Henry Schmidt, that he had committed perjury in swearing (on going security for a party) that he was worth $1000 under the usual conditions of a bail bond. Recorder Gastinel recused himself, on the ground of being a witness, so it became the duty of assistant recorder Dunn to sit as magistrate.

On court being opened, and the assistant recorder taking his seat, Mr. E. Abel, counsel for defendant, excepted to the incumbent of the recorder's seat acting, on the ground that under the laws of the state a man of color could not thus act, the laws of congress in reference to reconstruction conferring no other right than that of being registered and voting for a convention.

This is the same Abel who became so notorious as a pro-slavery brawler in the free-state convention of 1864, and subsequently as the judge of the criminal court, who delivered Andrew Johnson harangues from the bench, and incited and justified the July riot.

The assistant recorder overruled the exception. The witnesses for the state were called. Recorder Gastinel and Mr. Prados, one of the clerks, were sworn and gave their evidence.

Upon Wenck being called he declined being sworn. The assistant recorder asked his reason. He said he knew nothing but hearsay. The assistant recorder properly remarked that it was for the court to pass upon his evidence. Upon Wenck further declining to be sworn, the assistant recorder sentenced him to pay $25 fine or suffer twenty-four hours imprisonment. A friend of Wenck's paid the fine for him.

Wenck became obstreperous upon being fined, and was admonished by the assistant recorder that he must maintain order, whereupon some of the officers forced Mr. Wenck to the place allotted to prisoners who are retained until they pay their fines. The assistant recorder very mildly and in a most dignified manner directed the officers to use Wenck kindly, and give him an opportunity to obtain his fine, if he so desired.

The case then proceeded. Mr. Abel and Mr. Montemat made arguments on behalf of the defendant, and Wenck amused the crowd in making an argument for the prosecution. Recorder Gastinel made some strong and forcible remarks as amicus curiæ, and animadverted upon the conduct of Wenck, and sustained the action of the assistant recorder in punishing Wenck for contempt of court.

There being no evidence to sustain the charge the assistant recorder promptly dismissed the case and released the accused.

Progress of the Yellow Fever.

The following table exhibits the progress of yellow fever deaths in this city from week to week since July 13:

Week ending July 13	3
Week ending July 20	2
Week ending July 27	5
Week ending August 3	9
Week ending August 10	14
Week ending August 17	12
Week ending August 24	1[illegible]
Week ending August 31	1[illegible]
Week ending September 7	212
Week ending September 14	351
Week ending September 21	398
Week ending September 28	492
Week ending October 5	429

The decline of the epidemic has commenced. The number of deaths is sixty-three less than for the week ending September 28. It has been remarked that the decline of yellow fever is in about the same ratio as its advance.

Of those who died of yellow fever last week in this city 74 were natives of Germany, 62 of Ireland, 34 of France, 11 of Prussia, 11 of England, 8 of Italy, 4 of Austria, 3 of Poland, 3 of Canada, 2 of Sweden, 2 of Spain, 2 of Switzerland, 1 of Greece, 1 of Scotland, 3 of Alabama, 2 of Arkansas, 1 of Florida, 2 of Georgia, 4 of Indiana, 6 of Kentucky, 1 of Illinois, 5 of Massachusetts, 6 of Missouri, 5 of Maryland, 4 of Mississippi, 2 of Maine, 1 of Michigan, 12 of New York, 1 of New Hampshire, 5 of Ohio, 5 of Pennsylvania, 1 of Rhode Island, 2 of Texas, 1 of Tennessee, 4 of Virginia, 1 of Vermont, 2 of Washington, D. C., 47 of New Orleans, and 13 of other parts of Louisiana.

The Merchants' Union express shipped from St. Paul to the east the largest lot of furs ever exported from that city. There were three hundred and eighty-seven bales of fine and valuable furs, weighing forty-seven thousand four hundred and nineteen pounds. In addition to this there were thirty-one thousand five hundred muskrat skins, weighing twenty-five thousand pounds, and three boxes of fine furs valued at $5000 each.

THE CITY.

The weather has continued warm throughout the past week, with heavy showers nearly every day. On Friday there was a severe storm from the east, which, it was supposed, would materially cool the atmosphere, but yesterday there was no marked falling of the mercury.

It is evident that the yellow fever is slowly abating. The decrease in the number of deaths for the week as compared with the week previous amounts to sixty-three. There has been a decrease in the number every day as compared with the corresponding days of the previous week. We are confident that by the close of this week the epidemic will have so far subsided as to cease to be the leading topic of conversation. In the meantime it will not be fully safe for unacclimated persons to come to the city for several weeks—probably not before the occurrence of a heavy frost. Some of our weather seers, however, predict that we shall have a frost within a week. The papers will not fail to note its first appearance.

The election returns received during the week indicate beyond question that the people of the state have voted for a convention. There is now no doubt that a majority of all the registered voters have voted affirmatively on the question. And when the votes against the convention are added to these it will be found that about ten thousand more than half of all the registered votes have been cast on the subject. The country parishes, so far as we have received the returns, have cast more than half their respective number of votes, with the exception of Livingston. Some yet to hear from may fall short, but there will be an aggregate increase on all yet to come in. Many of the delegates elect from the country are men of more than ordinary intelligence, ability, and character, and will exert great influence for good in the convention.

It is likely that the returns will be all here by the 15th instant, in which case General Mower should at once call the convention. The recent order of General Grant indefinitely extending the leave of officers absent from duty in the fifth military district applies as well to General Hancock as to officers of subordinate rank. It is not likely that he will arrive before the first of November. And there is no reason why the time between the completion of the returns of election and that date should be lost. The state needs stability, which can not be better assured than by a full civil government, with the administration of affairs in the hands of officers elected by the people. Every week of delay costs the state, directly and indirectly, many thousands of dollars. However wisely appointed officers may conduct the business committed to them, there is not that confidence and satisfaction in them and with their acts as there are in those chosen by the people themselves. And without confidence, stagnation and lethargy ensue, and everything is at a standstill, or retrogades.

The most noticeable feature in municipal affairs for the week has been the appreciation of city currency. Tens and twenties were sold yesterday at ten per cent. discount for greenbacks, and small notes at two per cent. These figures are against twenty per cent. for the former and eight and ten per cent. for the latter just before the removal of the old council and city treasurer. The advance in the rate for large notes may be explained by the fact that arrangements have been made in New York for an ample supply of small bills, the first installment of which will doubtless reach here and be put in circulation before the close of the present week. In the meantime some of the best business houses in the city continue to receive large notes at par, but owing to the difficulty of procuring change are compelled to decline breaking one of them. That is the rule adopted by the Republican office. We continue to receive all city bills at par in the regular course of business, and cheerfully give change when we can procure it.

In the course of a business visit at the the hall yesterday we dropped into the controller's office, and found our old friend D. E. Mandell, Esq., busily discharging the duties of his responsible position. In the present disordered condition of the city finances his office is no sinecure, but requires infinite patience and promptness and correctness of decision to keep ahead of business. Mr. Mandell is now preparing the controller's semi-annual report, which, by the way, ought to have been in the hands of the printer by the last day of June. But this was not done, neither were the books left in such a condition that an abstract could be taken without some delay. But a continuance of the present systematic manner of conducting business will soon surmount all these obstacles, and put the machinery of the controller's office in smooth running order. Although the present incumbent was not an applicant for the office, and scarcely desired the position, he has devoted his whole energies to the work as much as one would expect of him in case he was endeavoring to deserve a re-election. In other words, his lack of desire to hold the office does not cause him to remit his efforts to perform his duty.

Notwithstanding the general stagnation of business incident to the prevalence of the epidemic there is little prospect of a fall in rents. At present there are no transactions in real estate, and little if any of this description of property is advertised for sale. We learn that Messrs. C. E. Girardey & Co., the leading real estate auctioneers and agents in New Orleans, are advising their customers to wait until next month before offering real estate property for sale, as better prices are sure to prevail. Aside from the experience of this house, which is justly deemed high authority in such matters, we can see many causes which combine to lead us to the same conclusions. Few or no sales will take place during this month, but there will be good openings for capital before the close of November.

A trial of the Rodman gun was made at Shoeburyness on the 26th of September. It was loaded with 100 pounds of American service powder. The projectile passed entirely through an eight inch iron-plated target placed at a distance of seventy yards. This target has been used a long time for these experiments and has withstood some of the severest tests.

THE CONVENTION.

Now that the question of the legality of the convention has been settled by the requisite number of votes being cast at the election held on the 27th and 28th of September, the next question which presents itself is the necessity and expediency of the early meeting of that body. The first section of the original reconstruction act declares that no legal state governments now exist in the ten rebel states, and declares that it is necessary that peace and order shall be enforced in those states until loyal and republican state governments can be established therein. Therefore it is enacted that these ten states shall be divided into military districts, and made subject to the military authority of the United States. Section two makes it the duty of the president to assign to the command of each of these districts an officer of the army. Sections three and four define the powers and prescribe the duties of the military commanders. Section five points out the various stages through which the people of these ten rebel states must pass before they can establish a legal state government. Section six declares that any civil governments which may exist in any of the ten rebel states prior to the admission of representation in congress shall be deemed provisional only, and subject to the paramount authority of the United States. By the supplemental acts of March and July, it is generally understood that the paramount authority of the United States mentioned in the sixth section of the original act means the authority vested in the commanding general by the third and fourth sections of that act.

By the supplemental act of March 2, 1867, the commanding general is required to cause a registration to be made of all the qualified voters in his district, which must be completed by the 1st of October, 1867. It will be seen that as soon as the registration is completed the general is required to cause a vote to be taken of all the qualified voters of each state, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the people qualified to vote desire the establishment of a civil government for themselves. It will be readily perceived by a bare inspection of the laws of congress on this subject that the scope, object, and intention of congress was to establish civil governments in these states, republican in form, consistent with the spirit of the constitution of the United States, and adapted to the genius and civilization of the age.

The first organized body that has any legal sanction under the laws is the convention just elected. It is to that body, and to that alone, then, that we must look to lead us from our present disorganized condition into a condition of law and order.

By the fourth section of the supplemental act of March 2, 1867, the commanding general is required to call the convention together within sixty days from the date of the election. The limit of sixty days for the convocation of the convention does not make it obligatory on the general to delay the call for that length of time. He may call the body together in twenty, thirty, or forty days, at his discretion. It would seem that inasmuch as the state of Louisiana is at present without a legal state government, with no organization capable of legally binding the state, except the convention, and it being the manifest object of the reconstruction laws to place the state in her proper legal position in the Union, it becomes the imperative duty of the commanding general to convene the body at the earliest practicable moment. He should exercise all the discretion left him in the matter of convening the body in the interest of as speedy reconstruction as possible. Should he, on the contrary, delay calling the body together as long as the law permits, he would be liable to the charge of a desire to delay the accomplishment of the objects for which the law was enacted, to wit: the establishment of a legal government for the state.

That the people of Louisiana have a deep interest in the establishment of a government in the state is manifest to every lover of law and order. Only those who are rebels from principle, and hate all government, object to a return to civil rule. To that class, be they many or be they few, no argument or appeal is necessary. They can not be allowed to impede or obstruct the resolute and determined purpose of the masses of the loyal people of Louisiana to right themselves as soon as practicable by the establishment of a loyal government for themselves on the basis laid down in the several acts of congress on the subject.

In our judgment the convention should be assembled at the very earliest practicable moment—say by the first Monday in November.

THE CHURCH ORGAN.

"The Freest Organ of Thought in the World."

Owing to the unprecedented reception of this paper, it has been enlarged to double its original size, and is now the largest, best and most liberal, as well as cheapest family newspaper in the world.

It is the organ of no sect, but will aim to represent every branch of the Church of Christ, as well as every society organized for the purpose of Evangelizing the world.

It is Trinitarian in Creed, but favors free discussion of all subjects not already settled by the universal consent of the Church of all ages. It will oppose Ritualism and Infidelity, and advocate a free pulpit for Christ's ministers and a free communion-table for all the Lord's people.

It will favor universal suffrage and equal rights to every man and woman of whatsoever nationality, and will oppose all human instruments contrived by men for the enslavement of the consciences of men.

It will publish a sermon by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher every Monday at 11 o'clock. This sermon is not copyrighted, nor does it come under the eye of Mr. Beecher before publication, and will be a faithful report of the Great Preacher of Freedom. Writers and Editors of every branch of the Church are engaged on this paper.

Terms $2.00; $1.00 to agents for every subscriber. The usual premiums of sewing machines will be offered. For sale by the American News Company, for 5 cents.

PUBLIC EDUCATION THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

The public schools of New Orleans have long been deservedly celebrated for their efficiency, and have been pronounced by those qualified to judge fully equal to those of any northern city. In the country parishes, however, the reverse has been the case. They have never had any schools worthy the name, nor, indeed, any organized system of public education. It is true that one of the executive officers of the state is entitled state superintendent of public education, and is supposed in virtue of that title to superintend the public schools of the state; but in point of fact the various estimable and accomplished gentlemen who have successively filled that office, and drawn the salary appertaining thereto, have simply been the incumbents of a sinecure.

It is time that a change should take place in this important matter. There are now it may be fairly estimated more than twice as many educable children to be provided for as there were before the war, and children who have absolutely no reliable source of education except public schools. In ante-war times the planters and such other persons as could afford the expense, sent their children to private schools or had tutors or governesses in the house. The poorer class satisfied themselves with what education they could get at the miserable public schools, if there happened to be any in the neighborhood; if not they did without it, and in many cases were not sensible of any deprivation. The slave children (melancholy phrase) of course neither received nor expected schooling: their hopeless future would have made it a cruelty.

Now, however, all is changed. Many of the planters will be glad to send their children to good public schools; the poorer class of whites, seeing their more favored neighbors patronize such schools, will do likewise; and as for the newly enfranchised citizens, to give a good education to their children is their sole ambition. They seem to feel its importance most keenly. It is the one distinction between themselves and the whites which they believe can by their own exertions be done away with. The Africo-American if he can not change his skin knows that his children can change their speech. They can be educated up to the utmost height that the Caucasian is susceptible of, and, to accomplish this, the black parent is willing to endure any deprivation of comfort, willing to work and save as only a parent struggling for the welfare of children can do. They understand perfectly, it seems almost intuitively, even the most ignorant of them, that there is no security for the continued enjoyment of their newly acquired rights but intelligence; that the mere striking off of chains does not make a man truly free; that while tied down by ignorance, suspicion, and fear they are practically the slave of every superior intelligence. They feel all this while keenly enjoying the inestimable blessing which God through such dire convulsion, such bloody warfare, has sent them; and it is to insure that blessing and make it fruitful that they crave education for their children.

And they shall have it. One of the very first duties of our new state government (this is looking ahead somewhat) will be to establish a regularly organized system of public education throughout the entire state—a system sufficiently comprehensive to secure a good plain English education to every child within our borders, so that the rising generation may grow up to be virtuous, loyal, and intelligent citizens, understanding their duties as such in their double relation to state and nation; loving Louisiana as their home but never forgetting that the United States is their country.

TRADE.

The merchants of New Orleans are anticipating a good trade for November and the early winter from the back country of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi, and from Texas; and they are making and have made great preparations accordingly. Will they meet with disappointment? The prevalence of yellow fever here the past and present months may deter some from coming to this city to make purchases, and orders may to some extent be sent to New York, and to the western cities of Cincinnati, Louisville, and St. Louis. Drummers from those cities have penetrated every nook and crook of this country; and wherever railroads penetrate running to the northern and western cities, arrangements have been made with their agents by which goods can be delivered to the interior sections of these states in the very shortest possible time, and at lower rates than by steamer to New Orleans, and hence by rail or river to the up country. Cotton and sugar intended for this city will seek a market by the same roads of conveyance, and at the same cities direct, unless efforts are made to bring them here by offering the proper inducements of cheap freights, handling, and the various commissions.

It is true that our Father of Waters is the only natural outlet for the commerce of the great west. But commerce will seek channels which assure operators the speediest and surest returns upon their investments. If New Orleans and her merchants would become aggrandized they must do so by the addition of new tributaries to our commercial metropolis. They must build railroads into Texas, up to Shreveport, to Mobile, and other parts of Alabama.

There are other cities built alongside the "Father of Waters." Are they idle as we? Is not St. Louis busy in extending railroads in all directions to secure the trade which would otherwise seek New Orleans? Is not Memphis doing the same thing? Does not much of the river business leave the Mississippi at Vicksburg and follow her railroads into the interior? Even St. Paul, in her youth, is doing better than our proud old city: there is a prospect of an early completion of the railway between St. Paul and Lake Superior—that road is being rapidly pushed through the bluffs at a number of points, and it will be completed in two years. She has already run one up the river to St. Cloud, seventy-five miles, and another out west to St. Peters. Shall we have no new tributary to our metropolis? What are the improvements of the river at Des Moines rapids—what those at the falls of the Ohio—what are all the improvements above us if we have no new railroads, no improved ferries, no new steamship lines of our own. We hear of railroads to the Pacific, of railroads and bridges everywhere—but all this must tend to the detriment of this city unless something is done by and for ourselves.

To keep pace with other cities we must project and construct canals and railroads, that we may shake hands with Texas, with the people of the Pacific coast via Tehuantepec, and have better treaties and a better and more direct trade with Cuba, Yucatan, and Honduras.

With no yellow fever here—and there need be none if the city be properly drained and cleaned and other necessary precautions taken—the Mississippi river is not sufficient for the convenience of the place. Provisions have been as long as a whole month on the way from St. Louis here this season. But for the fact that provisions were in good supply at the large warehouses prices of meats would have been fabulous. As it was, we had plenty.

The money market is tight at present, and must so continue until cotton begins to arrive freely, when money in abundance for all purposes will be disbursed.

The cotton crop is very backward this season—some three weeks more backward than usual; but it will begin to arrive pretty rapidly by ten or fifteen days hence. When it is all gathered and marketed, mostly in the next six months, and very largely within the next three, be it two millions of bales, more or less, the money of both New and Old England will flow into the coffers of all.

THE PRESERVATION OF HEALTH.

Every man owes to himself a duty in the preservation of his health, and that duty can not be neglected with impunity. The sudden changes of weather to which this climate is subject should admonish all our citizens of the necessity of adapting their clothing to the variations of heat and cold. It is unwise and imprudent to be thinly clad in cool weather, such as yesterday and Sunday, and which may continue longer. Unless the clothing is sufficiently warm there is, at the present time especially, danger of contracting fever of some nature, even if it be not the epidemic fever. Only they who are careless will expose themselves to that risk. Clothe yourselves warmly—that is an injunction which all should heed.

Sleep out of the draft, but keep your room well ventilated, for there is more danger of engendering disease by the entire exclusion of air than by exposure to just a little too much.

A great deal has been written on the importance of keeping the person clean. A sponge bath every morning is practicable for every one. Cistern water is abundant, and it costs nothing; its temperature is safe. A sponge need not cost more than two bits. Dip it into your washbowl, rub it on a piece of Castile soap, and wash your whole person from the chin to the toes. Then rub dry with a coarse towel. Do this every morning with the same regularity that a "well regulated man" washes his face, and the good effects will be felt.

Be careful in diet, and neither eat nor drink imprudently. Be regular in all your habits. Keep out of the dampness and malaria of the streets. Turn the corner when you come in sight of a coffee-house and avoid it, except at rare intervals, and you will be very likely to escape not only yellow fever when it is epidemic, but all the fevers to which this climate is incident. This is our chapter on health.

HURRAH FOR CATAHOULA!

All honor to Catahoula! Her delegate to the convention of 1861 was the only one who denounced the infamous ordinance of secession. When the name of that delegate was called to vote on the ordinance there was a solemn stillness all over the chamber, and the anxiety of the people to learn to what conclusion his mind had arrived amid all the secession influences which were brought to bear on him was deep and intense. But the feverish excitement and anxiety soon gave way to disgust and indignation among the original rebels, and emotions of the most patriotic delight among the few loyal people assembled there. Catahoula's noble son—James G. Taliaferro—the "old man eloquent," rose and read to the convention a short but powerful and able protest against the separation of Louisiana from the Union. His vote was an emphatic "No." The indignation of the rebels was so intense, and their sense of gentlemanly parliamentary propriety was so dull that they would not allow this protest, which was a splendid specimen of statesmanlike composition, to be spread on the records of the convention. The sneers and slanders of the rebels did not move the old gentleman; he stood by his faith in all the varying phases of the rebellion. He now occupies an honored seat on the supreme bench of this state.

When the late election for a constitutional convention was ordered the Union men of Catahoula parish with one voice exclaimed, "We will send the noblest Roman of them all—James G. Taliaferro." The rebels knowing the unbounded popularity of this distinguished citizen, and the certainty of his success over all opposing candidates, wisely concluded not to nominate a candidate against him, but like their brethren of this city determined to remain away from the polls, and to persuade or prevent the freedmen from voting, in the hopes of causing a failure to have a convention. These tactics, however, did not work. The Union men to the number of 839 turned out and voted for a convention, and all but about ten voted for Judge Taliaferro.

Again we say all honor to Catahoula. Her delegate will occupy a high, honorable, and influential position in the convention. Already his name is generally mentioned in connection with the presidency of the convention. His unswerving loyalty and devotion to principle have endeared him to the loyal masses of the state, and his great intellect, dignity of character, and historical status will give him great weight in the deliberations of the convention, and make him "the observed of all observers."

SABINE PARISH.—Whole number of votes, 359. For a convention, 344; against a convention, 15.

The votes for delegates were as follows:

G. Snider	192
J. B. Lewis	223
Edward Brown	125
John Sneider	8

The parishes of De Soto and Sabine form one district for the election of delegates. Messrs. G. Snider and J. B. Lewis, Republicans, are elected.

The City Currency.

One of the most judicious acts of the late commander of the fifth military district was the appointment of a new city council to improve the city finances and city currency. The progress in that improvement has been slow, but it is sure. City notes of a large denomination were selling at a discount of only ten per cent. yesterday, and notes of small denomination were within two per cent. only of par with greenbacks.

The finance committee of the city council are entitled to credit for what they have done in this work of reforming the city currency and city finances. Our citizens frankly acknowledge that Mr. John R. Clay, chairman of that committee in the board of aldermen, and Mr. John Gauche, chairman of the finance committee of the board of assistant aldermen, have been faithful to their trust in their efforts to advance the value of the city notes of every denomination. Finance is the peculiar forte of these gentlemen, and by the adoption of the measures they have already recommended and the suggestions they may hereafter make, there is reason to believe that the result will be a prudent reduction of our city expenses, the advance of our city currency to par with greenbacks, the gradual withdrawal of that currency from circulation, and the inauguration of a cash system in the settlement of all current obligations due from the city.

Death of Dr. Charles King.

The death of Dr. Charles King, of New York, is announced. He died at the ripe age of eighty years, at Frascati, near Rome. Dr. King belonged to the distinguished family of the same name, one of whom was ex-Governor John A. King, whose sudden death occurred at Jamaica, L. I., in July. Dr. King was formely president of Columbia college. At an earlier period he was distinguished in the editorial profession, having been at different times in charge of the New York American, and also of the Courier and Enquirer. In politics he was in early life a Federalist; afterward a Whig, and, though not active in partisanship, in his advancing years was strongly Republican in feeling.

Dr. King was educated with his brother, Governor King, at Harrow, England, while his father, the distinguished Rufus King, was minister to England. It revives some bygone associations, when we recollect that these American boys were schoolfellows of Lord Byron and of Sir Robert Peel. Personally and socially Dr. King was a scholar of great erudition; a gentleman of that good old school in which good humor, pleasant cheer, and fine conversational powers were the rule. The race of these "thoroughbreds" is by no means extinct, but they are lost sight of in the general procession of average humanity.

The Epidemic in the Teche Country.

We learn from Captain James Fry, chairman of the board of registers of Lafayette parish, that the yellow fever prevails to a fearful extent there. In Vermillionville out of a population of less than two hundred there have been about one hundred cases of yellow fever and forty-six deaths. Among those who have died from that disease are some of the most enterprising men of the town.

In the village of St. Martinsville there were ten deaths by yellow fever on Tuesday last. Most of the citizens have left their homes for safety. In New Iberia, Mr. John Meally, who has rendered much assistance in burying the dead and caring for the sick, himself became a victim of yellow fever on Tuesday. In the small village known as Irish Bend the epidemic is raging with terrible severity.

FROM WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, October 4.—Official advices have been received here that eight hundred head of cattle, stolen by Indians from Texas, are held at Fort Bascom, subject to the order of the owners on proof of property.

The following preliminary proceedings have occurred at Albany:

Resolved, That the organization known as the Tammany Hall organization is the regular organization of the democracy of New York, and those bearing its credentials are delegates to the convention.

Resolved, That recognizing the delegation from the county of New York representing the section of the Democratic party known as the Mozart hall democracy as sound Democrats of unquestionable fidelity to the principles and nominations of the Democratic party of the state, we tender them honorary seats in the convention.

On motion, the German delegation were included.

Messmore has been removed. Callicott's successor is under consideration. The contest for the position is bitter.

WASHINGTON, October 4.—A contract has been closed by the postmaster general, through William D. Mann, assessor of internal revenue at Mobile, with the Mobile Trade company for a tri-weekly steamboat mail between Mobile and Selma. Service commences October 18. Offices will be immediately opened at important landings on the Alabama river.

Lewis D. Campbell has taken the stump in Ohio in favor of the Democrats.

J. Warren Bell has been appointed collector of customs at Corpus Christi, Texas, vice McIntyre suspended.

The speech of S. S. Cox at Columbus, Ohio, and the proceedings of the Democratic convention at Albany are having a cheering effect on the bank men and capitalists.

A special from Nashville says that Brownlow's election to the senate is conceded.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $1,000,000. Customs receipts for the week $4,250,000.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The treasury department has issued the following instructions regarding bonded tobacco warehouses:

The cellar of such warehouse may be used for other purposes, having the entrance from the street, and no connection with the upper floor. An office may be allowed the owner of tobacco for the exhibition of samples, partitioned from the storehouse. The owner may take samples from goods stored, according to the usages of trade, and exhibit them in said office, the samples being regarded as in the custody of both the owner and storekeeper. Retail trade in such samples is prohibited.

Information under date of Liverpool, September 17, has reached official quarters that the wheat crop of the United Kingdom falls short, both in quantity and quality. Estimates place the yield at twenty per cent. below an average.

Avonia Jones, the actress, is dead.

In consequence of heavy war and pension payments and light revenue receipts the debt statement shows an increase of two and a quarter millions. The secretary anticipates heavier receipts during the current month and thinks the next statement will show a decrease of several millions.

Stanbery's opinion sustains the state courts in issuing writs of habeas corpus where soldiers and sailors are concerned. In accordance with this opinion Secretary Welles has ordered Commodore Selfridge to obey the writ and produce in court the sailor Gormley.

Revenue receipts to-day $500,000; receipts for the week $6,500,000; receipts for the fiscal year to date $61,250,000.

National bank circulation, $290,000,000; securities held for circulation and public deposits, $379,000,000.

Commissioner Rollins has written a letter stating that by the law affidavits of all kinds are relieved from stamp duty.

Omaha dispatches say that a party of railroad thieves, whose operations have extended over the Pacific railroad for the past six months has been broken up. Most if not all the thieves have been arrested and a large amount of property found secreted in Omaha. It has also been ascertained that large quantities of stolen goods were shipped to points east during the summer. All the parties implicated were connected with the road.

The Pawnee scouts are said to be highly incensed at Spotted Tail's band. They say that when they are mustered out of the federal service they will make war on Spotted Tail.

WASHINGTON, October 5.—The following are among the Albany resolutions:

Resolved, That, regarding the national debt as a sacred obligation, we demand economy of the administration, honesty in the collection and application of the revenues, simplification of and equality in taxation incurred for the benefit of the people instead of corporations, to the end that the public faith may be preserved, and the burden of taxation lessened.

Resolved, That we denounce the effort of the Radical party to retain the power it has usurped by establishing negro supremacy in the south by military force coupled with the disfranchisement of the mass of the white population as an outrage upon Democratic principles, and an attempt to undermine and destroy the republic; and that we stigmatize the refusal of that party in this state to submit the question of negro suffrage to the people as a cowardly evasion of a paramount issue in the pending struggle.

WASHINGTON, October 6.—State department has telegraphic advices of General Rousseau's arrival at Vancouver's island—all well.

The steamer Only Chance, from Fort Benton, arrived at Omaha on Friday, with three millions in treasure, and two hundred passengers.

WASHINGTON, October 7.—It is confidently stated that Sherman is here only on Indian matters. He is hopeful of good results from the commission.

The packet ship Golconda, Captain Lovett, owned by the American Colonization society, arrived at Baltimore on Saturday from Monrovia, Africa. She will sail on her return voyage to Monrovia about the 29th instant, touching at Charleston, South Carolina, whence she is expected to sail on the 11th of November. Already, it is said, 600 names are enrolled of parties going out in her, the most of whom will embark from Charleston.

Sherman had prolonged interviews with both the president and Grant to-day.

It is now stated that Colonel Parker goes south to inspect the Dismal Swamp canal, with a view to the sale of the government interest.

Internal revenue receipts $500,000.

WASHINGTON, October 7.—Colonel Parker, (an Indian), of General Grant's staff, has been sent to Raleigh and Charleston to look after certain treasury interests involving, it is said, over a million dollars. The particulars have not transpired. Parker was detailed at the request of Secretary McCulloch. It is suggested, from the character of the detail being purely military, that the trouble is with the freedmen's bureau or the district commander.

Senor Mareschal, secretary of the Mexican legation, remains in charge of the mission during Romero's absence.

In a speech at Galena, Illinois, Congressman E. B. Washburne detailed General Grant's views. General Grant sympathizes with congress in the reconstruction plan.

He advised an early session of congress, and favored the house bill requiring the consent of the senate to the change of district commanders. He accepted the secretaryship of war from a sense of duty, to prevent its being filled by a Johnson man.

His acceptance was with the knowledge and consent of Stanton, after a full consultation.

Washburne said he had no right to speak regarding Grant's presidential aspirations.

WASHINGTON, October 8.—The following is a recent decision of the revenue department:

When land is leased for a term of years under a contract that the lessee shall erect a building thereon, the title to which, subject to the use of the lessee during the term, immediately vests in the lessor, the expense of erecting the building is in the nature of rent, and is returnable as such in the income return of the lessor.

The various committees of the house are preparing the work for the next session. The election committee meets at Lexington, Kentucky, on the 11th.

The committee on southern railroads proceeds south from here on the 16th instant.

A sub-committee of the judiciary committee assembles at the capital to-morrow to investigate whether Maryland has a republican constitution.

WASHINGTON, October 8.—We have the following election gossip from various sources:

PHILADELPHIA, October 8, 11 A. M.—The election is progressing quietly. The Republicans claim the state by 3000 majority, which is generally conceded. The Germans, with few exceptions, voting the Democratic ticket.

The Democratic county and city tickets are leading in nearly every precinct. It is conceded now that the city will go Democratic by a small majority.

WASHINGTON, October 8, 8:30 P. M.—Telegrams from Radical sources say that Williams, (Republican), is 1000 ahead in eighteen wards in Philadelphia.

The Age, (Democratic), telegraphs that the Democratic gains are as follows:

First ward, 200; second ward, 300; fifth ward, 300; tenth ward, 277.

WASHINGTON, October 8, 9:30 P. M.—The Democratic ticket, state and county, is elected in Philadelphia.

The president has issued the following proclamation

WHEREAS, It has been ascertained that in the nineteenth paragraph of the proclamation of the president of the United States of the 20th of August, 1866, declaring the insurrection at an end, which had theretofore existed in the state of Texas, the previous proclamation of 13th June, 1865, instead of that of April 2, 1866, was referred to;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, president of the United States, do hereby declare and proclaim that the said words "thirteenth of June, 1865," are to be regarded as erroneous in the paragraph adverted to, and that the words "second day of April, 1866," are to be considered as substituted therefor.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $307,000.

Minister Romero leaves on Saturday for Charleston, whence he will sail direct for Vera Cruz per steamer Wilderness, placed at his disposal by the federal government. Romero's mother and sister accompany him. The Wilderness sails Monday, and will touch nowhere en route.

A Havana dispatch says a sure remedy for yellow fever has been discovered in a piece of the female verbena leaf.

WASHINGTON, October 9—1 A. M.—Scattering returns from various parts of the state of Indiana show Democratic gains. Indianapolis city gives Republican gain of 400.

The probabilities favor the election of the Democratic state ticket in Ohio. It will probably be daylight before the result is definitely known.

WASHINGTON, October 9—1 A. M.—The Cincinnati Commercial office telegraphs that Corry is elected by a good majority, and negro suffrage defeated. Congressman Eggleston telegraphs to the same effect.

WASHINGTON, October 9.—The Cincinnati Gazette and Commercial both telegraph here that negro suffrage is defeated by 50,000 votes. The legislature is Democratic. They claim that Hays is elected by 3500.

Woodward (Democrat) is elected in the twelfth Pennsylvania district. Democratic majority in the state about 9000.

The customs authorities of Cuba have issued an order that goods must not be manifested to order when shipped to that island.

11:30 P. M.—Nothing definite from Ohio. The impression of Thurman's election amounts almost to certainty. We have had nothing through regular channels.

WASHINGTON, October 9.—Pennsylvania, 35 counties heard from give a Democratic majority of 6586. Half the state unheard from.

Ohio, 26 counties, not including Hamilton, lack 990 of the average gain necessary to carry the state for the Democrats.

Pennsylvania corrected returns give Republican majorities in Chester county 2000; Susquehanna 1200; Dauphin 1400; Lebanon 1098.

Democratic majorities — Carbon 425; Luzerne 1800; York 3000; Bucks 650.

Woodward, Democrat, to fill vacancy, probably elected. He runs 700 behind the ticket in Luzerne.

Republicans here claim Ohio by 5000. We have nothing decisive received here.

The secretary of the treasury has official information of the removal of the export duty of $5 per pipe on Madeira wine from Portugal, to compensate for which a small tax has been placed on the retail sales of salt, beef, pork, rice, fish, and petroleum.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 4.—Schofield has issued an order prescribing the mode of election. The civil police are to keep order at the polls, and are to be held responsible for disorder. Registering officers during the election shall have the powers of military commissioner. A registered voter arrested for any offense on election days must be allowed to vote before taken to jail. In districts where there are over five thousand voters separate places will be provided for whites and blacks to vote. No candidate for the convention shall officiate as a registering officer. During the election all liquor shops in the vicinity of the polls will be closed.

The officers of the United States circuit court are arranging the preliminaries for the trial of Davis on the first of November.

Judge Underwood to-day overruled a motion to quash the indictment in a revenue fraud case on the ground of want of jurisdiction. He overruled on the ground that the law of 1829 gives the court jurisdiction over all cases whether named by congress or not.

RICHMOND, October 5.—It is understood that the colored voters here have agreed to run three whites and two blacks for the convention. Messrs. Hunnicutt and Wardwell are two of the whites most prominently named.

A Republican negro meeting in Henrico to-day nominated G. L. Swann for the convention, throwing out an ex-federal colonel who was a candidate for nomination.

Mrs. Annie E. Kirby, arraigned for the murder of her husband, was convicted and sentenced to seven years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The trial of Mr. Davis will certainly take place in November. The counsel on both sides are ready. Mr. Davis is expected to arrive here about the 21st of October.

RICHMOND, October 7.—The following facts relative to the coming trial of Mr. Davis are from the best authority:

The trial is set for the fourth Monday in November, and as the government will not interfere there will be no postponement by the counsel on either side. The offense of levying war against the United States will be testified to by Judge Scarborough, of Norfolk, and Hon. John Garde, members of the confederate congress, and Captain Hendren, who were compelled to appear before the Norfolk grand jury and testify to the facts upon which the indictment was made.

There will be very few if any witnesses for the defense, the fact of levying war being admitted. The prosecution will then proceed with the legal argument that the prisoner is guilty of treason, and the counsel for the defense will argue that, being a citizen of a state, and under its laws, the prisoner's allegiance was due to it, and not first to the United States.

It has been positively asserted that Judge Chase would preside, but as the supreme court commences its session on the first Monday in December, this is not possible. The trial is expected to last several weeks.

In the United States circuit court to-day the suit of McMahon versus James River and Canawha Canal company to throw the company into bankruptcy was dismissed, the parties having settled the matter out of court.

A telegram to the Whig says the Republicans of Albemarle met to-day, and revised their convention ticket, leaving off the colored candidates, and nominating Judge Rives and Southal, editor of the Charlottesville Chronicle, prominent and wealthy citizens.

RICHMOND, October 8.—In view of the trial of Mr. Davis double the usual number of petit jurors have been ordered to be summoned for the fall term of the court. Hon. James Lyons was to-day furnished with a copy of the indictment against the accused. General Wells, of Alexandria, it is understood, is engaged on the side of the prosecution. Prosecuting Attorney Chandler leaves to-night for New York to consult with Mr. Evarts who assists him.

The amount of tobacco shipped from Richmond during September was over a million pounds, on which a tax of half a million dollars was paid.

A primary ward meeting of the Republicans to-night agreed on candidates for the convention. The names of Judge Underwood, Mr. Hunnicutt, Wm. R. Toll, late of Massachusetts, and two negroes, were recommended, and will without doubt be confirmed by the coming mass meeting. All the candidates are pure radicals.

RICHMOND, October 9.—General Schofield left to-day for Washington, where he and other district commanders, it is stated, have been called by the president.

A telegram to the Dispatch says that yesterday the United States authorities, who are returning to their owners those farms in Norfolk county which were squatted upon by negroes during the war, went to Taylor's farm on Willoughby point, but the negroes were armed and refused to evacuate.

The authorities retired. Many farms in that district are similarly situated, and the negroes express their determination not to be driven off. In the case referred to it was offered to transfer the negroes to General Wise's farm, but they refused.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, October 6.—Chase was enthusiastically received here. He made a very brief speech, in the course of which he said:

"It would be mere affectation if on an occasion like this I should refrain from saying that I abide in the faith and cherish the sympathies you have so often heard me avow. I am not, as you know, a man given to change my vote; therefore, on Tuesday next it will be given for the candidates of the great party whose proud distinction is that it demands equal rights and exact justice to all men, and insists on maintaining inviolate the public faith. My whole public conduct pledges me to this, and I rejoice in the belief that the noble people whom it has been my pride to serve in days not long past will, on the one hand, strongly refuse their sanction to any violation of national contracts, and on the other generously extend the right of suffrage to all men to whom it is at present unjustly denied."

From Nashville.

NASHVILLE, October 8.—Brownlow's message recommends the repeal of the law disqualifying negroes from holding office and sitting on juries, and indulges in bitterness against rebels. He does not advise the extension of suffrage to disfranchised rebels. Brownlow will probably be elected United States senator.

From Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, October 5.—Returns from thirty-four counties—about half the state—have been received. The convention is carried by more than 11,000 votes over the required one-half.

From Fortress Monroe.

FORTRESS MONROE, October 8.—Accounts from north and south of Cape Henry unite in characterizing the late storm as very severe. Hampton Roads is full of vessels.

The schooner DeHart encountered, on the northern edge of the gulf stream a heavy gale lasting three days. She saw fifteen vessels with spars and sails gone.

A sunken steamer has been seen off Cedar Island.

From Key West.

KEY WEST, October 5.—The admiralty court martial allows twenty-five per cent salvage on the George Cromwell, amounting to $21,000.

LONDON, October 5.—The Standard, of this city, in an article this morning says that the arming of France is exciting apprehensions of a winter campaign.

LONDON, October 4, Midnight.—The latest dispatches from Italy, though conflicting, are highly important. A message has just been received from Florence announcing the clash of arms.

The insurgent troops holding a strong position near Vaguarea in Viterbo were attacked by the Papal forces. A short, sharp fight ensued, which resulted in the defeat of the attacking party, who were obliged to hastily withdraw. The losses in the engagement are not stated. The effect of this victory is very inspiriting to the party of action.

A public meeting by the friends of Garibaldi was held at Turin yesterday. Revolutionary speeches were made by many distinguished persons. A great crowd of people was present and the enthusiasm was unbounded.

Meetings of a like character are in contemplation in other cities of Italy.

Though a prisoner at Caprera Garibaldi has issued a strong address to his followers, which is published to-day all over Europe. He recites the grievances of Italy, and asks his countrymen to redress them now. He appeals strongly to their patriotism, and urges all his friends to march forthwith to Rome.

NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE

Tired.

Yes, I am tired, dear. I will not try
To steam the ebbing current any more,
Nor vex with fruitless prayers the iron sky.
Nor dew with idle tears the barren shore.
The rippling waves that kissed my happy hand,
The waves with laughing music in their flow,
Sadly I watch them o'er the broadening sand;
But I am very tired—let me go!

Too long my chafing pride has stooped to strive
To fan the embers into life again;
No faith can keep the flickering flame alive—
The lingering vigil is but lingering pain.
Too late the voice assumes a tender tone;
Too late the life in loving smiles is drest;
The tide is out, the last faint spark is gone,
And I am very tired—let me rest!

Yes, tired—neither angry nor ashamed;
Each wretched mood has fret its feverish hour:
Let the pale bud lie, withered and unclaimed—
Dead, or to gracious sun or pitying shower
Perchance some little life may linger yet
In the crushed stem and withered leaves we see;
But what avails repentance or regret?
I am so tired—tired let it be!

I did so much; I am all worn and cold:
I strive no longer; let what must be, must;
I could not give your hand the strength to hold,
I could not give your heart the depth to trust.
How you will miss me! I could weep your want
Of the close, silent love that fenced you so;
The cup I filled was neither weak nor scant.
But I am very tired—let it go!

Morning.

BY JAMES AVIS BARTLEY.

The morning, golden-ribbed and saffron-fleshed,
With tender azure eye by sleep refreshed,
With golden head exhaling smells of night,
And thymy robes with moving pearls bedight.
Rose-breathing lips glowing with heavenly fire,
Her jeweled fingers wake a golden lyre—
Striving by all this proud and queenly show
To make us weak, dull-thoughted mortals know
By such a type, what that new day shall be
When universal glory covers land and sea.

The Abyssinian Captives.

It will be remembered that some years ago the King of Abyssinia seized and imprisoned several English residents of his country for a supposed insult by the Queen of England to his African Highness Theodore, the sable King of Abyssinia. Various methods have been suggested to rescue the captives, but the distance inland, the malaria of the country, and the danger of provoking their immediate execution by his brutal Majesty, have thus far proved a barrier to their liberation. Presents and inducements of every kind have been offered to Theodore to achieve their liberation, but the African King declines every ransom, it is said, except the hand of Queen Victoria herself in marriage. Recent English dates state that the Government have at last become tired of remonstrance and sent out an expedition to rescue the captives. A cable telegram, however, says that the unfortunate prisoners are no longer in the hands of the King, but have fallen into the power of an army of insurgents, who are waging war against Theodore. If this be true, their liberation will undoubtedly soon be accomplished; if the report be incorrect, then England will soon be engaged in war with Abyssinia, and, though its remoteness, and its fatal climate may cost millions and many valuable lives, those ignorant savages will be taught a lesson that will be for their good. The danger is, that Theodore, hearing of England's preparations, will murder his captives before the liberating army can reach his dominions.

The Lace of Annaberg.

A chatty correspondent of the Boston Saturday Gazette thus describes Annaberg, in Central Germany:

About the whole region of Annaberg there is a vast quantity of beautiful lace made. No machinery is employed, the work being done entirely with the hands, and it is hardly excelled by the famous manufactures of Belgium and France. We went for a walk through the city, stopping at some of the little cottages where the women were at work. They talk and chatter like all women over their labor, and have little cushions, a foot long, perhaps, containing six thousand tiny pins of steel, and sixty so-called clappers or wooden needles, each three inches long. With these simple implements, working so rapidly that the eye cannot follow the motion of the pins, they manufacture this beautiful and delicate texture. So accustomed are they to the work that they fabricate the finest and most complicated embroidery without stopping their laughter or talk, and seemingly without paying any attention to their delicate work.

Such is the competition of labor in this overstocked land, that twelve hours of daily toil bring them at the most but ten cents; and until they have spent years at the business, and become perfectly skilled in the manipulations of their infinite needles, six cents are a good day's earnings. Yet their houses and persons seem clean and neat; they are pleasant and hospitable, and I did not see any attempts to force us to patronize them, nor to extort the usual triple price which strangers are charged. We bought several fine collars and a small lace mantilla for seventy-five cents, and that price seemed to the good people so enormous that we could hardly escape from the houses for their thanks.

A Star Hidden by a Thread.

David Rittenhouse of Pennsylvania was a great astronomer. He was skilled in measuring the sizes of planets, and determining the position of the stars. But he found that such was the distance of the stars, a silk thread stretched across the glass of his telescope would entirely cover a star; and, moreover, that a silk fibre, however small, placed upon the same glass, would cover so much of the heavens that the star, if a small one and near the pole, would remain obscured behind that silk fibre several seconds. Thus a silk fibre appeared to be larger in diameter than a star.

You know that every star is a heavenly world—a world of light, a sun shining upon other worlds, as our sun shines upon this world.

Our sun is 886,000 miles in diameter, and yet, seen from a distant star, our sun could be covered, obscured, hidden behind a thread, when that thread was near the eye, altho' in a telescope.

Just so, we have seen some who never could behold the heavenly world. They always complained of dimness of vision, dullness of comprehension, when they looked in the heavenly direction. You might strive to comfort them in affliction, in poverty, or distress; but no, they could not see Jesus as the Sun of Righteousness. You might direct their eyes to the Star of Bethlehem through the telescope of faith and holy confidence; but, alas! there is a secret thread, a filament, a silken fibre, which, holding them in subserviency to the world, in some way obscures the light, and Jesus, the Star of Hope, is eclipsed, and their hope darkened. There are times when a very small self-gratification, a very little love of pleasure, a very small thread may hide the light. To some sinners Jesus, as Saviour, appears very far off; but far off as he may appear, he certainly can be and shall be seen where the heart lets nothing, nothing intervene.

A Parable.

A certain tyrant sent for one of his subjects, and said to him, "What is your employment?" He said, "I am a blacksmith." "Go home and make me a chain of such a length." He went home; it occupied him several months, and he had no wages all the time he was making it. Then he brought it to the monarch, who said, "Go and make it twice as long." He brought it up again, and the monarch said, "Go and make it longer still." Each time he brought it there was nothing but the command to make it longer still. And when he brought it up at last, the monarch said, "Take it and bind him hand and foot with it, and cast him into a fuanace of fire." These were the wages for making the chain. Here is a meditation for you, ye servants of the devil. Your master, the devil, is telling you to make a chain. Some spend fifty years in welding the links of the chain, and he says, "Go and make it still longer." Next Sabbath morning you will open that shop of yours, and put on another link; next Sabbath you will be drunk, and put on another link; next Monday you will do a dishonest action; and so you will keep on making fresh links to this chain, and when you have lived twenty more years, the devil will say, "More links on still!" And then, at last, it will be, "Take him, and bind him hand and foot, and cast him into a furnace of fire." "For the wages of sin is death." Here is a subject for your meditation. God apply it to your hearts.

FRANCE.—The Bishop of Orleans, Dupanloup, is urged by French prelates for successor to Pio Nono. Poor man, how comfortable to hear men talk of his follower, and begin to wish him out of the way.

A memorial to the Bishop of Chester against Ritualism has been signed by over 9000 lay members of the Church of England in Liverpool and district. In reply to the memorial the bishop writes: "I sympathize with 'the deep concern with which' the memorialists 'view the introduction into many of the churches of the land of an elaborate ritualism, Romish vestments, altar lights, and incense, in avowed connection with doctrines which cannot be well distinguished from transubstantiation and the sacrifice of the mass.' My own feeling is against the use of lighted candles in the daytime. But, as I had occasion to remark in replying to a previous memorial, conflicting opinions as to their legality have been given by eminent lawyers; and we must await a declaration of the law from the ecclesiastical court, into which this question has been carried. With regard to another head of your complaint, I have received assurance from the clergy to whom doubtless the memorialists refer, that those practices were abandoned in compliance with the expression of my disapproval. I am as desirous as any of the memorialists can be to maintain the doctrine of our Reformed Church, as set forth in the 28th and 31st Articles, and the prescribed form of worship as plainly laid down in the Prayer Book. But this prescribed form of worship must be maintained in its integrity if it is to be maintained in its purity. If one school of thought in our church could be induced to give up its extravagances, and the other would be more hearty and exact in compliance with the directions of the Rubric, all might alike offer the prayer that we might 'hold the faith in unity of spirit and in the bond of peace,' with a clearer conscience and a better hope of acceptance."

ENGLAND—The Pan-Anglican Council.—To the Bishop of Illinois has been assigned the honor of preaching the opening sermon at the Pan-Anglican Council. The English papers see a great propriety in this; for Bishop Whitehouse was the only bisop from the United States present at the meeting of bishops at Lambeth when the Council was resolved upon.—Methodist.

Chicago Churchmen might not see the thing altogether in the same light. Mr. Whitehouse does not seem to love home any better. We wonder if Episcopal authority can keep this roaming prelate in Chicago at all.

During the session of the English Pan-Anglican synod at Lambeth last week the writings of Dr. Colenso, bishop of Natal, on the subject of the inspiration of the Scriptures were discussed and condemned.

From the New Orleans Republican.

ORIGIN OF THE EXISTING EPIDEMIC.

The Board of Health and Bark Florence Peters.

The yellow fever has raged on a large scale in New Orleans during the past two months, until the whole city is not only infected, but in a manner accustomed to the disease. It may be of interest, however, to look back as far as three months, when the first few cases were occurring, although the true origin of the epidemic may not be fully learned thereby. An interesting article on the subject in the September number of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal, written by Dr. Francis Barnes, M. D., near the end of July last, relates to matters which transpired a month previous to that time, the occurrence of some cases of yellow fever on the infected ship Florence Peters, then in this port.

In the article by Dr. Barnes there are some strictures upon the board of health for omission of duty. In order to fully understand what occurred some extracts will be given from the doctor's statement, and some from Resident Physician Southworth, then at quarantine station, and from Health Officer Burns in their reports of the facts.

Dr. Barnes thus recounts some of the facts relative to the infected ship:

The Florence Peters, a bark of 347 tons, cleared from Havana on the 3d of June, 1867. She had on board, as ship's company, the captain, two mates, and six men, besides, as passengers, the captain's wife, son, and baby, and the wife's sister, a young lady about seventeen years of age. She was boarded at Southwest Pass, as the indorsement of the boarding officer shows, on the 13th. She arrived at Algiers on Sunday morning, the 23d, and Dr. Riley was sent for to see the captain's wife, who appeared very ill. The ship was entered in the customhouse on the 24th, Monday. I was called in consultation the following Sunday, 30th, and gave it as my opinion that the cases were yellow fever. The next Monday the second mate died in the Charity hospital, throwing up black vomit.

Dr. Hart, in whose ward he died, told every physician he saw about the hospital to go up and look at this man as a genuine case of yellow fever; and he is my authority for saying this case was verified by a number of respectable physicians. At the time the second mate was being sent direct from the ship, the first mate was sick and treated by the captain.

The president of the board of health ordered the ship to be cleansed, etc., indorsing the order on the back of Mr. Hogue's report of death of the second mate in the Charity hospital on Tuesday, July 9.

The doctor then speaks of the young lady becoming sick two days after the ship's arrival, and of her final recovery, of the wife dying, etc. Also, "Seth York, a man who expected employment on the ship, and who had been frequently on board, died on the 25th July. All these cases are attributable to the ship. Here the trace of direct infection is lost."

The following are the strictures upon the board of health. The doctor says:

This ship has changed its position three times since its arrival, lying first at Algiers, next in the first district, and finally three days at the government wharf. I have been at some pains to ascertain every particular which could be arrived at, partly because I am a strong believer in the infectious nature of true yellow fever, and partly because although I made a report to the board of health, of the "existence of a malady in the family of Captain Hooper, of the bark Florence Peters, which in my belief was yellow fever," it was nine days before the board woke up sufficiently to order the ship to be cleansed and fumigated. * * *

The board of health hold their offices only on account of the presumption that there is this infection. They are bound, if there only be a reasonable probability of danger about any ship, not only to disinfect her if possible, but to carefully guard the lives of the densely packed population of this city by drawing a cordon sanitaire around the focus of infection, and establishing a strict non-intercourse between the inhabitants and the fatal ship.

It seems that the quarantine officers did their duty fully. In answer to a letter from the board of health for information, Dr. Southworth writes Dr. Smith from quarantine station, July 12, as follows:

The bark Florence Peters, from Havana, arrived at this station June 14. The vessel was unusually clean, and all on board were well. While here she was twice thoroughly fumigated. She was released by me June 22, and left here I believe on the 23d or 24th, all on board being well. She was detained at quarantine ten days, including the day of arrival on the bar and the day of departure. There was no yellow fever at this station while the Florence Peters was here, and I can not but suspect that the disease was acquired in New Orleans.

Dr. Southworth sent a more full report of the case to the board of health July 26, and remarks that "more mature reflection leads me more strongly to suspect that her yellow fever was acquired in Algiers. May not in Mrs. Hooper's case a sickness, perhaps malarial and acquired here, and developed just after she left here, have invited and succumbed to the infection existing in the neighborhood of the vessel?"

Evidently Dr. Southworth did his whole duty, and there is reason in his suggestion as to the true origin of the fever. But there were other causes stated incidentally by other writers.

Dr. James Burns, health officer of the first district, New Orleans, writes a full account of the Florence Peters case to the board of health, July 15. He says, among other things, that:

Nothing was known on board of yellow fever prevailing in the harbor of Havana or elsewhere, and no one on board was in any way exposed to the disease. The trip from Havana was made in eleven days, without any sickness on board, and ten days more were passed at quarantine without any interruption of health. It was found, however, that the smell from the bilge water, molasses, and sugar had become very offensive by the time the quarantine had expired. I have been unable to ascertain positively whether there was any yellow fever at the quarantine ground during the stay of the Florence Peters there. Just before leaving the quarantine ground a mess of oysters was partaken of in the cabin, and some cucumbers were eaten.

The health officer had probably not seen the statement of Dr. Southworth, written three days previous, in which he states positively that there was no yellow fever at the station when the Florence Peters was there. One would suppose, however, that a mess of oysters and cucumbers at the mouth of the Mississippi, in the middle of June, together with the stench from bilge water, etc., was sufficient to produce yellow or any other species of fever.

Health Officer Burns further states in his letter of July 15 that there was no further sickness on the Peters—that the crew had escaped having it—that, the cargo being discharged, the vessel had been well cleaned and disinfected with chloride of lime, burnt coffee, and other agents, by the captain's order, and that he, the health officer, had "subsequently caused the mate to add the employment of the 'carbolic disinfectant' to them." He further says: "In connection with this case, it is worthy of observation that John Dougherty, who died in the Charity hospital of yellow fever on the 28th ultimo, (June 28), was brought from Algiers while the Florence Peters was lying there; but that, as far as I have been able to ascertain, he did not visit that or any other vessel there."

Frankness seems to be the great characteristic of the Indian chief Red Cloud when he said: "We do not want peace, because when we are at peace we are poor; now we are rich." General Sherman was equally outspoken when he said, "If you don't leave the roads alone I will kill you."

There is a belief among the English shipworkmen that there are two skeletons lying in some of the compartments between the two shells of the Great Eastern. Men have always crawled through openings to repair the two cases. Two men who crawled in never crawled out, it seems.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38 Mailed post-paid.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE

"A Name in Heaven."

I tremble as I ask,
Is my name there?
Once, on a brighter day,
I seemed to hear Him say,
"Cast off thy care,
My triumph share,
My blood hath sprinkled thee Divine,
And thou, poor sinner, art forever Mine."

But I'm a mourner yet;
My years decline;
Nearer each day to death.
I draw the painful breath;
The nights close in,
I weep and pine.
And fear, if ever I was His,
I've forfeited my seat in heavenly bliss.

An answer I must have—
Is my name there?
O, if Thou wilt respond
And say "It is," what fond Delights I'll share!
What burdens bear!
No cross too heavy for the load
Of him whose name is written with his God.

Surely upon Thy hands,
O, Son of God,
And in that crimson tide
That stained Thy pierced side,
The thorn, the rod,
The pathway trod
Up Calvary's heights my name was traced
In living lines, never to be erased.

So I will trust in Thee:
Heavy and slow,
Ever amidst gloom and care.
Yet never quite despair;
Weary and slow
I'll go, I'll go
My appointed time that Thou hast given,
In hopes that Christ hath writ my name in heaven.

ENTIRE CONSECRATION.

BY REV. E. DAVIES.

The apostle says, "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."

This solemn and sacred duty is enjoined upon all men everywhere and in every age. But what does it include? To glorify God is to honor him, to love and to obey him—to do all things to please him.

I. To glorify God with our bodies, includes: (1.) That we feed those bodies with that quality of food which will best preserve health and promote long life, remembering that the most simple food is the most wholesome and nutritious, and that this simple food shall not be taken to excess—to feed lust, instead of supplying nature's just demands; to promote health, and not prepare the way for disease. (2.) It includes the clothing of the body. Kings may array themselves in purple and fine linen, and every man may dress according to his rank and station, but this makes no allowance for that expense that pampers pride and promotes vanity. (3.) We should glorify God in the recreations of the body. Man needs to leave the monotonous toil of every-day life, and go up into the mountains, or down into the valleys, or out upon the sea, and take fresh draughts of life from the universe around him, and to return to his daily toil with renewed vigor; and this may be done to the glory of God. (4.) In the employment of the body, it cannot be for the glory of God to follow those employments that destroy health, or to follow healthful employments to excess. But in all these things to obey the laws of the body, which are the laws of God. (5.) The passions and appetites of the body must be subdued to the rational bound, for excess in these indulgences is both a sin against God and ourselves. Alas! that so many, otherwise good men, fall into the slough of sensuality, and so forfeit their consecration and lose their souls.

II. To glorify God in our souls is to have all the faculties filled and ruled by God. The understanding filled with holy light. The conscience filled with holy sensibility, till it become

"Quick as the apple of the eye,
The slightest touch of sin to feel."

The memory filled with holy recollections, so that it will not forget God in any circumstances. That the affections be filled with holy love, that God shall be the great object of affection, amid all the loved ones of earth or heaven. That the imagination be filled with holy conceptions. That the will be filled with sweet and holy submission to the will of God, saying—

"Lord, I make a full surrender,
Every power and thought be thine,
Thine entirely, through eternal ages shine."

This consecration will include, (1.) The sanctification of all our talents to God; our time will be accounted holy, and will be carefully husbanded for God and holy purposes. (2.) Our gifts for the ministry, for prayer or exhortation, for teaching or showing mercy, will be all made subservient to the will of God. (3.) We shall consider ourselves as but stewards of God's mercy—hence we shall acquire it and possess it for the Divine glory. Alas! that covetousness is one of the easily besetting sins of the church, and is too much winked at. If a man is a drunkard or profane, we expel him, but if outwardly correct yet inwardly covetous, he is allowed to remain. This sin cursed Lot, Achan, Judas, Ananias, and Sapphira, who have too many successors. Mark the word of God on this damning sin. "This know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." "And covetousness, which is idolatry, for which things' sake cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God." See how this inordinate love of wealth is classed among the vilest sins, and utterly disqualifies for the kingdom of God. Well may the Saviour say, "Beware of covetousness;" and this spirit may be seen in small as in large things—just as a man may drown in a shallow or deep stream.

The result of this spirit is seen when the missionary cause lies like Lazarus at the gates of opulence and receives but the crumbs that fall from the table, or when she wanders among the churches "with a pauper's importunity and receives only the shreds and parings of liberal incomes." This is one reason why the laborers are so few in the Lord's harvest. Many leave and many will not enter the ministry because the church is so slow in meeting the wants of these men of God. And they are not willing to be mendicants in the ministry when they can be independent in other callings.

When Oliver Cromwell was in control of England, he found in one of the churches twelve silver images of the apostles. When told what they were, he said, "Melt them into money and send them about doing good." So, methinks, if the blessed Jesus should come into the best rooms and see the expensive furniture, and into the wardrobes and see the expensive clothing and ornaments, he would say, "exchange them for money and send them about doing good."

When the people of Collatia sought the protection of Rome, they were asked, "Do you deliver up yourselves, your city, your bounds, your water, your temples—all things that are yours, both human and divine?" They replied, "We deliver up all," and were received. So, let every reader make a present and perpetual transfer of all that he has into the hands of God, and

"Promise in this sacred hour
For God to live and die."

Trust in God.

Wesley, in a sermon at Doncaster, in 1799, related the following circumstance:

A poor woman of the Romanist persuasion having had the misfortune to break her china crucifix, immediately went to her priest to tell him, mourning greatly on account of the sad occurrence, and frequently crying out, "Now I have broken my crucifix, I have nothing to trust in but the great God." When Wesley repeated these words he appeared to feel strongly, and in a manner peculiar to himself exclaimed, "What a mercy she had a great God to trust in!" A respectable Romanist, who occasionally visited the chapel, was present, and was powerfully affected. "The great God to trust in" touched his heart. He was very deeply convinced of his need of salvation, and joined the Methodist Society, became an ornament to religion, and to the day of his death was an ardent admirer of Wesley.

On Persecuting the Hair.

Human hair has been subject to all the caprices of fashion and all the fitfulness of fond but ignorant admiration in every age of the world and in every country. A large volume could be written of its history—its habits, its loves, its hates, and its persecutions. I propose in this paper to confine myself chiefly to a few brief notes of one modern mode of destroying its beauty, in doubly vain endeavors to restore it, or to provoke its growth in gracefulness and luxuriousness.

What has the hair done that it should be treated as we treat it? We twist it, we scrub it, rasp it, scorch it, stretch it, curl it, plaster it down, drown it in grease, we sicken it with deadly and nasty liquids, we tie it so tightly that it cannot grow, and then punish it by soaking it in odious chemicals and poisonous compounds. As Plato said of the world, the skillful physicians say of hair, that it is "governed too much." Like Mr. Jefferson Davis, it only wants to be let alone; or, at least, like Jefferson Davis's slaves, to be freed from incessant and pitiless abuse. The notion seems to prevail that the hair is a kind of dumb Mrs. Mallapert, "vot loves to be persecuted." It is no such hypocrite. Like every good, healthy christian, it delights in cleanliness and gentle treatment, plenty of pure food, and freedom from oppressive and restrictive laws.

The first, second and third essential things to do, in order to keep or secure a healthy head of hair, is to preserve a perfectly clean scalp. Avoid irritating it by stiff brushes or violent shampooing. These injure the scalp seriously, they diminish its energies, and thereby promote the formation of dandruff and scurvy.

Grease, whatever disguise it may assume, is injurious to the hair.

These applications act mechanically on the hair, and seem to render it soft, but at the same time they stop up the minute pores of the scalp and practically act as a hermetic seal to them. The insensible perspiration can no more escape through this dense cover than it can penetrate a coat of india rubber. Stimulants applied to a scalp in this condition only hasten the ruin of the hair.

Every touch of the scalp should be soft and soothing, and every application gentle.

No effort should be made to alter or modify the natural color of the hair, because nature, in every case, selects that shade which best harmonizes with the complexion and most perfectly suits the expression and cast of countenance. A light complexioned person with dark hair, to a cultivated and artistic eye, is an anomaly or monstrosity, as much out of harmony with the true ideal of beauty as a girl with a moustache or a boy with a wrinkled face.

A slight clipping once in four or six weeks is a benefit to the hair; and for this reason—that the escape of the oily substance contained in the hair is sometimes prevented by the closing of the ends, and thus it becomes more or less dry and harsh. A long neglect of clipping is seen in the dry and faded appearance of the ends, which a single application of the shears restores to freshness and beauty.

The head should be washed almost or altogether as frequently as the face. The dryness which washing gives to the hair would soon be provided for by a greater flow of the natural oil, which now is seldom called for and often restrained.

But, whatever may be written about the habits of hair, there are many persons who will persist in the use of oils, pomades, and dyes. These compounds are more freely used in America than in any other country; and the result is seen in the comparative rarity of really fine heads of hair

Pomades are made both from animal and vegetable substances. Among the animal substances that form the basis of these popular preparations are the fat of the bear, deer, hedgehog, rabbit, man, mole, goose and snake; ashes of the hedgehog, hedgehog skin, mouse, goat's hair, horse's teeth, bees, wasps; Spanish flies, house-flies distilled with honey in milk, honey, bee-glue and red coral.

The vegetable substances are too numerous to mention, but include benzoin, resins, common tar, turpentine, and laudanum.

"On the principle of like going to and nourishing like," says a careful authority, "the fat of excessively hairy animals—as, for instance, the bear—has been considered peculiarly precious as a promoter of the growth of the human hair; while that of the hedgehog, on a similar principle, would tend to make hair strong! The fat from a human scalp—a well-thatched one being probably preferred—was formerly regarded with feelings of peculiar interest by those ingenious philosophers, whose surprise, on putting their theory to the test, must have been great, upon finding that, after all, it was no richer in virtue than any other kind of grease. A kindred notion was that which fixed on ravens' eggs as a proper application for coloring the hair black. The Romans were not behind us in the oddity of their fancies; for they resorted not only to external, but to internal remedies for the loss of hair. Pliny mentions of the latter kind, observing that 'the sponge growing out of the wild rose, reduced to ashes and mixed with honey, is one of the noblest remedies.'"

The only permanent good effected by the application of pomades is accomplished by the friction and cleansing that sometimes accompany it.

"There is an elderly female in London," says Dr. Perry, in his work on the Hair, Scalp and Face, "of some repute in the practice of restoring the hair, whose method is said to consist mainly in getting the head of her subject between her knees, and straightway beginning a most vigorous attack upon it, consisting in rubbing, punching, pummelling, shampooing, and the like, which results in the effectual stimulation of every part. Another aged sister produces a similar result with blistering powder."

"Restoratives," "lustrals," and similar compounds, are almost uniformly made up of castor oil and alcohol, because no other fixed oil will freely dissolve in alcohol.

One of the most celebrated restoratives, for example, is composed of eight ounces of ninety per ct. alcohol, colored with a few drops of tincture of alkonet root, to which is added one ounce of castor oil. The perfume is gained by a compound of bergamot, narolic, verbena, and orange. Another equally popular restorative is made by adding two ounces of castor oil without any perfume to eight ounces of eighty per ct. alcohol.

Pomades sold for the same purpose owe their more decided results to the presence of cantharides, which is a powerful stimulant.

All such applications are of no permanent utility. At best they only produce a feeble growth of short, downy hair, which soon disappears, or never attains a healthy condition.

Power of a Gentle Rebuke.

There is a power in Christian words, spoken in gentleness and love, that rarely fails to impress itself, even on wicked or reckless men. If Christians had more courage and fidelity in speaking them, good results would be oftener witnessed. One of our exchanges tells an incident, for the truth of which it vouches:

A number of passengers were discussing the exciting questions of the day on board a steamboat on one of our western rivers. Oaths were frequently heard; and one man in particular, in almost every sentence, used the name of his Maker in a most irreverent manner.

Away from this excited party, but within hearing distance, sat a young lady with her husband and friends. The profanity was noticed by them, and they seemed shocked by its boldness. They could talk, but the timid, shrinking lady could act. "I can bear it no longer," she said, as she left her seat and glided into the circle of the now loud and angry disputants. Placing her hand on the arm of the one who had shocked her by his oaths, and trembling with emotion, she begged him not to take the name of God in vain; to think how soon he might be called to meet Him in eternity. She said a few more words, and, frightened at her boldness, she burst into tears and left them.

The next day, before the boat reached its destination, the man came to this lady, took her by the hand, and thanking her earnestly for her late reproof, said: "I will not forget your kind words; I will try and be a different man, and live for the eternity awaiting me." In a few months after, the lady was called from earth. The influence of that open and decided rebuke will only be known when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed.

Many of us can shudder, and deplore the open wickedness about us, but how many of us have the decision of Christian character to enable us to reprove sin in the right spirit when the opportunity is given us?

Death of Dr. Chalmers.

The soldier of Jesus Christ will prefer to die on the field of battle. It was thus that Chalmers died, over whose bier, it has been said, all Scotland was in tears. His death is thus graphically described in Dr. Wayland's memoir:

On the night of Friday, May 28, he arrived in Edinburgh, with no particular marks of fatigue or exhaustion. On the forenoon of Saturday he was engaged in preparing a report for the General Assembly of the Free Church, then in session. On Saturday he felt more effects of fatigue, though he accompanied Dr. Cunningham to his place of worship at Morning Side. He spent the evening with his family, as usual, charming every one by his genial benignity. After supper he said to a clergyman who happened to be staying with him, "I am sorry to ask you to give us worship in the evening." "Not at all," said he; "I shall be happy to do so." "Well," replied he, "you will give worship to-night, and I expect to give worship to-morrow morning."

During the whole evening, as if he had kept his brightest smiles and fondest utterances to the last, and for his own, he was peculiarly bland and benignant. "I had seen him frequently," says Mr. Gemmel, "at Fairlie in his happiest moods, but I never saw him happier. Christian benevolence beamed from his countenance, sparkled from his eye, and played upon his lips." Immediately after prayers he withdrew, and, bidding his family remember that they must be early to-morrow, waved his hand, saying, "a general good night."

Next morning, before eight o'clock, Prof. McDougal, who lived in the house adjoining, sent to inquire about a package of papers which he had expected to receive at an earlier hour. The house-keeper, who had been long in the family, knocked at the door of Dr. Chalmers' room, but received no answer. Concluding that he was asleep, and unwilling to disturb him, she waited until another person called with a second message. She then entered the room, it was in darkness; she spoke, but received no response. At last she threw open the window shutters and drew aside the curtains of the bed. He sat there, half erect, his head reclined gently on the pillow, the expression on his countenance that of fine, majestic repose. She took his hand, she touched his brow; he had been dead for hours; very shortly after the parting salute to his family, he had entered the eternal world. His departure must have been wholly without pain or conflict. The expression of the face, undisturbed by any trace of suffering, the position of the body, so easy that the least struggle would have disturbed it, the very posture of his arms, hands and fingers, known to his family as that into which they fell naturally in moments of entire repose, conspired to show that, saved all strife with the last enemy, his spirit had passed to its place of blessedness and glory in the heavens.

The Pope's Blessing.

The following observations occur in the Naples Observer:

The Pope's blessing conduces to evil fortune rather than good. Pius in 1848 gave Italy his blessing; everything was shortly afterwards overturned from the Alps to the Adriatic. At Gaeta he blessed Ferdinand of the Bourbons and his dynasty. Every one is aware of the horrible death of the one and the luckless deprival of the kingdom of the other. Several Neapolitan families who left Naples for Rome for the purpose of receiving the papal benediction, have on their return experienced every kind of misfortune. In Ancona the Pope blessed three large merchant vessels before they started on their first cruise; the whole of them were wrecked and the crews lost. Gens. Lamoriciere and Priodan, before leaving to fight against the Italians (and their brothers in Jesus Christ) likewise received a blessing from his Holiness. One fled dishonorably at Castlefidardo, and the other perished by the bullets of the excommunicated. He gave his benediction to Austria; she was beaten and humiliated by Protestant Prussia. He blessed count Arga, the commandant of the French Foreign Legion; half an hour afterwards that worthy fell from his horse and broke his leg. He blessed the Empress of Mexico; that illustrious lady, a short time afterwards, became insane. He blessed Monseigneur Scitowski, the primate of Hungary, and the telegraph almost immediately announced his death. What now remains for him to do is to bless his prelates and himself, and perhaps that will be the signal for the cessation of the temporal power, and even of the papacy itself.

Mission Intelligence.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST—The whole Church will unite in thus lifting up her voice for the faith which enabled the American Board to determine to take China for Christ. They have determined to call for sixty men. "The morning light is breaking."

REV. T. S. JONNSON, M.D., OF INDIA. This brother writes that the physician of the civil service had advised him that he must seek a respite from his work. He had not found it possible, and he was thankful to say that, notwithstanding he was obliged to do the work of two men, his health had held out in a most remarkable manner; indeed, he writes that, contrary to his fears, he has been able to fulfill his calling, and has better health than for three hot seasons last past.

NATIVE CONVERTS.—Of those offering as teachers and preachers Dr. Maclay writes: "They are children, and need the most careful training. O how much we need Divine guidance in this matter! Pray for us! Rightly trained and directed, our helpers will gradually develop into men of power; but if left to themselves, they will fall into grievous errors."

OMISSION METHODISTS.—This is a new name, but the individuals to whom it is applicable we know not. We do not know that we ever saw the man, or woman, or child. It is our understanding that every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church is a contributor to the cause of missions, is a member of the Missionary Society. If there be any Omission Methodists they must be so in consequence of omitting to give as much as they should, but who they are we know not.

CHILDREN GIVING.—Pastor James Hunter has been charged by some little ones of his flock to send certain money to our treasurer for the cause of the Saviour among the heathen. He may tell George, and Ellen, and Jane that for the heathen it shall go.

CAREFUL WITH BECOMING CARE.—The Missionary Society, in deciding to issue one copy, gratis, of the Missionary Advocate to each member of the Church, were careful to guard against waste, and also to provide for those only who would have the paper carefully read. We are pleased to know that pastors are disposed to aid in carrying out these purposes. Here are two letters by the same mail. One writes: "We have found that we are receiving ten copies more than we can profitably use. Please reduce ours by that number." The other writes: "I am satisfied that we use to advantage twenty-five more in as many families as have not yet enjoyed their benefit." In both these cases the ministers had carefully looked into the matter, and wrote accordingly.

THE MONTHLY CONCERT.—A female missionary, in addressing a farewell letter to the friends of the cause who support the concert, on the eve of her departure writes: "The good brethren and sisters, too, who uphold the missionary concerts, O how the missionaries are bound to you, and you to them. Adieu!"

GET ALL THE CHURCHES to observe the monthly concerts, writes a missionary. A pastor writes that his people have averaged in their gifts at the monthly concert alone nearly two dollars per member. If any one had told them in advance that their gifts would amount to so much, they would not have been believed; never did they, by any annual collection, reach half the amount.

"WHO IS YOUR HEIR?"—This is the title of one of our mission tracts. "Be Your Own Executor." This should be the title of another to be written. Who will write it? Let it embody the following sentiments: "Missionary societies are sometimes put to the necessity of defending wills made in good faith, which wordly-minded heirs are endeavoring to break. Hence it is well for our brethren in all the churches, so far as is possible, to be their own executors. Give to God while you live. Superintend the distribution of your own estate. It is by far the wisest way. It will give you both joy and peace to see your money securely lodged in the treasury of the Lord before you go hence to be here no more. Do not fear coming want. He to whom belongs the gold and the silver, and within whose royal power all agencies are held in ready tribute to the best interests of his redeemed ones, will not leave you to suffer for the lack of any good thing. All you have to do is implicitly to trust Christ. If his cause is to be your heir, bestow the gift while living. Place the money as if in the very hand of Jesus. Then no rapacity or unrighteousness of heirs, no trickery or treachery of lawyers shall cheat you of your intent, or Jesus of his gift."

An Old Story.

BY E. ALICE KINNEY.

Rustle of winds o'er the ripening grain;
Tinkle of brooks where the blossoms fall;
Laughter of waters, like silver rain,
Wandering out from a festal hall.
Lights and shadows along the floor;
Snow of marble and glimmer of gold;
And drifts of scarlet the zephyr bore
From trees that are gnarled and old;
Wavering mosaic sweet and strange,
Goldenly swaying in endless change.

Voices down the garden gate,
Vows of love on the pure air,
Feet that linger so late, so late,
Kisses that fall on a brow so fair;
Eyes whose lashes are black and deep,
Shading a thousand yearning fears;
Mouth like that of a child's asleep,
Trembling yet in the shadow of tears;
Hearts that flutter like prisoned birds,
To the passionate music of farewell words.

Rustle of winds o'er the ripening grain;
Tinkle of brooks where the lillies blow;
Fringe of gold through the summer again,
Flashing down in the fields below.
Crimson mosaic woven in gloom,
And barred with golden over the floor;
Black eyes wistfully haunting the room,
Where hangeth her gilded lute no more;
Eyes that are glittering full of tears,
For love that is false to the love of years.

There's a low large moon in the voiceless night;
And blossoming stars through the flying cloud;
And sunset wreaths on a bank of white,
Like roses blown o'er a burial shroud.
And, out in the dusk, by the garden gate,
A womanly dreamer is lingering yet,
With eyes that wistfully wait and wait;
Filling forever in yearning regret;
And a throbbing heart, and cheeks that burn,
Watch for the feet that will never return.

Brasher Falls, N. Y.

An Astonished Old Lady.

An old lady whose home is in the country, and who hadn't been in Cincinnati for several years, came in yesterday to do some trading, her principal business being one of the few eventful incidents in her life, the purchase of a new bonnet. She hadn't had a new bonnet since she was in Cincinnati the last time, and that was seven years ago; nor had she seen any of the new-fangled contrivances—"trifles light as air"—which the women wear now-a-days in the place of bonnets. As a new bonnet was the engrossing theme in her mind on entering the city, of course she was on the alert at once to see what the fashion was. Imagine her consternation, then, in standing on Fourth street, watching the people as they passed by. For a time she was perfectly speechless, and then she was observed to throw up her hands and exclaim—

"For the land's sake! are the women all crazy, gaddin' through the streets with nothin' on their blessed heads? What's become of all their bunnets?

She went into a millinery store and accosted a "gentlemanly and obliging" young lady in attendance:

"You see, I came in the hull way from Clarmont county to buy a bunnet. I've worn this one goin' on eight year. It's a little out of fashion, I reckon, and I want one that's right in style. I did't know what the women was wearin', so I stood out here a blessed hour to see 'em pass, and I hope never to see my old man agin if I saw one with a bunnet on durin' the hull time. Some had a doll's handkerchief laid on the top of the head, others had what looked for all the world like oyster patties trimmed with blow'd glass; and I declare to goodness if one woman with a big rutabaga turnip on the back of her head, in a fly net, wore any coverin' 'ceptin' a yaller circus ticket tied on with a ribbin!"

When informed that the styles she had seen were the latest thing in the bonnet line, the old lady's astonishment increased, and she was thoroughly bewildered by the time she had examined each of the varieties embraced in the milliner's collection, particularly when she learned the accompanying prices. She declared it was enough to drive one crazy to see sich vanities as women are runnin' to now days. "'Twant so when I was a gal," said she. "Women wore bunnets in them days that kivered their heads, and tied 'em under the chin instid of fast'n 'em to the back hair." She left in great disgust, and said she would go right back to Clairmount and wear her old bonnet till milliners got to making bonnets again.

REUNION.—Two colored men, brothers, found each other in Cincinnati lately, after sixty years of separation. As each was walking along the street, Joshua, with the civility and kindness for which he is noted, addressed Solomon, recognizing him as a stranger in the city, and after the topics of the day had been discussed, mutual inquiries were made as to each other's birthplace, and much to their astonishment, the fact became apparent that they were brothers, though each had thought the other dead. The remainder of the Sabbath day, and far into the night, the two old men were quietly enjoying themselves, chatting of the remarkable changes of half a century.

Subscriptions.

The year has nearly gone, and some of our subscribers are in arrears for the Advocate, though by reference to the paper they will see that our terms require payment in advance.

We hope that all who are indebted to us, either for subscriptions or advertisements, will meet their indebtedness without delay.

We would especially call the attention of the ministers of our Conference, who have sent in lists of subscribers, to this matter. Many of these are in arrears, having paid but a dollar or two on their subscriptions.

We have made allowances, however, in the past, for our patrons in the South, especially in the country, owing to the dullness of business, and the scarcity of money. But the crops of cotton, sugar, &c. are beginning to arrive in market, and the money for the same will soon find its way to the country, and a portion to the hands of our subscribers.

We trust that our patrons and presiding elders will exert themselves to collect all subscriptions due as soon as possible, and forward the same without delay.

Stay Away.

We earnestly implore our citizens who are now absent, not to return to the city until such times as the press may announce that the time of safety has arrived. The epidemic is certainly on the decline, and it cannot be long ere they may return to their homes and pursue their business with perfect security. But that time is not yet. New cases of the fever occur daily, and some fatal ones. If strangers who are unacclimated come to New Orleans before a heavy frost, they will be in imminent danger; and there is almost equal danger to our old but absent citizens. Not a few of our native-born citizens have died of the prevailing epidemic, and it is stated as a fact, that some who are here have had the fever for the SECOND TIME. Then wait a little longer. The time of your return will soon come.

Dr. C. B. White,

our esteemed friend, has fully recovered from the yellow fever. In addition to his duties as medical purveyor of this department, he labored most earnestly to relieve the sick in our city, and when his professional services were needed, he hastened to the Jackson Barracks, where he was engaged day and night attending his comrades in arms. It was during these exhaustive labors that he himself was most violently attacked with the terrible and prevailing fever. But we rejoice over his recovery, and thank God that such a valuable man has been spared to society.

Julian Neville

has been appointed Recorder for the First District, to fill the place of the late Judge Ahern. We regard the appointment a good one, and we think the appointee eminently worthy. He is a Union man, and belongs to a class of such men in our city, who have been shamefully neglected both by the civil and military officials of our state, in failing to appoint them to responsible positions, while less worthy men have been elevated to power. The business of these gentlemen was ruined by the war, and it is but proper that they should now be rewarded.

THREE LESSONS FROM THE LATE ELECTIONS.

I. The Republican party must accept and advance to their consummation, all the logical issues of their mission, or go to ruin. Never had a national party a grander mission to fulfill; never has a party been more faithful to its trust and more successful in its efforts. Like Cromwell's Ironsides and Washington's Continentals, the Republicans are the party of Louisiana. Its great mission was gradually unfolded; for parties, like individuals, must be lead on step by step in the path of reform, as foreknowledge of the ultimate issues would make cowards of us all. Luther in religion, Bacon in science, Lincoln in politics, advanced to conclusions in the growth of their experience and the plan of events, from the mere mention of which they would have indignantly shrank at the beginning of their great missions. Originally called to fix the geographical limits of slavery, the Republicans were next called to declare war for the preservation of the Union; then followed, in their own good time, the emancipation of the slaves, the recognition of the freedman's citizenship, and finally the enfranchisement of all the blacks in the South. These are all mighty events, and it were worth a life-time to witness their accomplishment.

Although that which has been accomplished is great and memorable, yet that which remains to be done is no less great. Providence calls upon the Republican party to extend the right of suffrage to all BLACKS in the United States, to confer the rights of the franchise upon WOMEN, and to declare itself the great TEMPERANCE PARTY of the nation. About woman-suffrage and temperance, we have but little now to say; we think the controversy which God has with the Republican party just now is on Negro suffrage in the Northern States. On this question the Republicans are not sound at the core. When we were traveling with the "mendicant loyalists" in the North about a year ago, we with others were more than once requested not to say a word about the "niggers voting;" and in some places we could not be trusted to speak, lest we should bring in the "nigger:" yet these same Republicans have shouted for negro suffrage in the South, as the forelorn hope of the unreconstructed states. Do these men act from principle or policy? But they have met the Northern black man face to face, and there they stand. The negro confronts them; he wont move, and they can't move. It is another one of the halting places of this great party of Providence. In every party there are thousands of men who vote from momentary impulse or interest, who hold the balance of power, and whom Providence employs for triumph or defeat, as God's purposes require: they are not the thinking, planing, paying portion of a party, but they are the acting and receiving portion. Because the Republicans are not in favor of universal suffrage; because they refuse to their colored neighbor that which they have given to the Southern black man; because they will not come up to the demands of universal justice, therefore God is defeating their plans and taking their power from them. He has spoken to them through Ohio and Pennsylvania, and he will speak to them through New York and every other state. He has taken the Republican party in hand, and on its chastisement will continue till it cries JUSTICE TO ALL.

II. The second lesson of the late Northern elections is, that every injudicious movement on the part of our colored citizens in the South, will be seized with avidity and employed to advantage by the Democrats of the North. The whites of the South have not failed to trumpet through the North that by the Reconstruction plan of Congress they are degraded and their former slaves raised to power over them. Though false, yet this declaration served partizan ends, and affected the results of the late elections. It therefore becomes our colored citizens to act with the greatest circumspection. Your every movement is watched and carefully studied. Your old Northern masters, the Democrats, scrutinize your sayings and your deeds no less intently than those who bought and sold you. You should ponder well the fact, that a Democratic victory throughout the Northern states would be an incalculable evil to you, and perhaps to the whole nation. Remember that of human weakness, prejudice is the hardest to conquer. There are 40,000 men in Ohio who favored the war for the Union, and who voted for a Congress which has given you suffrage, and who would not vote for the enfranchisement of their own neighbors. This feeling exists in every Northern state, to a greater or less degree, and is kept alive by every false step you take. While no principle should be surrendered, and no right sacrificed, yet the higher privileges of citizenship should be claimed with modesty, and fitness for position should be a rule of action. The clamor for place in Louisiana has damaged our cause in the North, no less than the assumed disregard of white men by those who have more lungs than brains. By less clamoring for equal spoils, and by a less straining for the attainment of every privilege in a day, you will reach the desired end much sooner and with greater ease.

III. The third lesson which is afforded to us to learn by the Democratic gains at the North is, that the spirit of the South is unchanged and that its sympathies are with its old allies, the Northern Democrats. Nothing has elated the Southern heart of late more than these returns, and the hope has been awakened that a general reaction would take place in the North, and the reconstruction laws of Congress would be repealed. Should the ten unreconstructed states be readmitted to the Union prior to the autumn of 1868, reconstructionists would vote solid for the Democratic presidential candidate. Here, then, appears the national danger. Our defeat in Pennsylvania and our losses in Ohio have revealed again the political spirit of the South. Let us hope, therefore, that in the wise providence of God the great Republican party may purify itself of its official corruptions, and so far overcome its prejudices against race and color, that it still may be accounted worthy to control the destinies of this great nation.

Who is the Foundress of the First Colored Orphan Asylum in New Orleans?

Since writing our article on the late Madam DeMortie, we have received a very lengthy and respectful communication from Mrs. Dr. Clarissa Hyde, that she (Mrs. Hyde) and not Madam DeMortie, is the foundress of the first colored orphan asylum in New Orleans; and from the proof she has furnished us, we are inclined to think her claim to the honor is just. While we deem the point of honor one of secondary consideration, yet we desire to have the history of so good a benevolent monument correctly recorded. The document sent us by Mrs. Hyde is so important, that we shall publish its material facts in another number of the Advocate.

The reason of this letter to us, was the remark in our address at Madam DeMortie's funeral, that she initiated colored orphan asylums in this city; and the same fact is stated in our notice of the Madam's death in this week's Advocate; but Mrs. Hyde has given the proof that she is the originator, and in proof, the following is taken from the printed copy of the constitution and by-laws of the "Union Sisters' Asylum Association," founded August 12, 1864:

At a meeting held at Mrs. L. Franklin's residence on Liberty street, August 12, the following persons were elected officers for the coming year: Mrs. Clarissa Hyde, President; Mrs. L. Mitchell, Vice President; Miss Medora Hyde, Secretary; Mrs. C. Franklin, Treasurer. Male Directors—George Smoots, John Jones, Thomas Isabelle, Joseph Ebbs. Female Directors—Mrs. L. Franklin, Mrs. A. Smoots, Mrs. S. Mason, Mrs. Hobby. THOS. ISABELLE,
Chairman Board Directors.

At a meeting of the Howard Association on Tuesday night, the secretary was instructed to inform collectors of money at the North, in behalf of yellow fever sufferers, that no more money is needed. The association has been made the custodian of about $95,000. Of this amount it has expended about $30,000. Many orders are yet to be received for payment, but it is thought an unexpended balance of about $20,000 will be left in the treasury of the association. It has been the practice of the association hitherto to make out of such balance a contribution to each orphan asylum in the city, at the rate of $100 to each orphan sent thither by the association. The same course will probably be pursued at the close of the present epidemic season.

Spain is asleep in more ways than one. We have heard of her "late rising." When shall we hear of her "early rising?"

THE CONVENTION.

It is estimated that of the ninety-eight delegates in the State Constitutional Convention, thirty are colored men. As a whole, we are well satisfied with the character and calibre of the members elect to this important body. The colored members from New Orleans are men of fair intelligence and of good character, while among the white delegates from the country, are some of the wisest and purest men in our state. When assembled, the Convention will be an intelligent and dignified body of American citizens.

From present returns, the estimated majority over the requisite vote, is over 12,000. This is equally gratifying to every true Republican, and speaks well for our state. And this result is the more pleasing in view of the fact, that the Reconstructionists not only refused to vote themselves, but did what they could to prevent the blacks from voting. We hope, therefore, that, in view of such a handsome majority, Major-General Mower will convoke the Convention at an early day,—certainly not later than November fourteenth. We trust the general commanding will see the importance of this step. The result will be most beneficial at home and abroad. Our creed is: An early Convention; a short session; a speedy state election; and Louisiana admitted to Congress February 1st, 1868.

City Park.

Last Sunday was desecrated by our city officials in a visit to the City Park, where they discussed a plan for making walks, digging ponds, laying stone-walls, building houses, &c., &c Now, we do not object to the improvement of the City Park; we think it is a disgrace to New Orleans not to have a park excelling in beauty any in the world; but we do most solemnly protest against our city officials appropriating God's holy day to the consideration of such business. These men should have been at home with their families, or down on their knees repenting of their personal and official sins of the past week, or in church, where a decent respect of the Sabbath might be evinced. If these City Fathers continue to disregard the simplest of the ten commandments—"Remember the Sabbath, to keep it holy"—God Almighty will smite them with the besom of destruction, and disregard them in the day of judgment.

Rev G. W. Honey, of Galveston, Texas, has been greatly afflicted in his family during the past summer. Duty called him to remain at his post, and like a faithful minister of the Lord Jesus, he continued in Galveston during all the ravages of the yellow fever. He was untiring in his efforts to comfort the sick and console the dying; but amid his labors of love, death entered his own family. On the 10th of August, his youngest child, four years of age, died of the prevailing fever, and on the 29th of the same month he buried his oldest child, aged twelve years. Thus within twenty days two of his household were carried to the grave, and he left to mourn their absence, which knows no return. We deeply sympathize with our afflicted brother, and pray God that the consolations of the Lord to him may neither be small nor few. The tender lambs of his earthly fold are now in the bosom of the Great Shepherd, whose love for them brought Him to earth to suffer and die, that they might live with him in glory.

Complimentary.

The N. O. Times, the Devil's Daily, compliments us in the following extract, which appeared in last Monday's evening edition; and we beg to inform our cotemporary that when our "gall" is right for it, we may review the moral (immoral?) influence of the Times on our community, and we invite the editor to our matinée on that occasion:

The "Cardinal" is convalescent, and on Sunday mounted the stu—— (beg pardon, pulpit,) of his handsome new church up town. Yellow Jack seems to have seriously affected his gall, for his exhortation, though brief, was full of bitterness. The especial sufferers on this occasion were our state and city executives, who were denounced for lack of understanding and efficiency; points upon which our newly disfranchised and the doctor, strange to say, will possibly agree.

A staunch pillar of the establishment says that the "Cardinal's" weekly matinées throw those of the Academy entirely in the shade—that they are really the most comical and amusing entertainments of the season.

Madam Louise DeMortie, late matron of our Orphan's Home, died at the Home on the 9th inst. of yellow fever. Her funernal took place the following day at 4 P. M., and was largely attended. Among those present were the Board of Managers and many ladies who had been associated with the deceased in her earlier benevolent efforts. On the veranda and near the chamber of death, were grouped the orphans and attachés of the Home, who mourned the death of the matron. Rev. Dr. Newman and Rev. Mr. Turner officiated on the occasion; the latter offering prayer, and the former reading the scriptures and delivering a brief address.

Madam DeMortie deserves more than a passing notice. Born in Virginia, she was educated in Boston, where she received those benevolent impressions which were so conspicuously embodied in her after life. Coming from that great centre of New England ideas and sympathies—the city of more benevolent ideas and charitable donations than any other city on the globe—she entered upon her mission with a zeal and enthusiasm worthy of her whole object. In the prime of her womanhood—lady-like in her appearance, well educated, intelligent and interesting in conversation, a very good elocutionist, and an entertaining public reader, she stood at the head of the womanhood of her race. She was a living illustration of what thousands of her sisters might have been, had they been reared in a free state and blessed with the advantages of education.

To provide a home for colored orphans was her mission to New Orleans. The idea was new. There were asylums for white orphans, but only auction blocks for colored orphans; no one thought it their duty and privilege to watch over the childhood of "little niggers." But Madam DeMortie thought them worth an effort to save. And it was a Christ-like thought; such a thought as only now and then comes to a human soul. Naturally the inception of the project encountered difficulties, but with a zeal that never flagged; with a faith that did not fail, she persevered and attained her purpose. She at first gathered a handful of orphans into the Soulé mansion, where she remained till Andrew Johnson turned her and her orphans out to permit a rebel to come in; then, under the protection of the Freedmen's Bureau, the Asylum was tranferred to the west wing of the Marine Hospital. It was here she died. Although deficient in many things as a matron proper, yet she had few superiors as a foundress and general manager. She had will, intellect, a fixed purpose, and a rare power of persuasion, which enabled her to attain success where others would have failed. Happily for her memory and for the perpetuity and future welfare of the orphans, the Home is under the care of a board of managers, whose wise management is a pledge of its success. And it must be a joy to the friends of the dead and to all the friends of the institution to learn that the Home has been placed, by voluntary contributions, upon a safe financial basis. Recently a noble farm of eighteen hundred acres, on the banks of the Teche, has been purchased, whither the Asylum will be transferred before mid-winter, and where thousands of orphans may be reared under the nurturing care of our church, to go forth and bless society with their piety, industry, intelligence and love of liberty. Such is the lesson of the life and death of Madam Louise DeMortie.

TWO MONTHS FOR NOTHING!—Look at this Offer.—We have received the American Agriculturist for October. We wish that all our friends could see this paper. We know of no way in which so large an amount of truly valuable, interesting, and instructive reading matter could be given to a family at so small a price as the subscription to the Agriculturist. Each number contains 32 to 40 large quarto pages, and 30 to 50 fine engravings, many of them very costly and beautiful. Here, in this October number, we find, in addition to the great amount of valuable information, hints, suggestions, &c., more than 30 engravings, several of which are among the most expensive ever found in an illustrated journal. This number is of itself really worth a year's subscription. The cost of the American Agriculturist is only $1 50 for a year, in advance, or four copies for $5. The publishers offer that valuable journal FREE for the remaining two months of this year, to all new subscribers for 1868, (vol. 27,) who send in their subscriptions during this month of October. We advise all our readers to secure it on these terms. It will be sure to benefit all fathers and mothers, and interest and instruct the children..

Subscriptions should be sent to the publishers, Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, New York city.

Henry Clay Dean wrote to Horace Greeley, inviting a discussion of the national debt question from the stand-point of the Democratic doctrine of repudiation. In reply Mr. Greeley sent the filthy thing the following extinguisher:

Tribune office, New York, Sept. 8, 1867.

Mr. Dean—Sir: I have yours of the 20th ult. Should I ever consent to argue the propriety and policy of wholesale swindling, I shall take your proposal into consideration. I do not know where the cause of national villainy could find a fitter advocate than yourself.

Yours, HORACE GREELEY.

IDEAL PERFECTION.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

A good minister at his week evening lecture took for his text: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." He gave the views of two or three commentators, but did not agree with either of them, and said this text was only intended to convey the meaning of "ideal perfection," and to illustrate his point he brought up the painter, who, however he excelled, he never equaled his own judgment or taste, for his best picture was very imperfect; and so with the Scriptures, his finest model and best chiseling left some blemish or defect. This may be so, but we have seen artists who sometimes have satisfied themselves; yet the comparison hardly holds good upon this text, for man does fail, and may fail, but the work of God is perfect, and He no doubt pronounces "good" upon his work in the soul of man, as he did upon his work of creation. And that was where the reckoning of the minister failed;—it is God's work to justify the soul, and God's work to sanctify the soul, and therefore He makes the King's daughter all glorious within, He can present to Himself his church without spot or wrinkle. The great mistake that people make in speaking or thinking of this subject of holiness, is, that they attribute to man what is entirely the work of God,—He alone can purify the heart. He alone knows how to do the chiseling of discipline to perfect his image in the soul, that he may delight himself in the beauty of his own work.

We thought, as we listened, there was a great passing by of the cleansing blood of Jesus; and no mention was made of the union of the soul with Christ, by which we are enabled to do all things.

From the New Orleans Republican

THE CHARGE OF JUDGE THOMAS.

We published yesterday morning the charge of Judge Thomas to the grand jury. It is able, temperate, and impartial in its tone, recognizing, in a becoming spirit, the changes which have taken place in "the jurisprudence of our state;" and showing that the judge's mind does not travel in the muddy ruts of a superstitious conservatism, but on the level highroad of progress. His advice to the men of color now filling the position of jurymen for the first time was well-timed and judicious, while that portion of his charge which called their attention to the bloody "disturbances of July a year ago" exhibits a fearlessness in the performance of an unpopular duty worthy of the highest praise. We say this because it was undoubtedly the duty of the judge to bring these murderous deeds to the notice of the first grand jury convened since, from which an impartial examination can be expected. Yet there are duties the performance of which require that willingness to incur obliquy in a just cause which is called manliness, and we consider this an occasion for the exercise of that epitome of all virtues.

The events of that day, although a disgrace to this city, and although participated in and directed by its police and other officials, have never yet been examined by any competent authority. The congressional committee sent here to ascertain the truth in regard to them had no power to take steps toward the punishment of the guilty. That is the special business of the local authorities; and notwithstanding the delay which has unavoidably occurred in bringing the matter before a civil tribunal, there is not a just-minded man in this community, who thinks that the guilty parties are entitled to impunity. In speaking of this delay we of course allude to the civil authorities, for it is well known that an examination might have been held promptly before a military tribunal. The fact that no such examination ever took place is one of the mysteries of General Sheridan's administration, and will always be a blot on his fair fame.

One would think that every citizen of New Orleans must rejoice that this examination is at length to take place. The innocent never fear an impartial trial; and if injustice has been done, if those held responsible by the country at large for this wholesale homocide have been slandered, the cause of truth requires that their exculpation should be no longer postponed. One thing is certain; more than a hundred persons were killed on the occasion alluded to, and as they were not suicides, somebody must be guilty of murder. This being so, an examination is not only proper but imperatively necessary, and yet the Flunky Confederate condemns such an examination as an "attempt to revive the bitterness occasioned by that unfortunate conflict." Unfortunate indeed for the murdered and maimed victims. But the Flunky thinks the "matter has already been sufficiently ventilated." So think no doubt the guilty parties. The attempt to bring him to justice always rouses "bitterness" of feeling in the breast of a malefactor, and he is steadfastly opposed to all "ventilation" of the circumstances connected with his crime. So likewise is his attorney, and the Flunky being the voluntary vindicator of the assassins of Dostie, Loup, Henderson, Horton, Hurst, and all the rest who fell victims to a brutal violence incited by a still more brutal prejudice, naturally sympathizes with its self-adopted clients, and desires that that matter shall not be further "ventilated." We acquit the Flunky of all self-interest in the matter. We do not think it was personally engaged in the bloody scenes referred to; nor do we mean to intimate that it is inclined to homicide. Its defense of the New Orleans massacre is simply the dictate of the same flunkyish spirit which pervades its entire being. The men concerned in these murders were men in authority, "respectable" men, men belonging to "the ruling class," men before whom the Flunky has always been accustomed to grovel. Not presuming to raise its eyes above their boots, how could the poor flunky see that their hands were dripping with gore? It therefore holds them innocent, and even were it convinced that they had taken human life, would still hold them justified, for a flunky cannot but justify its master.

NEW ORLEANS AND RAILROADS.

As a sort of addenda to an editorial in the REPUBLICAN of yesterday on the Gulf ports and railroads, let a few more facts be given to show what New Orleans, and consequently Louisiana, has lost through lack of railroads—what she is still going to lose and what she has to gain by properly directed energy and effort in this direction.

Hitherto New Orleans has received the great bulk of the crops by river steamers of the most fertile portions of southwestern Arkansas and northwestern Louisiana, northeastern Texas, and of all that portion of Arkansas between Gaines' landing on the Mississippi west to the Ouachita at Camden and on to Red river. Last season the cotton poured into this city from those points by way of the Red, Ouachita, and Arkansas rivers in greater quantities than ever before the war even. This year will probably show similar results; but the succeeding year is likely to show a great change in this respect—not in the quantity of cotton and other crops raised—but in the direction which these products will take to reach a market. Look at it.

Arkansas is to-day the poorest state in country, though she possesses undeveloped the resources of wealth surpassed by few. Why? Arkansas is far behind every other state in the Union in respect to railroads. But she has bright prospects ahead. Both southern and northern capitalists, but principally the latter, wide awake on the railroad question, and who require no pounding on the head to convince them that a state's commercial advancement or decline is inversely in ratio of her railroads, have taken the matter seriously in hand in Arkansas. We have not space for details, but the operations going on will result in the building of the railroad from Memphis to Little Rock, bringing the latter city within seventy-three hours of New York by rail; also of the Cairo and Fulton railroad; and using the stem of the latter from Little Rock to Fulton, the continuation thereof to the western boundary of Arkansas, which must eventually and soon be carried through Texas and across Mexico to the Gulf of California. On that railroad must go north the entire cotton crop of that most fertile portion of southwestern Arkansas and northwestern Louisiana lying on each side of the Red river, above and below Fulton. It will also take to the Northern and Eastern markets the principal products of northeastern Texas, one of the richest sections of that great state, and for cattle growing unsurpassed by any country in the world. This must all be lost to New Orleans, unless her iron arms are extended into the same country via Shreveport, and by other directions.

Again, Arkansas is about having that old road completed on which millions were expended before the war—the Mississippi, Ouachita, and Red River railroad, began in 1852. The road traverses the richest part of Arkansas. From Camden to the Mississippi river is the finest cotton growing region perhaps in the world; near Camden are also to be found inexhaustible coal beds, a fact that may ultimately make that portion of the State the rival of others in manufacturing wealth. In the mountainous regions adjacent to this road are also rich lead, copper, and silver deposits.

When completed, will the cotton and other crops of that region follow the Mississippi river down from Gaines' landing to New Orleans, or will they not be in danger of continuing on by rail across Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia to the splendid harbor of Brunswick, Ga., on the Atlantic coast?

JOHN BROWN.—The rapid march of history in our land was never more signally illustrated that when the brokers of New York recently sang "Old John Brown" during their reception of Sheridan. It seems only a day or two since the gaunt gray-bearded martyr to an idea swung from a Virginia scaffold, while the learning, piety, and culture of the country united in applauding the execution. Yet since that time armies have trodden to the rhythm of his requiem, and the legend of his death has become the history of the nation.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

[Special Dispatches to the Republican.]

WASHINGTON, October 11, 1867.

The returns of the late elections have come in slowly. Johnson and his friends have kept up a regular jollification ever since Tuesday night in the foolish belief that the result of the elections is favorable to his policy and against congress.

The president admits the election of the Republican state tickets in Iowa and Ohio, and a Republican legislature in Pennsylvania, but derives great consolation from the triumph of the Democrats in minor matters.

The fact that there was no serious opposition to the local tickets in Lancaster, Allegheny, and other counties in Pennsylvania had the effect of diminishing the Republican vote very materially in that state.

Johnson does not hesitate to threaten resistance to any congressional action suspending him from office during the pendency of the impeachment charges; he even impugns the courage of congress, and says the result of the elections will put to rest all intentions of impeachment.

In view of the recent disclosures concerning the Maryland militia, the Grand Army of the Republic is undergoing a complete reorganization.

Cabinet changes are now freely spoken of even by the president's most intimate and prudent friends. The president says Stanton can never be restored to the war office.

PELICAN.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.]

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 12.—The application for pardon of R. M. T. Hunter was written soon after the close of the war. Its expressions of approval apply to Johnson's and not to the congressional plan of reconstruction.

Revenue receipts to-day $391,000. Receipts for the week $2,500,000. For the fiscal year to date $64,814,000.

General Schofield returns to Richmond to-morrow.

Franklin Pierce was serenaded at Concord, New Hampshire, on Wednesday night, and said: I warn you, my friends, to note the fact that these triumphs, whatever they may be, are no party triumphs. The people have risen in their majesty with a consciousness of their power, and disregarding party lines and party aspirations, have been silently considering what belongs to them, their children, and their country. I think the great battle has been fought and won. If the results are significant in nothing else they are in this, that the white race—our race—the German, Italian, French Irish, Scotch, and Anglo-Saxon people, are still to be the controlling power on this continent.

WASHINGTON, October 12.—The cotton claims of loyal southern owners, amounting to $120,000, awarded by the court of claims in June last, have been paid, less two and a-half per cent. The successful claimants are residents of Mobile, Charleston, and Atlanta. The court required absolute proof that the claimants never voluntarily aided rebellion.

Forney telegraphs from Philadelphia that Sharswood is elected by at least 600 majority.

Ohio politicians seem afraid to speak on the gubernatorial result in that state.

The heirs of the original owners of Harper's Ferry object to the sale ordered by congress. The original deed, executed to George Washington, stipulates that the property shall only be used by the United States.

1 P. M.—Nothing from Ohio. Nothing from Philadelphia to make Sharwood's election doubtful.

WASHINGTON, October 14.—The treasury department has advices of the death of D. B. Bonfoey, recently suspended from the collectorship of the fourth Texas district. Judge L. D. Evans, recently appointed collector ad interim, will succeed him.

A number of prominent Southern railroad men are here seeking an extension of the time for payments due the government for rolling stock.

A special dispatch claims Hayes' election as governor of Ohio by three thousand majority.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $447,000.

The commissioner of Indian affairs has advices favorable to peace with the Indians: they will all be represented at the grand council, and promise to send out no more war parties.

WASHINGTON, October 15.—The state department has advices from Malta, September 20, that cholera had appeared there.

A dispatch from Harrisburg says Sharswood's majority is 744, and that the Republicans have fifteen majority on joint ballot.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $231,000.

Postmaster General Randall has purchased a site for a new postoffice in Boston.

Beauregard had an interview with Grant to-day.

Generals Ord and Pope are expected here to-morrow.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 15, 1867.

The department is prepared to give five-twenty bonds of 1867 in exchange for seven and three-tenths notes, interest to be charged on the bonds and allowed on the notes up to the time of conversion. Notes to be forwarded to the assistant treasurer at New York or to the department here, at the risk and expense of the holders, the bonds to be returned at the risk and expense of the department.

HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary Treasury.

In conversation regarding Southern railroads, General Grant expressed himself to the effect that they have been managed with great energy, and that inability to pay their indebtedness to the government arises from causes beyond control of the managers. He favors an extension of time in all cases.

WASHINGTON, October 15.—There are 130 military and many treasury officers here and elsewhere awaiting the subsidence of the fever, to proceed to duty in the fifth military district.

The three per cent. certificates issued in redemption of compound interest notes can not be used as national bank reserve.

Mutilated national bank notes must be redeemed at the respective banks. The controller issues new notes only to the banks in packages of $500.

Resolutions have been introduced in the Tennessee legislature favoring Grant's nomination for the presidency, and the abolition of the cotton tax.

The Democrats gain three state senators and ten thousand votes in Iowa. The Republican majority is 20,000.

There will be no cabinet changes until after the New York election, unless the secretaries resign peremptorily, which is improbable.

WASHINGTON, October 16.—$24,069,000 in interest on five-twenties is due and payable on November 1st.

Revenue receipts to-day were $272,000.

Senator Nye will stump New York in behalf of the radicals.

Six hundred Brooklyn shop keepers are

Revenue decisions.—When a deed is made for real estate and sold for taxes after the time of redemption is past, it must contain a recital of the facts, and the form must be in accordance with the laws of the state in which the real estate is situated.

Sugar cane is a farm product but sugar is not. A person who manufactures sugar to an amount exceeding $1000 per annum pays a special tax, though the cane producing the sugar be made on his own farm.

The president has not ordered or requested the presence of district commanders here.

Hon. D. W. Voorhees and Hon. Thomas B. Florence were serenaded to-night, and addressed a large crowd.

The house committee to inquire into the affairs of Southern railroads, and to arrive at an equitable adjustment of railroad indebtedness to the government, consisting of J. W. McClurg, chairman, Ulysses Mercer, F. Sawyer, and General Washburn, accompanied by N. G. Ordway, sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives. S. D. Lloyd, messenger, and Captain F. P. Meigs, clerk, leave to-morrow for Richmond, where they will remain a couple of days, and go thence via Lynchburg and Knoxville to Atlanta, Chattanooga, and Nashville, or they may go from Richmond to Charleston and Savannah, and thence via Macon to Atlanta.

WASHINGTON, October 16.—Great activity prevails in the Toulon naval arsenal.

Garibaldi has issued another address urging the Italian nation to arm.

Mazzini has issued a manifesto urging the patriots of Rome to rise and proclaim a republic.

Skirmishing in the papal territory continues. Reports are conflicting, both sides claiming advantages. No very important conflict has occurred.

The New York Times concludes an editorial thus:

"We are inclined to think that the Northern states will not surrender their own rights quite so complacently as they have consented to the overthrow of those of the South."

From New York.

NEW YORK, October 14.—This evening's Commercial says the failure of Ralli & Co., brokers of London and Liverpool, with a branch here, following that of Campbell & Co., creates much uneasiness among foreign bankers. There is an utter want of confidence in Liverpool firms. It appears that many, to obviate the effects of open insolvency, have made private settlements with bankers on favorable terms, with the understanding that the banks should continue to support them. In this way the price of cotton has been supported. A further slight decline would bring down the whole cotton trade of Liverpool, and ruin the bankers connected with that interest.

A combination of capitalists have recently appropriated a million dollars as margin in the purchase of cotton; the whole of this margin, it is said, is wiped out.

NEW YORK, October 14.—Dr. S. L. Ives, formerly bishop of North Carolina, died, aged 71 years.

CABLE SUMMARY.—The mercantile house of T. J. Ralto has suspended.

Garibaldi has named his son Merioti generallissimo of the insurgents. It is reported that the insurgents were driven across the frontier by the papal forces, and compelled to surrender their forces to the Italians.

NEW YORK, October 15.—In the Jerome Park races the hurdle race was won by Julius with Tycoon second. Time 3:35½. In the Park handicap Moore was first and Enchantress second. Moore drove foul and the race was given to Enchantress. Time 2:12½.

A dispatch was received by Wm. P. Converse & Co. of this city, dated New Orleans, to-day, from J. F. Caldwell, secretary of the Howard association, saying: "Epidemic declining; please notify all parties making collections for us to stop; we have enough funds to carry us through."

NEW YORK, October 15.—The Tribune's special says the largest cotton claimant is a former New York bank president who went South at the beginning of the rebellion. He claims 900 bales of cotton captured by Sherman at Savannah which the treasury department refuses.

NEW YORK, October 16.—Kentucky will not commence his run against time until the track is better.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 11.—General Imboden, late of the confederate army, applied to-day to register under the president's amnesty proclamation, but was refused.

Particulars from Norfolk county show that a serious state of affairs exists among the negro squatters there. Besides resisting negro officers there, they have held meetings which they attended armed and at one of these meetings the chief speaker urged the idea that the negroes were more powerful than the whites in the south, and would hold the lands they were on at all hazards.

RICHMOND, October 12.—General Imboden will apply to the United States district court for a writ of mandamus to compel the registering officer to register his name. In case the court refuses to grant the writ he will appeal to the supreme court of the United States, and thus test the validity of the oath required by the reconstruction act and demonstrate what virtue there is in the pardon accorded by the president to the excluded classes.

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce held their first meeting this evening and organized.

The board of registration closed its books last evening. During the five days there were registered in this city 189 whites and 157 blacks, which leaves the black majority nearly the same as before.

The African church has been refused to the Republican mass nominating convention, and it will be held in Capitol square Monday. A meeting is being held now to make preparations for it. Hunnicutt and Underwood will doubtless be two of the five delegates nominated.

RICHMOND, October 14.—The city Republican convention met in Capitol square at twelve o'clock to-day, and was organized by the election of James Hayes (white) as president. The names of the candidates nominated at the meeting on Saturday night, J. W. Hunnicutt, Judge John C. Underwood, James Morrissey, (white,) and Lewis Lindsay and James Cox, (black), were then separately announced and voted upon. The result was their unanimous nomination as delegates to the constitutional convention. The meeting was the largest ever held in the square, and the greater portion of the colored population of the city were present. Establishments where large numbers of negroes were employed had to close for the day to give them an opportunity to attend.

There were fewer white people than usual present. It is said that a greater portion of the white people and moderate colored men are making other nominations, and that they will not support the Hunnicutt ticket. The ex-officers and soldiers party did not take any part in the convention, and will not vote the ticket nominated, but will form one of their own, thus splitting the party.

After the nominations were made, each candidate was called and signified his acceptance, except Underwood, who is absent from the city. The speeches were of a proscriptive order, Morrissey, an Irishman, declaring that he would vote in the convention to disfranchise every foreigner that aided the rebellion, while Hunnicutt favors not only disfranchising all that congress has disfranchised, but all ministers of the gospel and editors who ever advocated secession or rebellion.

It has been a gala day with the blacks. The Dispatch learns by special telegrams that Dr. Charles Irving, an old resident, and late a major in the first Virginia cavalry, has been nominated for the convention by the conservatives of Amelia county, and John C. Woodson and Jacob N. Leggett, prominent members of the bar, as conservatives in Rockingham county.

General Schofield returned yesterday. His visit to the capital will not change the plan of reconstruction in this state.

A card will be published in the morning by the moderate Republicans, cautioning parties against pledging themselves to the ticket nominated to-day, as intelligent and respectable candidates will be announced at once.

The conservatives intend holding meetings to organize and nominate tickets for the city and county this week.

A mass meeting of Republicans at Chester confirmed the nomination of Chas. H. Porter, J. F. Maddox, and John B. Carter for Powhatan and Chesterfield. Speeches were made by the candidates.

RICHMOND, October 15.—The committee of the Virginia and Tennessee railroad have returned from Washington. They had a satisfactory interview with General Grant Monday, and with General Schofield today. It is now certain that the election for president will take place at the adjourned meeting of the board. General Mahone will be chosen by acclamation. This gives him control of the line from Norfolk to Tennessee. Arrangements with the Tennessee roads for continuation have been perfected.

The interference on the part of the secretary with the election was not intended as a military measure, but was the result of the failure of the railroad company to comply with their contract in regard to payment for rolling stock.

RICHMOND, October 16.—The nominations of Marmaduke, Johnson, A. N. Sturdevant, Wm. Taylor, Thos. J. Evans, and A. H. Sands, give satisfaction to the conservatives, and the ticket will be well supported. The ticket of the moderate Republicans, with Dr. Sharp at the head and Fields Cook at the tail, the former a brother-in-law of General Grant and the latter a mulatto preacher, also meets with favor, but the conservative ticket spoils its effect. It is thought the best men from both may be taken to make a compromise.

The ladies of Oakwood Memorial association, now holding a bazaar to raise funds for the graves of confederate dead in that cemetery, are being very successful.

The state agricultural and pomological exhibition now being held, was crowded to-night with the first people of the city to hear General Wise make a powerful speech of two hours duration. He reviewed the the past, and advised the people to devote themselves to agriculture, and to labor generally to develop the resources of the state, and recover their material prosperity.

Dr. Alex. Sharp, brother-in-law of General Grant, and postmaster of this city will publish a card in to-morrow's Dispatch positively declining the nomination tendered by the moderate Republicans for the convention.

Colonel Chalfin, in a letter to the registrar of Culpepper county, explains that only persons who are entitled to register under the law are eligible to the convention as delegates. Any person who was a clerk of a county court before the war, and as such took an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and afterward engaged in rebellion, is not eligible to the convention.

From Galveston.

GALVESTON, October 13.—The steamer General Sedgewick was fallen in with, disabled, forty-five miles west of Ship Island shoals, and towed into this port by the steamship Harlan. The brig Galveston, yesterday, lay at anchor thirty-five miles west, with the loss of top-gallant masts and top-sails.

The brig Golden Lead at anchor off Pass Cavalla put to sea during the gale and afterward appeared off the bar safe.

The fever is severe at Victoria. Major Lathrop, commanding the post, died of it on the 9th instant. Eleven others have died.

GALVESTON, October 14.—Only two new cases of yellow fever and four interments during the last forty-eight hours.

Nine deaths are reported at Liberty, and five at Moss Bluff, on the Trinity, from yellow fever.

Capt. W. R. Tucker and four men of the Tuxpau schooner Novel have been missing hence since the 20th ult. It is supposed that they are all lost.

GALVESTON, October 16.—Joseph H. Cherry, an engineer of the Morgan line of steamships, is among the deaths from yellow fever; also William Kinkead, of Decatur, Illinois.

The brig Galveston from Boston will be in to-day all right with the exception of the loss of her light spars and sails.

The steamer General Sedgwick is discharging her cargo.

Mr. Hunt reports all right thus far.

General Reynolds has ordered the removal of headquarters to Austin.

From South Carolina.

CHARLESTON, October 16.—Judge Bryan of the United States Court, in a case to-day, testing the validity of the panel of a jury drawn from the voters and tax-payers irrespective of color, decided that although the act of congress of 1864, required the jurors to be drawn as prescribed by the legislatures of each respective state, yet, that this must be construed in reference to the changes created by the war.

He held that congress, as now constituted, was the legal congress of the whole country, and that the reconstruction law of congress conferring suffrage upon the negro was valid and was the provisional constitution and law of the state. He held that President Johnson had no power to restore any state to the Union.

He held there was no legal government or state constitution in South Carolina, and that under the existing provisional government the reconstruction acts of congress were the supreme law and the constitution of the state.

From Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, October 14.—The Morning Post has a special Washington dispatch which says:

Letters have been received here from Traddeus Stevens, in which he declares his intention to urge upon congress as soon as it meets in November two great measures essential to the safety of the country. The first is a general impeachment law, defining offenses upon which an officer may be impeached, and expressly declaring that no officer shall continue to exercise the powers of his office during his trial.

The second law which Mr. Stevens intends to urge, will provide that under the authority of the constitution and upon the principles of the declaration of independence, no state shall have power to prohibit citizens of the United States, whatever their race, color, or religion, from voting for president or congressmen. This law will establish universal suffrage throughout the Union.

Leading Republicans affirm that Mr. Stevens will be sustained by congress.

PHILADELPHIA, October 15.—This evening a meeting of officers and men who were in Farragut's squadron at the capture of New Orleans was held, to organize a systematic effort to obtain the prize money claimed to be due them for captures at that place. There was a large attendance, and a determination was manifested to press their claims on congress. A letter was read from Butler in reference to his bill before congress to authorize the payment of said prize money.

From Havana.

HAVANA, October 15.—Arrived, steamer Raleigh.

Porto Rico finances deplorable. Flour abundant. Steamer Isabel sailed for Cadiz for more troops. Everything appears quiet at St. Domingo. Laguyra insurgents nearly annihilated.

New duties on coffee 40, and on cocoa 60 per cent.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 11.—Twenty-nine counties thus far heard from give a Republican majority of over 14,000. The remaining counties will increase it to 15,000.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, October 13.—Further corrections add a few hundred to the majority claimed by the Republicans for Hayes.

CASTINE, Maine, October 13.—A fishing vessel belonging here was wrecked off Newfoundland and seventeen men drowned, nine of whom leave families.

MEMPHIS, October 14.—The board of health declare yellow fever epidemic here.

MEMPHIS, October 15.—Fever abating, and the excitement subsiding; twenty-four new cases and seven deaths at noon today.

CANTON, Ohio, October 14.—On Sunday, in the German Reformed church, a man, recently discharged from the penitentiary, approached his wife who was divorced since his incarceration and demanded a kiss, which the young woman was in the act of giving him, when he plunged a butcher knife into her eleven times and fled. He was captured and with difficulty saved from summary execution.

LOUISVILLE, October 15.—There were two races over the Woodlawn course today. The first, Jockey club purse $600, three mile heats, was won by Lee Paul. Time, 5:39¾, 5:39¾, 5:46¼. Grant was second, Broad's chestnut filly third, and Bayswater and Cooper distanced in the first heat. The second race, mile heats, was won by Loudon, with Counterproof second and Tom Porter third. Time, 1:47½, 1:47¼.

BALTIMORE, October 16.—Judge Chase has delivered a decision releasing the colored apprentice held under the state law.

RALEIGH, October 16.—Strenuous efforts are being made by influential leading men to revive the old Democratic party for the purpose of co-operating with the Northern Democrats to defeat the Radicals. Some of our most prominent men are the moving spirits in the effort. From all appearances the move bids fair to succeed. All elements of the conservative party rejoice at the triumphs of the Democrats in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

ST. LOUIS, October 16.—Resolutions were adopted by the Merchants' exchange yesterday to the effect that hereafter all sales on 'change shall be for cash on delivery.

Foreign News.

FLORENCE, October 15.—The revolutionary bands which entered the papal states at different points on the eastern and southern frontier, have concentrated at Frosinore under Alenotti Garibaldi in accordance with General Garibaldi's directions.

FLORENCE, October 15, Evening.—Exciting news from the south has just been received. A battle has been fought near Arcola, in the province of Frosinore, between the Garibaldi volunteers and the Pontifical troops.

A strong detachment of papal zouaves was sent from Rome during the latter part of last week to prevent the junction of the insurgent bands in Frosinore with a party under Alenotti Garibaldi, which was reported to be in that province.

They were unsuccessful in this object and were obliged to meet the united forces of the insurgents under Alenotti Garibaldi in person. A desperate fight took place outside the town of Verona. The Papal zouaves were badly beaten, losing heavily in killed and wounded. The Garibaldians lost five killed and fifteen wounded. No report of numbers engaged on either side.

PARIS, October 15.—It is reported that if the condition of affairs around Rome should become critical the pope will take refuge in Bavaria, where he has been offered an asylum.

LONDON, October 16, Noon.—The Mace-Baldwin fight has been indefinitely postponed on account of the arrest of Mace.

LONDON, October 16.—A wild rumor is afloat that the Fenians are planning an attempt to seize the Queen at Balmoral. The household guard has been doubled.

FLORENCE, October 16.—The Papal troops are falling back on Rome.

PARIS, October 16.—It is reported that Spain has offered Napoleon assistance in sustaining the temporal power of the Pope.

Napoleon and Eugenie have arrived at St. Cloud.

LONDON, October 16.—The Fenian alarm is spreading. The government receives many dispatches announcing the possible plans of the brotherhood. Troops and gunboats have been sent to Ireland. The entire western coast is guarded.

The press of Italy, almost without exception, favor the seizure of Rome by the Italian government. The strength of the party of action increases hourly. The recent successes give them new courage. Sharp fights have occurred near Farnese, and other points in Viterbo, in all of which the insurgents have been successful. The pope has called an immediate meeting of the cardinals to consider the situation.

CABLE SUMMARY—Three ironclads have been sent to the Irish coast.

Napoleon complains of Austrian's delay in reorganizing his army.

The Garibaldians are entrenched at various points in Viterbo. Their plan is to draw out the garrison of Rome when the home insurgents are to rise.

Napoleon and the king of Prussia will meet soon at Baden.

Financial Matters in New York.

NEW YORK, October 14.—Money active, closed at 7 on calls. Gold closed strong at 144¼. A very uneasy feeling prevails regarding the Liverpool cotton market. Exchange is heavy at 9 to 9½. Governments dull and heavy. Balance in the Sub-Treasury, $109,719,000. Liabilities of Ralli, Campbell & Son, is estimated at two millions.

THE OHIO RIVER BRIDGE AT LOUISVILLE. This magnificent structure is now being rapidly pushed forward by the energetic contractors. The piers are beginning to assume huge proportions, and of the twenty-four to be erected of heavy stone masonry, ten or twelve are now above the height necessary to prevent interruption by any ordinary stage of the river. If the present favorable season continues for a month longer, eighteen or twenty of the piers will be so far advanced as to insure rapid progress in future. The bridge will be about one mile long, built entirely of heavy stone masonry, on a solid rock foundation, with a superstructure of iron, and will be so constructed as to accommodate a railroad track in the centre, a carriage way on each side of this track, and a footway on each side of the carriage track. When completed it will be a grand triumph of scientific skill. It will unite Louisville, New Albany, and Jeffersonville.—Louisville Courier.

MILITARY.—The military commander of the district of Louisiana in special orders directs: Brevet Colonel A. D. Nelson, major first U. S. Infantry, having reported for duty at these headquarters, he is hereby assigned to the temporary command of the post of New Orleans, La., during the illness of Brevet Major General Frank Wheaton, lieutenant colonel thirty-ninth U. S. infantry.

Lieutenant Colonel W. H. Wood, commanding post of Jackson barracks, La., will detail one company of the first U. S. infantry to report to Brevet Colonel A. D. Nelson, major first U. S. infantry, commanding post of New Orleans, La.

The Epidemic in Texas.

In Galveston and Houston the severity of the epidemic is abating. The Galveston Bulletin has reports from Hempstead to the evening of the 5th instant, from which we quote:

The fever fluctuates, but is steadily going down—either from want of material or better management. The panic has disappeared, and confidence and cheerfulness are again restored. One of Hempstead's best citizens, Mr. W. B. Young, has recovered. Mr. Young has rendered great service to the sick; he has dispensed from his drug store (the only one open in the town) over three thousand dollars worth of medicines without any hope of a return. Mr. Ahrenbeck, the mayor, deserves to be mentioned for his many acts of kindness and material aid to the sick.

The same paper has a letter from La Grange containing this paragraph:

The people of La Grange are almost without the necessaries of life. The planters in the country maintain a strict quarantine with the people of this town, and it is almost an impossibility to get any eatables, not even beef. A Bastrop merchant sent a load of flour to within one mile and a half of La Grange and only charged eleven dollars in specie per sack of one hundred pounds. The late Judge Shropshire's family are improving rapidly. Dr. Wilkinson is down with fever, but expected to recover. W. G. Webb and family are now convalescent. Mr. Webb lost his oldest son, Willie, by the epidemic.

A Mixed School Excitement.

The editor of the Anglaize, Ohio, Democrat got excited over a muss in the "village school," and made the following tremendous effort for the "Wapakoneta children:"

Monday morning of last week the fall term of our union school commenced its session, and the new fanatics of this place improved the opportunity of carrying out their devilish doctrine of negro equality by running into the school every woolly headed nigger they could find in the neighborhood.

The programme was to seat them in the same seat, have them in the same classes, and put them on an equality with the white children. At the opening of the school they were scattered around in every department of our school. This was more than Wapakoneta children have been educated to, and there was a breeze raised at once, and our excellent board was immediately called. The president of the board, after seeing the state of affairs, called on the parents of the negro children, and requested them to keep them out of school until arrangements could be made for a school for their especial benefit. They at first agreed to this, but after a consultation with several white niggers, set upon the board and swore they knew their rights and were determined to stand up to them and keep their children in the school.

The board then met and passed an order ousting the darkies. Therenpon a howl went up from the white and black niggers of our town. Our school board was threatened with prosecution under the civil rights bill, fine, imprisonment, etc. Our school board are of good material and stood manfully up to the work. They are determined that our children shall not be compelled to sit side by side with the negro population. They are anxious and willing that the negro children shall have an education, and therefore propose to give them their share of public money, and if enough can be gathered together to start a school to give them an education. All honor to our school board.

The Internal Revenue System.

We now pay taxes, internal and external, on sixteen thousand different articles. We might raise all the revenue the government requires, for every purpose, from less than one hundred. Mr. Atkinson, of Boston, has shown that we can raise by tax and tariff on the following few articles a sum very nearly equal to the whole amount required; and it is evident that this list needs only a few additions to give us the whole amount:

INTERNAL REVENUE.
(Actual.)

Cigars and cheroots	$ 3,476,237
Snuff	698,174
Tobacco, manufactured	12,339,922
Distilled spirits	28,198,578
Fermented liquors	5,115,140
Sugar, raw	567,531
Sugar, refined	2,337,405
Gross receipts	11,262,439
Sales, auction, brokers, and gold	4,092,283
Licenses	18,638,098
Legacies and successions	1,170,979
Banks and insurance companies	12,109,420
Stamps	15,044,373
Incomes, assessed upon an aggregate of $872,871,489	61,071,932
Total	$176,432,502

REVENUE FROM CUSTOMS.
(Estimated.)

Spirits and wines, including malt liquors	$ 7,000,000
Coffee, tea, chocolate, cocoa, chicory, etc	18,000,000
Spices, all enumerated	2,000,000
Sugar, molasses, and syrup	32,000,000
Rice	1,849,840
Tobacco, and manufactures of	5,000,000
Silk, manufactures of	16,150,160
Total	$82,000,000

That is to say, we could abolish almost the whole of the costly and burdensome internal revenue system, and the greater part of the tariff, and thus at once relieve industry, cheapen prices, re-establish many industries which have been killed by the tariff, give prosperity and happiness to many millions of our laboring people, and do all that without in the least hazarding our revenue.

The Ualty of the People.

Politicians and demagogues who imagine that the temporary triumph of this or that party in purely local elections, and with reference to purely local issues, indicate a change of public sentiment favorable to Andrew Johnson's policy, peace Democrats and the traitors in spirit and deed at the South, will speedily discover their error if matters are pushed to extremes by the obstinate and blundering executive, aided and comforted and advised by his unprincipled clique. That rebellion shall not be made honorable; that treason shall be regarded as odious; that the elements and influences that sought the destruction of the Union shall have no return to power, is just as much the fixed determination of the majority in the loyal states as it ever was. Not only its existence but its overwhelming and crushing force, would be discovered should any serious attempt from any quarter be made to overrule or thwart it.

During the four years of the war and since the war it has been made apparent that the people understand that whatever may be its mistakes, congress represents them on the vital question concerning the preservation and character of our nationality. The same northern unanimity which surprised the chivalry, deluded by their stupid or false sympathizers in the North when they inaugurated the bloody conflict, will be found all ready and all armed, if need be, to resist any and every attempt to give over the federal government, in any degree, to the control or management of those who plotted for its destruction. A government of the people, for the people, and by the people, will be taken care of by the people against all its enemies, whether heretofore known as conspirators or now known as recreants and apostates.—Boston Transcript.

A New Steamer Experiment.

SOUTHAMPTON, October 7, Noon.—The steamship Bavaria, of the Hamburg American line, sailed from this port on Saturday last for New Orleans. The Teutonia will follow in about a month. These voyages are merely experimental. Should the scheme succeed the above named company will continue the service between Hamburg and New Orleans by way of Southampton.

Thirty-three Thousand Dollars for a Horse.

[From Wilkes' Spirit of the Times.]

The king of all the trotters, the fastest horse that ever appeared under the saddle, in harness or to wagon, is in Mr. Bonner's private stable in Westchester. He arrived on Wednesday with the friend and companion of his Long Island experiences and his vast journeys, Peter Conover. Peter had charge of Dexter at Hiram Woodruff's. He attended him in his winter quarters at Mr. Alley's, when he was the pet of Astoria. He went with him to the West with Trussel, came back with him to the East with Mr. Fawcett, went with him to the West once more, and has now accompanied him to the scene of his honorable retirement in Mr. Bonner's unparalleled establishment. Dexter, we are glad to say, is well. Mr. Bonner drove him on Friday on the road, and jogged him round Dubois' track a few times.

Perhaps this information will prove of interest to some who have been asking, "What will he do with him?" We have reason to believe that Dexter was Mr. Bonner's horse, in fact when Doble drove him in 2m. 17¼s. in harness at Buffalo. It is our impression that it will be some time before any other horse is driven as fast in a public race; and it will be no small reputation for Doble to enjoy, that he rode Dexter in his fastest heat under saddle, drove him in his fastest heat to wagon, drove him in his fastest heat to harness, and that these heats were the fastest, respectively, that have ever been made.

There have been some disputes, some bets, and many letters to us in regard to the price Mr. Bonner paid for Dexter. To settle this matter beyond further cavil or dispute, we give a copy of the receipt given to Mr. Bonner by Mr. Fawcett. It is as follows:

"Received, New York, September 8, 1867, of Robert Bonner, Esq., thirty-three thousand dollars for the horse Dexter, sold by previous agreement, and this day delivered by me to him, and warranted sound.

A. F. FAWCETT."

Thirty-three thousand! Well, in our deliberate judgment, and we have thought over the subject well, Dexter was the cheapest horse at that money that ever was purchased. In estimating his value we must consider what he was worth to horsemen. He was the means of acquiring boundless fame and of earning money enough for the full enjoyment of it. We almost went down on our knees to three or four beseeching them to buy him when Trussell purchased him. At that time his fame was not assured, but we had full faith that he would beat the world. There was also at that time some doubts about his soundness. There are none now.

But the gentlemen and horsemen of this neighborhood weakly let him go, and he soon proved what his value was as a means of acquiring celebrity and making money. His earnings that year, clear of all expenses, amounted to $23,000. This year, up to the time of his delivery, he had earned $20,200. His owner received two-thirds of the last, clear of all expenses. It appears, then, that the net income derived from Dexter in about a year and a half was $37,000.

Now, we should like some of the fine old capitalists and cunning young financiers who think that Dexter was a dear horse, to take a slate and pencil and calculate whether a source of income amounting to more than $20,000 a year, and likely to endure for at least half a dozen years, was worth $33,000. Mr. Bonner wanted Dexter, and the worth of the horse to the man that had him is to be estimated in considering the price. The truth is that this horse occupied a position that no horse ever attained to before in regard to money value. To own the generality of trotting horses for public purposes is enough to break a bank. To own Dexter was to gain money enough to start one.

The Southern Micawbers.

WILMINGTON, N. C., October 5.—The whites here take but little interest in the local politics, but anxiously await the news from the northern elections.

Well, and what will it avail our Southern countrymen to wait? Suppose they receive intelligence to-morrow that Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and even Iowa have yielded to the reaction, and been borne back into the Democratic camp. Would such a result change in the least their status as regards reconstruction? Not in the least. The plan laid down by congress is being carried out, and there is no escape from it.

How foolish, then, for the Southern people to blindly close their eyes and think that they can avoid the inevitable, instead of boldly and bravely meeting the issue, dealing with affairs as they find them, and making the best of the situation. General Longstreet, Governor Brown, General Jeff. Thompson, General Mahone, Governor Parsons, Judge Warner, General Barringer, Judge Walker, General Chalmers, Judge Harris, and numerous others of their military and political leaders have clearly pointed out to them that the military bill embraces the best possible terms that will be accorded the vanquished by the victors, and strongly urged the wisdom of accepting them as such. Why will they not, consulting their own present and future welfare, heed these counsels and lay hold of the work of reconstruction instead of standing aloof to peruse Democratic returns, while the blacks go forward with the task in hand?—*N. A Pretty Foot.

What is prettier than a pretty foot? What more captivating than a dear little boot covering a high instep, and coming down neatly over the toes, with a bewitching tassel dangling at the top of the close locking. In nothing is aristocracy so marked as in the pedal extremity; the thin nostril, the long fingers, the narrow palm, are evidences of gentle blood, but far less so than the high instep and the hollow beneath, through which, as the high bred Arab says, a stream of water should be able to flow while the possesser is standing. The flat splay foot, on the contrary, as surely tells of want of pedigree as its misshappen excrescences, its corns, and bunions drive away affection. The horse shows the purity of extraction by clean limbs, neat pastern, and small hoof; and the same result is noticeable in more or less animals.

Man falls in love as readily with a seductive foot as with an attractive face; he finds in it a thousand expressive movements; its firm tread speaks of a decided character; its quick step denotes anger; its elasticity of motion assures him of liveliness and good humor; its hasty tread denotes impatience; its subtle glide signifies cunning; while the quiet but marked footfall guarantees him an affectionate disposition. The face often deceives with an alluring smile; it is taught or trained by design or habit; openness is guarded or confined; but the foot speaks its own language unrestrained and untutored, and the male sex owe a debt of gratitude to fashion for giving back honest feet to the future adorners of human existence.

TRADE IN NEW YORK.—Major Moore, of the San Antonio Express has been rumaging around the great dry goods establishments of New York. He writes that the sales of H. B. Claflin & Co., amounted last year to $88,000,000; those of A. T. Stewart to 75,000,000. The net profits of the latter were near two million dollars. Claflin & Co., employ five hundred and sixty clerks, porters, and detectives, and have their establishment under regular police regulations, and it is probably the greatest mercantile house in the world. One of their salesmen received last year twenty-two

The landlord of a prominent hotel in St. Paul received a letter informing him that he was probably one of the heirs to the estate of Lady Townly and others of the royal blood of England. The estate is valued at from forty to fifty million pounds sterling.

"What will you do when you get to heaven, if you are such a naughty boy?" asked a vinegar-faced nurse of a beautiful little child that was fulfilling his destiny by the commission of all sorts of innocent boyish pranks. "I'll look around and say boo!" was the characteristic reply.

The careful parents of a four-year old boy in Cleveland have indulged him in roving propensities by pinning a card to his back on which was written, "Johnny Cheesebro, City hotel—please return." The little fellow came back the other day with a leg off, having been run over by a street car.

A strange story is told about an egg merchant at one of the Paris markets. Having been indisposed for several days he had kept his warehouse at a high temperature at the recommendation of his doctor. A morning or two ago he was awoke by a strange noise, and jumping up he saw on the floor about one hundred and fifty little chickens, which had been hatched by the heat, while the floor was strewn with eggshells.

Seven hundred feet of the celebrated Whitlatch Union mines, Montana, have been sold to General Sol. Meredith, surveyor general of Montana, J. H. Hubbell of the Northwest fur company, and Messrs. Pinney & Trumbull, bankers. The sale also includes all the buildings upon the land and in Unionville, which were the private property of Mr. Whitlatch, as well as the quartz now on the surface. The consideration for this valuable piece of property was $250,000.

Daniel Webster once paid the following beautiful tribute to woman: "May it please your honors, there is nothing on this earth that can compare with the faithful attachment of a wife; no creature who for the object of her love is so indomitable, so persevering, so ready to suffer and to die. Under the most depressing circumstance, woman's weakness becomes mighty power, her timidity become fearless courage, all her shrinking and sinking passes away, and her spirit acquires the firmness of marble—adamantine firmness—when circumstances drive her to put forth all her energies under the inspiration of her affection.'

The Hon. Wm. Oiling the Sea.

An experienced sea-captain writes that he has been to sea for twenty-eight years, and during that time he saved the vessel under his command twice by "oiling the sea." He writes that "when the master of a ship cannot get out of a storm— that is, when a ship is disabled and he has to take the heft of the gale—if he has oil on board, start two or three gallons over the side of the ship. This will give the ship smooth water to the windward, and then the oil allowed to run drop by drop is all that is required, for as soon as the sea comes in contact with the oil it breaks, and the ship is in smooth water as long as the oil is allowed to run. In 1854, in the heaviest gale of wind I ever saw, I lost all my sails, then the rudder; and I know the vessel could not have ridden the sea for an hour if I had not had oil on board. Five gallons of oil lasted me fifty-six hours, and this saved the vessel, cargo, and lives on board. Let ships of heavy tonnage have two iron tanks of forty gallons each, one on each side, with faucet so arranged that the oil can be started at any time; small vessels, ten-gallon tanks, and all ship's boats tanks of five gallons each, well filled, so that in case the ship founder or burn, the boats will have oil to smooth the sea in case of a gale. With these tanks of oil on board of ships and a good man for master—one who knows the laws of storms and handles his ship so as to get it out of the centre of the storm, you will have no more foundering of good ships at sea, with the loss of many lives and millions of money."—*Scien. The Lion in His Old Age.

When a young lion reaches the age of two years, he is able to pull down a horse or an ox; and so he continues to grow and increase in strength till he reaches his eighth year, when his talons, teeth, and mane are perfect, and he grows no more. For twenty years after he arrives at maturity his talons and fangs show no signs of decay; but after that he gradually grows feeble, his teeth fail him, and he grows "cubbish." He is no longer a match for the tremendous buffalo; he prowls around the cattle krawls, and snatches a lamb or a kid, just as he did when he set out with his parents, nearly thirty years before. A woman or a child at night shares the same fate. His strength and sight now decline more and more, till the mighty lion grows lean and mangy, and crawls about from place to place, eating any offal he can pick up, and despising not even so small an animal as the field-mouse; and he starves and dies, or is fallen on and slaughtered by a few cowardly hyenas, or is discovered unable to move beneath a tree, and knocked on the head by some wandering Jew. —South African paper.

The Iron Bar.

Here is a good lesson from an iron bar. Read it, boys:

A bar of iron worth five dollars, worked into horseshoes, is worth $10 50; made into needles, it is worth $355; made into penknife blades, it is worth $3285; made into balance springs of watches, it is worth the enormous sum of $250,000.

What a drilling the poor bar must undergo to reach all that; but hammered and beaten and pounded and rolled and polished, how was its value increased! It might well have quivered and complained under the hard knocks it got; but were they not all necessary to draw out its fine qualities, and fit it for higher offices?

And so, my children, all the drilling and training which you are subject to in youth, and which often seem so hard to you, serve to bring out your nobler and finer qualities, and fit you for more responsible posts and greater usefulness in the world.

The Mother's Voice—How a Woman found her Long Lost Children.

Since the prevailing Indian troubles commenced an Indian camp was captured, together with a number of prisoners, including squaws, and some half a dozen white captives, boys and girls, from five to twelve years of age. Word was sent throughout the country inviting those who had lost children to come to the camp and identify, if possible, their children, as none of them could give any account who their parents were, or where they were taken from, so young were they when taken captive by the Indians. Numbers went to the camp—many more than there were children—and, of course, many returned with heavy hearts at being unable to find their lost ones.

Among the number who went hundreds of miles to the camp was a mother who lost two children—a boy and a girl, one three and the other five years of age—years ago. Efforts were made to persuade her not to go, and so long a time had elapsed it was certain she could not identify her children, even if they stood before her. But she could not rest—she must go, and go she did.

On arriving at the encampment she found the captives ranged in a line for inspection. She looked at them first from a distance—her anxious heart throbbing in her bosom But she did not see her children—at least she saw nothing in the group that bore the slightest resemblance to her baby boy and girl as they looked when playing about her door step. She drew nearer and peered deep into the eyes of each, who only returned her look with a stony gaze, yet anxious one—they, too, hoping to see something in her that would tell them she was their mother. She looked long and steadily at them, as her heart began to sink and grow heavy in her bosom.

At last, with tears and sobs, she withdrew, and when some paces off she stopped and turned about quickly, as apparently a thought had occurred to her. Drying her eyes, she broke forth in a sweet hpmn she had wont to sing to her children as a lullaby. Scarcely a line had been uttered when two of the captives, a boy and a girl, rushed from the line, exclaiming "Mamma, mamma!" The mother went home perfectly satisfied that she had found her long lost children.

FLIRTS.

A Good Deal of Light on the Subj; From One Who Knows.

[New York Correspondence Chicago Tribune.]

I have met a woman of the world here who has been married thirty years, and who told me that she was so much of a born flirt that it was with difficulty she resisted the temptation to coquette even now with men much older than herself. She said: Every girl of imagination and sensibility will flirt at the first opportunity. Her doing so is a favorable sign. Men don't like one of our sex when they think she won't flirt. Tell them Virginia, or Harriet, or Delia is a desperate coquette, and they want to make her acquaintance at once. They are already prejudiced in her favor, and she has decided advantage from her reputation.

"I don't think I was ever very handsome or particularly clever (I suppose she wanted me to contradict her, though I did not), but I knew I was attractive to men. They really annoyed me with their attentions and admiration. They were always falling in love without provocation or encouragement; and I was actually obliged at last to wed poor Mr. Simpson (Mr. S. died five years ago from too much Delmonico—in plain parlance, from gout in the stomach) to rid myself of the importunity of suitors and ever-recurring declarations.

"The secret of my interest—my admirers called fascinating—was my flirtation. I was known everywhere as a flirt, and men of vanity who had been successful with our sex came to conquer me only to be conquered. How do you think I won them?"

"I have no idea, madam."

"Would you like to know?"

"Feminine confessions are always of interest. When I was a priest, a century or two ago, that part of my sacred life was always welcome."

"Well, then, I made men love me by inducing them to believe they were lovable. Some of them were as uninteresting as ichneumons; and still they left me with the impression they were the most charming creatures in the world."

"I thought you said they became enamored so of you because you were a flirt?"

"So they did; but I was able to be a flirt only because I flattered everybody that came near me, and did it so ingeniously and delicately that they never dreamed I was saying anything I didn't entirely believe."

"Why, madam, it is women who are won by flattery, not men. Don't you remember the words of the poet:

> 'The firmest purpose of a woman's heart
> To well-tim'd artful flattery must yield.'"

"Very well, indeed, sir. You men are convinced of the power of flattery upon us; but do not suspect us of using your weapon against yourselves. Hence your success. When we cover you with full praise, fancy is the bias of affection for you. Therefore you deem us persons of taste, discrimination, appreciation, and character, and all because we have told you what glorious fellows you are."

"Pshaw, you couldn't make men of sense believe such stuff. You have had an unfortunate experience of our sex. You appear to deem us all coxcombs or fools."

"Aren't all men a little foolish about women?"

"I hope not. Men who are foolish about your sex are the greatest simpletons in the world."

"That's a mistake, sir. I know better than you, for I have lived longer. I might be your mother. Men who are not foolish about women are foolish about much worse things. I imagine you have made our sex a study, and you haven't learned anything yet, believe me. I wanted to tell you what might benefit you. When you write another novel make the heroine not beautiful nor fascinating, but an adroit flatterer, and you will not need then to go out of probability to find your feminine wonder."

"Well, what does all this amount to, madame? What are your conclusions?

"Conclusions! The idea of asking a woman such a question! We don't have conclusions. You might as well look for a syllogism in a woman's heart."

"What do you desire to teach me from all this?"

"That men never understand women thoroughly, while women understand men by intuition; that we are conscious of all your deceit and art and flattery, while you never guess our thoughts or fathom our feelings."

"Anything more?"

"That you will write out, at your earliest opportunity, what I have said to you, for the enlightenment of stupid men, and the corroboration of my statements by my own sex."

"I will do so, madame, if you like. I intend to write a letter from this place. Shall I embody your illuminations?"

"Yes; for I think it high time men got some notion of the manner in which we rule them. Ha, ha! they flatter themselves they are our tyrants; but they are our willing slaves."

Employment of Females.

The editor of the Albany Knickerbocker is now in Europe. Writing from Cork, he states that females do the clerking in that city, whereupon he urges the following reasons why they should be employed in all our retail stores:

"Females may sport fifty dollar mantles, but they never go on fifty dollar 'busts.' Females never spend a whole week's wages on billiard tables. Girls never kick up a row, and get dragged to a station house. Fast horses they avoid, and roulette tables, and game cocks. Who ever saw a female hanging round a gambling table, or betting her last five dollars that she can tell where the 'little joker' is? Who ever saw a female clerk, after the store was shut, rambling up Broadway, 'raising thunder' and breaking things? Who ever saw a respectable girl knocking over dry goods boxes and standing 'M. P.'s' on their heads? No one; and yet respectable young men do these things nightly. When was a female clerk ever arrested for having a 'suspicious character' locked up in the store with her after midnight? In view of all these facts, is it any wonder that the merchants on this side run to female clerks?"

Fun in Animals.

Fun is by no means confined to man. It is frequently asserted that although naturalists have discovered and named the laughing jackass, the laughing hyena, the laughing cuckatoo, there is but one animal indulges in "what you might call a laugh," and that is our old friend the dog. The horse-laugh is a humbug; but the horse would laugh if he could, for he is not deficient in the sense of the humorous. We have known in our time a sly old horse which would slide up to a bystander and put his hoof on the unfortunate wight's foot in a manner which would not be soon forgotten. It was a common trick with him; but no professed practical joker could have done it with his sole in a more inadvertent manner.

The comedy of "The World a Mask" declares that "a horse is a gentleman;" and this may give us a key to the gravity of our Eclipses and Dobbin, since a horse-laugh has long been regarded as anything but gentlemanly. Colonel O'Kelley's parrot would scream for the dog Rover until he obeyed her summons, and then frightened him away by yelling "Get out." Small birds chase each other about in play; but perhaps the conduct of the crane and the trumpeter is the most extraordinary. The latter stands on one leg, hops about in the most eccentric manner, and throws somersaults. All animals pretending violence in their play stop short of exercising it. The dog takes the greatest precaution not to injure by his bite, and the orang-outang, in wrestling with his keeper, pretends to throw him, and make feints of biting him.

Some animals carry out in their play the semblance of catching their prey; young cats, for instance, leap after every small and moving object, even to the leaves strewed by the autumn wind; they crouch and steal forward, ready for the spring, the body quivering, and the tail vibrating with emotion, they bound on the moving leaf, and again spring forward to another. Benger saw young jaguars and cougars playing with round substances, like kittens. Birds of the magpie kind are full of mischief. There is a story of a tame magpie that was seen in a garden gathering pebbles, and with much solemnity and a studied air buried them in a hole made to receive a post. After dropping each stone it cried "currack!" triumphantly, and set out for another. On examining the spot a poor toad was found in the hole, which the magpie was stoning for his amusement. There is fun in animals and birds. Indeed there is.

New Orleans Republican.

RUM CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., August 26, 1867.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

Latterly I have had an extensive view of this young but giant city of the Pacific, and the further my observations extend the greater my amazement. If I had not seen Chicago at various times during its youthful strides for greatness, it would be impossible for me to believe that only eighteen years ago but a few trading huts stood upon the present site of San Francisco. This is a fine example of what American industry and enterprise can accomplish when directed in the correct channel. In the plan and execution of all new cities there is undoubtedly a great advantage over the older ones, as the errors and imperfections which have been committed may be avoided. The structures of this city comprise the best modern improvements as to style and durability. Earth quakes occurring in this region occasionally compel the buildings to be constructed in the most substantial manner, and people have learned that with but a slight additional expense beauty may be added, which produces a cheerfulness among the inhabitants.

There are two large fine libraries here, with several thousand volumes, which are worthy of the city and indicative of the character of the inhabitants. This is the dullest season of the year as to business. About the latter part of September, the products of the country begin to flow in. Many of the miners then bring their hard earned savings to the city, being compelled to leave the mines in consequence of the rains which prevent further operations. The exports this year will far exceed the imports. The crops are fine—the wheat crop is the most notable; that of the present year will surpass any previous one—it being estimated at over 13,000,000 of bushels. Some place it as high as 15,000,000 of bushels. No comment is necessary as to the quality of flour from the wheat—it is already well-known in the great marts of the world.

There is a scarcity of farm hands or laborers. Men understanding farming can always obtain employment, and especially at this season, when the crops are being gathered. Wages are high—$30 to $40 per month and board. Within one day of this month thirty-one vessels, not including coasters, arrived in this port, it being the largest number for the same time on record. New vessels are already here for the Chinese and Japanese trade. This place seems to have all natural advantages for its prosperity.

California is not only rich in minerals, but also in vegetable products. Fruits that are grown in any part of the United States can be raised here. Considered as to her fruits, grains, minerals scenery, and climate, she can not be excelled by any other state in the Union.

San Francisco is built upon high hills of sand, rock, and clay, principally sand. Many men are employed in grading and leveling these hills, which are filled in the bay, thus producing more land for the city—a source of revenue as the batture land of New Orleans. Mr. Julius Ascher, and Otillie Genée, who so delighted the visitors of the National theatre in your city last winter, are playing here at the American theatre. Edwin Adams is at Maguire's Opera house, and has met with splendid success.

The Chinese population of this state is about 50,000. This end of the Pacific railroad has mostly Chinese labor. "John Chinaman" works cheaper and longer than the whites, which is the cause of much jealousy on the part of the mass of the whites. "John" is generally peaceable and dirty. In his temple of worship (or joss house, as the Americans call it) is to be found a wooden god. His theatre is too conglomerate for me to describe. One play occupies sometimes three or four months.

The divisions in the Republican party may cause them to lose the election in this state this fall. If so, it is to be hoped they may gain wisdom by defeat, and have no more splits. QUARTZ.

The Cable Company.

The New York Journal of Commerce is reading a severe lecture to the Atlantic cable company for their mismanagement, neglect of the public interests, etc. The editor says:

We have had some opportunities, in a close connection with financial and commercial affairs, to witness the gross mismanagement of ignorant and inefficient persons who have been placed in charge of important corporate interests; but from the days of the old United States bank until now, we have never seen such a wanton trifling with a valuable franchise as that which has been practiced by the managers of this cable company. Their persistent refusal to show even the most ordinary courtesy to the newspaper press has been a serious error, of which they will live to repent, unless they die young, but their treatment of the mercantile public has been so much worse than their course toward the press, that the latter, bad as it is, looks almost like exceptional favor.

Our table for months has been covered with communications and statements on this theme, but we need not repeat the items, for we do not know of any one in business here that has used the cable to any extent who has not had occasion to complain of its trickery and illiberality. One of the last items brought us was this: A leading house here addressed a message by the cable to a gentleman whose first name they gave as "Tomas." The message was refused by the cable experts, except at double the usual rates on the ground that this was an evasion, and that Tomas should be spelt Thomas.

A MAN SEPARATES FROM HIS WIFE TO MARRY A RICH WIDOW.—Last spring a prominent citizen of Grand Haven, Michigan, met with an accident which resulted in his death. His widow, in her season of mourning, kept herself very secluded, hardly receiving calls from her most intimate friends. Shortly after this death a concert troupe, managed by one Clement, came to Grand Haven, when Clement and his wife made the acquaintance of the widow, and the three became very intimate. After a short tour to other places the concert business was given up, and Grand Haven selected as the spot for the residence of the singers.

The summer passed away and Mr. and Mrs. Clement "quarreled" with each other. Mr. Clement grew quite attentive toward the widow. A separation was agreed upon between Mr. and Mrs. Clement. About the first of August last, Mr. and Mrs. Clement and the widow procoeded to Milwaukee, the latter drawing her money out of the bank and converting her prpoperty into money before starting, and taking with her about $60,000 in money, and a large share of it in gold. Arriving at Milwaukee Mrs. Clement took charge of a child belonging to the widow, and Mr. Clement took charge of the widow and married her.

Mrs. Clement then returned to Grand Haven, and has made application for a divorce from her husband, on the ground of desertion, and when this paper is secured she is to marry the son of the widow, aged about twenty years, who has considerable money and property in his own right. If there is any truth in this story, it is a well-laid scheme of the Clements to possess themselves of the money belonging to the widow and her son. Nothing has been heard of Mr. Clement and his new wife since their marriage, a little over a month ago.

A man being commiserated on account of his wife running away, said: "Don't pity me till she comes back."

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin: all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

CARLOTTA'S GARDEN.

BY EMMA MORTIMER BABSON.

See here, Callas, white as pure women,
  See these roses loll on their stems!
Yonder auriculas gold dusted velvet,
  The moss drifted bright with their petals like gems.

The sumptuous affluent blossoms of scarlet
  Thrill in the breeze as the zephyrs were chill,
But those saintly white lilies have, they turned to marble,
  That they in the wind stand so pallid and still!

O how they stand mutely as nuns doing penance,
  While the sprays of starred clematis rustle and reel,
Like statues of grief to the blue of the heavens
  They lift their white foreheads in voiceless appeal.

Out of the wide world one roving gold butterfly
  Flits to this garden which comes in his way,
Hovers in doubt at the lilies' fair faces,
  Then suddenly finds them too sad for his stay.

Out of this fragrance he hovers and hastens,
  Deserting the scarlet court beauties in bands,
Only a robin belate with her nesting
  Lingers all night near these bright haunted lands.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

GETHSEMANE.

That the Son of Man should have his house in a garden—that he should be forced to rest, and sleep, and pray on the hill-side, under the open canopy of heaven—must seem to many passing strange. It looks like a practical commentary on his own touching declaration: "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." May we not ask, however, if there was no house in Jerusalem that would shelter; no friend there that would welcome him; was not Bethany near? Was there not a home for him in the house of Martha? Why did he not go to Bethany? Those at all familiar with Eastern life will easily understand the whole matter. Nearly all the inhabitants of Palestine sleep during a great part of the year in the open air, on the house-top, or in a garden or field.

It is common for families to leave their houses in town or village early in the spring, and bivouac under a tree or rude arbor the whole summer.

Travelers, when about to spend a few days or weeks at a town or village, generally rent a garden and live there.

I have often done so myself, and have slept with the earth for a bed and the starry sky for a canopy. There is no rain or dew; the ground is dry, and the fresh, balmy air of the country is far preferable to the close, stifling atmosphere of an eastern city. Another thing must not be overlooked: as society is constituted in the East, one can have no privacy in a strange house, night or day. The one apartment in which all the males sit, sleep, and eat, is open to all comers. If we would meditate or pray, we must, like Peter, go to the house-top; or like Isaac, in the field; or like Jesus, on the mountain.

Our Lord desired a place where he could be alone with his disciples, and alone with his Father. And he chose the garden of Olivet. Most probably it belonged to some secret friend, who placed it at his disposal. Be this as it may, his followers knew it well. P.

Three Card Monte on Wall Street.

We yesterday published an interesting letter on the perils of Wall street. The instance given where a young business man from St. Louis tried to make a corner is only one of the numerous tricks which are played upon unsuspecting travelers who fancy that fortune awaits investments in the bubbles which glitter at the broker's touch. A man may try his hand among the old gray wolves at the stock board. They will welcome him. He may go among the cayotes at the gold room, and they will soon convince him by their howling that they have the choicest morsel to pick that can be found in all the range of speculative investments. In any event he will find that money is a curse to a greenhorn on Wall street. Some one will tell him to buy short; he does it and loses. He is very confidentially advised by a friend that he did wrong, but if he only buys short on Erie he will win heavily. Mistrusting the advice, he goes in for a rise, and, as intended by his friends, fails to make his pile. Taking or not taking it, he is sure to lose. It is a notorious fact that nearly all the stock brokers who have figured for fifteen or twenty years in the stock market have come out as poor as they commenced. In fact, Wall street is an extensive three card monte table. You are willing to bet your whole pile that you can tell where the right card is; you stake heavily; the cards are turned up and—"you've lost!"—N. Y. Herald.

Senator Savage, of Cambridge city, Ohio, formerly a Democrat, at a meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, declared himself a convert to Republicanism.

The Methodist Quarterly Review

The October number of the Quarterly Review, closing the forty-ninth volume, is before us, containing eight contributed articles.

The opening article is a translation by Dr. Hurst from the French, of an extract from the "Practical Observations on Preaching" of Athanase Coquerel, Sen. The author is one of the most brilliant preachers of France, and his views on pulpit eloquence are well worth reading

The second article is by Rev. M. C. Briggs, of San Francisco, entitled "Paul's Argument against Judaic Predestination." It is written in a very pleasing style. A sharp analysis of the apostle's argument is not attempted, but the writer gives us a very fair statement of his doctrine of universal love as against Jewish prejudice and Parisaic narrowness.

Rev. Bostwick Hawley, D.D., of Fort Plain, N. Y., gives an admirable paper on "Church Music." We have long known that he has "music in his soul;" but he shows himself familiar with its history from a period dating not long after "the morning stars sang together." After giving a sketch of the history of Church music, he discusses the duty of its thorough cultivation as a part of Divine worship, presenting reasons for it with a force and beauty which writers can command. He finds it difficult to ascertain from the Discipline who has "any supervision and authority" over this part of the service, and in particular by whom the chorister is to be chosen. Did not the changes of the rule made in 1856 and 1860 simply relieve the preacher of the duty of appointing chorister? But that the pastor has entire "supervision" over the public service of the sactuary seems too plain to require argument. Surely no choir or chorister can supersede him, and that not "on the principle that whatever the clergy have not given to the laity belongs of right to them," as Dr. Hawley suggests, but from the very nature of the case.

"The Sure Triumph of Christianity," by E. L. Fancher, Esq., is a brief but splendid production.—"Past victories are justly regarded as pledges of future success," is not only the opening sentence, but a synopsis of the article. The past is sketched, showing Christianity laying strong and deep its foundations, passing the scholastic trial and the era of the Reformation, escaping from the error of intelerance and persecution as means of its propagation, and gaining the victory of religious liberty and free political toleration. The future is portrayed soberly, but in glowing words and periods of rare power. The paper might well be read in every pulpit as a missionary lecture. To this sort of lay representation the most inveterate conservative ought to agree.

The next article, entitled "An Italian Reformer, Jerome Sovernarola," is written by Professor Lacroix, of the Ohio Wesleyan University. It is a good specimen of biographical writing. It presents an outline of the character of that great Italian, briefly but with a fullness which creates a feeling that we have a rounded, complete view of the reformer, more just than those which have until recently prevailed.

The paper on "Entire Sanctification," by Rev. L. R. Dunn, of Jersey City, very clearly and directly answere the question, "What is Entire Sanctification as taught by the Methodist Church?" The topic alone will cause it to be read, and none can fail to be pleased with its genial spirit its clear style, its general correctness, and its avoidance, after the manner of Wesley himself, of all attempt a philosophy.

We would not, as the writer tacitly does, admit that the grace of the Spirit in the regenerate are "perfect in kind." The very definition of entire sanctification as "pure love" implies a love that previous to that work is not pure or "perfect," that is, mixed. So Wesley says, "Till this universal change was wrought, all his holiness was mixed.....His humility was mixed with pride.....There is [now] no mixture of any contrary affections; all is peace and harmony." Works, vol. ii., p. 222. That great man did not early see the distinction between the two works. In 1729 religion was, in his view, perfection. Experience taught him his error; and as late as 1744, six years after his conversion, he had "an exceeding complex idea of sanctification, or a sanctified man."

"Esthetics in Collegiate Education," by Professor George F. Comfort of Alleghany College, is a brilliant paper demanding the attention of not only educators, but all who are interested in the cause of education. He very justly condemns the existing classification of American schools after the English fashion, and would adopt the German. Our system is defective, moreover, in the meanwhile our schools amply instruct in "the good" and "the true," they almost wholly ignore "the beautiful," thus neglecting the education of a portion of the mental faculties. Esthetics, including music, poetry, oratory, painting, sculpture, architecture, should certainly have a place with philosophy and science in the college curriculum, and it is shown here to be quite practicable. Professor Comfort writes earnestly, but he is no visionary. He would simply educate the whole man.

The eighth article is on "Our Ministry, by Rev. Samuel Dunn. It is designed to furnish a few "hints on preaching," some of which are quite valuable, though we doubt if some of his illustrations have a parallel in America except, perhaps, among the benighted Hardshell Baptists. Condénsation to one-half the space, and severe revision, would have been a vast improvement. Some broad statements that will hardly endure the testing might thus have been avoided, as well as a tautology and verboseness are absolutely tedious.

The Quarterly Book-Table presents fewer notices of new works than some previous numbers, but they seem unusually excellent, amounting in some cases to a very full review. Bernard's "Progress of Doctrine" and "Liber Liborum" deserve repeated perusals, though we wish that Dr. Whedon had been less full respecting the verifying faculty" claimed in the latter book. Further on, several volumes of "philosophy falsely so-called" have merited attention; and in notices of Mrs. Dall's "College, Market, and Court," and Dr. Porter's recent pamphlet, he "defines his position" on the vexed question of "woman's rights" and "lay representation," distinguished the latter from lay delegation, too distinctly to be misunderstood. As a last utterance, the editor reminds us of the next year as the semi-contennial of the Quarterly. We hope that the programme of the celebration will include the publication of a full index of the entire fifty volumes.—Christian Advocate.

Young America.

A few days since, a small, fine-looking, bright boy come into the cars and took a seat. Shortly after a minister came in and took a seat before and facing him, when the following conversation ensued:

"Well, my little lad, what is your name?" said the minister.

"My name is James Foot—what is your name?"

"William Hand," was the answer. "Where are you going?" asked the minister.

"To Rome, sir; and where are you going?" was the response of the boy.

The minister could do less than answer—"Camden."

"How old are you?" was the next question of the minister.

"Eight years," replied the boy. "How old are you, sir?"

The minister hesitated, but gave an answer.

"Are you alone?" was the next question of the minister.

"O no, sir," said the boy, pointing to the passengers, "I have plenty of company."

"But have you no friends on board to look after you?" asked the minister.

"No, sir," said the boy. "Have you?"

This was not answered, but followed by a little history.

"When I was a little boy," said the minister, "my parents would not allow me to go off the farm alone."

At this the boy, with an indescribable look, said, "It is different now."—Watertown (N. J.) Reformer.

Personal Religion.

What does it matter to you or to me what John Calvin said, or John Wesley either? They were glorious men, and did a world of good in their day, but instead of wishing to wear their shoes, let us wear our own, for they are more likely to fit our feet; and let us come to this Book, and find out what God would have us know, by the use of our own personal judgment. This will make men of us. To be fed on spoon-victuals forever will leave us nothing but babes, such as sects might delight in, but such as men should not desire to remain. "To the law and to the testimony" let us come. It is the best way of creating a christian unity; and, throwing aside the prejudice of birth, and all other prejudices, as far as we can, let us seek to believe the whole Gospel, for we are put in trust of it as such, and though we may, and must, I suppose, make some mistakes, yet we should come as nearly as we can to the holding of the whole counsel of God.—Spurgeon.

From the Cleveland Plaindealer, Oct. 3.

Perilous Balloon Voyage Across Lake Erie.

An exchange informs us that an æronaut named Thompson, who ascended recently from Toronto, descended safely near this city, the balloon having been taken by a strong upper current across the lakes. Much anxiety was felt in Toronto as to Thompson's fate before the telegram arrived announcing his safe landing. Mr. Thompson gives the following account of his adventure:

The balloon ascended at 4:40, and from the velocity the balloon was traveling at, I soon perceived it was foolish to try to descend. It soon became evident to me that landing in Canada was out of the question, and that all arrangements must be made to be driven across the lakes. The first thing that struck me was to drop the grapnel to the full extent, 120 feet. This acted as a guide to the distance the balloon might be kept above the surface of the water; it being now dark, and, by placing one hand on the rope, the effect of the grapnel striking the water was distinctly felt. With an open bag of ballast on my knee, every time the grapnel struck the water, a couple of handfuls of sand were thrown out—and to this plan alone I owe my own preservation and success.

The ballast taken was about three hundred and fifty pounds. For three hours that plan was carried out, and then came on one of the most drenching and merciless rains I have ever felt. I could not see fifteen feet before me, and the noise of the rain on the balloon and the water was such as to entirely unnerve me. My hands became numb and I was drenched to the skin. I now began to perceive my position more acutely, though I determined not to give up until all the ballast and moveables were gone. The rain was making the ballast heavier every moment, and the ballast was thrown out more freely, till about 10 o'clock, when the fatigue overcame me. I fell into a stupor for a few moments. By this time the balloon had descended to within six feet of the water, and instantly out went 28 feet of ballast. The effect of this was that the balloon rose to an altitude of a mile, entirely through the rain-clouds, and then the moon shone brilliantly, and in this position it remained about a quarter of an hour. The effect of the moon shining on the cloud beneath was such as any artist might be proud of. The shadow of the balloon was distinctly to be seen traveling over the rough and uneven clouds, giving the idea of a balloon race. Every thing now became calm. No longer the hum of the lake or the rain. All was still, but whether the storm still raged beneath was unknown. As the balloon descended, it was evident a change had come over the scene. The rain had ceased, and the appearance of everything was of the darkest hue; whether it was an under stratum of dark clouds could not be known. Suddenly a glimmer of light was seen for a moment; then, with anxious eyes cast down to perceive any object, at last small squares with darker margins were clearly visible. These proved to be the fields and hedges, and they appeared to vanish as quickly as objects passed when in an express train. A town was at last seen, and I heard the sound of musical iustrumeuts. I then called out to know where I was, but the reply was unintelligible. They, however, saw it was a balloon. About two miles further on, the grapnel caught in a large oak tree and held fast. This afterward proved to be a little village near Cleveland. I then called out lustily; the sounds of persons singing and playing music were heard. These proved to be four young men who had been at a ball. They were natives of Cleveland, and as they advanced nearer, my voice was heard. They at once set to work to pull the balloon out of the woods and convey it to a field, where it could be folded up. It was then 3 o'clock in the morning.

Herod in the Family.

BY HORACE GREELEY.

I presume half the good sermons ever yet preached might have had for their text, "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." In that foolish, blind presumption lurks the impulse to every wrong, every transgression. Men generally admit, in a listless, soulless way, that the universe, this world, and all who live in it, are the subjects of omniscient moral sway; but scarcely one in a dozen "in his heart" believes it. If all did believe it, how could there be hypocrites in the church, libertines by the family hearth, or villians anywhere? How could there ever be robbers in the mountain pass, wreckers on the perilous coast, or slavers on the stormy main, if men really and heartily believed in the existence and rule of an all-seeing, omnipotent God?

Every age, every nation develops some vast wickedness. Intemperance, lewdness, gambling, and a hundred other manifestations to man's proneness to evil, appear and disappear like physical epidemics; hardly is one eruption of evil crushed when another appears and begins to run its measured round. If I were called to say what crime is today most fearfully prevalent among us, I should indicate the destruction of unborn children.

I speak not here of the murder of innocents, the children of lust and sin, and whose destroyers have the wretched excuse of seeking to preclude disgrace and shame. Guilty as these unquestionably are, they are not so criminal in the sight of heaven as are the married pair who conspire to blast the germs of offspring in the mother's womb, and thwart the beneficent command to increase and multiply, given to the progenitors of our race. If there be a crime more dastardly and unnatural than all others, surely it is this.

Of course, excuses or apologies have been invented for this, as for other varieties of murder. The parents are too poor to rear more children on their scanty means; the mother's constitution is too feeble to endure the trials of child-bearing, nursing, &c. The first of these, if valid at all, will justify the killing of the child born last March as well as that of the child to be born next November; the second is a direct impeachment of the Divine economy, and a proclamation of disbelief in the Divine assurance, "As thy day so shall thy strength be." In short, there is no palliation for any sort of child-murder which is not essentially atheistic—a repetition of what "the fool hath said in his heart."

It has for years been noted that our New England element is less prolific than formerly—that families of six to eight children are as infrequent as those of ten to twelve were two or three generations back. It is further noted that our immigrant population do not share in this sterility—that our Irish-born neighbors have more children to the family than their Yankee neighbors. I learn that the Roman Catholic priests are, to a considerable extent, to be credited with this disparity—that, having had their attention called to the diminution of births among us, they have discussed its reasons, and systematically applied themselves to guarding their flocks from the contagion. I believe it is generally, through the confessional and otherwise, enjoined on married Catholics that they, under no circumstances and on no pretext whatever, conspire against the lives of their unborn children.

Shall not Protestant pastors be inspired by this example? Their opportunities may be less direct and palpable, yet they are sufficient. Why should not every settled clergyman preach pointedly against the crime in question? Is any in doubt as to its existence? Let him confer with two or three popular physicians, and he will doubt no longer. Nay, he will be astonished by their testimony as to the extent, the magnitude of this offence against God and humanity, country and family.

What eminent physician will prepare a tract of sixteen, twenty-four, or thirty-two large, fair pages, setting forth, in convincing array the moral, physiological, and religious considerations which should secure a general avoidance and abhorrence of this species of infanticide?—N. Y. Independent.

Abolitionism has been killed so often that killing appears to agree with it. It was twice killed at Bull Run, once in the seven days battles, at the polls in '62, and at Chancellorsville in '63, and it is highly probable it will be all the healthier in '68 for its recent killing in '67.—Pittsburg Gazette.

Spurgeon's Lecture on 'Candles.'

A Liverpool paper says: As a very great amount of curiosity is manifested with respect to the lecture which this most celebrated preacher of the age will deliver tomorrow in the Philharmonic Hall, it may be interesting to lay before our readers a complete synopsis of that remarkable address which has attracted so much attention in London and other parts.

The importance of the candle as an illustration is proved by many references to Holy Scripture. This being done, the lecturer proceeds to show of what things the candle may be said to be emblematical.

1. Seven candles of different lengths illustrate the seven stages of human life, teach our mortality, and bid us "work while it is called to-day."

2. A candle-box full of candles represents many churches which are of no service to the age. As the candles are of no practical use till lighted, so churches are useless till heavenly fire lights them.

3. A number of the wax candles, not lighted, looking down with disdain upon a poor rushlight, which is lighted, and thereby doing more than all its fine neighbors.

4. An unlit candle, which, placed in candlesticks of all sorts, yet gives no light in any one of them, shows how men may lay the blame of their uselessness upon the position of life in which they are placed.

5. Trying to light a candle with an extinguisher upon it, well sets forth the ill effects of prejudice in preventing the reception of the truth.

6. A dark lantern represents those who do not benefit others, because they keep their light to themselves.

7. A candle protected from the wind in a lantern clear and bright, pictures the watchful providence of God over his creatures.

8. Represents a lantern with a pane out, showing thereby that men who trust to their own strength have an opening through which the wind of temptation can blow and extinguish their light.

9. A dirty, battered lantern, its filthiness rendered conspicuous by the light within, is an emblem of professed Christians, whose faults are noticed the more because of their profession.

10. Is a lantern with cracks in it, through which the light gleams brightly, illustrating the fact that very great gifts are often given to those who have very weak and frail bodies.

11. Candle under a bushel.

12. Candle under a bandbox, through which the flame burns its way—an emblem of the Christian's grace coming forth stronger in time of persecution.

13. One candle lighting another illustrates God's method of instrumentality.

14. A small taper lighting a great candlo shows how humble individuals are able often to influence greater, as John Owen was blessed by an unknown country preacher.

15. A candle blown out while an attempt is being made to light another, shows how acts of indiscreet zeal are very often checked.

16. The night light, which portrays those kind and generous women who do good to the sick and visit the homes of the poor.

17. A noble wax candle, over which a sheet of tin is held and made black by smoke, but being held by the side, acts a reflector, to increase its brightness, shows that we should not be constantly striving to pry out our neighbors' faults, but rather acting as reflectors to increase their splendor.

18. A candle of great thickness with a small wick is an emblem of a man with great talents and little zeal.

19. A thief in a candle is like a besetting sin.

20. A spitting candle is like a sour tempered, crochety man.

21. A candle in a common guard illustrates the need of watchfulness.

32. Snuffers—speak of the need to take away our "superfluity of naughtiness."

23. Small pieces of candles on the "save-all" shows how we should use all our talents for God.

24. Burning the candle at both ends sets forth the profligate's folly.

25. Steel filings dropped upon the flame of a candle produce sparklets; so afflictions are often made the means of a grander display of grace.

26. Two candles of different heights; the shorter one behind the longer casts a shadow; by putting the shorter candle in front you get the light of both. This shows how they of high degree should recognize the aid of the most lowly.

27. Light inside a lantern inscribed with the words, "Take a light," illustrates that those who have knowledge ought to communicate it.

28. A chandelier holding a great variety of lights, of various colors and sizes, illustrates the unity of the church in the midst of diversity.

These are the principal points on which the Rev. gentleman founds his very brilliant and powerful lecture. Such a variety of topics will form a subject of great interest.

Queen Victoria.

Grace Greenwood has been giving some very pleasant anecdotes of the English Queen under the title, "Inside the Palace." Among them is the following: One day, when the Queen was present in her carriage at a military review, the Princess Royal, then rather a willful girl of about thirteen, sitting on the front seat, seemed disposed to be rather familiar and coquettish with some young officers of the escort. Her Majesty gave several reproving looks, without avail—"winked at her, but she wouldn't stay winked." At length, in flirting her handkerchief over the side of the carriage, she dropped it—too evidently not accidentally. Instantly two or three young heroes sprang from their saddles to return it to her fair hand—but the awful voice of royalty stayed them. "Stop, gentlemen!" exclaimed the Queen—"leave it just where it lies. Now, my daughter, get down from the carriage and pick up your handkerchief." There was no help for it. The royal footman let down the steps for the little royal lady, who proceeded to lift from the dust the pretty piece of cambric and lace. She blushed a good deal, though she tossed her head saucily, and was doubtless angry enough, but the mortifying lesson may have nipped in the bud her first impulse toward coquetry. It was hard, but it was wholesome. How many American mothers would be equal to such a piece of Spartan discipline?

Chinese Medical Practice.

The physician approaches the sick room with courtesy and politeness, and having ascertained the nature of the disease of his patient, proceeds to prepare his prescription. Their prescriptions are generally vast compounds; they go on the supposition, very common with other practitioners, that it is best to give several remedies together, so that one or another of them will hit the case. Sometimes they compound as many as fifty to eighty different ingredients, and stew them all together and then administer them. They hardly ever prescribe less than fifteen or twenty simple medicines. The physician is not so much a prescriber as a seller of medicine. He tells his customers what he thinks best for them or their friends, but it is very frequently the case that they make the selection. For instance, he may make up a prescription of ten or thirty remedies to be compounded, when the question will arise, how much is this to cost? The physician makes as low an estimate as possible, and replies. The patient or friend may think it too high, that it cannot be afforded; and one article or another is thrown out, to reduce the cost—often the article most valuable to the patient. In some cases they cannot agree on a prescription or its price, and the patient deliberately gives himself up to die rather than pay the price demanded.

PRYOR'S LETTER.—Perhaps it would not be a great compliment to say that the letter of Roger A. Pryor is the most sensible political paper that he ever wrote; but it is much more than this; it is a sensible paper for anybody to write. He evidently comprehends the situation, and he frankly accepts it, with its logical consequences. He sees that the South went unwisely into a fight, and came out flogged, and he does not think it improves the case to act as though the defeat was a victory. He recommends a full recognition of the rights which the emancipated race have acquired, and such measures as shall fit them for their elevation in the political scale. And he strongly urges less talking and more working; less cultivation of politics, and more cultivation of the ground. Mr. Pryor has learned wisdom; we hope he will be able to teach it. But he has intractable pupils.—Providence Journal.

RHODE ISLAND AND OHIO.—The Herald fears that we haven't heard from Ohio. But we have, and we find that the Republican majority in that state considerably exceeds the entire Democratic vote of Rhode Island in 1866. Splendid capstone for a Democratic pyramid, that Ohio!—Providence Journal.

COTTON WAGONS.—Not a day passes now but what we see wagons pass through our streets loaded with bales of cotton of this year's crop. We hope soon to see business revive and money more plenty in town and country, as well as in our own pockets.—Vicksburg Republican.

In our editorial of last week the types made us say. "Like Cromwell's Ironsides and Washington's Continentals, the Republicans are the party of Louisiana." It should have been, "are the party of Providence.

Colored Schools.

The readers of the Advocate know that we are in favor of schools for ALL without respect to race or color; and they also have the good sense to understand the practical meaning of the old adage, "half a loaf is better than none." The present board of directors, which we regard as a legal one, has decided to form schools exclusively for the colored children, and we must abide its decision as the same is law. However much we may regret this, we must aquiesce for the present. We are aware that some of our friends counsel differently, and advise parents not to send their children to these "star" schools. We think this an error. Let us look at the facts. The present city council, which is sufficiently inactive for all practical purposes, failed to remove the "old board" in compliance with the due forms of law; in behalf of a new board which had been appointed, an appeal was made to Sheridan, but without effect, and the case has been carried into the courts, where it was decided against the new board. So soon as the decision was rendered, Mayor Heath promulgated the ordinance which provided $75,000 for the establishment of schools for the colored children of New Orleans. The responsibility of this state of things rests on Sheridan and the city council.

But the primary question is, shall the colored children be educated? This is the live, practical question. It makes but little difference to the colored child, whether he is educated beside a white child or a black child; education and not association is what he seeks. Nor is it material to the object, whether the school board is Union or disunion for the brief time-being, so long as its members faithfully discharge their duties; and although we have no sympathy for their political sentiments, yet we are happy to commend the present directors for their zeal and fidelity. We hold that it is a grander triumph of our advanced civilization to have a board of ex-secessionists and ex-slaveholders voluntarily and zealously labor for the education of colored children, than for the simon pure abolitionists. We care not who casts out the devils so that they are cast out. Let us not quarrel about the instruments which are lifting the pall of ignorance from minds too long neglected; rather let us rejoice that all are invited to enjoy the advantages of public education. And we are happy to know that the leading colored pastors and laymen of this city are in accord with our views; indeed some of them are opposed to the mixed schools, and the reasons they assign are plausible but we think them not logical. This however, is not true of those of our colored citizens who are persons of wealth and refinement, and who naturally enough consider their sons and daughters the equals of any other sons and daughters and their fit school companions. But rich themselves and able to educate their children in select schools, they can afford to wait till "equal rights" are accorded to all. But not so with the poor freedmen; they have not the means to school their children, and are wisely unwilling to allow them to run our streets in idleness and to grow up in ignorance. They consider "half a loaf is better than none." They are philosophers. Then encourage them to send their children to the public schools where they will have such competent teachers as Mrs. Richardson, Miss North, Miss Warner and many others, and where they will enjoy equal facilities with the white children for the culture of the minds which God has given them.

Conscience Fund.

Last week the telegraph from Washington announced the following:

A letter, received some time ago, at the treasury department, from Urbanna, Ohio, inclosing United States notes and bonds to the amount of $19,854, sent without explanation, has, after being held for information from the sender, been transferred to the treasury of the United States, and included in the conscience fund.

We are not yet informed how large the conscience fund is, but have good reason to believe it is already very large, and we are quite sure if we could have a revival of religion in New Orleans and get some of the Federal Officials converted, the fund would be immensely increased; indeed, if we could have a revival over the United States and quicken the consciences of shoddy contractors, cotton speculators, and officials from the highest down to the lowest revenue collector, we could pay off the national debt by the time all the "stolen property" had been returned. Now we think that if Butler and all others who are so anxious about the National debt, would first get converted and then pray for a mighty revival, the debt would be paid, their anxiety relieved—and something else—pockets—relieved. Who has charge of the conscience fund? That ought to be looked after at once, for all the official stealing done this side the grave is not done in New Orleans, New York, or Urbanna, Ohio.

Sheriff.

We have waited long and impatiently for the removal of Mr. Hays. Justice, patriotism, self-respect call for his removal. The people of the North wonder that he is retained, the power to remove is ample and unquestioned, and the Union men in this city have demanded and implored that another should take his place. Whose is the blame? Sheridan and Flanders, and Mower and Flanders. Sheridan's turning out of old Judge Abel, and of Mayor Monroe, and leaving Hays in is very much like those Jews who paid "tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and omitted the weightier matters of the law—judgment and justice." The retention of Mr. Hays is one of the mysteries of Sheridan's administration in this Department. All know how great is our admiration of the "Hero of the Shenandoah," but we never admired him for this omission. But he is gone and another fills his place. And what better is that other? Hays remains. Flanders smiles and Mower looks fierce. Speak to the Governor on the subject, and he will declare that the rebel should be turned out at once, but it won't do for it will turn something else out; call upon Mower, and he will look every "bit a soldier," brush the hair from his manly brow, and put down his foot, and slay the table, and say "it's right; he should be removed, but, but——" What? Somebody knows.

Model Artists.

The Republican, Times and others of the secular press have called the attention of the Mayor to the Model Artists, a lascivious exhibition of the female form. As no one would presume to suspect these journals of piety and religious fanaticism, their call to the city authorities is the louder and should be more earnestly heeded, for if the secular press is convinced that the exhibition is immoral and its influence baneful on the fathers, sons and brothers of our families there should be no waiting for further proof. We had hoped that New Orleans might be saved from the disgrace and corruption of model artists and concert saloons, for bad as this city is it is not the worst city in the world; but evil, like yellow fever, spreads, and to-day the young men, and some old men, of our community are to be found in a place of public amusement gazing on the forms of almost naked women who are lost to all sense of shame. The thought is horrid, and one can hardly believe that any portion of humanity has fallen so low. The object of these exhibitions is money, and those poor, fallen women are willing to unsex themselves, willing to make common what God had made holy, and willing to pollute the youth of our city, for money. The object and the effect are too palpable for argument or illustration, yet, Mr. Mayor and City Fathers, here is the fact and you are held responsible for the continuance of this digraceful exhibition. Will you put forth your power and crush this new fledged devil at once and close this new gateway to hell without delay? If you will not, we advise the wives, mothers and sisters of this city to rise and do it for you, and God aid them in the good work!

Persecution.

The Planters' Banner, of Franklin, St. Mary's Parish, has been abusing the Rev. R. R. Diossy, the presiding elder of the Opelusas district, in language too low to quote in the Advocate. We have carefully read the lengthy editorial strictures on our friend and brother, but failed to discover the provoking cause—except that Mr. Diossy is a friend to the black man. This is all. Dennett charges him with no crime; accuses him of no immorality; does not call him a disturber of the public peace, nor does he number him among the enemies of the white race. But Mr. Dennet hates any white man who honestly labors for the elevation of the colored people; this is the animus of his scurrilous editorials, and black men and loyal white men should so understand him. The very name of his paper is proof that he is the sycophant of capital and not the honest advocate of labor. His is the Planters' Banner. Why not the Laborers' Banner? This would not suit the political sentiments and race-prejudice of Mr. Dennett.

In persecuting Mr. Diossy the editor of the Banner is seeking to injure one of the purest men living; a gentleman who is devoting his time, talents, and means to do good unto ALL men, and one whom future generations will praise. Mr. Dennett cannot persecute such men with impunity, and we beg to inform him that we have heard his course towards Union men and women (Mrs Roberts and others) in Franklin, canvassed in circles where power resides, and we warn the editor of the Banner to be a little more cautious in the future. There are eyes upon him.

Mistakes of Educated Men.

We have received a small work with the above title from the publisher, J. C. Garrigan, No. 148 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, and of which John S. Hart, L. L. D., is the author. It will be found an interesting work to the young. As a proof of its merit, it is sufficient to say that it has passed through four editions. The price we are unable to give, but we judge about fifty or sixty cents. Send for a circular of their valuable works.

Charles Sumner and John Brown.

In the famous conversations with Sumner and Butler, published in the Boston Advertiser, there occurs this story. As the writer says, but few better subjects for an artist can be found. Did John Brown see in the bloody coat, as in a mirror, his own end? Not unlikely; for he had long before consecrated himself to a department of the great conflict that almost insured a violent death. And he was then engaged in plans that would even bring him face to face with the whole slave power of the nation. Read it, artist, and throw your whole soul into its immortal reproduction:

One of my first visits to Mr. Sumner at his Boston home was made in the company of John Brown, to whom I introduced him. He lay on his bed, still suffering acute pains and utterly prostrated from the effects of the blows of Brooks. John Brown had just come from Kansas, where two of his sons lay buried in bloody shrouds—victims, in their early manhood, to the same savage power which had stricken down the senator. The old man asked to see the coat which Mr. Sumner had worn when the attack on him was made. He rose, walked feebly across the room, took it from a wardrobe and handed it to John Brown.

And then I saw a historical picture which I would not willingly forget.

The senator, half bent over, supporting himself as he stood by holding on to the bedpost—John Brown holding up the bloody coat in his left hand, looking at it with compressed lips and austere brow; it needed only what one can see today—the aureola around the old man's head, the senator triumphant and still foremost in the good fight, the slave for whom they suffered, now free and a citizen—to start up in the backgrundo in order to translate it into a visible prophecy of the future of our America.

His Death-Bed.

Many professed skeptics have a hard struggle with conscience before they settle into unbelief. They put out the light of God in the soul before they can walk in darkness; and their inward agony is a foretaste of the woes of a second death. An exchange gives the following illustration:

Just over my room in the theological seminary roomed a poor skeptic who had ruined his soul by searching Gibbon, Hume, Struss and Renan, and writing for the Boston literary taste. He could confute the arguments of Butler, Edwards and Paley, but alas! he could not answer the stifled utterance of his ewn guilty conscience. All night long he walked to and fro, like a caged lion, fretting to break the life-bars, but he dared not. At last, fearing that he might make way with himself, I arose, dressed, and went up to comfort him once more. He paused as I entered, endeavored to conceal his haggard features, and pleaded ill-health for what could not be concealed—his inability to rest. Ah, I knew better, confronted him at once, and demanded to know where his philosophy had failed, and spoke the blessed name of Jesus of Nazareth whom he had mocked and denied, yea, crucified. He was in agony unutterable. I had torn off the thin mantle covering his humiliation, and he was unmanned, lost all his simulated skepticism, and made known to me at once the bare hypocrisy of his life. He believed just as the devils did, and trembled. Every night for years he sought God in prayer, but in vain. His boastful unbelief had frozen stark and stiff all his emotions. He could not pray, and so was his life a hell, a falsehood, and that of the infidel hypocrite. Next morning he moved away. Casually I met him, but he always avoided me, and seemed always to remember that night's confession. Within one year I was called at midnight to his dying-bed. He lay motionless when I entered. Not a muscle could he move, but his eye looked despair unutterable. I tried to pray; it was futile; I could get no faith. So he died, professing what thousands preach, atheism—and believed, nevertheless, but not unto salvation, but just enough to lose his soul.

Ordered to the Front.

Bishop Ames, at the Reunion of the Indiana Conferences, told this touching story:

A general in the late war told me not long since, that among the troops that were under his command was a youth, hardly more than fifteen years of age, who was taken violently sick; and the boys belonging to his company sympathized with him—his mother was a poor widow, living in southern Illinois—they saw the little fellow growing weaker and worse, and so they made up a purse and sent for his mother to come and see her soldier-boy die. She came He was fast sinking. The general sympathized with him and visited him frequently. He came in one morning—the mother was sitting by her son's bedside and singing—

Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are.

The general listened till she had finished, then came forward, took him by the hand, and said, "How are you this morning, John, my boy?" Said the dying boy, "Not very well, general—I am ordered to the front!" and to the front he went. Angels came down to conduct him to the realms of glory. When God is ready to order us to the front, I trust we will be, like the-soldier boy, ready to march at a moment's warning.

The Transgressor's Misery and the Lord's Mercy.

There may be pleasure in sin, but there is no happiness. There may be jollity, but no joy. There may be insensibility, but no peace.

Having been asked by a friend to visit a dying woman, whose continued evil habits had plunged her into a lamentable state of disease and poverty, I sought her abode with prayerful steps. Arriving at a dirty hovel, I knocked for admittance. An ill-favored female asked, "What is your business?" "I am come to see the invalid." "She is too ill to be seen, and this is not a fit place for such as you."

Unwilling to accept the refusal, I stepped forward, entered a dark chamber, and beheld a scene of squalid wretchedness. The once-admired beauty of the neighborhood rested uneasily upon a mattress, her luxuriant hair matted, her fine features unwashed, and her limbs scantily covered. Seeing me at her side, in a tone of defiance she spoke: "You well know what I have been; you now see what I have come to—a wreck, shunned and despised by every one. Do you come to tell me of slighted warnings? You cannot add to the misery that awaits me here and hereafter; all is dark and hopeless."

"Not so," I said, "while an Almighty Friend is willing and ready to save you."

"Your words of comfort are useless here; you do not know the sins I have committed; they are of the deepest dye."

"God knows them all, and yet he invites you to cast them on Jesus, who is willing at this moment to receive you, and to cleanse you from all your sins."

With a painful expression of countenance, upon which despair was strongly depicted, she vehemently exclaimed, "My soul is as black as hell."

A fearful fit of coughing checked her utterance. She was too much exhausted by this effort for further conversation. Many succeeding visits appeared equally unavailing. She refused to pray, saying, "It would be mockery to call on God, whose power I have so often defied." I knelt in prayer by her side, trusting that God in his infinite mercy was waiting to be gracious, and that his long suffering would lead her to repentance.

After many anxious days I observed a change in her countenance. A moistened eye, a softened voice, an attentive ear, encouraged me to ask her to pray with me, and then to use a short petition herself. She replied, "Can a holy God hear me? Is it possible I can be saved?"

"With God all things are possible," and his love is as great as his power. He gave his own Son to die for us, whose sufferings have procured pardon for the chief of sinners—for murderers, blasphemers, and adulterers. Christ died that the penitent thief and Mary Magdalen might rejoice forever-"

"Do you give me hope?"

"Jesusdoes, the friend of sinners. His word is truth; he cannot deny himself."

"How can my hard heart repent?"

I turned to Acts 31: Him hath God exalted with his righi hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins.

She clasped my hands, bowed her head, and murmured, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Then we wept and prayed together. I returned home praising God, who, in abounding grace, had taken away the stony heart, and given a heart of flesh."

The great enemy of her soul, who had so long held her in bondage, used to bring her past life in vivid colors before her mind, troubling her imagination with earthly things. "Oh!" she said, "that I could drive these worldly thoughts away, and be at peace." The Divine agency was needed; and in due time the Son of Righteousness shone over her with healing in his wings.

Increasing helplessness, and the want of proper nursing, suggested the propriety of removing her to an infirmary. Upon parting I recommended her to the Lord, besecching him to carry on and perfect the work of his salvation. Three weeks after her departure I received information from the chaplain of the institution that the subject of my solicitude had died truly penitent, clinging to her Saviour in her last moments.

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acception, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—Churchman's Penny Mag.

Negro Suffrage in Ohio.—The Columbus (Ohio) Journal, in an editorial on the late election in that state, says:

The fourth cause of the loss of the amendment and the legislature, was the loss of the powerful influence, in the state contest, of the Cincinnati Commercial and Gazette. We here assert, what is our candid opinion, that the Gazette and Commercial are among the best newspapers published in the United States; that notwithstanding the occasional hum-drum dreariness of the editorials of the former, and the illogical looseness and latitude of the views of the latter, they are conducted with more ability than any political journals east or west of New York. But unfortunately they had a "little political venture" of their own, a pocket contest, a private election; and they gave the amendment the go by, ignored taxation, ignored finance, and had no kind words of compliments for any candidate on the state ticket, unless it was General Hayes. So completely were they Cary-ed out of the state contest, that sober Republicans are prepared to swear that neither paper knew there was a state election this fall, at all. In both papers it was Cary in leaders, and Cary in locals, Cary in original articles, and Cary in borrowed articles; their columns groaned and bubbled over with speeches by Cary, speeches for Cary, speeches against Cary, and speeches about Cary. Such Carying-on we never did see.

The Iowa Copperhead Defeated Candidates.—The following is what the Peoria, Illinois, Transcript says of the chaps that the Republicans recently whipped in Iowa to the tune of some 30,000 majority. No wonder such creatures were laid on the shelf by the patriotic voters of Iowa:

The copperheads of Iowa seem to be in what Artemus Ward would call an "unpleasant fix." Their pet leader, Judge Mason, has a record that is enough to damn anybody North, and which is just now being unpleasantly aired by his opponents. Henry Clay Dean always had a bad odor, political and personal, clinging to him; and now Le Grand Byington, the copperhead magnate of Johnson county, has been arrested and lodged in jail for alleged perjury. We have a few of that stripe in this county that ought to be in jail, but a regard for the morals of those already incarcerated induces our people to allow them to run at large. It would be unjustifiable torture to arrest a man for horse stealing and oblige him to keep company with a copperhead while awaiting his trial. His chances for salvation after that

THE LEVEES AND LEVEE BOARD.

As stated yesterday, owing to the sickness of Mr. Ong, no meeting of the levee commissioners was had Monday. Mr. Commissioner Effingham Lawrence came to the city, however, and in a conference with the governor certain action was determined upon. A request will be made upon General Mower, signed by the only two commissioners in the vicinity—Messrs. Lawrence and Ong, for his appointment of two additional commissioners, so that these four, being a quorum of the seven, can act upon matters pressing upon their attention at once. A meeting will be called for the first Tuesday in November, to open proposals which are at once to be advertised for, for the repair of the four or five principal levees in the state—those that are too large for individual enterprise—the terms will be given in advertisement in Wednesday morning's papers. It is possible that Commissioner Smith will be here by the time of the proposed November meeting.

A proposition is already before the commissioners from L. Moses & Co. to repair Grand levee upon such terms as show that there are men of enterprise who have faith in the state and in its bonds as well as in the commissioners. This proposition is to build Grand levee, which is estimated to require four hundred thousand cubic yards, for $400,000, and to take levee bonds in payment therefor at eighty cents on the dollar, and by the terms of the law authorizing their issue, the bonds can not be sold at a less price. But all know they can not be sold to any one at this price; no one will bid anything for them at present. And as Moses & Co. say, from the nature of the ground to be worked, the extent of the levee, its distance from the bank of the river, the fact that new quarters will have to be erected for the workmen, and considering the shortness of time left before the rise of the river to complete this levee, requiring a force of at least one thousand men, these are fair terms. But let proposals be advertised for, and possibly still better terms may be had.

Let those immediately interested put their shoulders to the wheel on the lesser levees, and all will be well. In Plaquemines parish some forty levees are being thus repaired, and will be completed before high water comes. Levee Commissioner Lawrence is himself making a levee of some thirty or forty acres in extent, and costing some $6000, without asking state or national aid. All can do thus and they will receive the proper recompense. Some rich and deeply interested individuals that we hear of, refuse to do this,but try to wring in the city, the Jackson railroad, and other interests to do what they themselves should perform.

One rich old codger who owns rows of houses and lots in this city, and is worth millions of money, is quite indignant that the state, with its empty treasury, will not build a levee about this man's plantation to save his crops. "God helps those who help themselves." The state is poor, the commissioners labor for nothing, giving much valuable time toward the levee business—let all devote as much time and show equal public spirit, and there will be no more whining about overflows and crops destroyed.

THE JEFFERSON CITY COUNCIL.

Everybody remembers that worthy old gentleman, Jim Biles, who described his mare as having every good quality peculiar to her species, and but one fault, she was dead. The late Jefferson city council, judging from its obituary published in the editorial columns of this morning's Crescent, is like old Jim Biles' mare—it has done all that such a body could do to merit long life—still it is dead, and those who looked to it for profitable service have only to mourn its loss and chronicle its virtues. There is one important point of difference, however, between the fate of the "out gone" "authorities of Jefferson city," and that of the accomplished animal eulogized by Jim Biles; namely: that the latter met her fate in the ordinary course of nature, and through no fault of her own, whereas the former were cut off violently in the midst of their activity, and by an act of over exertion.

Seriously, the body referred to, presuming on their own insignificance, ventured to violate a military order, (under existing circumstances the supreme law of the land), and were deservedly removed from office for that reason. Whether any other cause exists which would justify such action on the part of the military authorities it is needless to inquire. "The good they have done lives after them," let the evil be interred with their bones.

THE COTTON TAX.

A memorial to congress for the removal of the present tax upon cotton has been sent to prominent points in all the states of the South, and largely to interior points, by Messrs. Addy, Hull & Co., cotton factors of Cincinnati, Ohio, for the purpose of obtaining the signatures of all interested in this matter, that a direct pressure of the people may be brought to bear upon the body which alone has the power to abolish the tax. The memorial is a lengthy one, embracing in its remarks many of the arguments which the Republican has heretofore brought forward, showing the injustice and impolicy of this special tax upon cotton, and that it is a burden greater than can be borne by the cotton interests, certainly at the present time.

It shows the great change that has taken place since the commencement of the war, when the country occupied such a prominent position among the cotton producing countries of the world. It also shows that this position—which was one of supremacy, can not be regained without every possible encouragement both from capitalists and the national government. It shows the adverse circumstances against which the cotton interest has had to struggle during the past two years, the disorganized condition

THE CONVENTION.

We publish this morning General Mower's order calling for the assembling of the delegates elect to the constitutional convention, on Saturday, November 23. As announced in the Republican on Saturday, the general designed to assemble the convention on the 19th, but for satisfactory reasons, probably, has changed the day.

It has been evident to the readers of the Republican for the past two weeks that a convention had been called by the voters of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of the reconstruction laws of March 2 and 23 of this year. The commanding general was therefore merely called upon to perform the ministerial duty of ascertaining whether enough votes had been cast on the subject to meet the requirements of the law, and that a majority were cast in favor of a convention. These facts having been determined by the returns, he had only to appoint a time within sixty days after the election for the assembling of the delegates. But the official order now published gives the question a feature of completeness which it wanted before, and will admonish the people that the time is rapidly approaching when they will be called upon to supply their own legislation.

Upon most questions of local policy the approaching convention will have a control as absolute as the similar body that recently assembled in the state of New York. It should be borne in mind, however, that the constitution to be adopted must be approved by congress before that body will admit senators and representatives from this state. It is expressly stipulated that the constitution thus adopted shall provide for the exercise of the right of suffrage of all classes who are admitted to the right by the reconstruction laws of congress; and it is held by many that the classes excepted by those laws shall continue to be excepted by the new constitution. One of the imperative conditions of the law is that before any of the ten unrepresented states shall be admitted, the legislature thereof shall ratify the pending fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, and said amendment shall have become a part of such constitution. We believe this amendment has already been ratified by the legislatures of twenty-three states, possibly by those of one or two more. But it requires the assent of twenty-eight states to make the amendment a part of the constitution. In that case it will probably require the vote of three or four of the now unrepresented states in favor of the proposed amendment before any one of them is entitled to representation in congress.

Louisiana is sure to be among the first, if not the first, to comply with all the terms imposed by congress for her reconstruction. And there is reason to believe that Mississippi, Alabama, and North Carolina will follow rapidly after, so that reconstruction and all its attendant blessings which the opposition papers have harped upon so long are now near at hand, and will be brought about, not only without the assistance of the party opposed to Republicanism, but in the face of determined opposition from it.

Levee Board and Levees.

Mr. Ong, one of the levee commissioners, sent word to Governor Flanders that he was sick with rheumatism, so no meeting of the board could be held as was contemplated on Monday.

A letter from the president of the police jury of the parish of Lafourche informs Governor Flanders that the levees on the Lafourche will all be repaired before the coming of high waters; but whether sufficiently strong to withstand the pressure that will be brought to bear thereon remains to be seen. These repairs were done under the old law, through the Sheridan orders. The president of the Lafourche police jury writes that it is his own and the general opinion of those interested in that parish, that dredging machines should be employed under the directions of the parties interested in protection from overflow, to keep the mouth of the Lafourche bayou opened and deepened, when less leveeing and expense will be necessary.

Break in the New Canal.

During the storm two weeks ago the water was forced from the lake into the new canal to such an extent that the embankments between Claiborne and Broad streets were overflowed and damage ensued to individual property. One of our cotemporaries endeavored to make it appear that the street commissioner had disposed of some of the earth forming the embankment, and thus left the property holders unprotected from overflow. It happens that the street commissioner has nothing to do with the canal, which is private and leased by General Dick Taylor It also happens under the administration of that gentleman, or the association of gentlemen represented by him. Portions of the canal embankment have been sold to private parties to be carted away and used for private purposes. Instead of lowering the embankments, they should be raised by

The election in Alexandria, Virginia, passed quietly. No definite returns received.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 22.—The election today passed more quietly than was anticipated. Two incipient riots and two other disturbances were quelled by the military. The difficulties were caused by attempts of radical negroes to mob colored conservatives. Troops were in reserve in capitol square, and stationed at all the polls in the city. Cavalry patrolled the streets.

The result of the first day's polling is 567 white majority. Canvassing is active; 2000 whites have not yet voted. The ex-

the polls kept open three days instead of two. The military under Gen. Granger, and the city police will be kept on duty all night. The polls reopen in the city tomorrow.

Chief Justice Chase has written to Judge Underwood that he will be present at the opening of the United States court in Richmond in November. He refers to the fact that Mr. Davis's bail bond expires on the fourth Monday of November, but says if Davis is willing he will take up the case before that time. He adds that he will, however, remain in Richmond after the United States supreme court meets in December.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 23.—The second day of the election in this city passed without any disturbance.

The radicals and conservatives were both active throughout the day in bringing voters to the polls. After the announcement of the results of the first day's polling the conservatives were much encouraged, and are still confident of victory.

Many negroes forgot the names by which they registered, and many more had left the city since registering.

The polls closed to-night with a white majority of 521.

It is estimated that the number of white radicals and colored conservatives in the city is about the same.

The city vote upon the question of calling a convention can not yet be ascertained, but nine-tenths of the whites voted against it.

At the solicitation of the radicals Schofield has ordered the polls to be opened in three wards to-morrow. The conservatives are much dissatisfied thereat.

The military were on duty all day, but their services were not called for by the city police.

Returns from the country indicate that the negroes have voted en masse for the radicals and in favor of a convention. The line between the blacks and whites is distinctly drawn.

Nelson county gives 1148 for and 590 against a convention. Appomattox—872 for and 456 against.

The conservatives have a majority in the valley.

From Augusta.

AUGUSTA, October 23.—The Republicans nominated the following ticket for the 18th senatorial district: Foster Blodgett, R. B. Bullock, B. Conley, J. E. Bryant, Simon Bird, John Neal, and Alex. Stone, five whites and two blacks. Their party seem confident of carrying the convention question. The conservatives or anti-conventionists seem to favor the policy of neither voting for or against the convention, but of voting only for delegates. Several papers advocate this plan, while others strongly urge the people to keep away from the polls and take no part in the election.

From Galveston.

GALVESTON, October 22, 8 P. M.—R. H. Perry, chief of police, was suspended by the mayor last night in accordance with a vote of the board of aldermen, grave charges being made against him. The case is referred to the commanding general, but in the meantime Lieutenant Krebbs, commanding this post, has reinstated him.

No yellow fever interments to-day. The Island City is again open. Absentees are slowly returning, and, it is thought, imprudently.

The fever in the interior is abating from exhaustion of material.

The Republican association last evening unanimously approved the suspension of Perry, and urgently petitioned the commanding general to remove him.

PARIS, October 22.—The Moniteur this morning in an official article announcing the cessation of warlike preparations against Italy, says:

"France beheld the spectacle of an invasion of the Papal states by armed bands from the neighboring provinces of Italy. She could not, consistently with her duty, dignity, and national honor, suffer the September convention to be thus violated, so she prepared to send an army across the Alps and a fleet to Rome, but Italy has since given ample pledges to fulfill on her part the obligations of the treaty in the largest sense; consequently all hostile preparations have been suspended by France."

FLORENCE, October 22.—It is reported that Garibaldi has not only eluded the vigilence of the government in making his escape from Caprera, but has succeeded in joining Menotti.

The ministerial crisis is not yet ended. Cialdini, unable to form a new cabinet, has given up the task. It is possible Ratazzi may remain in office, with, perhaps, a few changes in the ministry. The popular agitation is very great, and an extremely bitter feeling is shown against France, while the government is loaded with reproaches for yielding to the dictation of Napoleon.

Several demonstrations of indignation have occurred in Florence. The populace in great crowds beneath the windows of the government offices shout for Rome as the capital of Italy.

RECONSTRUCTION.—The Houston Telegraph is mistaken in one point in the following editorial. The conservatives might have carried one or two municipal districts in this city. They could not have elected the entire list of delegates to the convention:

Returns nearly complete from the late election in Louisiana show that a majority of about 15,000 of the registered voters participated in the election. This secures the convention. The radicals and negroes will have a large majority in that body, resulting to a great extent from the general abstention of the conservatives from the polls. Had they not refused to vote they might have carried the entire delegation from New Orleans, as well as twelve or fifteen of the country parishes. A very pretty example this of biting off the nose to spite the face. We presume the convention will be ordered to assemble very soon, and Louisiana become again a full sovereign in the Union before the end of winter, with the right to regulate her state affairs as the majority of her people may elect. The provisions of the military bills are merely temporary and do not extend beyond the present anomalous condition of the Southern states. With the full restoration of Louisiana to the Union of course her right to regulate her domestic affairs in her own way is revived.

GIPSIES.—There are now encamped on the farm of Mr. Clark Mills, near Bladensburg, a band of gipsies, numbering about twelve. A number of persons have visited "these relics of olden times," and a number of them have been victimized to the tune of one dollar each to have "their fortune told." The handsome tents which these rude people erect receive high praise from their visitors. Among the band is said to be a very handsome female, whose appearance would seem to imply that she is the queen of the gipsies.—National Intelligencer.

REPUBLICANISM IN PENNSYLVANIA—CAUSES OF THE LATE DEFEAT.

PHILADELPHIA, October 15, 1867.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

If ever the loyal Pennsylvanian had reason to be ashamed of his state, it is now, when he contemplates not only the loss of the 17,000 majority which in '66 made Geary his governor, but also the pitiable 802 votes which a week ago to-day constituted the opposition majority for Sharswood. It is a sad enough reproach that the figures of last October should have been canceled, but the disappointment is embittered in that the chief judicial office of the state must be resigned to such a paltry Democratic excess as 800 votes. I observe without surprise that your rebel organs exult over the defeat here as a signal token of Republican disaffection, so indeed, do some timorous adherents of our party through the North.

That the mass of the voters practically denied a national import to the late struggle here, I think was satisfactorily shown in my last letter. That local and personal biases should have dissuaded the citizen from his duty—that a candidate should have been considered as not integral with an issue, is as unfortunate as it was manifest on the 8th instant. There was a virtual but unwilling apostasy in the people; on the morrow of the election they discovered it in the announced returns, and I do not hesitate to say that admonished by the consequences of their recent blunder, and chastened by the humiliation their incaution has entailed upon our party, they are more resolute than ever.

Your exchanges daily convince you that the recent mishaps in other sections have likewise proven a most valuable spur to our party sloth; the disappointment has been shared by our ranks at large, and has clearly impressed them anew with the fact that neither selfish greed for office, as in California, nor illegitimate issues, as in Maine, consist with the duty which the radical organization owes to history. While, therefore, we chafe under our late permitted discomfitures and are eager to retrieve them, should we not confess our indebtedness to the opposition for its clamor of "reaction?" That clamor will but provoke us to greater candor and more earnest action by its severe but deserved taunt upon our recent neglect. It will cheer the opposition in both sections to advocate measures, especially of finance, that will insure its utter ruin by repelling the conscience of the loyal mass.

It may and probably will urge the president into some new development of his insane myth called policy, and thus especially assist our Republican interests. For let us be frank enough to admit that Mr. Johnson has done more for us by his clumsy, pot-valiant antagonism than has any one of our own recognized champions during the past two years. It may be less convenient than just to admit this, but the fact stares us sternly in the face. For one, I confess to have been in common with you impatient for impeachment, because I felt that it became us as a people, jealous of our titles, to resent every material infraction upon those titles, whether made by a traitor on the battle field, or a traitor in the executive chair. That chair does not afford immunity from constitutional punishment, but rather more violent reason for it, inasmuch as the treason there enjoys an authority it could not elsewhere boast.

But were our party content, as it was last autumn, to fall back upon its military achievements as its chief claim upon the people—were it to put forth another instrument as negative as that paltry constitutional amendment for a platform—were it again to decline the open challenge of the opposition on the negro issue as it certainly did again in Pennsylvania lately—were it in fine again to derive its best capital from the shameless course of the president alone then it is obvious that as a party measure, we should forego our congressional scheme of impeachment. He would then venture to other rash extremes so subversive of national interests as still to array the people around our platform—were it no more than a timid protest against his misdemeanor. It would at least be the best by contrast as it was once before, and that would suffice until the public voice loudly demanded more as it had already done when congress put forth its military bill last February.

But the very fact that we have so often equivocated as a party upon the vital question of suffrage has brought its natural results—we have been timid; the Democrat has seen it, and with too much truth charged us with inconsistency. That we are now equipping for the national campaign of 1868 with the determination to meet every need, to despise every jeer, and to win a triumph upon each and every issue is patent to all who seek to observe the internal workings of our national organization or to ascertain the popular temper. We are going into the fight with not only a heavy charge rammed down our gun barrel, but with fixed bayonets. We intend not only to decimate the opposition, but to dislodge it from the positions which under a false sense of security we have lately lost. We shall address ourselves to the purpose of reconstruction as bearing as much upon the old prejudice against color at the North as upon the Republican adjustment of the classes South.

In a month Congress will have met, and, persuaded by the demand of the masses, will enter upon its initial step of a more impulsive progress—the decapitation of Johnson. A fortnight ago and I was apprehensive that he would never be arraigned; since then I have been rejoiced to see that our complete defeat here and our partial defeat in Ohio were dangerous fagots to throw upon the smouldering yet live Republican embers.

Great interest is expressed here on all sides as to your constitutional convention. In response to daily inquiries upon the subject, I assure our friends that Louisiana will yet teach the North sterling radicalism; that she looks under and not at the complexion of manhood; that she will prepare a constitution in which every man can have an equal property; that black men have brains and hearts, and that our new charter will attest it. J. R. G. P.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post writes: I have endeavored to and out what colored hair and eyebrows will be worn this year. The artists in hair have met and agreed that dark eyebrows are to accompany golden tresses, and golden eyebrows black hair. Brown or chestnut locks and curls are not to be tolerated. It is not quite settled if the chignon is to be maintained; it is believed not, if a more expensive and complicated decoration can be invented. The complexion is to be dead pearl pale, the lips very light pink, and the mouth to be worn slightly open.

The Cuba Cable.

The Cuba telegraph is now complete and in working order, and messages are sent to and fro between New York and Havana. Thus one more step is taken in that great march of progress that is girdling the earth with electric fire, and promises soon to put the life and thought of the remotest districts in active sympathy and real contact with that of the great centres of civil German Commercial Enterprise.

THE HAMBURG STEAMERS

Arrangements for the Reception.

In our columns of last Wednesday it was announced that an experiment was being tried by the merchants of Hamburg toward the establishment of a line of steamships between their city and New Orleans. The steamship Bavaria, belonging to the line, had arrived at Southampton, which place she left for this city on the fifth instant. The Teutonia will follow at the beginning of next month. These voyages are merely experimental. Should the scheme succeed—as every citizen of New Orleans hopes it will—the company will continue the service between Hamburg and New Orleans by way of Southampton.

In order to celebrate the occasion and give a proper reception to the officers of the Bavaria, on her arrival at this port, arrangements are being made by our citizens of German origin. A meeting of such was held last evening in the Mechanics' Institute. James C. Kathman, chief of the bureau of immigration of Louisiana, presided, and G. G. Koschel acted as secretary.

Mr. Kathman, in a few words announced the object of the meeting and called on the gentlemen present to give their views and suggest proper resolutions. Thereupon Mr. P. J. Kramer addressed the meeting, appealing to their love of the land of their birth and childhood, and their devotion to the country of their adoption, to co-operate in measures for tendering a hearty welcome to the officers and sailors of the Bavaria. She comes to us from a land we all love, and of which we may be proud; a country formerly constituted of many principalities of antagonistic interest, but which within the last twelve months has been formed into one great and powerful country—the greatest in Europe—a united Germany. He hoped every German would take a part in the proposed reception, and that all due respect should be shown the new flag of Germany. He proposed the formation of a committee of twelve to raise subscriptions and make the necessary arrangements.

Mr. R. Mogel seconded the motion, and made some excellent remarks in its support. He regretted to see so small a number of Germans present at this meeting. Those present were, however, the right sort of men. They were honest and hard-working men. Why are not the German merchants with us to-night? Where are the members of the German society? Perhaps the event we desire to celebrate is of no importance to them. At any rate, the true industrious Germans of the city will attend to this matter and see that proper honors are paid to the officers and sailors who are expected at our landing in two or three days. Let us engage a band of music, let us appoint a speaker, and when the steamer is telegraphed let us give notice throughout the city, so that a large and appreciative crowd may meet the steamer and give her officers and employes such a hearty reception as Germans are able to give.

The motion for the appointment of the committee was carried. The following are the names of the gentlemen appointed:

Judge Keubbe, P. J. Kramer, R. Mogel, William Pfaff, M. Chanac, William Pehr. H. Heidenhain, J. Kathman, W. Sommer, Ph. Holzel, G. G. Koschel, and G. Hanning.

The committee is to meet this (Tuesday) morning at the German Gazette office, to agree upon a programme.

We learn that in addition to this proposed demonstration, the German merchants intend getting up a grand dinner in honor of the captain and officers of the Bavaria. She is expected in the river to-morrow.

DECLINES.—Hon. E. J. Davis, in a letter to Judge C. B. Sabin, of Houston, gives his reasons for declining the appointment of chief justice of the state of Texas. He says:

There are several objections to my acceptance, which I find insuperable. After my return home from the North last fall, I set myself regularly to work, practicing law for a living, which in case of my acceptance I should have to abandon. I would besides feel bound to return several hundreds of dollars received in advance, or by way of retainer. This I could not now well afford to do. Further, this office would take me away from home next week, and would keep me away nine months to come, (if the state were not previously reconstructed) at a most interesting time, and when the services of every Unionist are "required in the field." During this period members of the convention have to be chosen, the constitutions formed and state officers elected.

At this time I consider it a duty to take part in the reconstruction of the state and to recognize the legality of the provisional government, and with this view would willingly have accepted any position that did not interfere with personal obligations.

CURIOSITY OF PHOTOGRAPAY.—Photographers have taken "the sun himself," when in eclipse; they have caught an impression of a shell whizzing through the air, discharged from the mouth of a 32-inch mortar; they have caught the wave as it broke on the shore, the sun depicting even the drops falling from its toppling crest; more, they have not failed in getting a "good impression" of the head of a criminal executed by the guillotine, catching the head in mid-air as it fell into the basket below. Photographic book marks and visiting cards are sold by the thousand, while photographic shirts studs and waistcoat buttons, ornamented with microscopic miniatures, are now being daily produced in countless numbers at the button manufactories in Prussia; portraits of a popular person, Garibaldi for instance, being ordered by the hundred thousand at a time. On the authority of a careful English writer, all this photographing requires the use of no less than twenty tons of silver per annum.

The Richmond Whig asserts that a strong tide of northern emigration is now enriching Virginia, and that it is accomplishing great benefits for the planters who have "too much land and too little money." The Whig wisely adds: "If we treat the new settlers kindly, and if we secure restoration and tranquillity by going through the reconstruction process without delay or disturbance, we may at once begin to reap the benefits of an immense immigration, with all the capital, skill, enterprise, and development that will accompany it. If we pursue an opposite policy we must linger on indefinitely in poverty, weakness, and stagnation." This brief extract powerfully illustrates the advantage to both North and South of a strong indorsement of the congressional policy.

A modern Amazon on her way to a convention asked for a seat in a crowded car. An old gentleman with keen eyes inquired: "Be you one of the woman righters?" "I be," answered the undaunted heroine. "Do you believe that a woman has the same rights as a man?" "I do," (emphatically.)

A BRUTAL MURDER.

A Colored Man Kills His Mistress with an Ax.

JEALOUSY THE CAUSE.

One of the most cool-blooded and brutal murders that has occurred in this city for a long time transpired at No. 131 Perdido street, between Franklin and Liberty streets, at about two o'clock Wednesday morning.

The murderer, Anderson Johnson, a full blooded negro, about twenty-five years of age, had enjoyed domestic relations with a young woman named Celia, since March last. Their relations, it seems from the best information we can gather, had latterly been rendered very unpleasant by the frailty of the woman and the jealousy and recrimination of the man. On Tuesday night affairs came to a crisis, and a serious quarrel arose between them, the man accusing his mistress of her unfaithfulness, and she telling him to go away from her, and that she could get along without him, and refusing to permit him to come to bed with her. At about two o'clock the woman had fallen asleep, and the man stepped out into the yard, obtained an ax, came in and fastened the door behind him, and then, standing over her as she lay asleep upon a pallet spread upon the floor, deliberately broke open her head and beat out her brains with the but of the instrument. The blow was heard by a man in the adjoining house, who gave the alarm, and the murderer was speedily taken in charge by Officers Wilson and Delaney.

The murder occurred in a small room or cabinet in the rear of the house at No. 131 Perdido street—a room only six or eight feet square. The same room was occupied by another colored man and woman, the former a brother of the unfortunate woman. It seems the man was not awakened at all, but the woman was aroused by a blow on the wrist from the murderer, and she alleges she heard the blows upon the skull of the sleeping woman.

The man is of less than medium size, and his face does not indicate the brutality which his action evinced. He speaks freely of the murder, declaring it the only opportunity he had of getting even with her. He was arraigned before Recorder Neville Wednesday morning, and his case fixed for examination on the 11th of November. The ax was produced in court, its blade completely dyed with the blood of the murdered woman, which also covered several inches of the handle.

The coroner was summoned to hold an inquest on the body of the woman, but up to eleven o'clock he had not arrived.

From the New Orleans Republican.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE AND SOCIAL EQUALITY.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

Perhaps you remember not being fully prepared to adopt the views presented in my article, signed "Discriminator," published in your truly loyal paper on the 15th ult., because they were rather unique. But as further returns from the Northern elections have proved their correctness, probably ere this you have been satisfied that it is at least impolitic for any party to hold on to the plank of indiscriminate commingling of white and black children in the same schools by force of law. And that if this plank is not ignored by the Republican party it will be seriously weakened, and perhaps overthrown by the old Democrats or some new organization that shall adopt a platform more congenial to the feelings of abolitionists generally, and other white people in the United States.

All citizens may now be ranked (though in different degrees) as abolitionists. And we think a majority of the white people in the United States are in favor of universal suffrage, but not of social equality. For far back into the past dates the prejudices of race, and so firmly interwoven are they in all the conventionalities of Southern society, that even were it desirable they could not be eradicated at once without extinguishing one or the other of the races. We therefore hope that the radicals will see the propriety as well as necessity of discrimination with regard to the powers to be conferred upon the black man. Our Northern brethren, foreseeing that universal suffrage conferred upon the negroes in the South would give them the power (under the constitution) to force their children into the schools with the white children, and that they might advance a step further, and place them in the back seats under black teachers, a degradation imaginary to a certain class but real to them, with this view of the prospective effects of negro suffrage, and in a conciliatory spirit have they in Ohio, by a majority of 50,000 votes, condemned it. Not that they have a particular repugnance to admitting the blacks into their own schools where they number only from one to five per cent of the population, and where the negro could never gain an offensive control, but out of sympathy for us. And yet should social reconstruction once be established so as to give satisfaction to the white people of the South, I would have no hesitation in prophesying that suffrage could be carried for the blacks in the North, especially in a state that has for years ignored color in one of its most popular colleges.

The North has spoken. It means to provide for its own cast first, while at the same time it is ready to do justice to all others. Cheerfully would they grant the negro equal political privileges with their white brethren whenever the former shall give assurance that they will make a more sensible use of them than the arrogant resolve to force their children on the same benches with white children, however distasteful it may be to the latter.

In conclusion I would beg leave to say that when the Republican party shall have ignored the mixed schools, repealed some of the oppressive and injudicious internal revenue laws, prohibitary tariffs, laws exempting bonds and other capital from taxation, that then, and not till then, will the dissatisfied return to the fold of the party which they love for its many good qualities, and again swell the Republican majorities at elections which may follow such just measures.

Will not the honest Republicans go to work at once and without delay erect a platform that shall enlist the sympathy and support of every intelligent suffragan in the nation? And may Providence enable them to forego any selfish or sectional interest in its construction. DISCRIMINATOR.

The Bulletin is responsible for the following very clever take off, which by the way is playing with an edged tool:

THE PRESS CHALLENGED.—An ex-leaderof the left wing of the party just now in power has recently returned from Washington with an assortment of dangerous cutlery and put his foot down in New Orleans. A humble individual claimed his acquaintance, but his highness did not remember him. The humble individual gently reminded him that he used to visit a certain newspaper office where the humble individual was employed. His highness broke forth in an oratorical anathema against the infamous, degraded, and abominable press of New Orleans. He knew nobody connected with it, the press of New Orleans, which he held in detestation and contempt, it and its conductors, and had no desire to make the acquaintance of any one belonging to it directly or indirectly, as it was impossible for him to associate with such without contracting their universal habit of distorting the truth and ignoring the presence of great men in this great city, and abusing their fair fame by a studied and dogged silence. "Avaunt, I know you not! Leave my presence, and

A Runaway Husband.

Information was given at the office of the chief of police yesterday morning that Conrad Shuld, the keeper of a beer saloon on Circus street, near Perdido, absconded Monday evening, carrying with him $9000 in greenbacks and $500 in gold, the property of his wife and stepchildren. Mrs. Shuld, before marrying Shuld, had been married twice before, and has several children by her first two husbands.

Mrs. Shuld is twenty-eight years of age, and this is her third husband; the first husband started the beer saloon and acquired the property which has been carried off. Shuld, who is about thirty-five years of age, married the widow about two years ago, and with the exception of occasional squabbles when he was inclined to drink too much, they seemed to live happily together. A few months ago, during a spree, he left his wife for three days.

Last Sunday night he quarreled with his wife while under the influence of liquor, and up to the time that he left Monday they had not become reconciled. The money taken was kept in an iron safe, of which each had a key. On Sunday during their quarrel he took from her her key and kept both, and thus

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38 Mailed post-paid.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE

The Watcher at Gate.

BY DR. GUTHRIE.

I'm kneeling at the threshold, weary, faint sore;
Waiting for the dawning, for the opening of the door;
Waiting till the Master shall bid me rise and come
To the glory of his presence, the gladness of his home.

A weary path I've traveled, 'mid darkness storm and strife;
Bearing many a buden, struggling for my life;
But now the morn is breaking, my toil will soon be o'er;
I'm kneeling at the threshold, my hand is on the door.

Methinks I hear the voices of the blessed as they stand
Singing in the sunshine in the far-off sinless land;
O! would that I were with them, amid their shining throng,
Mingling in their worship, joining in their song.

The friends that started with me have entered long ago;
One by one they left me struggling with the foe;
Their pilgrimage was shorter, their triumph surer won:
How lovingly they'll hail me when alll my toil is done!

With them the blessed angels that know no grief or sin,
I see them by the portals, prepared to let me in.
O Lord, I wait thy pleasure; thy time and way are best;
But I'm wasted, worn and weary; O Eather, bid me rest.

Mississippi Items.

We have been spared the visit of the yellow fever, except at Vicksburg and one or two isolated cases at one or two other places. In Central Mississippi there has been generrl complaint of chills and fever, while in the extreme northern part of the State it has been very healthy. We have had very little rain for a long time, and only slight frosts, but the varied colors of the autumn foliage remind us that summer is passing away. For cotton picking the season is all that could be desired, and the crop will be saved in good order without loss. The crop will be fair in quantity, and good good in quality, but the low prices are very discouraging to the planters. The general impression seems to be that cotton raising will no longer pay expenses, which we suppose is a correct opinion unless it can be produced in a more economical manner. Many of the old plantations have been so exhausted by former cultivation that they will no longer yield anything like a fair crop, and the people have not got to the point of improving land. There is any quantity of unimproved land but it is too expensive to clear it as things now are. There is a fair corn crop for this country, but very little meat will be made. So far as we can now see times are to be nearly as hard next year as this. We doubt if Mississippi has made expenses this year. The vital question whether we shall eat or starve is yet an open one, with the probabilities strong in favor of the starving side.

We are glad to give a more favorable account of the spiritual interinterests of our people. Our last quarterly meeting at Holly Springs was one of interest. Good attendance and a large number of seekers of religion. The revival spirit has continued with them for many months, and they have new converts nearly every week. Brother Butler, aged and infirm, goes in and out like a patriarch among his people, and has an excellent influence among them. Mrs. Gill and Miss Dyer are laboring faithfully in the good work of educating the children. They have remained at their posts all the summer. The health of the people has been good—no deaths for the ast quarter among the members.

At Oxford the people have succeeded in buying and paying for a lot in a good location for a church, and we made contracts for the immediate erection of a house of worship. At a previous visit we licensed Bro. Alex Phillips as a local preacher and put him in charge at Oxford. He has been eaching without a house, and amid persecutions and difficulties enough to have driven off any man who was not of good pluck, but he has overcome his enemies and much of the prejudice that was against him.—He held a meeting under his "bush arbor," where he has been teaching, at which they had a good revival influence, and they had an organization of ninety members, and good prospects of a large increase.

At Grenada the church is doing well. They have a good congregation and a lively interest and frequent additions to the church. The people there have suffered from sickness somewhat, but there was only one death reported for the past quarter.

At Canton we made a contract for the building of a church in the early part of September, they had it ready to worship in October 13th. It is 40x60 feet, and one of the best churches we have in the district. It cost the Missionary Society $1210. Great credit is due the brethren who had charge of the building. They now have a membership of about 150 and congregation enough to fill the house. The preachers on the Jackson circuit report continued prosperity. The preacher we sent out in the country near Grenada at a previous quarterly meeting was sick and could not come in to report, but we were informed that he had met with good success.

The Church at Corinth is now doing much better than at any time before this year. They have been favored with a good revival during the past quarter. On last Sabbath we baptised 20 adults and one child. Monday night we had a very good love feast. A brother who is teaching at Guntown has organized three Societies, embracing a membership of 150.

The builders of the Macon church have completed their contract, and the house will be dedicated at the next quarterly meeting, November 10th.

We are able to report encouraging prosperity on every mission in the district. As near as we can now estimate our additions to the church this year will reach at least two thousand. The schools have not generally been opened yet on account of the Northern teachers remaining away through fear of the yellow fever.

The Pan-Anglican Synod.

The following is the pastoral address which has been adopted by the synod, and signed individually by the bishops:

"To the faithful in Christ Jesus, the Priests and Deacons, and the Lay Members of the Church of Christ in communion with the Anglican Branch of the Church Catholic:

"We, the undersigned bishops, gathered under the good providence of God for prayer and conference at Lambeth, pray for you that ye may obtain grace, mercy and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior.

"We give thanks to God, brethren beloved, for the faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love toward the saints, which hath abounded among you; and for the knowledge of Christ which through you hath been spread abroad among the most vigorous races of the earth; and with one mouth we make our supplications to God, even the Father, that by the power of the Holy Ghost He would strengthen us with His might, to amend among us the things which are amiss, to supply the things which are lacking, and to reach forth unto higher measures of love and zeal in worshiping Him, and in making known his name; and we pray that in His good time He would give back unto His whole Church the blessed gift of Unity in Truth.

"And now we exhort you in love that ye keep whole and undefiled the faith once delivered to the saints as ye have received it of the Lord Jesus. We entreat you to watch and pray, and to strive heartily with us against the frauds and subtleties wherewith the faith hath been aforetime and is now assailed.

"We beseech you to hold fast, as the sure Word of God, all the canonical scriptures of the Old and New Testament; and that by diligent study of the oracles of God, praying in the Holy Ghost, ye seek to know more of the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior, whom they reveal unto us; and of the will of God which they declare.

"Furthermore, we entreat you to guard yourselves and yours against the growing superstitions and additions with which in these later days the truth of God hath been overlaid; as otherwise, so especially by the pretension to universal sovereignty over God's heritage asserted for the See of Rome, and by the practical exhalation of the blessed Virgin Mary as mediator in the place of her Divine Son. and by the addressing of prayers to her as the intercessor between God and man. Of such beware, we beseech you, knowing that the jealous God giveth not his honor to another.

"Build yourselves up, therefore, beloved, in your most holy faith; grow in grace and in the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ our Lord. Show forth before all men by your faith, self-denial, purity, and godly conversation, as well as by your labors for the people among whom God hath so widely spread you, and by the setting forth of His Gospel to the unbelievers and the heathen that ye are indeed the servants of Him who died for us to reconcile His Father to us, and to be a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world.

"Bretheren, beloved, with one voice we warn you; the time is short; the Lord cometh; watch and be sober. Abide steadfast in the communion of saints, wherein God hath granted you a place, Seek faith for oneness with Christ in the blessed Sacrement of His body and blood. Hold fast the creeds and the pure worship and order, which of God's grace ye have inherited from the primitive church. Beware of causing divisions to the doctrines ye have received. Pray and seek for unity among yourselves and among all the faithful in Christ Jesus, and the good Lord make you perfect, and keep your bodies, souls and spirits, until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

SERMON FOR THE CRISIS.—We are in receipt of a sermon preached for missions at Ypsilanti, before the Detroit Annual Conference, which the audience requested the minister, Rev. J. S. Smart, to publish. He says in his preface: "What I have felt in uiew of the decline in our missionary efforts in this conference cannot be printed. We have certainly come to a crisis in our missionary affairs. We cannot go back; we must go forward, or betray the cause of Christ." The discourse is founded upon Romans i, 14, 45. We understand from one who heard it that it was an uncommonly effective sermon. Here is the concluding paragraph: "Let the sound go down through all the ranks of the great army of God; and with firm and steady tread, keeping step to the music of the Gospel, let us make our charge upon Paganism among our Indians, upon fetichism in Africa, upon the Buddism and Brahminism of China and India, upon the Mehommedanism of Turkey, upon the formalism and infidelity of Germany and Scandanivia, upon the Romanism of South America, and upon the kingdom of Satan generally in our Southers States and in our midst. Let us charge unitedly, promptly, generously, heroically, and for the love of Christ. What do you say, bretheren? Shall we fail for the want of supplies? What are you willing to do for the conquest of the world in the name of Christ? Let your missionary offerings answer. When the battle is over and the victory won we shall all pass in review before Him that cometh in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, May our deeds be such as we shall rejoice to have rehearsed before an assembled universe! Amen."

THOUGHTFUL AND BROTHERLY.—A. L. Long, D. D., our missionary from Constantinople, being on the eve of leaving the port of New York for his mission field, has received same attentions for his wife and children, adapted to this season of the year and a long sea voyage, which missionary families can appreciate.—Blessing on those who consider the sons and daughters of the Church who go to distant lands!

BALTIMORE.—A pastor in the monumental City writes: "I want to increase our collection 25 per cent. at least. We ran up to that figure ast year. Our Sunday-schools will ncrease this year 40 per cent"

MONROE CHAPEL.—In the year 1808 the name of Joshua Monroe appears for the first time in the minutes of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Turning to the Minutes of 1867, we still find his name on the roll. Now, after having brought many sons and daughters into the Church in this country, there is a prospect that he will hear a "house for the Lord, a dwelling for the mighty God of Jacob," in the empire of China, to be called the "Monroe Chapel," and this as the fruit of his pious conception and earnest désire. Though his eyes see it not, yet it is likely to come to pass, for at this office (the Mission Rooms) we have received $1,110 67 in order to build such a house.

DEBT OF THE MISSION TREASURY.—As the probability of a heavy debt upon our mission treasury at the close of the year becomes more and more apparent, the active and benevolent members of the Church are beginning to manifest concern, even alarm. A brother writes from New Albany, Indiana, proposing that each member of the whole Church shall contribute at least a quarter of a dollar toward the extinguishment of the debt, and says truly that this would meet the case. We do not notice this suggestion now with a view of bringing on such a general collection to extinguish the debt, but to note to the Church the incipient uneasiness on account of this debt. But this uneasiness will lead to more liberal and elevated missionary action in the various Churches and congregations, and thus prevent any serious injury to our vast missionary work. But there will be serious iujury unless there is a largely increased liberality in the missionary collections.

AN INSPING NOTE.—Rev. N. Peterson, superintendent of the Sweedish Mission district of the Central Illinois Conference, reports that he took up to his conference, at its late session above seven hundred dollars, which was twenty-five per cent. in advance of any former year. He also makes this remark: "I shall rejoice when we can give more than we receive, believing it to be 'more blessed to give than to receive.

The Girls of Two Cities.

[Extract from the Prospectus of Mme. Delacoste's Boarding School.]

Dr. Holmes draws the following pictures of the girls of Boston and New York—boarding schoool girls:

"Don't you think she's vurry good good lookin?" said a Boston girl to a New York girl. "I think she's real pooty."

"I dew, indeed. I didn't think she was half so handsome the fee-est time I saw her," answered the New York girl.

"Whot a pity she hadn't been bawn in Bawston!"

"Yes, and moved very young to Ne-York!"

"And married a sarsaparilla man, and lived in Fiff avenue and moved in fust society."

"Better dew that than be strong minded, and dew your own cook'n and live in your own kitch'n."

"And don't forget to send your card when you are Mrs. Old Dr. Jacob."

"Indeed I shant. What's the name of the alley, and which bell?" The New York girl took out a memorandum book as if to put it down.

"Hadn't you better let me write it for you, dear?" said the Boston girl. "It's best to have it legible, you know."

"Take it," said the New York girl, "Ther's tew York shill'ns in it when I hand it to you."

"Your whole quarter's allowance, believe—ain't it?" said the Boston girl.

"Elegant manners, correct deportment and propriety of language, will be strictly attended to in this institution. The most correct standard of pronunciation will be inculcated by precept and example. It will be the special aim of the teachers to educate their pupils out of all provincialisms, so they may be recognized as well bred English scholars wherever the language is spokn."

THE BANKRUPT LAW.—We remind all persons entitled to relief under the bankrupt act that the fifty per cent. clause wi l come into operation on the 2d of March next, and only about 115 working days remain before that time in which they can claim exemption. In all proceedings commenced after the 2d of March, the thirty-third section of the law provides that "no discharge shall he granted to a debtor whose assets do not pay fifty per centum of the claims against his estate, unless the assent in writing of a majority in number and value of his creditors, who have proved their claims, is filed in the case at or before the time of application for the discharge." N. Y. Tribune.

How a Revival Begins.

As churches are again filled with returned worshippers, and the routine of religious labor has begun, it may be as well for all to remember how an increased interest in the cause of Christ manifests itself. Rev. T. L. Cuyler says:

And as a church has no surer indication of decline than a declining prayer-meeting, so nothing marks the approach of a revival so unerringly as the place of prayer. A revival begins there generally. The deserted seats are filled, and so are the deserted hearts. Those who "could not leave their business" manage to close up their shops or their ware-rooms and hasten to the attractive spot. Absent Thomas is on hand punctually. There is a magnet in the prayer room, and it draws. Those who come have something to say, both to each other and to the prayer-hearing God. The "gift of tongue" has descended. The timid grow bold to ask; the slow of speech become eloquent; the frozen souls melt into penitence; conversions multiply; old wounds and quarrels heal up; and the pastor rejoices to see a latent power of faith and activity developed that he had hardly dreamed of. The church is kindled to its farthest extremity, and from all the central penetrating heat of the prayer gathering.

Fashionable Amusements.

The late Dr. Alexander gave some very pertinent reflections on the tendency of our age, and of human nature generally, to cross the border line which separates the world from the church, and engage in fashionable amusements. He says:

The growing laxity of the age gives peculiar meaning to the exhortation, "Be not conformed to this world." The rule of most is corrupt and dangerous; it is to do as others do. The consequence is mutual injury and perpetual declension in the church. You will find professors who, as they increase in wealth, constantly enlarge their license. It requires a keen eye to discriminate between their pleasures and expenditures and those of the ungodly. If they abstain from the theatre, they go freely to the opera; or, if they scruple at this, they linger at the midnight ball. The step is so easily taken from apparently innocent dancing to that which is free, indiscreet, amorous and licentious, that a tender conscience will find it safest to reject all. Apply, if you can, to such assemblages, however elegant and however common, the Divine maxim, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." That young communicant is near his fall who is often asking how near he may go to the brink of sin and yet be safe. Observe the families which have made this passage from ancient strictness to fashionable Christianity, and you will find their children, one by one, sliding away to looser forms of religion, if not to utter carelessness. The same principles apply to expenditures in dress, furniture, equipage, and luxurious living. "Let your moderation be known unto all men."

Letter from Mobile.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

MOBILE, October 23d, 1867.

DEAR ADVOCATE:—On or about the 5th day of November the Constitutional Convention of the State of Alabama will assemble at Montgomery, in the very building where, in 1861, the "nest egg" of treason and rebellion was hatched, for the purpose of framing a Constitution based upon the principles of even and exact justice, freedom and equality for all. A difficult task is before that body—it is truly the time that "tries men's souls." This is the turning point in the history of the colored race of Alabama, and just before us lies the mountain of difficulties. Actuated by the principles of Christianity, there is a disposition on the part of some of the colored members of the Convention to extend the olive branch to our political enemies, to bury the hatchet, to forget the past, and declare for universal, or manhood, suffrage; to let bygones be bygones, and both races taking a new start in the race together; but there is danger right here, judging from the tone of the city press, which is always considered to express the sentiments of the community, and by the threats so frequently made on the streets, and the wholesale proscription of colored and white Union men, we dare not trust them with the great lever power, the ballot. The burning of the Mission African Baptist Church, after several unsuccessful attempts, and the attempt to burn on the same night (Saturday night last) the A. M. E. Zion and the A. M. E. churches, has convinced these well disposed persons that the Southern white conservatives are indeed "our best friends" (?) We should by all means give them back the ballot, but not until they have given some evidence of true repentance for the past. When the fire was first discovered in the baptist church, several colored men, we are told, on reaching the spot tried to get some buckets; had they succeeded the church would have been saved without much damage being done it; but the neghbors, all more or less conservative, actually refused them the loan of a bucket to put out the the fire with.

The church was large and nearly new. The Pastor, Rev. Charles Leavens, is a man of influence, a true, open radical Republican. During the summer several Republican meetings were held in the church, and in it the county nominating convention was held. This exasperated Henry St. Paul, the "loyal" editor of the Mobile ("flunky") Times, by whose advivce (implied) in his paper, the dark deed was done, still he and others of his kidney think hard of the "Rads" for their unwillingness to admit them to power, to be used against us. God save us from our "best friends" (?) We'll trust them—but it will be after they are dead. Don't think hard of us, friend St. P., we have only swopped positions, we have only got you where, prior to the war, you and your ilk had us, while you were a member of the Louisiana Legislature.

The five Conservatives implicated in the powder magazine robbery are beginning to tremble in their boots ever the prospect of a speedy trip to the unknown "bourne," "true bills" having been found against them by the Grand Jury. With the ghost of the scaffold and the halter haunting their midnight slumbers, their position is anything but enviable. Thank God for a loyal jury at last—one of the fruits of the reconstruction bill—the work of a Republican Congress.

"King" cotton is once more raising his hoary head, and it is thought by the knowing ones here that quite a respectable crop will be made, but owing to the unjust 2½ cents cotton tax, not a fortune will be realized by the planter. A small farmer with about five bales of cotton, after paying freight, draying, storage, insurance, internal revenue taxes, for weighing and commissions together with "stealage," will not have more money than he wants.

"Yellow Jack" still lingers in our midst, acknowledging no master but "jack frost." The universal prayer is that the said J. F. will hasten his advent, and thus by the aid of Divine Providence, spare us the sad afflictions that have been visited upon the city. More anon.

SADDLE BAGS.

Menotti Garibaldi, to whom his father Guiseppe Garibaldi, has intrusted the authority of generalissimo of the forces operating against Rome, was born in Uruguay, about the year 1839, and is therefore twenty-eight years old. His mother was a South American lady of great energy of character, and the friend and companion of her husband in all his wanderings. She died in 1849 in consequence of fatigue undergone during the exciting and disastrous march of her husband from San Marino to Cesenatico. The young Garibaldi was left with his grandmother until his father, having lived on Staten island, New York, returned to Nice. In the war of 1859, between Italy and Austria, he was with his father in the Cacciatori delle Alpi, in the various battles in which that famous corps was engaged during the war.

Repudation.

There is no mistaking the fact that wise and sagacious men are looking forward to breakers on what is fast becoming the all engrossing topic of American politics.

Political leaders of no small acumen and foresight are taking positions upon the subject of the puhlic indebtedness, which are calculated to awaken uneasiness and startle the unreflecting. A great discussion is coming on the carpet, which we predict will divide parties for several years, and during its progress we look to see several questions raised and discussed de novo, which will deeply interest the whole financial world, and probably exert more influence upon the world at large than all previous contests in American politics together.

When the question of the moral and legal right of a political corporation to mortgage the industry of succeeding generations for debts of its contracting, shall come up for the first time in the history of the world before the great court of final resort, the people themselves, to be tried and determined upon first principles; when the precedents and legal maxims borrowed from feudal ages and class governments come to be sifted and questioned, and perhaps altogether uprooted, it will be a question of intense interest not only to United States bond holders, but to the great dealers in government securities all over the world. It will involve questions of trusteeship, of the nature aud powers of governments as agents of the governed, all of which will finally merge themselves into one great issue, that of the moral right of one generation to bind succeeding ones indefinitely for the payment of debts which they had no agency in contracting.

No more important question can arise in our generation. No one more intimately connected with the corruption and fraud so characteristic of modern governments.

One thing is certain, if the financiers of the world shall be taught the force of the great maxim, caveat emptor, in their future bargains with governments, and restrict their advances to the present capabilities of a government to pay, the mischievous power of war will be incalculably decreased, and we may look to see governments, like individuals, submitting their differences to the arbitrament of enlightened judgment and dispassioned reason, and restricting their expenditures within the bounds of their incomes.

We say let the discussion come.

AN ESSAY ON MAN. By Alexander Pope. With fifteen original illustrations, and Notes by S. R. Wells. One vol., 12mo, fancy cloth, beveled boards, gilt, $1; paper 50 cents.

Whatever may be said by theologians concerning the orthodoxy of this great poets' religious views, his ESSAY ON MAN will continue to be regarded one of the master pieces of English verse, and will attract the attention of, and instruct the intelligent and thoughtful.

The views of Pope on the Great Creator and his wondrous works, as enunciated in this poem, are unsurpassed for grandeur and deep-toned thought; and no writer, either of ancient or modern times, has so infused his sentiments and spirit into the literature of his nation by a single production, as Alexander Pope. The publisher of this new edition, appreciating the lack of an illustrated Essay on Man, and willing to do the public a substantial favor, has caused the work to be carefully illustrated, annotated from the Phrenological point of view, and printed in an attractive style on superior paper. A succient biography of the poet, and his highly esteemed "Universal prayer are published with the "Essay," making, together, a desirable volums for the library or the center-table.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in the Chapel of his church to-morrow evening, at 7 o'clock. All are invited.

The fourth quarterly meeting for the year will be held in our new Chapel, to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock. Rev. N. L. Brakeman will preach.

Some five hundred German emigrants have reached this port within a week. Some of them remain in New Orleans, but the majority go West.

The yellow fever has so far abated that it is no longer epidemic. The number of deaths daily declined to eight on the 30th ult. Friends and strangers may soon return.

The Mexican Standard is the name of An American paper just started in the City of Mexico, and is ably edited by Wm. I. Pritchard, formerly of this city. It is another illustration of American enterprise. Mexico will soon be American. The better classes are waiting for the coming of the "blue coats."

All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day were observed with an interest and solemnity rarely manifested in our city. The dead were rembered.

Conference Reports.

As the session of our Annual Conference is near at hand, we beg to remind the preachers of the importance of making neat and accurate reports on all points required by the Discipline. We say neat and accurate. Let us consider the first point. Neatness refers to the mechanical part of the report, such as clean paper and legible handwriting. This is not difficult, for it is as easy to prepare the report in such a manner as otherwise; but like everything else which we are called to do, it requires attention. But accuracy is more important than neatness, as your statements and figures will go before the church. Do not guess at your numbers, nor take "say so" for your authority, but know yourself that what you report is correct. Do not be tempted, for instance, to report a larger number of members and probationers, than you know are reliable. Let us in the South commence right, and although it may be high sounding to report a great increase, yet it is better to report the wheat than the chaff If this rule obtains among us, we will be more apt to watch over the growth of our flocks, and lead them into green pastures; for every pastor will still be ambitious to report an increase of the Lord's people.

Each preacher is required to report the number of members and probationers; the deaths which have occurred during the year; the adults and children baptized; the number and value of churches and parsonages; the amounts collected for the cause of missions, the Bible and Sunday schools; the number of Sunday schools, scholars, officers and teachers, volumes in library, papers taken, and conversions; the number of the New Orleans Advocate taken, and the total amount of money raised on each station and circuit during the year.

Mrs. Roberts, of Franklin, La., has been elected Matron of our Orphan's Home. She is eminently fitted for her new position,

Mrs. Alexander Robinson, of the First Street Church, died on last Monday. Her last words were: "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus!"

We received a private letter, just before going to press, from the parish of Franklin, stating that Mr. Elias Carter, United States Assistant Assessor, cotton weigher and also one of the members of the Board for the registry of voters for that parish, was shot and killed while on his road to weigh some cotton according to appointment.

Mr. Carter was an uncompromising Union man, and during the war fled from his home in Franklin parish, where he had been a resident for a long time, and came within the United States lines.

The fact of his being a Union may account for his murder, as many of the people in that vicinity seem hardly to know that the war has closed.

The Lesson of the Elections.

Our contemporaries of this city and elsewhere have severally "improved the occasion," each according to his gift, and their exhortations, we presume, have been more or less edifying to their readers. We propose to add our mite to the solemnities of the hour, by calling the attention of our readers to a few pertinent facts which are in active working operation, and which no elections, nor "ground-swells of the people," nor "popular verdicts," can annul or impede.

The Round Table says that the elections are a verdict of the people against negro suffrage. A contemporary quotes the demagoguical utterance of Stephen A. Douglas, that "this is a white man's government," as the fundamental canon of American politics re-affirmed by the elections.

And Gov. Seymour, of New York, thunders forth "that it is the will of God that the political control of these States must be confined to the German, Irish, French, Swedish, and Anglo Saxon races."

It is never safe to despise any political dogma on account of its folly, especially when it has for a leverage some paramount popular prejudice, no matter how temporary or how unreasonable.

Therefore we will not seek to underestimate the potency of the new war cry under which it is sought to muster the piebald clans of aristocracy, caste, color, and repudiation in hostile array against the progress of the great natural events which are attending the birth of a new nation.

We accept this prejudice of color as a fact, and are willing to accord to it all the power which our opponents claim for it.

Popular prejudice is as much a fact as mist or fog is a fact; yet, while mist can prevent people from seeing the sun rise, it does not keep the sun from rising, no matter how prevalent nor how long it lasts. So this prejudice of color, while it may dispose people to wish certain other facts out of existence, and may prevent them from seeing them, does not certainly destroy their existence, and cannot delay the operations of the laws of nature one solitary instant. Now, we present to our opponents the following facts, and array them against the fact upon which they have chosen to take their stand. The question as to which is to prevail is simply a question of computation of natural laws and forces:

First, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on the face of the earth, and (He) hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." This, we take it, to be the law of the distribution, the equality and the right of domicil of all races on the globe, as laid down by supreme authority. When we plant our foot on this we touch bottom rock. Forty elections will not alter it.

Second, That over four millions of the black race have had their "times appointed, and the bounds of their habitation determined" on this soil by the same irreversible decree, as that which has planted here the Saxon, the French, the German or the Irish race. They are not strangers or emigrants, but natives "to the manor born" for generations. It is not a question of whether we shall invite them here, but of the rights that belong to them, now that they are fixed here by the same hand which planted our forefathers here.

Third, That it is a law of the life of nations as demonstrated by the growth of every great and enduring nationality which has ever existed, that a solid, lasting, healthy nationality has only been produced by a complete intermixture of every race that has taken root upon its soil, and that every instance where such intermixture has been prevented by artificial barriers, has been an instance of premature national decay and imbecility.

Fourth, That these men in ten States have already demonstrated their capacity and desire to participate in their own government, and have exercised the rights of freemen, or soon will do so, at the ballot box, and that it is contrary to human nature and to the lessons of history to expect a race of men who have once grasped the weapons of freemen to lay them down.

We hold, therefore, that so far as the question of negro suffrage in these States is concerned, the late elections have no significance whatever. That the negro shall vote in the ten rebel States is un fait accompli. No elections can reverse it. Like slavery it is a dead issue, not to be fought over.

As to the question of the fate of the Republican party as affected by the elections, we regard it as of very little importance.

The great questions of the contest now closing are all decided for us of the Southern States. The fate of the Republican party can in no wise alter that decision. With the new era will arise new questions, and upon the wisdom and justice with which the Republican party shall take its position on these questions will depend not only the fact whether it shall continue to exist, but whether it is desirable that it should exist.

The Personnel of the Constitutional Convention.

We will begin, in our next number, a series of brief biographical sketches of the members elect of the Convention. We expect these to have an interest for our friends both at home and in the North. We are desirous to have our shakey brethren of Pennsylvania and New York see the result of the experiment of impartial suffrage, which has been made such a bugaboo to them.

We will compare records with New York to-day, and venture to predict that in honesty, good hard sense, average intelligence, industry and sobriety, the personnel of the Louisiana Convention will fully equal that of New York.

We also predict that they will make a better constitution in shorter time and at less expense. And if the Constitutional Convention of Louisiana, elected on the basis of impartial suffrage, equal rights and exact justice to all men, shall excel in all the most important qualifications of legislators, that of one of the oldest, most wealthy and intelligent States, elected on a narrower and less republican basis, will not the nation be able to see in such a result only the fulfillment of one of the foundation laws of the universe, that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people?"

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

Tidings from the Country Churches of the Opelusas District.

Rev. Mr. Bryan writes in September:

"There is much excitement in St. Martinsville about yellow fever, but they still go on in sin, they fear death but not judgment.

"Our Church is in good condition. We had a large meeting on the 22d. No mails reach us on account of fever in New Iberia. It grieves me much that the clubs meet Sunday; it calls the people from place to place; but most of the population is Catholic and irreligious. The school mistress has been sick for four weeks. I and my son have taught the Sunday-school regularly. Times are very hard. Planters and laborers are disagreeing about wages. There is great complaint of injustice. The cotton worm has been here, too, and cleaned out the fields in two weeks. On my last visit to Lafayette I found the people much excited about the fever, and could not gather a congregation. Mr. Stephens, a good old Methodist man, encouraged me greatly. He built a church some years ago in Lafayette, but the white people will not not worship God in it; he wants the colored people at work to overthrow Satan's kingdom."

He writes again October 7:

"The yellow fever attacked my little boy the first of the month. I took it next day, then my wife fell—we were all down at once. I suffered all but death. We are better now, but not able to sit up. We have every attention; the Doctor comes every day. We had good nursing, but as for me I did not know whether I would live or die, but God has spared me. The fever is increasing here, and there is great suffering among the poor people."

Rev. Edward Jackson writes from Washington, La., under date of September 30:

"I am now living in this town; times seem sad here; the yellow fever has taken a great many of our people. Mr. Talbot, the schoolteacher, died; also, our friend Lieut. Brown. Last week I attended the funeral of an old Indian woman, in their settlement near by. It seemed to affect them very much. We have a great work to do among these poor people. Our Church matters are hindered by no one being allowed to go or come from the neighboring plantations, where most of our members live. My wife was on Pickett's place, staying with a friend, and wishing to join me here, had to come out on the road where I found her under a tree, with two bundles, and she sick; then I had to change my clothing in the road. Poor people are in much suffering here; some have lain sick twenty-four hours without care or medicine, and some have died for want of attendance. Rev. G. W. Steptoe of New Orleans is doing much good among our yellow fever sufferers. He has great skill and fearlessness in treating patients."

He writes October 7:

"My wife and I have been down with yellow fever and are now quite unwell. I removed from Opelousas because the quarantine laws would not let me visit the churches. Since, I have had much to do, attending the sick and funerals. Yesterday (Sunday) I had a beautiful Sunday-school at Prescott's, and preached after dinner to a large audience. The epidemic is ceasing; no new cases occur. Our Washington church looks beautiful. It only needs the covering finished. The property here and in Opelousas is well taken care of. Edward looks after it here until Mr. De Lacy can return and complete it. I have placed a good bell in the church; it can be heard three miles, I am told. My wife had not seen me for two weeks when she came out on the road, and she began to weep with sorrow, not being admitted to any house for fear of fever."

Rev. Mr. Small writes from Alexandria September 23:

"My wife has been sick near two months, but is better. I have made some improvements on the parsonage, school-house and church, and whitewashed the buildings and fences again. It has been very sickly here, but no deaths among our members. There is much excitement about the elections. Because of my wife's illness I have not gone away much, but will soon get about my circuit. We have class regularly and good meetings, but suffer for want of leaders. Brothers Wallace and Gregory and Henderson have helped me a great deal. The Sunday-school is doing well. We need books but are not able to buy them."

He writes again under date October 5:

"There is a great deal of sickness here yet, but not many deaths; every body is much excited. Loss of crops, voting matters, and sickness together. Thank God the day-school and Sunday-school are doing very well. Miss Jones, the teacher, was very sick last night. Sister Carnal has been very sick; brother Exel is very sick; brothers Kitchen and Cephas are getting better slowly. The election went off very quietly. No one attempted to harm or insult us, and all of our people behaved well."

Rev. E. Hayward writes from Natchitoches, La:

"I have been in the country and had a fine time. Received seven members. Brother Alfred is getting on well with his society. The Sunday-school has thirty children.—Many of his people have moved to the hills on account of the high water Brother Apley is doing well with his class; he has a good Sunday-school. Brother LeRoy has been called to the convention and cannot give us much of his labor in the day school now. There is much sickness and the times are hard. Everything is high. We have had six converts lately and I have baptised thirty-nine persons. My wife is slowly getting about and I am improving after our sickness. The Church is doing well."

Political.—The Houston Telegraph says we frequently hear the names of gentlemen mentioned in connection with the next congressional election in this district. Prominent among these are Hon. Hamilton Stuart, editor of the Civilian, Galveston, and Judge C. B. Sabin, Houston.

Letter from Rev. James Lynch.

The M. E. and African M. E. Churches.

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 22, 1867.

Editor New Orleans Advocate—Having been for some years a minister of the African M. E. Church, and editor of its official organ, the Christian Recorder, in view of the criticism on my change of ecclesiastical relation to the M. E. Church, which has ever and anon timidly and censurably been made during the past few months, and the importance of the issue now, unfortunately, made between these two branches of Methodism in the South, I beg leave to offer the remarks contained in this communication.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church came into existence by the violent exercise of prejudice against color, in some portions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which many of the colored brethren thought they could not correct by staying in it, and therefore, formed a separate organization. These abuses resulted from the influence of the political and social status of the colored man in the United States. There was not, however, a unanimity of feeling among the colored members of the M. E. Church; many chose to remain, on the same principle that they would not leave the United States and go to Africa, believing that they had a battle to fight inside of the communion of the hallowed M. E. Church, and that they had only to bide their time to enjoy the fruits of victory. The African M. E. Church went on, growing in numbers, intelligence and wealth, finding sympathy on account of the bitter prejudice which hunted the colored man, even around God's altar, to brand him as an inferior being. Strange as it may seem, the colored members of the M. E. Church continued to grow in numbers, intelligence and piety, keeping ahead of the brethren of the African church in the States of Maryland and Kentucky, and in the District of Columbia. A faith in the purity of the principles of Methodism nerved them to go forward when the dark sky and heaving billows had frightened their brethren of the African church, and caused them to take another course.

I have ever rejoiced in the prosperity of the African M. E. Church, and if anything in my connection with it renders me liable to criticism, it is that my unbounded zeal had caused me to exercise ecclesiastical strategy to promote its interests, especially while defending it in the Christian Record from the censure bestowed upon it by loyal men and ministers in the North and South, on account of its strange affiliation.

When the war commenced, I saw emancipation for the slave in the glare of cannon and musket, drawing along with it political equality. I felt that distinction on account of color had received the brand "Mene Tekel Upharsin," and I wrote a series of articles in November of 1863, (when no intimation had been given by the M. E. Church of a desire to carry on its work among the freedmen,) entitled "Let the word African be stricken from the denominational title of our church." At that time I was laying the foundations of the present work of that church in South Carolina. These articles appeared in the Christian Recorder, and brought upon my head the anathemas of the church. The cry went up, "He would have us go back into the M. E. Church!"

At the General Conference of 1864 I urged that the A. M. E. Church exhibit an inclination to unite with the M. E. Church on a practical basis that would respect right and justice. I urged that if by our course we declared that it was impossible for us to enjoy ecclesiastical equality in a church with white men, because they were white, we thereby declared it was impossible for us to enjoy political equality under the government of the United States, because of its white element.

But from the meeting of the General Conference of both churches in 1864, up to 1867, the African M. E. Church has exhibited no signs of affiliation with the M E. Church, and has viewed and stigmatized its enormous appropriations, its stupendous exertions, and the heroic sacrifices of its ministers for the evangelization and education of the freedman as hypocritical, and prompted only by a desire of aggrandizement. They have found fault that the missionary treasury of the M. E. Church was not unlocked to them to distribute its funds.

Against this course from beginning to end, my protest stands recorded. I told the brethren on the floor of the Baltimore Conference that "I loved the A. M. E. Church—the organization that had tended to the development of my talents and usefulness, but I loved my race and my God better; and in the grand fight to release ourselves from the thraldom of American slavery and caste, selfish motives and prejudices should not cause us to spurn those who could lead ns to victory."

Shortly after the surrender of the rebel armies, the A. M. E. Church, for the sake of extending its influence and increasing its power, was found at the feet of the M. E. Church South, in the manner in which its delegates negotiated on its behalf with the Southern General Conference. A more humiliating spectacle—a more expressive want of manliness was never witnessed than the bearing of the delegates of the A. M. E. Church to the disloyal conclave of ministers assembled in a General Conference of the M. E. Church South.

No freedman on a Louisiana plantation would treat the resolutions of these African Methodist Episcopal delegates to that conference with anything else but contempt. The files of the Christian Recorder contain my protest against their course, and an attempt to relieve the A. M. E. Church of its responsibility.

But the A. M. E. Church said "Amen" to their conduct; "by that course we will get the people," and led on by the same insane policy that throws it at the feet of the Unitarian Church to-day, and enables that Christless body to boast that it has found a conducting pipe to convey its heresies to the colored people of the South; the conferences went into jubilation over it, and the communications of the preachers in the Recorder teemed with praises of the M. E. Church South.

Though this strange conduct of the A. M. E. Church was so inconsistent with its historic record, and well nigh imperilled the highest interests of our race; though it was regretted seriously by statesmen who had planned for our welfare; though it was criticised by the leading journals of the M. E. Church, and even other denominations, no disclaimer was ever made on behalf of the church, except that which I, as editor of the Christian Recorder, made in spite of the lack of sympathy with my course among my bishops and brethren. There is one exception, however; about eighteen months after the African M. E. Church had fallen into this terrible abyss, and the incense which she was offering to the enemies of the Government and of Liberty rested like dark and ominous clouds over her semi-centenary head, Bishop Payne wrote letters to the Central Christian Advocate, saying that the A. M. E. Church was not responsible for the position apparently assumed! The excellent Bishop's letters were good, but too late.

Interpreting the continuedly expressed suspicion and ridicule by the A. M. E. Church of every step of the M. E. Church towards the recognition of the brotherhood of man, and its persistent course in exhibiting a preference for the church South, as a desire to keep up a separate organization based on color at all hazards, and knowing that on that rock our hopes as a race for political equality might split, knowing that the two hundred and fifty thousand Methodists of the South might be thereby kept from that aid which the M. E. Church can alone afford, I ceased to be zealous for the extension of the African M. E. Church, and incidentally made my feelings known to leading characters in the M. E. Church, and shortly afterwards joined that denomination.

The Recorder of July 20th insinuates that I did not leave the church as I should. Well, let us see. I resigned my office as editor of the Christian Recorder to the bishops and book committee; they reluctantly accepted it, and passed resolutions highly commendatory of my services and integrity. I resigned the charge of Bethel Church, Philadelphia, the largest in the connection, to which I had been appointed at the Annual Conference a few days previous, and the presiding bishop declared, "I find no fault in him." After this was done I sent to the presiding bishop my letter of withdrawal; it was accepted. Having joined the M. E. Church with the highest testimonials that the A. M. E. Church had accorded, I was astonished that my former colleague could reach the depth of penning the article of July 20th.

I replied to said article; he did not publish the reply, nor would he state that he received it, and boast was made that I did not do so. The editor of the Home Journal, Rev. A. Wallace, who knows every step in my change of relation, called on the editor of the Recorder, and asked for my reply, and was gravely informed that it had been received, but could not be found.

On September 24th, while I was patiently awaiting the appearance of my reply, the organ of the A. M. E. Church oracularly informed the public that I was "fixing a halter around my neck," because I had joined the M. E. Church. The editor of the Home Journal, in its issue of the 28th inst., impliedly challenges the African M. E. organ to show fairly that I was censurable in my course of changing my church relation. Whereupon the Christian Recorder, with its characteristic muddy "clearness" and maleability, says it "never had said anything against Brother Lynch"

While I honor the A. M. E. Church for what it has done, and claim an equal interest with any other colored man in the noble ministers it contains, I firmly believe that its mission as a separate organization is near at a close; that it has not the ability to carry on the great work of Methodist reconstruction in the South.

The M. E. Church is dotting the South with temples, where white and black can meet as equals around God's altar, while its biblical institutes, institutions of learning, the common schools which follow in its wake, its numerous periodicals, pleading for our religious, civil and political equality—these make me believe that it is God's chosen power to lift up my race from degradation. Every day increases my attachment to the "old mother church." When I know that only the other day Bishop Kingsley had white and colored kneel together at the Holsten Conference in Tennessee, to receive ordination and holy communion, thus giving the death blow to caste, my soul leaped for joy, and I say as did millions who have crossed over Jordan, and millions who are on the way: "God bless the Methodist Episcopal Church."

JAMES LYNCH,
Presiding Elder South Mississippi District.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

Correspondence from Texas.

Galveston, Texas, Oct. 24, 1867.

Editor Advocate—"We are out (in) an ocean." "All boundless we" stand still—not ride. The only connection we have ever had to main land, viz, the railroad bridge, has been swept away by the recent flood, and as a city we are at a stand-still. The trains to the interior stop and start from the other side of the bay, seven miles distant, and all persons and freight must be ferried to and from that point.

The railroad company is too poor to rebuild the bridge; the city scrip goes begging at 25 cents discount on the dollar. The Mayor and Council are not in sympathy—the first inefficient, and the latter of strong rebel proclivities, while the military power consists of a lieutenant commanding the post of Galveston, who, according to rumor has no more brains than is actually necessary to perform the functions of his office.

Yesterday the Chief of Police (who was appointed by General Griffin, and, by the way, imported from your city,) was suspended by the Mayor on the charge of brutality, and the above mentioned lieutenant issues an order disannulling the same, and declaring the chief in full exercise of the duties of said office. Politically we are in a muddle.

Religiously, there is but one white church open on the Sabbath (the M. E. S.) The temporary pastor of the Episcopal church died suddenly last week. The colored churches are kept open, and services are held three times each Sabbath in them all. Respectfully, G. W. H.

The Iberville South is discussing the question in regard to the degeneration of sugar cane in Louisiana. This question was discussed many years ago, and wound up with the general conclusion that the alarm on this question was groundless. We have no doubt the burning of the baggasse has proved detrimental to the crop, and that if all the leaves, tops, and baggasse could be returned to the soil it would be of immense advantage. If the sugar lands of this state had not been the richest and most inexhaustible on earth the severe cropping which they have had to endure would have long since ruined them.—Planters' Banner, Franklin.

The Thirtieth of July Murderers.—The Pittsburg Gazette copies a portion of an editorial in this paper relating to the charge of Judge Thomas and the 30th of July murderers, and adds:

We agree with the Republican that the murderers of Dostie, Loup, Henderson, Horton, Hurst, and the other patriots who fell in the riot should be brought to condign punishment.

Foreign News.

PARIS, October 23.—At a grand banquet to Napoleon, Eugenie, and Francis Joseph, the Hotel de Ville was splendidly decorated. Francis Joseph, in a speech, thanked the people, and invoked closer amity. In this ovation he saw a new pledge of peace. Many in the streets cheered lustily.

ROME, October 24.—There has been fighting within half a mile of the city. Great excitement prevails within the walls. The revolutionists are preparing for a second rising. A proclamation forbids the assemblage of over four persons, and requires all persons to retire within their houses and close their shops on the signal of alarm.

ROME, October 25.—One thousand Garibaldians attacked Viterbo yesterday, firing one of the gates, but were repulsed with a heavy loss of men and material, and their leader was killed.

The Roman citizens including the aristocracy are armed and patrol the streets.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 25.—It is stated the government has agreed to part with its interest in the New Orleans and Carrollton railroad to Beauregard and others for $280,000.

A new panel of twenty six white jurors has been drawn to try Surratt.

Governor Austin, of Honduras, has been removed by the British government for illegally selling the crown lands to Southern emigrants.

The Haytien rebellion has been suppressed.

The correspondence relative to the Nashville elections will be published Monday. Grant instructed Thomas that his duty was to prevent collisions.

If Brownlow should issue a proclamation declaring insurrection or invasion to exist too formidable for the forces at his command and called upon the United States to aid it should be given.

His mission was to preserve peace, not to take sides in political differences until called upon according to law.

He was to prevent mobs from aiding either party, and if called upon legally to interfere his duty was plain.

WASHINGTON, October 25.—The secretary of the Indian commission telegraphs, October 23, that a treaty has been made with the Comanches and Kiowas, and the prospects are good for peace with the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Apaches.

Secretary McCulloch issues this following: Merchandise intended for ports and places in the interior of Mexico, may be duly withdrawn from warehouse and transported by sea in bond to Galveston, and from thence via Alleytown and Gonzales to San Antonio, and from thence by way of Eagle Pass, Presidio del Norte or San Elizario to its destination in Mexico under the restrictions and requirements provided in section six, chapter three, of regulations.

The Election in Virginia.

WHEELING, Va., October 25.—The returns on the legislative elections in West Virginia are meagre, but indicate a diminishing vote. The Democrats make large gains so far as heard from.

The city of Wheeling and Ohio county give 700 Democratic majority. Brooke county elects the entire Democratic ticket. Wood, Marshall, Wirt, Beakley, and probably Harrison counties have gone Republican.

Foreign News.

FLORENCE, October 25.—Garibaldi, without regarding the prohibition of the Italian government, left Foligno and pushed on to the south. At last accounts he had arrived at Riclia, a town not far from the Papal frontier, and forty-two miles from Rome.

General Bixio has accepted a position in the new cabinet as minister of marines.

LONDON, October 25.—Additional advices from Rome say the Garibaldians have not all retired from the territory of the church, but represent that the pontifical troops have recently had encounters with remnants of insurgent bands, in which they have been uniformly successful.

Intelligence has been received from China that a great battle was fought between the rebel army and the Tartar forces of the Chinese emperor. The Imperialists were defeated. The battle took place thirty miles from Pekin, which city was in great danger.

PARIS, October 25.—The reception of the emperor of Austria has been most cordial. His visit is popular with the Parisians, and wherever he appears he meets with enthusiastic manifestations of welcome. Sympathy for the brother of the unfortunate Maximilian heightens the esteem with which the emperor is regarded by all classes.

FLORENCE, October 23, 9 P. M.—The news to-night is glorious for the cause of Italy. The government deems it best to suppress the details for the present.

From Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, October 25.—The whites are taking more interest in the approaching elections since the result of the Virginia election became known. Five days more are allowed for registration.

From New York.

NEW YORK, October 25.—The Tribune takes the ground that the attorney general should lead the prosecution in the Davis case.

The steamer Amsterdam went ashore and bilged at Montauk Point.

From Nashville.

NASHVILLE, October 25.—Brownlow is elected senator by twenty majority.

From Havana.

HAVANA, October 25.—The weather continues stormy. The steamer Marsella, from Vera Cruz, 20th, has arrived. She brings news from the capitol to the 11th instant. The election of Juarez is certain. Miramon gets only seventy-five votes. The success of the amendment to the constitution is improbable.

Admiral Tegethoff is still here. No certainty of getting the emperor's body soon.

The Marsella brings the captain and crew of the British schooner Village Belle, from Cozumel island, where she was lost on her trip from New Orleans.

M. Emile Lagere, of New Orleans, has obtained from the Mexican government the exclusive right to use the Tehuantepec route for the purpose of opening a line of transportation from Minatitlan by steamer to the head of navigation, on the Coatzacoalcos river, and thence by rail to Ventosa or some other point on the Pacific coast. The New York company, which was also seeking to obtain control of the route, did not succeed in effecting their object.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 25.—A recent dispatch announcing that Mr. Davis would certainly be tried at the approaching term in Richmond gave the impression that this determination was arrived at after consultation with the attorney general. It is reiterated that the federal executive has taken no interest in the case since Mr. Davis was delivered to the civil authorities. Mr. Stanbery has given the prosecution officially neither direction nor advice.

Reliable information has been received here that Juarez has issued a new grant for opening the Tehuantepec route to Elozere.

Official papers at the bureau of statistics show 5,067,028 acres planted in cotton this year, yielding about 1,568,357 bales of 450 pounds each.

Revenue receipts $450,000.

The matter of the Georgia university was presented to the president, who referred it to General Grant, by whom it was referred to General Pope.

All matters connected with the districts take the same course, neither the president nor General Grant taking any responsibility beyond referring to the district commanders.

Georgians here are hopeless of any change in General Pope's election districts.

From Europe.

PARIS, October 25, Evening.—The Paris official press says that the Italian affairs are worse than when Napoleon planned the expedition to Rome. Cialdini renounces the formation of the cabinet, and advises the retention of Ratazzi. Garibaldi, heading a strong force, is ready to pass the frontier. Civita Vecchia is in a state of seige.

PARIS, October 26, Noon.—The Garibaldians are marching on to Rome in two columns. They are at Monte Rolondi, in sight of the city. The Papal forces retire fighting. Rome is in a state of seige.

The Moniteur says the Toulon fleet has been ordered to sail.

LONDON, October 26.—A mine fired under the barracks of the Papal zouaves shattered the building, and injured several of the zouaves. A simultaneous outbreak was quickly suppressed.

FLORENCE, October 26.—News has been received here that Garibaldi was victorious in a fierce battle with the Papal troops, capturing one hundred prisoners and their guns.

Many were killed and wounded on both sides. Garibaldi had four battalions.

PARIS, October 27.—Garibaldi's force is estimated at from ten to twelve thousand. The Papal forces are concentrated before Rome, with instructions to act on the defensive.

The troops which sailed from Toulon are expected to reach Civita Vecchia this afternoon.

ROME, October 26.—The Pope in a letter to the Roman Catholic bishops throughout the world, says the patrimony of the church has been assailed by revolutionists, and asks them to order prayers in all the churches for the holy see.

The police, on Friday, in searching a house, met with resistance, when they attacked the house with bayonets, killed fifteen Garibaldians, and took thirty-six prisoners and a quantity of arms and bombs.

TOULON, October 27.—Ten thousand troops have arrived from Africa.

PARIS, October 27.—A council was held at St. Cloud to-day, the emperor presiding. The Cherbourg squadron was ordered to Italy.

FLORENCE, October 27.—The Garibaldians continue to cross the frontier. The telegraph is cut and Rome is isolated from the rest of the world.

MADRID, October 26.—Spain has decided to join any action of the Catholic powers if favor of the Pope.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 26.—Bishop Wilmer is here in good health.

It is estimated at the bureau of statistics that the districts unreported will add one-sixteenth to the crop figures telegraphed last night.

The president has proclaimed the 28th of November a day of national thanksgiving.

Grant has gone to West Point. He will return Tuesday.

The treasury holds $378,898,000 as security for national bank circulation and public deposits.

The total national bank circulation is $299,107,000.

Revenue receipts to-day, $403,000. Receipts for the week, $2,290,000. For the fiscal year to date, $67,788,000. Customs receipts for the week ending 19th instant, $2,895,000.

It is stated that three counterfeit $50 compound interest notes passed through three branches of the treasury, and were finally stoped in the register's office. It is stated also that a $100 counterfeit compound interest note passed into the New York sub-treasury.

In consideration of recent disasters the Republican congressional committee have deemed proper to issue an address to the people. The document, which is an earnest appeal to Republicans to show their strength, is published to-day.

In the absence of definite returns from West Virginia, the following from this evening's Tribune is telegraphed:

"West Virginia voted on Thursday for legislative officers. The canvass was quite tame and no special effort was made on either side. Outside influence worked against the Republicans, and we hear of considerable Democratic gains in the river districts."

Foreign News

TOULON, October 26.—The fleet of iron clads left at six o'clock this morning. The transports with troops will follow immediately. The shipment of war material progresses vigorously.

TURIN, October 26.—A grand popular demonstration to-day favoring Rome for the capital adopted an address to the king.

PARIS, October 27.—The Moniteur says: "The fleet was kept back at the request of Victor Emanuel, but subsequently sailed because no cabinet could be formed, and Garibaldi was moving on Rome." The Moniteur adds that France and Italy are both interested in maintaining law and order. M. Rouher, in a dinner speech, hoped that Italy under bad passions would not fight France, but would emerge from this trial purified.

Garibaldi with 10,000 men was before Rome after the battle of Monte Rotundo

LATER.—Prince Humbert leads the troops against the French. It is said that Victor Emanuel abdicates.

Garibaldi was checked at Monte Rotundo by the reinforced Papal troops.

PARIS, October 27.—The Moniteur issued yesterday evening announces to the public in the official column that in view of the fresh invasion of the papal territory, and the renewal of the attempts of the revolutionists on Rome, the Emperor Napoleon has repeated his order for the force of expeditionary troops already mustered at Toulon to embark for the Roman waters.

From Albany.

ALBANY, October 26.—Senator W. J. Humphrey, of the thirtieth district, has been indicted for corruption in the legislature and held to bail in $2000.

From Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, October 26.—Charles P. Bayard, stock broker, has suspended.

Financial Matters in New York.

NEW YORK, October 26.—Money easier for call loans than for a long time—easy at 6 per cent.

The bank statement Monday will be favorable.

Governments took a sudden and marked rise at the close, with improved demand.

Sterling dull and nominal. Gold closed firm at 141¾. Stocks lower at the last open board and subsequently.

Bank statement shows a decrease in loans of $743,000; decrease in specie, $157,000; decrease in circulation, $98,000; decrease in deposits, $374,000; increase in legal tenders, $2,036,000.

From Mobile.

MOBILE, October 26.—Two interments from yellow fever to-day. Raining this evening.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 26.—Official returns of the late election indicate the election of thirty conservatives and sixty radicals, eighteen of the latter colored. Sixty-five counties give 70,777 for and 44,925 against a convention. A number of counties are yet to be heard from.

The polls closed in Richmond at 1 o'clock on Thursday morning with a majority of 406 for the Hunnicutt ticket. J. H. Gilmer, a prominent lawyer of Richmond, has filed with Schofield a formal protest against counting the votes received after sunset on Wednesday. He holds that the clause of the supplemental bill which provides that thirty days public notice shall be given of the time of holding the election limits the general to the time designated in his order. He also urges shameless frauds and the overawing of conservative voters by colored police in the employ of Colonel Rose, superintendent of the election.

Considerable excitement is caused by the fact that two citizens of Richmond, one a prominent tobacco manufacturer, have been ordered by a negro vigilance committee to leave the city in forty-eight hours. Their offense was violent opposition to the radical ticket.

From Omaha.

OMAHA, October 27.—The five hundredth mile of the Union Pacific railroad was made yesterday. Seventeen miles more will carry the track to the eastern base of the Rocky mountains.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, October 28.—Pope declines to change the Georgia districts. He reports to Grant that he reflected two days before adopting the present plan. It is fair to say that the president's indorsement on the complaint amounted to a strong protest.

Grant's answer to the president mildly agreed with the president's views, but expressed the apprehension that it was now too late to make changes. Grant's endorsement on referring the papers to Pope has not transpired.

The British government having declined to release Colonels Warren and Nagle, they will be tried immediately, and the state department has ordered the employment of counsel for their defense.

It is not intended by the recent cotton regulations, series 3, number 5, to require permits and bills of lading for the removal of cotton from point to point within the district where the same is produced, as in the case of removal from such district. A collector should not exact a fee from the tax payer for marking his cotton.

WASHINGTON, October 28.—The treaty with the Kiowa and Comanche Indian tribes gives them about six thousand square miles between the north fork of the Red river and Red river, embracing the southwestern corner of the present Indian territory with a fraction from Texas. They promise to induce the Comanches of northern Texas to come into the reservation. If successful the government gives them more land.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $710,400.

It is stated that John Minor Botts received but eight white votes, all cast by native Virginians, and his successful competitor, Mr. Manz, received fourteen negro votes.

One hundred and fifty-four farms were added to the productive force of Mississippi during the month of September.

A special from Florence says Garibaldi had 4000 followers on crossing the frontier.

Proceedings were commenced to-day by Henry B. Taylor, who went South, to recover property from John D. Defrees, who purchased it at a confiscation sale.

Colonel Parker estimates the cost of putting the Dismal swamp canal in good condition at $350,000. He advises against further expenditure upon it by the government.

A screw pile lighthouse has been built at Somers' Cove, at the mouth of Little Annamessix river, Tangier sound. A light will be exhibited from it on the 6th of November.

Miscellaneous News.

MEMPHIS, October 28.—Eight yellow fever interments yesterday.

Weather cloudy and warm.

NORFOLK, October 28.—A storm is extending all along the Atlantic seaboard.

AUGUSTA, October 28.—The Republicans held a mass meeting to-night. Blodget, Bullock, Conly, and Beard, candidates for convention, made speeches indorsing the Atlanta platform. Steps were taken to prevent disturbances during the election. Freedmen are coming in from the country this evening to take part in the election. There is no opposing candidate, the conservatives apparently having determined to take no part in the election.

WILMINGTON, October 28.—Tremendous rain is falling with heavy winds, producing very high tide, and submerging wharves on the opposite side of the river. No serious damage is apprehended. There is a very heavy storm outside. No disasters yet reported.

SAVANNAH, October 28.—The election for delegates to the convention commences to-morrow, and lasts three days.

CINCINNATI, October 28.—It has been raining steadily since 1 P. M. Barometer falling.

Ben Parkinson and Tom Kelly fought fourteen rounds at Acquia creek to-day. Kelly won by a foul. The second round lasted eight minutes.

From Georgia.

COLUMBUS, Ga., October 29.—The election to-day passed off quietly, no disturbances, and but little interest manifested; 658 polled, 400 for the county and 258 for the city, only a few whites, radicals, voting. Registered voters for the county and city about 3000. Conservatives take no part in the election.

MACON, October 29.—Election to-day passed off very quietly, no whites voting. The negroes had it all their own way. Four hundred and sixty-eight votes were polled in the city, and three hundred and thirty-seven in the country. Precincts heard from indicate no election on part of the whites.

AUGUSTA, October 29.—Returns from all parts of the state indicate that the conservatives took no part in the election, which passed off quietly. Nearly all the votes cast were for the convention. There was 1785 votes polled here—1073 for the city and 712 for the county, all for convention.

The following returns have been received from the interior: Rome, 700 votes polled, nearly all for convention; scarcely any whites voting. Marietta, 305 votes polled; mostly freedmen; nearly all for convention. LaGrange, about 500 negroes and one white vote polled; all for convention.

Excepting city and county officers no respectable white men are connected with the affair. In Griffin 675 votes were polled—550 for a convention. 175 to 200 whites voted at Fort Gaines. In Clay county 300 votes were polled, all for a convention; no white man offered or cast a ballot. Americus, from 500 to 600 votes polled, all colored. Albany, 399 negroes and 1 white, who voted for himself—all for a convention; the whites kept away from the polls altogether.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, October 29.—Hunnicutt addressed a large crowd of negroes in the capitol square this evening. In the course of his remarks he alluded to certain threats made to kill him, and said: "I will not leave. Don't you know, fellow citizens, that when the assassin's bullet passes my brain, or his dagger touches my heart more than one white man will fall upon that day." The assemblage responded "Yes, yes."

From Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, October 29.—The steamships W. P. Clyde and Rebecca Clyde, for New York, and Joseph A. Garey, of Baltimore, detained inside the bar several days by heavy weather, crossed the bar this morning. The Pioneer, for Philadelphia, and Fairbanks, for New York, will probably cross to-night or to-morrow. Weather clear. No material damage in this section by the late storm.

Foreign Intelligence.

FLORENCE, October 28.—The particulars of the engagement at Monte Rotondo represent the fighting to have been desperate. At one time during the day when the Papal reinforcements arrived the result seemed doubtful, but in the end Garibaldi, who led the volunteers in person, was completely successful. He immediately followed up the victory and vigorously pursued the Papals, who fell back on Rome.

At the last accounts the Garibaldians, ten or twelve thousand strong, had reached the outer fortifications of Rome.

LONDON, October 28.—Advices from Rome state that great agitation prevailed; the Garibaldian attack was hourly expected. The pope had retired from the Vatician and sought refuge within the castle of St. Angelo.

FLORENCE, October 28.—Menabrea has succeeded in forming a cabinet. A proclamation has been issued, signed by the king, denouncing Garibaldi, and declaring that the policy of France meets the approval of the Italian government.

MADRID, October 29.—Losandi has finally accepted the Cuban captain generalship.

LIVERPOOL, October 29.—The Fenian panic still exists. Armories and gunshops are guarded and patrols doubled.

MANCHESTER, October 30.—The trial of the rioters is progressing. The case is strong against them, and much excitement exists. The court is guarded by national troops. Dingley Seymour, counsel for the defense, moved to remove the trials to London on account of local prejudice.

The Georgia Election.

SAVANNAH, October 30.—The elections passed off quietly. Total vote as far as heard from 25,000. Only one white vote polled to-day—making two whites who have voted. The negroes have it all their own way. The whites do not go near the polls; they regard the whole thing as a farce. Nearly all the votes cast are for the negro radical ticket.

General Pope has extended the time of election two days.

ATLANTA, October 30.—The total vote of Fulton county, including Atlanta, for two days, was 1810, four-fifths of which number are for a convention and the Union reconstruction ticket.

AUGUSTA, October 30.—General Pope has issued an order to the registration boards to keep the polls open until 6 P. M. Saturday, an extension of two days.

The returns for the first and second days indicated that a convention would be defeated had the time not been extended. It is not even now regarded as certain that the question will be carried. The conservatives generally throughout the state have taken no part in the election. City and county vote to-day 830; for two days 2615. Lagrange: Vote for two days about 1200; only four whites have voted. Griffin: 233 votes polled to-day; very few whites voting.

AUGUSTA, 10 P. M.—Nothing from other precincts up to this hour.

COLUMBUS, Ga., October 30.—Result of two days election. 1117 votes polled, all for convention. Only 25 whites voted. The number of registration in the county 2910—1150 whites and 1760 blacks.

The president has been talking more bosh diplomatically—this time to the Turkish embassador. "He was gratified to know that in Turkey as in this country, no matter how humble may be a man's position, he may aspire to the higher positions of the government." This means that in Turkey they have practically a democracy, which isn't true, nor is there the least similarity between the institutions of Turkey and those of the United States, as Blacque Bey, the Turkish minister, was pleased to assert. General Hassem Pasha, of Tunis, who was presented on this occasion, may have been formerly "a Circassian slave," but a government of the oriental description, under which favorite slaves rise to office is not by any means democratic. Joseph (vide, Genesis XXXIX.) was bought by Colonel Potiphar, of the household troops of Pharaoh, and after various adventures was made a confidential servant of the monarch, was "set over all the land of Egypt," was "made to ride in the second chariot," and would doubtless, have been sent embarssador to the United States if there had been any United States to send him to. Does it follow that the government of Egypt was a pure democracy? On the contrary, does not the fact that the king could advance a slave to be his private minister prove that it was a despotism? The advancement of low-born favorites (vide "Arabian Nights" passim) has always been a feature of oriental despotisms. We mean no disrespect to General Hassem Pasha, nor to any of the tails of his excellency, by this remark. May his shadow never be less! And may the time come when there shall be no Circassian slaves in the Turkish empire to pick and choose from.—N. Y. Tribune.

Astonished Red Men.

A band of Indians made a sudden attack on a detachment of our soldiers in the mountains. The soldiers had a mountain howitzer mounted on a mule. Not having time to take it off and put it in position, they backed up the mule and let drive at the Indians. The load was so heavy that mule and all went tumbling down the hill toward the savages, who, not understanding that kind of warfare, fled like deers. Afterward one of them was captured, and when asked why he run so replied: "Me big Injin; not afraid of little guns or big guns; but when white man load up and fire a whole jackass at Injin, me don't know what to do."

DISTRICT COURT.—According to law the district court for this parish should open next Monday. So far as the jury question is concerned that is settled beyond a question. General Mower, under date of the 8th, telegraphs Judge Weems that the instructions sent by Colonel Gentry to the district attorney of Ouachita parish to draw the jury from the registered voters found on the assessment roll are official. The list of jurors published in the last Southwestern were drawn in conformity with the state laws, and recognized as legal jurors by the miltary authorities. The only drawback to our having a court seems to be the impossibility of getting together the men drawn for the first week, owing in a measure to the epidemic. Many of them reside in the country, and have a very strong aversion to visiting the city at this time. From present appearances we doubt very much whether the sheriff will be able to collect enough of the sovereigns together to form a grand jury.—Shreveport Southwestern.

THE VOTE OF THE SOUTHERN STATES.—Some Southern journals assert that the whites mostly stayed away from the polls in the recent elections in Louisiana and Alabama, and insinuate that the vote does not in consequence show what is the popular will. So small a vote, these writers think, ought not to be regarded. Now it happens that in both these states the vote actually cast at the recent elections is larger than that cast by them in the presidential election of 1860, the last at which they voted. In Alabama, at the recent election, 93,357 votes were cast, while in the presidential election of 1860 the state cast only 90,357. In Louisiana, at the recent election, 79,174 votes were cast, while in the election of 1860 the state cast only 50,510.—N. Y. Evening Post.

We learn from Mr. Theodore Whiteman, secretary of the Howards, that there were ten new cases of yellow fever and four deaths reported to that association on Wednesday night last. There have been about forty-five cases in all reported to the Howards. FIRST DISTRICT COURT.

ANOTHER CHARGE TO THE GRAND JURY.

The Law of Registration.

THE LAW OF LOTTERY TICKETS.

General Rules for Finding Indictments.

Judge Thomas, in the first district court, yesterday addressed the grand jury again as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE GRAND JURY—In the remarks I had the honor to address you on the occasion of your first assembling I omitted to call your attention to two acts of the legislature which the court is therein directed to do.

The one is "An act relative to the registry of votes in the city of New Orleans." This act provides that the various sextons of New Orleans shall make monthly returns to the register of voters of the names of all white males above the age of twenty-one buried in their respective cemeteries, and directs the register to note on his original registry, opposite the name of such person the word "dead." The same return is required of the secretary of the Charity hospital. In making out the list of voters for the commissioners of elections, the register is directed to insert the word "dead" wherever it appears on the original.

These are the provisions of the first three sections of the act. In the fourth a penalty of not more than twenty dollars or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days is inflicted on those who violate those provisions, but the same section gives the recorders' courts of this city jurisdiction over such cases. I therefore charge you that you have nothing to do with such offenses.

The other two sections make it the duty of the register of voters to furnish information to the district attorney of persons voting on the certificates of dead persons, or otherwise fraudulently voting, and the district attorney is directed to prosecute all such offenders, who upon conviction are to suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not less than one nor more than five years, or to be fined in a sum of not less than $250 nor more than $1000. For willfully failing to perform the duties provided for in the first three sections of this act, the register of voters is liable, on conviction before this court, to a fine of not less than $500, and imprisonment in the parish prison for not less than one year nor more than five.

The last section makes it the duty of this court to call the attention of the grand jury specially to this law at each term of the court.

The word "register," as used in this act, means the person appointed under the law of Louisiana, and has no reference to those lately appointed by the military authority of the government to carry into effect the election ordered by congress. Concerning the registry of the voters, or the frauds committed by them, or by voters in that election, they are matters which do not fall in my opinion, within the scope of your authority to inquire. The word "election" employed by the law giver refers undoubtedly to one ordered by the law of Louisiana, and the register who either fraudulently refused to register a person entitled to register under the act of congress ordering the late election, or who fraudulently admitted to registry a person not entitled to registration, is not amenable to the state law.

I have seen it stated in the newspapers that the office of register of voters of this parish has been declared by an authority having the power at his command to carry into effect his declaration a sinecure, and that the register has been ejected. If you should find such to be the case, it would seem strange how he could be held to any accountability, especially under the statute in question. Malice, you must remember, is the essence of all crime, and a man could hardly be called to answer for not performing a duty which he was prevented from doing.

Another act to which I did not direct your attention, and to which by law I was required, is the act of 1855 relative to lotteries, and that also of 1866 on the same subject. For many years our constitutions prohibited the establishment of lotteries and the buying or selling of lottery tickets in this state? The first act referred to was passed during the time of this prohibition. That act provides a penalty for selling lottery tickets or drawing lotteries—a penalty for setting up or promoting lotteries—a penalty for advertising the sale of lottery tickets, and it also provides that any money or property drawn as a prize shall be forfeited to the state.

It then provides that the court must call your attention to it at each term. But by the present constitution the sale of lottery tickets is permitted, provided the legislature should deem it proper, and the last legislature of this state did pass an act, approved February 17, 1866, authorizing the sale and purchase of lottery tickets.

Although this latter act makes no mention of the former, yet it undoubtedly repeals it in all essential parts. The principal provisions of this act are: first, the payment of a license before you are permitted to sell lottery tickets; second, the signing or stamping of them by the state auditor; third, the number of houses or places where tickets may be exposed for sale under the same license; and fourth, the penalty against buying tickets not stamped.

You will not understand me, gentlemen, as addressing or counseling you to indict any particular man for any particular offense, nor will you understand me as advising the contrary. I only speak of the law. The court has nothing whatever to do with the bringing of offenders to trial. It simply sits to decide questions of law between the citizen and the state, without interest on either side.

I ought probably to have made a remark in regard to the sufficiency of evidence to warrant you in finding a bill. You will remember that your examinations are made in secret, that the proceedings had in your jury room are entirely ex parte—that only the state is represented. There should, therefore, be no doubt in your minds as to the guilt of a party accused, in order to justify you in finding a true bill against him. Twelve out of your sixteen can find a bill, but when the party accused is brought here for trial before a petit jury only twelve are called. The accused may object to many of them. He is aided by counsel, and can call witnesses, yet all twelve must agree, and they must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused to justify a verdict.

In your deliberations you will have the benefit of the legal advice of the district attorney, and at times perhaps of the attorney general. They will advise you on questions of law, but on questions of fact you should be governed by the dictates of your own conscience.

The grand jury was then discharged until the 11th of November.

ANOTHER MEDAL FOR BENITO JUAREZ.—The Mexican Standard learns that Messrs. Tucker & Co., jewelers of San Francisco, California, have begun the Juarez medal, the cost of which is to be from three to four thousand dollars, and the workmanship is to be of the most exquisite and superior style possible; indeed it is said that this medal will be the richest, most elaborate, and most costly ever executed on the American continent. The design is by the Mexican artist, Felipe Gutierrez, and is a chef d'oeuvre of art.

HEALTH OF ALEXANDRIA.—The prevailing fever since our last issue has progressed with no abatement. We have to report about the same number of new cases as last week, viz: thirty-five. There have been only five deaths in town, and one in the country, five miles from town. The mildness of the type of the disease is still the same. The physicians are still very successful in their management of it, and from the start the deaths are far below the usual average in epidemics of the kind. From the incipiency of the fever up to the present writing there have been at least one hundred and twenty cases treated, and only fourteen have terminated fatally.—Alexandria Democrat.

INDIANS ON THE EL PASO ROAD.

A Mail Party Attacked.

GALLANTRY OF COLORED CAVALRY.

We learn from the San Antonio Express of the 21st instant that Major Bacon and Lieutenant Fred. Moore, of the ninth United States cavalry, with an escort of seven men on their way down from Fort Lancaster on the 11th instant, after nighfall met a white man running at full speed chased by a party of Indians.

He reported that he was traveling with the mail party when the Indians made the attack. These officers prepared for a fight and pushed onward. Some four miles further on they were hailed by Walton, another white man of the mail party, whom the Indians were after. Still onward they discovered the bodies of Corporal Wright and Private Irvine, colored, of the ninth, and the mail was found scattered along the road.

The mail party, numbering three privates and a corporal of the ninth, with two white men, left Howard springs about sunset. Some three miles from the springs they were surrounded by about three hundred Indians on horseback, who surrounded and began to close in upon them. Walton says the colored soldiers dismounted and acted very bravely, the corporal acting with great coolness. They fought the Indians for some time, when the corporal was shot through by a bullet and sunk to the earth; his last words were: "Take my gun, I am killed." Upon the killing of the corporal, Walton said to the men: "Now we must escape"—the Indians gathering around the mules which carried the mails, they having broken loose. In attempting to force their way through, one of the other colored soldiers was killed along with his horse. Walton abandoned his animal and took to the rocks and bushes, where he was found by Major Bacon's party; and the white man first met got through with a slight wound. The two other colored soldiers have since reported at Lancaster, one wounded through the lungs, and one through the shoulder.

The Express says: It is very unfortunate that our first mail under the new contractor should meet such a fate. The troops along this line are insufficient, as they are now occupied in escort and post duty. A military telegraph is the important necessity of this line of defense, and the establishment of detachments of troops at every water station and even building stations, and making cisterns for water so as to have the troops every twenty miles along the route, and then with the aid of a telegraph such occurrences as the above would never happen, and the Indians would be cut off.

GREAT STORM ON THE RIO GRANDE.

Bagdad Entirely Destroyed.

Matamoras and Brownsville Damaged.

LOSS OF LIFE—DAMAGE TO SHIPPING.

A private letter was received in this city by a well-known citizen, from Mr. Lovenskold, a lawyer of Corpus Christi, and formerly of New Orleans, bearing date of the 14th of this month, in which are given some horrible details of the gale of the 8th inst. The news came by courier to Corpus Christi from Point Isabel.

The city of Bagdad, at the mouth of the Rio Grande on the Mexican side, was entirely washed away during the gale, so that not a vestige of that once thriving city remains. The loss of life it is impossible to calculate, but it is presumed that almost all of the inhabitants perished. The gale also extended its devastating effects far up the river, and the cities of Matamoras and Brownsville were both badly damaged by the gale.

The wife of Judge Bigelow, of Brownsville, was drowned.

Three steamers were reported sunk in the Rio Grande.

The damage done to the settlement at Brazos Santiago could not have been less severe.

The steamer Pisano, bound for New Orleans, had left Bagdad on the 29th of last month and has not since been heard from. The gale evidently caught her in the gulf not far from the river. Mr. Cooper, the Bagdad agent of the boat, was on board of her coming to New Orleans.

The schooner Mary Francis, Captain Charles Liddell, of New Orleans, was blown about four miles up on the beach at the mouth of the Atchafalaya river, and will be a total wreck. She was in ballast, and bound for Pensacola.

Cancellation.

In all cases where an adhesive stamp is used for denoting the stamp duty upon an instrument, the person using or affixing the same must write or imprint thereon in ink the initials of his name, and the date (the year, month, and day) on which the same is attached or used. Each stamp should be separately canceled. When stamps are printed upon checks, etc., so that in filling up the instrument the face of the stamp is and must necessarily be written across, no other cancellation will be required.

All cancellation must be distinct and legible, and except in the case of proprietary stamps from private dies, no method of cancellation which differs from that above described can be recognized as legal and sufficient.

Stamping of Instruments by Collectors.

Any person having an instrument about to be issued, may present it to the collector, who, under the authority conferred upon him by section 162, will so stamp it as to place the sufficiency of that particular instrument beyond all question so far as stamp duties are concerned. The provisions of the section can in no case be applied to an instrument after it has been issued or used. The collector should decline to stamp or impress an instrument, under this section, until the stamp duty with which he thinks it chargeable has been paid. In cases of reasonable doubt he is recommended to obtain the opinion of this office before affixing his stamp, unless immediate action is essential to the interests of the parties concerned.

Penalties.

A penalty of fifty dollars is imposed upon every person who makes, signs, or issues, or who causes to be made, signed, or issued, any paper of any kind or description whatever, or who accepts, negotiates, or pays, or causes to be accepted, negotiated, or paid, any bill of exchange, draft, or order, or promissory note, for the payment of money, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of the revenue act.

A penalty of two hundred dollars is imposed upon every person who pays, negotiates, or offers in payment, or receives or takes in payment, any bill of exchange or order for the payment of any sum of money, drawn or purporting to be drawn in a foreign country, but payable in the United States, until the proper stamp has been affixed thereto.

A penalty of fifty dollars fine is imposed upon every person who fraudulently makes use of an adhesive stamp to denote the duty required by the revenue act, without effectually canceling and obliterating the same in the manner required by law.

General Remarks.

Revenue stamps may be used indiscriminately upon any of the matters or things enumerated in schedule B, except proprietary and playing card stamps, for which a special use has been provided.

Postage stamps can not be used in payment of the duty chargeable on instruments.

The law does not designate which of the parties to an instrument shall furnish the necessary stamp, nor does the Commissioner of Internal Revenue assume to determine that it shall be supplied by one party rather than by another; but if an instrument subject to stamp duty is issued without having the necessary stamps affixed thereto, it can not be recorded, or admitted, or used as evidence in any court, until a legal stamp or stamps, denoting the amount of tax, shall have been affixed as prescribed by law, and the person who thus issues it is liable to a penalty, if he omits the stamps with an intent to evade the provisions of the internal revenue act.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Golden Eagle Coming.

The Boston Transcript informs us that at Mason village, N. H., while some small children were at play an immense golden eagle swooped down and attacked one of the children, with the evident disposition to carry it off. A woman ran from the house with a broom, when the eagle let go the child and attacked her with ferocity. At this moment a man gunning in the vicinity came to the rescue and shot the eagle, breaking a wing and captured him. He is the largest bird seen within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The bird was purchased by Mr. George H. Danford, of New Orleans, who was visiting at the village, and will be taken to that city.

The Case of Hartley.

At the adjournment of the recorder's court this morning, Judge M. A. Dooley, counsel for E. S. Hartley, appeared, accompanied by Hartley, and after making a surrender of his security in open court called the attention of the recorder to the following facts in the case:

1. That the affidavit on which the accused is held to answer was made by Simon Jones on the 5th of October, 1867.

2. That on the 6th of October 1866, the same affidavit was made by the same party before the late Recorder Ahern.

3. On the 29th of March, 1867, Hartley charged Simon Jones with willful and corrupt perjury, and the said Simon Jones was fully committed to the first district court to answer the said charge, (all of which facts are shown by the record of the first district recorder's court).

4. Hartley avers that an indictment is still pending and undecided in the first district court against the said Simon Jones for the crime of perjury for having made the affidavit of the 6th of October, 1866, and notwithstanding this fact the petitioner is again imprisoned upon the same identical charge.

5. The said E. S. Hartley has been persecuted, imprisoned, wronged, and outraged by the said Simon Jones and others, his aiders and abettors, upon said pretended charge of embezzlement, and for more than one year they have utterly failed to sustain the same; and in consequence of all this he prays the protection of the law and asks to be finally and fully discharged.

Recorder Neville took the case under advisement, promising a decision to-morrow morning, meantime committing the accused to await his ruling in the case.

Story of the Diamond Button.

Josephine Ray, before Recorder Gastinel, told the story of the diamond button. It was the gift of a valued female friend, and was highly cherished for the sake of the giver. One evening some two weeks ago she was lying asleep on the sofa in her parlor, at the corner of St. Louis and Treme streets, the valuable button safely in her bosom, and when she woke it was in possession of a perfect stranger, who was standing over her and holding it in his hand.

She explained to the court how he obtained it and gave other information, which, together with her artless simplicity, provoked a smile from the spectators. She also explained how, when she asked him for the button, he grossly insulted her, and told the recorder what he said.

The accused in this case proved to be Eugene Leveritti. He was defended on the charge of larceny by able counsel, who declared him to be a very respectable gentleman, having no intention to steal the button, which the counsel asserted was not worth more than a dollar, but only took it for a joke. Upon this representation, and the assurance of the joker that he had no intention to steal anything, the latter was allowed to go out, accompanied by an officer of the court, after the diamond button, and upon its restoration to Josephine the charge of larceny was dismissed. And thus ends the story.

FICKLENESS OF COMMERCIAL PROSPERITY.—The Brooklyn Union presents the point in this manner:

The failure yesterday of Robert L. Taylor, a merchant seventy years of age—of high standing—whose balance sheet thirteen months ago showed him to be worth two millions and two hundred thousand dollars, is a sad and signal illustration of the fickleness of commercial prosperity, and goes far to explain the general tone of depression which for some time has pervaded business

---

THE LOUISIANA CONVENTION.—The Galveston Bulletin, referring to the order of General Mower convoking this convention communicates in its closing sentence information of which we were not before possessed. It says:

Truly are we making history. It is but eighteen months ago in that very hall where soon shall assemble a convention to form a constitution for the state of Louisiana, composed of a majority of colored men as delegates, that another convention, assembled to form a constitution to give freedmen the right to vote, was dissolved in riot and bloodshed, and was certainly the very fulcrum to which was applied the lever of congress in passing the late reconstruction laws.

From the little we know of the personnel of the delegates elected we should say the conservative element of the Republican party and of Union men were ignored, and the most radical of radicals were chosen. The Grand Army of the Republic will control that convention.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be carefully cared at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." [feb3]

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1.25. Mailed post-paid.

Going Home.

BY J. E. R.

Call it not dying, when we cast
This mortal part away,
And plume our wide expanding wings
For realms of cloudless day.

Call it not dying, when we see
By faith, the open door
Alluring us to that bright world,
Where we can sin no more.

Call is not dying, when we break
Our prison bars in twain,
And our freed spirits soar above
The reach of care and pain.

Call it not dying when we go
To that dear home above,
To dwell with Christ the crucified,
Where all that life is love!

Call it not dying, when we'll meet
The loved of earlier years,
Where God's own hand hath guided them,
And wiped away their tears.

Call it not dying, timid ones
Who fear to cross the stream,
That lands you on yon beauteous shore,
Where heavenly glories beam.

No; call it going home to God,
Call it a peaceful rest:
Call it departing frbm this earth,
To live among the blest.

Organization of the Georgia Mission Conference.

ATLANTA.

The place designated for the meeting of this body is a marvel of enterprise. It was about utterly destroyed during the war, very few, indeed, of its buildings standing when Sherman struck out for the sea, and its business was completely destroyed. Now it is a great city, with its long avenues of fine brick stores, its rising opera house and public halls, its churches and beautiful villas, while its streets teem with the activities of business. Taking a ride one day, our carriage was actually blockaded in the main street of the city. We beheld with wonder Atlanta spreading itself out over the beautiful hills, and felt a rising consciousness of our powers of national recuperation that nothing can shake. We only need a loyal South, and they with us will soon rise to national greatness and prosperity far exceeding any in the past.

THE PLACE OF MEETING AND OPENING EXERCISES.

The brethren assembled at 9 o'clock A. M., on the 10th inst., in a new church erected for the use of the colored people, but never before occupied. We counted at the opening sixteen white and fourteen colored ministers present. When business began, about sixty persons were in the house. The church is a transept building, really tasteful in style, but plainly furnished, built with amazing economy, at a cost of $1300. Bishop Clark took the chair. He first read the 126th psalm, beginning, "When the Lord turned again the captivity," etc.; also, 2 Cor. iv., "Therefore seeing we have this ministry," etc. The 707th hymn, beginning,

"And are we yet alive," etc.

was then sung, after which Bishop Clark offered fervent prayer. After the singing of three verses of the 213th hymn, prayer was again offered by Dr. Reid. Bishop Clark then said:

"It is with no ordinary pleasure that I meet you this morning. A year ago last January I met a little band in this city, and organizing a mission district began this work. We felt our way along in the dark. We only wished to follow the leadings of God's providence, to do HIS work, to listen to the calls of the people for our services as ministers of the cross. The work has continued to grow. We then had no expectation of such results as have followed, and thank God and take courage. In accordance with the power given to the bishops, at the last general conference, I am here to organize a Mission Annual Conference, and I call upon Brother Chalfant to act as temporary secretary, and to make the following record:

Acting on the authority of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and with the concurrence of my colleagues, I now convoke the Georgia Mission Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I recognize as members of it the following named ministers, they being in full connection, and in good and regular standing in the traveling ministry, namely, for purposes of organization: James F. Chalfant, Superintendent of the Mission District; J. W. Yarborough, John H. Caldwell, John Murphy, Wesley Prettyman, R. H. Watters, William Brewer, Jerome Spillman, and Charles W. Parker, elders; also, C. M. Caldwell and J. B. Powell, probationers. D. W. CLARK.

In the district formed a year ago, there were thirteen or fourteen ministers. Those now recognized are only such as are in full connection, and a portion to be formed next week into the Alabama Conference are omitted. The small beginning of a little more than a year ago, now results in a yield of not less than 16,000 members and sixty preachers. Truly, God hath wrought wonders. I look forward to the future with unspeakable emotions. As is said of one who climbing the Rocky Mountains, and looking out toward the Pacific, bent his ear as if to listen, and said he was listening for the tread of the coming millions, so I put down my ear and hearken for the footsteps of the hosts that are coming. We shall soon hear them. If we have the spirit of our Master, the spirit of Christ; if it penetrate all our ministry; if we have the spirit of the fathers, who planted old Methodism here, we will not long listen in vain for the coming generations. God grant us his blessing."

J. H. Caldwell, Wesley Prettyman, and H. Breckenridge were chosen Secretaries.

Brother Chalfant presented to the Conference a full set of books, consisting of record, report, and roll book, from the house of Sargent, Wilson & Hinkle, of Cincinnati, and the thanks of the Conference were heartily tendered to Brother Chalfant and this generous firm.

Brother Chalfant, in charge of the Mission District, was called out and said:

"I feel called upon to publicly thank God for his protection and help during the past twenty months of toil, sacrifice, and I am sorry to say it, of persecution. Little did I think, when in an upper room out here on the public square, eight or ten of us met to consult about beginning this work, we would so soon be able to enter such a beautiful temple as this, or that this heroic band, with our bishop in the chair, should now be here convened in annual conference, or that in so brief a period we should be able to count 90 traveling preachers, 125 local preachers, 16,000 members, ninety church buildings, all paid for, 156 Sabbath schools, 9000 scholars, with a number of day schools. But so it is, and behold the field is yet whitening unto the harvest. Little did I then think we would now report 16,000 souls in documents as accurately and as neatly prepared as the like reports in any annual conference. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and thy truth's sake.

Is not this enough to encourage us? Will any man falter? Will any man's courage fail him? No! Four millions of sable men and women are accessible to us, and we will go to them. All over the land there are doors open and we will enter them We will go everywhere and preach the Gospel, only the Gospel, but we will preach it. It is our right to do so; it is our duty; and no man shall hinder us. So doing we shall not fail of success.

One asked me on the street, the other day, if we were in real earnest, if we meant to press this thing? Why shouldn't we press it, when we know that three thousand souls have been converted within the last three months, a greater number than have been converted in Georgia during the same time, by the labors of any other body of Christians. It may cost toil and suffering. Be it so. But the work must go on. If we suffer with Him, we will also reign with Him."

John W. Talley, James P. McGee, Joseph T. Smith, Alfred Dorman, John A. McCutcheon, James L. Fowler, and James M. Hall, from the Church South, were, during the session, re-admitted to the traveling connection. Reports were then made embracing statistics and most interesting statements.

One brother said, at first on his work, the people were very hostile, but now for the fifty days last past he had been in meeting—preachers are scarce—and he had preached nearly every night, having hardly seen his family for the whole time. The people heard the Gospel and were smitten by it, and fell under its power, and were converted. He had received 1500 members in the past nine months. The people had sometimes sat out of doors amid a rain storm to hear the Gospel. We must have more preachers, said he.

On another charge the preachers reported $30 missionary money; and another said that a month later he could have reported $100 missionary money. One circuit, feeling that as the Missionary Society was supporting their preacher, they should be doing something for others, took up a young man from among themselves and sent him to work beyond, and supported him well during the year, and his labors were greatly blessed. The people are everywhere poor, but our good crops will give us better exist everywhere. In one case the preacher and congregation were driven from their house of worship by violence, and shut out of it permanently. They built a brush arbor, as is frequently done in this region, and went on, their numbers increasing, and God, in the end, abundantly poured out his spirit. The Mayor of one city had anonymously notified the preacher to leave in fifteen days, but before the year was out had given his hand to the same preacher, and assured him of his friendship. In one case a thousand mourners were seen at one time seeking the Lord. Georgia never before saw such a scene, and shoutings filled the whole air.

Brother Caldwell, in giving an account of his work, said that he had not for twenty years seen such spiritual outpourings as during the last year, It brought back to his mind the old times of indescribable power that he saw when a boy at the camp meetings at Mossy Creek and Dry Pond.

The whole of the first session was of the deepest interest. Tears fell like rain, and glad responses often broke the stillness of the hour.

The following were on the second day admitted on trial: Fosh Burrow, Geo. Stanley, J. Thomas Johnson, Peter Groover, Wm. C. Walker, H. Breckenridge, Samuel D. Brown, Balus M. Hipp, Wm. D. Smith, Newton Trimble, Seaburn N. Tidwell, A. W. Caldwell, R. P. Lamsden, Albert N. See, George Kendall, Jos. Lane, Jacob Freeman, Henry Elder, John Walker, James M'Henry, Crockett J. Johnson, George Ainsley, and Anderson Talmadge. Quite a number were elected to orders, and the bishop addressed the conference on the importance of method and thoroughness in the business devolving upon the pastors. So ended the session.

On the third day the orders of Jos W. Bohanan, from the Baptist Church, were recognized. The Oxford district was represented by elder Yarborough. He said:

"We have succeeded everywhere and failed nowhere. I have traveled over 6000 miles, and preached faithfully, calling things by their right names, but have not had a cross word or look from any soul since last January. I have not been charged for entertainment but at two hotels, and members of the Church South have entertained me. It has been the happiest year of my life, and all has been harmony on the district. I have visited only about 250 families in this time, because I travel by railroad; but we must take to horseback. The people will not believe that we are going to restore old Methodism till they see the saddlebags. We must not run home every night. I have seen such revivals and such conversions as I never saw before. Everywhere a wonderful liberty has been given of God in preaching the Word."

This report produced much emotion in the conference.

The district was then called, and the preachers reported individually, as in the case of the Atlanta district, on the first day. One brother said he had used but $100 of his appropriation for churches, and had succeeded in erecting three. The logs cost nothing, and it did not take much to buy boards, sashes, and hardware.

The seat of the next conference was left to be determined by the presiding elders.

A very thorough report on the Freedmen's Aid Society was adopted, from which we extract the following:

1. Resolved by the Georgia Annual Conference, that we most heartily approve of the organization of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

2. That we respectfully represent to the General Conference, that the adoption of this society by that body, and hence its continuance, is imperatively demanded to the complete success of our work in the South.

3. That we, as a conference, will give to the Freedmen's Aid Society our cordial support, and, whenever practicable, we will take collections for its aid.

4. That this congress recognize with gratitude the aid this society has already afforded, and fully appreciate the energetic efforts made by the Field Superintendent of the society, Rev. Dr. Rust, in establishing and supporting these schools in our midst.

Dr. Rust addressed the conference on the subject. The doctor has, for weeks past, been actively and successfully engaged for the society in the South. He spoke with much fervor.

The report on the tract cause was

The report of the Committee on Education was a very able document, containing important suggestions with respect to a system of common schools for all the children of the State of Georgia, and to the establishment, also, of a normal school. While considering this report, President Cobleigh being called upon, addressed the conference on this subject, as did also Dr. Rust. The institution at Athens, Tennessee, and its normal department, was adopted by the conference till a similar institution shall arise within the bounds of the Georgia Conference. Reports on Sunday schools, the Bible cause, temperance, and books and periodicals, were read and adopted.

The afternoon session was occupied with the formation of a missionary society for the conference, and an election of a representative to General Conference. J. W. Yarborough was chosen representative, and a collection was ordered in each congregation for expenses. J. H. Caldwell was chosen alternate. A most flattering series of resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the conference, in parting with the Rev. James F. Chalfont, late Superintendent of the Mission district, were unanimously adopted. These we will hereafter publish; also like resolutions in reference to the labors of Bishop Clark in this region. Collections were taken to relieve a needy brother, and one also for printing the minutes, and the conference closed with the holy communion. The appointments were read on Sabbath evening, after a discourse by Dr. Pearne, of Knoxville.

THE STATISTICS of the conference, in the aggregate, are as follows: 6886 members, 17 deaths, 2786 probationers, 61 local preachers, 691 adults, and 275 children baptized, 46 churches, $19,100 probable valuation, $88 50 missionary collections, $27 for church extension, $5 for Sunday School Union, 61 Sunday schools, 401 officers and teachers, 4671 pupils, 2440 volumes in library.—Western Advocate, October 23.

Leaving the Ministry.

At the late session of the East Maine Conference, a special committee reported on the subject of leaving the ministry. From that report we clip the following paragraph:

"If there are men in the ministry who are not fitted for it, and have not been called to it, their early retirement will be best for themselves and for the world. But those divinely called to the sacred office may not leave it till discharged or disabled. Other positions may be vacated, but not this. The call implies that the laborer must toil till the work is done, or he is unfitted to perform it. The hireling must not go from the field at mid-day, nor the unrelieved helmsman abandon his post till he has brought to land the foundering bark. Jonah Demas, and Mark, all left their work for a time, but neither their course nor its consequences challenge our approval or imitation. On the other hand, the ministerial constancy and success of Paul make his life both a model and a motive to all who come after him Under the heaviest pressure to give up his work, he declared, 'None of these things move me;' and, at the end of the race, he raised his victor shout, 'I have finished my course.' A man who, of choice, steps out of the sacred office, must have defective views touching its sacredness or its sanctions.

"But men do abandon the ministry, and in large numbers. Hundreds who have been set apart to the Christian priesthood are now ranging the country, engaged in secular pursuits. Many of these, it may be presumed, entered the ministry unbidden, and left when it suited their convenience. But many others have given up a service to which they are divinely called. Limited usefelness and scanty support have discouraged some; while occupations deemed more important, or thought more agreeable, have diverted others. Not a few have been drawn into employments more lucrative or less arduous than preaching the gospel. The evil prevails extensively, and seems to be increasing. The consequences of ministerial fickleness are far-reaching and disastrous.

"It mis-educates public sentiment. Men step suddenly into the ministry, claim that they are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon them this office in the Church of Christ, and step out as coolly as if they had never been set apart for sanctuary service. The effect of this is to make society confound sacred ing the sanctity of the holy calling, lessen respect for its incumbents. Our recent history furnishes an illustration. The American government was moral and humane beyond all historic precedent, even when armed rebellion was striking at the nation's life. But, while dealing tenderly with vilest traitors, and guarding sacredly the assumed rights of its worst enemies, it adopted the almost unheard-of usage of enrolling its clergy, and drafting them into its military service.

"The present lack of ministers is largely owing to men having left the work.

"Hundreds of moral harvest-fields are lying fallow. Many who are sent of God refuse to enter the vineyard; and others, already there, will not remain. The result is unsightly barrenness, where there should be fruitfulness and beauty.

"To voluntarily go out of the ministry will lessen self-respect and forfeit the esteem of others. One who does this stops dispensing the word of life, that he may vend patent medicines, or exchange a divine call to save souls for a human commission to insure lives.

"To needlessly leave the ministry implies terrible delinquency, and involves fearful retribution. It suggests unfinished work, and abused confidence, and evaded responsibilities. The ancient watchman might be at his post, and detect the coming sword; but if he did not also blow the trumpet, the wicked would die in his iniquity; but the watchman must answer for his blood. Thousands of God's chosen servants have ceased to warn, and even to watch. The watch-tower is empty. They have deserted it, and are now tilling farms, tending stores, or holding office. Men unwarned are dying in sin. Who must answer for the blood of the slain?

"To leave the work is to grieve Christ and to injure his cause. The Master is contending with Satan and with sin. The contest is fierce and the hour eventful. Defections are frequent and many fall away. When a minister deserts his post, a leader retires from the conflict. Does not the Savior plaintively inquire of all who remain, 'Will ye also go away?'"

The Catacombs at Paris.

Col. Forney has visited the Catacombs at Paris, the great Golgotha of France, and in a letter thus speaks of his visit·

The Catacombs are only opened for exhibition twice a month, and the anxiety to see them is so great that the authorities issue only a limited number of tickets to prevent a crowd. Placing ourselves in a line, like voters on election day, only in couples instead of singly, each of us armed with half of a sperm candle, costing three sous, to light our way, we began to descend in the vast charnel-house. The downward stair of ninety steps seemed to be endless, and as the French are the noisiest, though apparently the politest people in the world, their ridiculous laughter and curious cries seemed hideous mockeries to our untrained ears. When we reached the last step we found ourselves at the beginning of a series of galleries, cut through the solid earth, like the galleries in our collieries, and supported by huge stone pillars or abutments. Following our gnide, we passed through the main gallery for at least a mile, and finally came to the octagonal vestibule of the Catacombs. This vestibule introduced us into rooms lined from floor to roof with the bones of three millions of human beings. The arm, leg, and thigh bones are in front as closely and regularly arranged together as the best masonry, their uniformity being relieved by long rows of skulls at equal distances, the skulls sometimes assuming the shape of crosses, and always acting as if to relieve the otherwise hideous monotony. Behind this outer fortress of bones are thrown the smaller bones. At intervals, in the centre of the sides of the rooms or passages, Latin and French inscriptions on white marble slabs are placed—some from Lamartine, some from Livy, some from the Bible—reminding the spectator of the end of life and the folly of ambition. As we entered upon this revolting company, all were silent—the silly Frenchmen ceased their catcalls, dog-barking and laughter—the priests, (who, like the soldiers. you find everywhere in France,) crossed themselves with many a whispered avé, and the women huddled to the side of their protectors with a pretty pretence of alarm. It us the utter folly of selfishness, falsehood, and oppression, and the priceless value of giving our best efforts to the cause of humanity, justice, and freedom.

HOW THEY SELL GRAIN IN RUSSIA.

A writer in the London News describes the way in which the grain dealers of Russia do business. To their clever trickiness he ascribes the present high price of wheat in the European markets. This price, he thinks, will not be much reduced until the harvests of Podolia, Volhynia, and Kiev shall be brought directly to the seaports by railway, an event which can not be long delayed. We quote a few passages:

THE CARRIAGE OF GRAIN.

In the first place the corn was formerly bought of improvident landlords—and most Russian landlords are improvident—at something less than a fourth of its value. The landowner usually took all the risk of carting it; for although the risk and expense of carriage were really very great, no true Russian ever counted that, as the labor was performed by his own horses and his own serfs, and even the rude wagons in which the corn was conveyed were made upon his estate. The Greek merchant, however, counted all this, and was fully alive to the convenience and especially to the advantage which might be derived by shrewd management from the arrangement which provided that all the wheat he purchased should be delivered at the gate of his own warehouse before it was entirely paid for.

ARRIVAL OF THE CORN WAGONS.

The aspect of one of the great seaports of southern Russia from the close of the harvest to the beginning of winter is singularly interesting and picturesque. About the middle of July the first corn wagons begin to appear among the wonderful cloudscapes of the steppe. Toward the dawn, as the early horseman takes his canter over land which, if fit for nothing else, makes the best galloping ground possible, these carts will be seen toiling over the endless plain. They are all drawn by oxen, and they go so slowly that they hardly seem to move. When far off they look as small and pretty as the fairy carriage given to Cinderella by her godmother; when near they are curiosities of dirt and clumsiness. The cart which was within sight at daybreak usually arrives at the city gates about nightfall. The men at the octroi who collect the town dues are then gone, so the cattle are unyoked and the shaggy, uncouth drivers roll themselves in their sheepskins and sit down under their wagons to eat watermelons, which grow in great plenty throughout the corn districts, and form the staple food of the very poor in summer time. They are not left long to ruminate over this refreshing diet, for some of the most industrious and practiced thieves in the world surround them on every side.

THE GRAIN OPERATOR—A DEBAUCH.

Here, too, the peddler turns up again. He is the same peddler who bought the corn months ago, and who paid an installment of its price, partly in German jewelry, and minus his own commission. He is the same peddler yet not the same. When last seen in the country he wore a long coat down to his heels, thick knee-boots, and a long, ragged beard. Now he is a dapper little fellow, with a trim mustache, in a cut-away jacket and white wide-awake, who looks what he is, a sharp clerk, or perhaps a junior partner, and once poor relation of the prosperous firm of Birbantaki, of Mariopol. But he knows the chief butler, who has been sent to receive the rest of the money due; and the chief butler knows him.

One thing also the chief butler perceives, that he no longer speaks of the Boyard as "His Regal Munificence." He gave up that part of the business when he trimmed his beard, and has got a younger brother or an impecunious uncle who will take to it next year. Meantime, though abrupt and domineering in manner, he is not unkind. He treats the chief butler and all the shaggy party who came with the corn wagons very freely to vodki; and, indeed, they are the very pick of the farm lands in their miserable village, and they look like a little pack of faithful dogs. All but the chief butler, however, soon get drunk, hopelessly drunk, drunk as only semi-savages can get drunk—drunk till they can neither see, hear, nor move. They make no noise, they have no rows, no fighting. Such things are never seen in Russia. They merely drink themselves blind, speechless, and then fall insensible on the ground till the effects of the strong, bad spirit passes off.

THE CHIEF BUTLER—RURAL SIMPLICITY.

Only the chief butler does not get drunk. He is probably the prime favorite of his mistress, and love and respect for the Barynia, who is so kind to him, is perhaps the finest feeliug the poor fellow has. Now he has got a mission. The Barynia confided it to him with many earnest words and injunctions the very day he left home. She even called him back after he fairly started to repeat her wishes more precisely, and to give him a cup of tea and a piece of sugar to put between his teeth while drinking it; and she herself sat down with him for good luck and blessed him, and bade him Godspeed upon his distant journey. The chief butler does not forget these things, and immediately he has an opportunity he unbosoms himself to the smart young man into whom the peddler has been transformed. His modest errand is soon told.

The Barynia has found that all the German jewelry has turned black. He, the chief butler, frankly admits that he considers this circumstance to proceed from witchcraft, and adds that he strongly insisted on that view of the case to the Barynia. She, however, had maintained that the German jewelry, when worn, especially in a warm room, or when rubbed, emitted a cankerous smell, like copper, which she had never heard was a peculiar property of witches, as their fashionable perfume was always understood to be brimstone. The Barynia had therefore sent back the German jewelry, with a request that the peddler would obligingly return the price paid for it, which is then to be invested in the purchase of three new dresses from Mlle. Lacrotteuse, the local French milliner, and some tea, coffee, baize, flannel, robes from Mynherr Schnapsgelf, the German all-sorts shopkeeper.

GREEK RASCALITY.

After much simple talk to the same effect, and to which the transformed peddler listens with such grave attention as only a Greek can assume when he is making money, this personage informs the chief butler that he strongly inclines to the opinion that witchcraft has, as he supposed, really been at the bottom of the whole thing. The peddler has heard of many recent instances of the kind, and the best way of treating the present case will be to wrap up the German jewelry in my hands, over which a charm the peddler knows has been pronounced, and bury it under an oak tree in the first quarter of the new moon. It will then be restored to its pristine excellence. On no account, however, will the peddler return the money, as such a proceeding is known to be extremely unlucky. And so by this time the chief butler, being utterly puzzled and bewildered, gets drunk like the rest of his companions—perhaps not quite so drunk—but drunk, at least, to the tears and singing point; ready, at all events, to sign anything for his friend the peddler.

THIEVING, OFFICIAL AND UNOFFICIAL.

Then begins the robbery of the corn wagons. All through the night active thieves, mostly boys trained for the purpose, pilfer small quantities of grain from the innumerable carts huddled in disorder. confusion, and darkness about the city gates. While the chief butler is drinking also comes the officer of the octroi or his delegate. This functionary, although officially absent after sundown, is personally present indeed. He now comes, attended by a following of hungry satellites, to bargain with insolence utterly shameless for the bribe which he expects to receive for letting the carts pass through the city gates unmolested in the morning. If the chief butler were quite sober he is a shrewd fellow enough, and would now bargain to some advantage, for a Russian officer of this class will at any time omit to charge ten roubles of lawful duty belonging to the state if he is bribed with one for himself. The chief butler is, however, far beyond bargaining; so the peddler does it for him, and nets the very considerable profit which is also to be derived from this part of the transaction.

THE CORN REACHES THE WAREHOUSE.

When day returns, our young men from the country, still dazed and half-tipsy, assemble round their precious charge, now considerably diminished in bulk, and the wagons move slowly on amid hundreds of other wagons, through a blinding dust which lies two feet deep on the road, and rises like a dense cloud or fog a hundred yards high in the air. Presently the corn has to be measured for the town dues. This work is always scamped, but still much corn is stolen, much is lost, and much is wasted. The town gates are situated a good six miles from the Greek merchants' warehouses, near the port, so one or two days more are consumed before the corn carts arrive there. Thieves constantly hover round them. Every now and then the axletree of one of the rudely-built trucks breaks, and the chief butler has to get down with his best man, and cut away with an ax at some spare wood till it is replaced, the whole party halting meanwhile in the street.

The writer adds, that, under the present system it often requires several days time of two peasants and two-score oxen to take the harvest of a single farm to the warehouse. When the railway is finished, corn will be trundled in a few hours straight to the whaves where the barges lie to take it on board the ships.

A Christian Association—General Brown Elected President.

It will be seen by the following report of the second annual convention of the Young Men's Christian association of Maryland and the District of Columbia, which met on the 30th ultimo, that General S. L. Brown, of the REPUBLICAN, has been elected president of that association:

The second annual convention of the Young Men's Christian association of Maryland and the District of Columbia met on the 30th ultimo. Among the delegates were three representing the colored Young Men's association of Washington. One, by a vote of nineteen to ten, was added to the list of vice presidents. This created much dissatisfaction on the part of some of the white delegates from Maryland, who earnestly protested against the act of the majority. They wished to secede, being opposed to whites and blacks mingling in the same body. The colored vice president regretted that the presence of delegates of an association formed for Christian purposes should produce discord. Several white delegates, looking at matters in a Christian light, said there could be no real cause for serious dissatisfaction. One of the objectors declared he had been a confederate officer, and could sincerely extend the right hand of fellowship to colored men, and to prove the truth of the utterance he stepped forward and earnestly shook the colored vice president by the hand. Notwithstanding this, he could not concede the propriety of making a special provision whereby a colored person should be made a vice president. Others declared similar views, adding they were friends of the colored man. The discussion was earnest on all sides, when a white delegate, for the sake of harmony, offered a resolution requesting the colored vice president to withdraw from that office. The convention, by two majority, refused to lay the resolution on the table, and by a majority refused to suspend the rule in order to allow a vote on the resolution. General S. L. Brown, formerly living in Washington, but lately residing in New Orleans, was made president.

Rev. Dr. Newman

will preach in the chapel of his Church to-morrow morning, at the usual hour.

John Baldwin, Esq., of Berea Ohio, paid us a brief visit on his way to the Têche.

As the Board of Health has decided that the yellow fever has ceased to be an epidemic in New Orleans, therefore our absent friends can return with safety.

The Elections.

Going down Camp street last Tuesday evening, we met three Democrats, who said, as we passed: "Damn the Radicals, we'll hang them all." Such was the inspiring spirit of the results of the Northern election, and while yet the Democratic language sounded in our ear, we thanked God for the results of the elections in the North. The effect will be good. The Republican party needed a cathartic, and the Lord has given them one which will have a cleansing effect. But while the patient is under treatment, let not the Democrats swear too loudly, for the patient will again arise like a giant, refreshed with new wine, and will slay his enemies like Samson, with the jaw-bone of an ass.

Constitutional Questions.

THE POWERS OF THE EXECUTIVE.

Among the important reforms which we will be glad to see brought distinctly before the Constitutional Convention, is that of the proper distribution of the Executive, Legislative, and judicial powers of the government. The more distinct these powers are kept, the more strictly they are distributed among their appropriate branches of the government, and the more completely adequate powers to perform its functions are blended with full responsibility in each office, the better the government. One of the most important duties to be confided to the Executive of the State in Louisiana, will be the preservation of the peace. This is distinctly an executive duty, and the powers conferred should be ample, as the responslbility should be entire. The practical importance of the question is very great. In the resumption of civil rule in our State the peace and order of its communities, and every interest of society will depend upon the provisions made by the convention for this object. We regard it as very essential to the maintenance of law and order that this whole matter should be placed in the hands of the civil authorities, rather than in those of a State militia. A militia, while it is in some cases an important branch of the public service, is the poorest, most expensive, and least efficient means of preserving the peace and maintaining order. When confined to its proper function, that of keeping up a state of preparation for defense against foreign enemies, and forming the nucleus of an armed force in case of necessity, it may be of service; but even then we doubt its utility in a democratic government like ours. The military education of its officers is at best but superficial, and the training and discipline of the rank and file so imperfect as scarcely to deserve the name. The experience of the last war showed that better officers and soldiers were made out of men who had never handled a sword or a musket, than out of any of the holiday parade corps or militia companies of the days of peace. But to maintain the peace, perform police duties, and execute the law at home, experience everywhere has shown that a militia is the poorest of all means, and the most disorderly and offensive. In fact, these duties do not belong at all to the proper functions of a militia. Missouri and Tennessee are examples of the demoralization and chronic lawlessness induced by the employment of a militia to preserve the peace and enforce the laws. We trust sincerely that their lamentable example will not be followed in this State.

The Chief Executive of the State should be the head of the whole police force of the State. To secure uniformity and efficiency of action, he should be made immediately and personally responsible for the preservation of the peace in every locality in the State, and for the conduct of all his subordinate officers. His authority should be commensurate with his responsibility. To this end he should have the appointment of all these subordinates in every county, with the power of removal, and of issuing his orders directly to them, under the provisions of such regulations as the laws may prescribe.

The duties we refer to are such as are now performed by the sheriffs and constables. If it is thought best to let these offices remain elective, they can be confined to the duties which properly belong to them, as the ministerial offices of the courts, and the preservation of the peace can be entrusted to coroners and deputy coroners, as under the old English law.

These officers could be appointed by the Governor, and this arrangement would be a return to the old division of duties. This is the course advocated by many of the leading journals in New York. Let these officers be vested with the power now vested in the sheriffs of summoning posses, making arrests, and enforcing all laws relative to the peace and order of the State. Some such a provision in the constitution, embracing these general outlines, would give a peace force far more effective, more orderly, less expensive, and less odious to all law abiding citizens, than any militia force could possibly be. It would be, besides, in more complete harmony with our republican institutions, and with the principles of self government.

We earnestly commend these views to the attention of the convention, and of all citizens interested in the prosperity of our beloved State.

The Man Who Was Sheriff—Was Not—And Is.

Harry T. Hays must be a wonderful man. On November 1st he was Sheriff of the parish of Orleans; on November 2d he wasn't Sheriff, and on November 4th he was Sheriff. The St. Charles street Japs can't beat that. Such ins and outs would astonish all Japan. Barnum ought to send for Hays, and put him in the same room with "What-is-it" and the live Gorilla. Not only is Mr. Hays the most capable of all men living or dead, to go out and go in, but he excels all men, whether out or in, in staying in. Sleek and gentle in appearance, as a St. Charles spaniel, he holds on with the strength of a St. Bernard mastiff. He must be a near relative to Old Harry, who refused to leave Job until he had stripped the worthy Oriental of all his property, provoked him to call his wife a fool, and left him smitten with the smallpox. Young Harry is blessed with the grace of long continuance He has evidently been taught young to hold out to the end—but the grief of the Radicals is, Harry's end never comes.

Himself a gentleman of the most urbane manners, in which he is excelled only by Cuthbert Bullitt, who was, but is not his successor in office; a man of large reading and intelligence, a shrewd politician, a tireless worker, a warm friend, a bitter enemy—he is to-day as he has been for a year and a-half, master of the situation. Sheridan wouldn't touch him; Flanders was afraid to touch him, and Mower did touch him, and didn't touch him. There is no officeholder in Louisiana, whether State or city, who has had a greater pressure to resist than Sheriff Hays. Hated by our loyal men, because a traitor to his country and a rebel to his government, and despised by our Union men because he was one of the principal executioners in the St. Bartholomew massacre of July 30, he has been cursed and opposed as no other man of Southern sympathies. He was a shining mark at which the loyal ever fired, and like the tomb of that other rebel Absalom, in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, the loyal never failed to throw a stone at him as they passed. Sheridan was eloquently and fervently importuned to remove the offensive Sheriff, but stoutly replied: "I find no fault in him." Flanders was urged to demand his removal, but said "It wouldn't do." Mower was requested to act instanter, and he stamped the floor and slapped the table, and said: "By Jove, it shall be done;" and he removed him out on Friday, and removed him in on Monday.

All this is very curious, and most curious to the candidates who were in and who were not in. Of course, we cannot for a moment pay any regard to the flying rumors of the large sums said to have changed hands; of the splendid dinners given to quiet the qualms of conscience and the stomach, nor of the eternal debt of gratitude New Orleans would owe to the man who retained Hays. But the most curious of all the curious things about the Orleans sheriffalty is this: If Hays was an impediment to reconstruction on Friday, was he not on Monday? Has he become a Radical? This were impossible, for it is said of old, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?" Nor can the people be gulled with the ridiculous assurance "that Cuthbert Bullitt is the only Union man in New Orleans worthy of the position;" for there are generals, and colonels, and privates in this city who fought side by side with Sheridan and Mower, and who are qualified for any position. But whatever the cause, the restoration of Hays is a dishonor to the loyalty of Louisiana, and reflects no credit on the man who put him out and put him in.

Thanksgiving Day.

Elsewhere we give President Johnson's proclamation for a National Thanksgiving Day; but in doing so we desire to make a few remarks. We think Mr. Johnson should have issued two proclamations for the self-same day—one for a day of thanksgiving in the North, and one for a day of fasting and prayer in the South. The stupid clergyman whom the President employed to write his proclamation of "sparkling generalities," was too far North to comprehend the situation of the South; or, like a stall-fed ox, was too full to realize that anybody else was empty. As individuals, we have reason for gratitude to the Divine Being, but as a community, what have we to be grateful for? Flood, and famine, and pestilence have rained their woes upon us, and there is not a reason assigned in the proclamation for gratitude applicable to the South as a people. We have not "abundant harvests;" "industry" has not prospered with us; we have not "multiplied ships upon our lakes and high seas," nor "extended our railroads;" nor have "our hearts been inclined to turn away from domestic contentions and commotions, consequent upon a distracting and desolating civil war, and to walk more and more in the ancient ways of loyalty, conciliation, and brotherly love." Our crops have failed us; our industrial interests lay prostrate; our commerce is dead; railroad and other internal improvements are suspended; domestic contentions are as rife as ever; the ancient ways of loyalty are hidden beneath the fallen leaves of a dead confederacy, while brotherly love has long since ascended to heaven. As to important "commercial treaties with foreign nations," they are to the South like stones to a man who asks for bread; and if by "our greatly enlarged national borders" Johnson refers to Walrussia, we respectfully inform him that we don't care a rush for it. We have no heart to go to God's house as a people with thanksgiving; it would be but lip service; a solemn mockery. But give us a day for fasting and prayer, that we may lament our sins, mourn over our own misfortunes, and pray God to forgive our iniquities—to restore to us commercial prosperity, and give us a sober President.

A good story is circulating this way about Brother Haven, to the effect that, at some convention lately, he was quartered with Brother Mars, a noble colored minister, but somehow it became necessary for the editor to go home every night. Come, now, let us go the whole figure. What say you, Brother Gilbert?

Dedication Sermon,

By Rev. Scott Chinn, (Colored.)

Preached at the dedicarion of the Camp Parapet M. E. Church, Sept. 22, 1867.

"Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!"—Number xxiii, 10.

(The minutes were first read, copious extracts from the 22d and 23d chapters of the Book of Numbers, commenting upon them, and then said:)

Had I looked from Genesis to Revelation, I could not have found a more beautiful text from which to preach this dedication sermon. It contains a prophecy and a prayer—the prophecy of a man whom God inspired to speak what He, the Almighty, should tell him, and it is the prayer of a pious heart.

It is a long story, about Balak and Balaam. I have read the most of it to you, and need not go over it again. But it is such a nice history I love to talk about it. It tells us that God is a righteous God, and that His people are a righteous people. Yes, and it tells us that God will take care of his people, and keep them alive, and make them prosper in spite of their enemies. Balak, son of Zippor, King of Moab, saw the multitude of Israel, and said: "Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field." And he sent after Balaam and said to him: "Come now, I pray thee, and curse me these people; for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail that we may smite them, and drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed." Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me. For I will promote thee unto very great honor, and will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me; come, therefore, I pray thee, and curse me this people."

And you know, children, how God said to him: "Balaam, don't you go and curse that people; they are my people, and they are a good people." And he would not go. But Balak sent again, and made greater promises of good, of honor, and wealth to him, and Balaam went. "And God's anger was kindled because he went!" And you know how the angel, sword in hand, met Balaam on the way to slay him, and how the dumb ass spoke and reproved him, and how Balaam said: "I have sinned—I will go back." But God said to him: "Go on—go with the men. But only the words I speak unto thee shalt thou speak." And that is what God says to his ministers now.

And he went. "And Balak took Balaam up to the high places of Boal, that he might see the people of Israel;" and he says to him: "There they are! now curse them for me." Balaam stood silent and gazed in wonder! He saw a beautiful sight! It was like a great camp meeting, or like some of you may have seen the Union army among the mountains of old Virginia. They lay in the valley a million strong, their white tents shining in the sun, and the people all worshiping and shouting, and singing praise to God! And as he stood gazing, God's angel came (but Balak didn't see him) and stood beside Balaam, and whispered in his ear, and touched his heart, and loosened his tongue, and said to him: "Now speak!" And then Balaam spoke, and here is what he said: "And he took up his parable and said: Balak, the King of Moab, hath brought me from Arnsam, out of the mountains of the East, saying, 'come curse me, Jacob, and come and defy me, Israel.' But how shall I curse whom God hath not cursed, and how shall I defy whom God hath not defied?" For, from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him. Lo! the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations." And then he spoke the words of my text: "Let me die tee death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!"

And I reckon those words went like a dagger to the heart of Balak, for he got very angry and said to Balaam: "What hast thou done? I brought thee here to curse me this people, and lo! thou hast blessed them altogether." Balak thought, may be, that Balaam was afraid to curse them, because there was such a mighty army of them; and so he took Balaam around behind the hill, where he could see only a few of them, and said: "Now curse me them from here." But the angel of God put words in Balaam's mouth. And this time Balak saw him, and he says: "What did the angel say to you?" And here is what he said: "Rise up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor! God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the son of man, that He should repent: hath He said and shall He not do it? or hath he spoken and shall He not make it good? Behold, I have received commandment to bless; and He hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it! He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel; the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is in the camp! Surely, there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel; and according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel: what hath God wrought?"

Balak was disappointed again, (just like our enemies have often been,) and said to Balaam: "Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all." And he would not go any more to hear what Balaam said. But he did not care for Balak. And again the angel of the Lord breathed upon him, and spake to him. "And Balaam lifted up his eyes and saw Israel abiding in his tents according to their tribes; and the spirit of God came upon Balaam; and he took up his parable and said: 'How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side; as trees which the Lord hath planted; as cedar trees beside the waters! Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee!" This was the third time. "And Balak was angry and smote his hands together, and said unto Balaam: 'I called thee to curse me this people, and behold! thou hast altogether blessed them these three times. Now, therefore, flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee and give thee great riches; but lo! the Lord hath kept thee back from honor and wealth.' And Balaam answered and said: "Did I not say to thy messenger that if Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord to curse or to bless, of mine own mind; but what the Lord saith that will I speak." And then he went on and told Balak what Israel would do in a few years; how they would "smite the children of Moab," and destroy all their enemies, and still go on increasing in strength and power; how Christ should be born, "a star out of Jacob," and have "dominion from sea to sea," and reign till sin was all destroyed, and all His enemies put under his feet. "And the last enemy that shall be destroyed is Death." And Balaam said: "Alas! who shall live when God shall do this!" And so it is to this day.

"Who can count the dust of Jacob"—this is the children of Jacob, for we are all only "dust"—we were made of "dust," and the old body will return to dust when we die. "Who can count the children of Jacob, or number the children of Israel?" "Why, Balak, there'll be so many of them that you can't count a quarter of them." This reminds us of God's promise to Abram. Yes, it's the old promise renewed, and so God speaks it to us to-day. When the old patriareh was childless, God told him his seed—his children—should be as numerous as the stars in the sky, or the sands by the sea. "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee, and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." And Abram laughed at God's word, and Sarah doubted it; but in God's time Isaac was born.

And then God told Abraham to slay Jacob, and offering him in sacrifice. Ah, that was a hard word! But Abraham had learned to trust God, and so he obeyed, saying: "I can't see how God's word will be made good, if I kill Isaac; but God knows; may be He will raise him again from the dead; may be He will give me other children." And you know, children, how it was; Abraham, then Isaac, then Jacob, then the twelve patriarchs, then the mighty hosts whom Balaam had blessed, and then they passed through the wilderness, and over Jordan, to the promised land. And so it is to this day. God's promise to Abraham and to Israel is His word to us. And the God of Abraham, and Moses, and Joshua is our God. "The Lord of Hosts," who led them forth, is with us; and the God of Jacob is our refuge!" He who made of the old childless patriarch a mighty nation, according to His word, still multiplies His people, and they grow like dew-drops in the night! Jesus gathered a little company, but he said to them: "Go, preach my Gospel to every creature—go and make disciples of all mankind, and lo! I am with you always. Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I, and that to bless. I'll be with you everywhere, and to the end of the world." And then he taught them to pray: "Thy kingdom come!" And he said: "Fear not little flock. It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And we have prayed, and God has heard us; and "the kingdom" has come—yes, it came in the old mother church; and see how she is spreading! All through Louisiana, and Mississippi, and Texas, and all over the South. She is helping us establish schools and build churches, and this makes one more; and we rejoice and say again, with Balaam: "How goodly are thy tents, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, and as flower-gardens by the river's side." O, it is beautiful! And is it not true, children?

But our enemies—the world, and sin, and hell, and self, and satin and wicked men—are strong, and they hate us and curse us, and are jealous of us, and they envy us, just like Balak did. "And Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many, and was distrissed because of the children of Israel, and said: 'Now shall this people lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field.'" And so they envy us. O, that God would destroy envy and hatred, and let love, and peace, and good will everywhere prevail! But our enemies are afraid of peace, and that's why they persecute us, and would crush us in the earth, or drive us from the land. For no cause they have murdered our people, (how many, O, my God, thou only knowest;) have burned our churches, have made oppressive laws against us, and have hindered us educating our children. Don't we know these things, children? But we will do as Christ said, and as he did—love our enemies; do good to them that hate us; pray for them who despitefully use and persecute us, and bless them that curse us. Heaven's angels will turn their curses into blessings. God will defend, protect and prosper us.

But to think of the past; how many of our people have perished! In the wilderness, in the lion's den, the fiery furnace, in trials without name or number. Worked, whipped, starved, hunted, tortured to death; sunk in the river, died in the swamp, died in the war, died of epidemic! But the most of them are now in glory—they have gone to view that promised land, and we have a good many left, and shall have many more. Thank God, the worst of the dark, dark days are over! We forgive the past, so far as man is concerned, and would forget it. A better time has come, and the true light shines. We must walk in the light—the light of life, and love, and liberty—and work while it is day, for the night comes when no man can work—the night of death. "Let me die the death of the righteous. and let my last end be like his."

And remember, children, if you want to die the death of the righteous, you must live the life of the righteous. And what is it to be righteous? To love God and your neighbor. It is to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God, and keep all of his commandments, always. I reckon you all know the ten commandments, and what they say about the Sabbath, and lying, swearing, stealing, etc. And remember the golden rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." Do your duty to both God and man; that is "righteousness," which means walking in right ways. And that is beautiful! O, what a world this would be, if all men would do that! It would be like Eden was at the first. God would come down and walk with us through the world and talk with us, as he did through the garden with Adam and Eve.

Children, you may all be righteous, and you ought to be. God will help you by his grace. You may be poor—no fine horse or fine clothes, or true friends; but God will give you a mansion in heaven, clothe you with the garments of salvation, robes of righteousness—Christ will be a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and you shall be an heir with him to an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

What was it made Israel so beautiful and goodly in the eyes of Balaam? They were righteous, and shone all radiant with the beauty of holiness. So shone the face of Moses when he came from meeting God on the mountain. So let your light shine; for without holiness no man shall see God. And you'll feel the need of it when you die.

"Let me die the death of the righteous." We must all die. We are dying now—every beating pulse leaves but the number less—every step that shortens the journey of life is an advance toward death, and all the world is "marching to the tomb." Ever since God said "dust to dust," men have been dying. Righteous Abel was the first who went, shivering, to the brink of the cold, dark river; how many have followed him? We all belong to broken family bands. Where is father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, friend, neighbor? Gone! The eye that saw, the face that smiled, the voice that spoke, the kind hand that helped us, the true heart that loved us, where are they? In the cold ground, dead, dead—"dust to dust!"

This is a sad view. But there is a bright side to this subject. Death has no terrors to the good. Only the body dies. The soul lives on, and cannot die. Death, to the righteous, is just opening the doors of the cage that the long-imprisoned bird (the soul) may fly away to its native heaven, where, free from unnatural confinement, it may flit and sing, "through all the groves of bliss!" "Let me die the death of the righteous!" Like all the old patriarchs died. Like good old Simeon died, with Christ in my arms. No, it is better than that with the righteous They die in the arms of Christ. So may I die—

"While on His breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there!"

The room where the Christian dies is often like Bethlehem, Jacob's dream, and the dying saint sings:

"Bright angels are from glory come—
They're round my bed and in my room;
They wait to waft my spirit home,
All is well, all is well!"

Let me die as Paul died. Ah! what hard trials he had. But they did not move him. Fearless of death and hell, he pressed right on through it all, till his race was run, and his last trial over. Then he shouts: "The time of my departure has come, and I am ready." (May we all be ready!) "I have fought a good fight—I have finished my course—I have kept the faith! And there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." A righteous judge, a righteous people, a righteous life, and a righteous death a robe of righteousness, a righteous crown; and eternal righteousness for all who will have it! O, sinner, come and seek it!

O! may God bless this dedication service, and make us all a righteous people! Let us dedicate ourselves to Him, while we dedicate this house; let us love Him, live, labor and die for him. And then, in heaven, we shall meet the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, the martyrs, our lost friends, and best of all, we shall meet Jesus, and shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. O, what a meeting that will be! May we all be there to see, and to enjoy it forever.

Edward Stapleton, Esq.

A card from Mr. Stapleton reached us too late for our last issue, but we now take great pleasure in vindicating our esteemed friend from the charge brought against him. When the case was first reported in the papers, its absurdity excited our laughter, and we considered our friend the victim of a good joke for his many friends to enjoy. Alderman Stapleton stands so high in this community as a merchant and a gentleman, that his name is his most eloquent vindication. But what are the facts in the case? A negro by the name of Alphonse Moss had been in Mr. Stapleton's employ for some time; but desiring to go into business for himself, Moss applied to Mr. Stapleton for a stock of goods, which was readily granted, on condition that said Moss should make returns of his sales every Monday. The contract was complied with for some time, but when Moss's indebtedness had reached the amount of $415, he not only ceased to make returns, but made his purchases elsewhere. On learning these facts, Mr. Stapleton called on Moss, in company with one of his clerks, and demanded his pay—offered to take $100 for the $415—then proposed to take the unsold goods. Moss consented, and a box of hats was removed to Mr. Stapleton's store; but the ingrate Moss, forgetful of Mr. Stapleton's kindness to him when he had not a dollar, brought a charge of larceny against his old benefactor; He appeared before Recorder Gastinel, who immediately released him on his parole, and on last Monday, after a patient hearing of the case, Judge Gastinel dismissed the case, and restored to Alderman Stapleton his box of hats, which he then gave to the Freedmen's Bureau for the benefit of the poor.

NEW RELIGIOUS ALMANAC.

Indispensable for Every Clergyman!

Important for every Church Member, and every Friend of Religious Movements!

The "American Ecclestical Almanac for 1688," by Professor A. J. Schem, which will be published about the first of January, 1868, will fill a want long felt by Clergymen and members of all religious persuasions, and by all taking an interest in the religiious questions of the day. As the title page, which we give annexed, indicates, it will give a brief account of all the important events in the religious history of the year 1867, the proceedings of great Councils, Congresses, Assemblies and Meetings of particular denominations, the work of the Bible, and Missionary Societies, the progress of the Young Msn's Christian Associations, of the Temperance and Peace Movements, the advance of Religious Freedom and Toleration; the most memorable facts in the History of every Denomination not only in the United States but in the whole world; and an obituary account of persons distinguished in the religious world who died in 1867.

In addition to this large amount of historical information, this American Ecclesiasticol Almanac will contain the completest statistical Tables of Religious Denominations ever published. These tables will show the relative number of the Christian and the principal Non-Christian Religions of the world, the ecclesiastical statistics of America, Europe, Asis, Africa and Australia, and a complete statistical exhibit of every important religious denomination of America and Europe.

In short, it will contain an immense amount of intelligence, not accessible in any other volume, of the greatest interest to every one who is not indifferent with regard to religions question, and constantly needed for reference.

The name of the author of the "American Ecclesiastical Almanac" guarantees for the accuracy and completeness of the information that will be furnished.

"The Nursery."—We have received a copy of this monthly magazine for children, and we give our opinion that the little ones who are fortunate enough to receive it from parents or friends, will be highly delighted therewith, as it is well filled with "pictures." It will be a good Christmas gift to some little friend. It is edited by Miss Fanny P. Seaverns, and published by John L. Shorey, 13 Washington street, Boston, Mass., to whom all letters should be addressed. Price $1 50 per year. Single copies 15 cents.

Foreign News.

PARIS, November 5.—The Moniteur says: There has been a fight near Tivoli, and 3000 insurgents either killed, wounded or taken prisoners. Garibaldi himself and his son Menotti were captured at Terni, and sent to Florence as prisoners of war.

Four thousand Garibaldians were on the march to reinforce the insurgents; but were stopped, disarmed and turned back.

The greatest agitation prevails.

The ultimatum of the Emperor Napoleon in the Italian affairs is to be answered by or before Sunday.

LONDON, November 5.—Noon.—Serious bread riots occurred in Exeter yesterday and to-day. Every meat and bread shop in the city has been sacked. At the time of the receipt of the last dispatches incendiary fires were breaking out in different parts of the town.

There is much excitement and the local authorities have petitioned the government for troops to quell the disorder.

GENEVA, November 5.—Garibaldi has arrived at Spizza, a prisoner in the hands of the Itallians.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 5.—The military authorities to-day in accordance with directions of the president, were engaged in the preliminaries for disbanding the negro militia companies in the District of Columbia. One company paraded yesterday all day fully armed. There seems no doubt that commanders of the military districts will be instructed by General Grant to suppress all armed organizations of both blacks and whites.

The cabinet continued in session until half-past two.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $490,000.

In Kansas the Republicans will carry the legislature by a decreased majority. The negro suffrage amendment was behind the ticket, but probably carried. Female suffrage lost by several thousand.

Wisconsin returns show Democratic gains, and Fairchild running behind his ticket.

In Maryland the whole Democratic ticket is elected.

We have comprehensive returns from New York, which indicate 30,000 Democratic majority. Syracuse gives a Democratic gain of 624. Albany—Democratic gains 1000. Troy—Democratic gains 1800.

The Tribune just telegraphs giving up the state to the Democrats by a decided majority.

Albany, New York, gives a Democratic majority of 1600, electing county ticket, state senator, and three ont of four assembly-men.

Camden county, New Jersey, elects the whole Democratic ticket by 500 majority.

The Boston Post telegraphs to its correspondent here as follows: Returns come in slowly. Bullock's majority will be small. Boston gives Adams 1500 majority. On a large vote the legislature will be liberal.

The president has a dispatch from the United States district attorney giving the majority in New York and Brooklyn for the Democrats 70,000.

A dispatch from police headquarters in New York, makes the Democratic majorit in the city 61,450.

Returns from Wisconsin and Minnesota are meagre. It is thought Minnesota has gone Democratic, and Wisconsin very close.

The Northern Elections.

MASSACHUSETTS, November 5.—Adams carried Boston by 1485 majority. The same gains throughout the state, however, would not elect Adams, but would show a Republican loss of 20,000.

BOSTON, November 5.—Returns indicate the certain election of Bullock and the State Republican ticket by a handsome majority.

NEW JERSEY, November 5.—Trenton, Elizabeth city, New Brunswick, have gone Democratic. The returns so far indicate that the Democrats have carried the legislature. The vote is very large.

NEW YORK, November 5.—The election in the city is progressing quietly. The vote is unprecedentedly large. The Democrats are conficent they will have 60,000 majority.

In the first ward the Democrats lost 52; in the fourteenth ward they gained 45; in the second ward 42, and in the fifteenth ward 355.

A printer named Frail was shot in an election altercation to-day.

The democrats have gained 1,263 in the nineteenth ward.

Democratic gains — Tneth ward 886; seventh ward 835; twenty-second ward 653.

Fourth ward, Democratic loss 125. Democratic gains—fifth ward 376; eighth ward 609; thirteenth ward 426.

The New Jersey legislature will undoubtedly be Democratic.

New York city returns complete give 59,815 Democratic majority—a Democratic gain of over 12,000. Returns from the interior are meagre, though they show that the Republican vote is not sufficient to overcome the tremendous majority in the city. The returns from Kings and River counties show no exception to the general rule of heavy Democratic gains everywhere. The state has gone Democratic by at least 20,000 majority.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, November 5.—The following order was issued by Major General J. M. Schofield:

HEADQUARTERS, October 31, 1867.

To His Excellency F. H. Pierpont, Governor of Virginia:

I have received letters from several members of the late Virginia legislature, inquiring whether there would be a session of that body during the coming winter, and raising the question whether under the state laws members of the house of delegates do not hold over until their successors are duly elected and qualified. Without deciding the latter question, about which there seems to exist a diversity of opinion, I have to request that you will inform the members of the late legislature that the session for the coming winter will be dispensed with. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Brevet Major General, U. S. A.

Five companies of United States troops in Virginia were to-day ordered to Washington for winter quarters.

From Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, November 5.—The reconstruction convention was organized to-day. Captain Barber, of the freedmen's bureau, was elected president, and Henry Patrick, of the same, was chosen secretary; assistant secretary, Moses Avery, negro from Mobile; second assistant secretary, H. H. Craig, of Montgomery, a negro barkeeper, beating a white man from north Alabama; John D. Terrell, white, sergeant-at-arms. An unusual number of minor officials were elected, among them a fireman for the convention. Nothing special was done.

There is sixteen negro delegates in the convention, thirty Northern men and bureau officials. Only one Conservative, the balance moderate men. The days proceedings closed with a heated discussion about inviting a city clergyman, on motion of Speed, of Perry, to officiate as chaplain, Morris, of Maine, saying he wanted no disloyal preachers there. At this juncture the debate was stifled and the convention adjourned until to-morrow.

From Mobile.

MOBILE, November 5.—The reconstruction convention met in Montgomery at 12 o'clock to-day. Eighty-nine members were present, fourteen of whom were colored. E. W. Peck, of Tuscaloosa, was chosen president; Robert Barber, secretary. Negroes were elected assistant secretary and doorkeeper. The day was consumed in perfecting the organization. Fifty odd members are old citizens of Alabama and the rest are colored and men from the North.

From Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, November 5.—The registration books were reopened to-day. Result 23 whites and 29 blacks. Republicans here are getting split.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 6.—The following is an approximation to the result of yesterday's elections:

New York—Majority 30,000 to 40,000. Brooklyn elects a Democratic mayor. Legislature Republican by a greatly reduced majority, with a possibility that the Democrats will have the lower house. Bailey, Republican, succeeds Conklin in congress.

Maryland—Every office filled by a Democrat.

New Jersey—Democratic majority 6000; eight majority on joint ballot in the legislature.

Massachusetts—Same as at noon.

Wisconsin—The legislature will be Republican which secures a senator vice Doolittle. This result is much deplored by the Democrats throughout the country. Fairchilds, Republican, is elected, though the Democrats gained 5000 in the state.

Minnesota—Marshall, Republican, is elected. Negro suffrage is defeated by a decided majority.

Kansas—Both negro and female suffrage has been defeated.

A closer count, especially in Wisconsin and Minnesota, may change affairs.

All the Tammany candidates were elected in the city of New York.

Morrissey won $20,000 on O'Brien being elected sheriff by 800 majority.

The negro military companies in the district have been forbidden to drill or parade.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $391,000.

Bearing coin interest has increased $33,000,000; bearing currency interest has decreased $34,250,000. National debt not presented has increased $16,000; bearing no interest has decreased $3,500,000. Coin in the treasury $11,500,000; currency $22,500,000. Total debt $2,491,500,000.

Davis's trial will commence on the 25th.

From Montgomery, Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, November 6.—The reconstruction convention passed resolutions authorizing the raising of the proper standing committees; and to memorialize congress to remove political disabilities from all persons who materially aided reconstruction.

An ordinance was introduced and referred to restore all property sold by executors and administrators during the war for confederate currency to the legal heirs of the estates without suit in court.

The state constitution will probably be modeled after the constitution of Vermont.

COLUMBIA, November 6.—The conservative state convention met in Nickerson hall to-day, eighty-six delegates present, representing twenty districts. James Chesnut presided. A committee on business was appointed when the convention adjourned until to-morrow.

From Mobile.

MOBILE, November 6.—Weather clear and cold—heavy frost this morning. Physicians say there is no danger in visiting the city. No yellow fever deaths to-day.

WILMINGTON, November 6.—The conservative successes in the North are received with enthusiastic joy in North Carolina.

By the Atlantic Cable.

NEW YORK, November 6.—A cable dispatch, dated near Corresca, Sunday, says Garibaldi, with his forces concentrated around Monte Rotondo, was waited upon by a delegation, and urged to withdraw.

Garibaldi replied that he did not value his life, and a soldier should not count his enemies. The deputation replied that a general should count the enemy and withdraw.

Garibaldi, with 3000 men and two guns, moved toward Trivoli, which the papal troops had stormed unconscious of the disaster at Tivoli.

The Garibaldians, while marching to patriotic songs, were surprised at Metana by seven papal battalions, with seven guns, who attacked both sides and both flanks. Garibaldi was dragged away by his retreating troops.

The Garibaldians made a two hours' fight at Monte Rotondo, and fled after losing 900 killed and 1000 captured. Menotti Garibaldi was hurt in the leg. At the frontier the Garibaldians gave up everything but private property.

Garibaldi looks old haggard, broken and disappointed. The insurrection is over. The French took no part, except a few as volunteers.

The bourse was animated, but general disarming is necessary to restore confidence.

A call for a general conference will soon be issued by France.

FLORENCE, October 6, Evening.—Garibaldi claims he is an American citizen. Mr. March, the American minister, has gone to visit him.

General Cialdini commands the Italian army of observation on the papal frontier, with headquarters at Pisa.

MANCHESTER, October 6, Evening.—Five of the prisoners on trial have been acquitted.

PARIS, November 6.—The emperor of Austria has departed homeward.

FLORENCE, November 6.—The Garibaldians lost 450 killed, and 900 prisoners in Papal loss 200 killed and wounded.

PARIS, November 6, Evening.—One division of French troops have left Rome for Civita Vecchia, and the remainder will soon follow. They will there await the action of Italy.

CAUTALUPA, November 4.—The road between here and Corese is crowded with dis armed Garibaldians. Their defeat is complete and their best men killed.

TERNE, Monday.—Wounded men are arriving. The Italian regulars are kind to them, and weep like women while carrying them from the cars to hospitals.

FLORENCE, November 5.—The English ambassador asks the king to treat Garibaldi leniently.

No collisions have occurred between the Italians and French.

Italy is quiet.

It is rumored that Garibaldi has become insane.

Election Returns.

WASHINGTON, November 6.—In Kansas both negro and female suffrage are defeated by eight to ten thousand majority.

Latest accounts from Wisconsin indicate Fairchild's election by a reduced majority, but a decidedly Republican legislature.

NEW YORK, November 6.—The legislature is Democratic on joint ballot, with a probable majority in the senate.

The New Jersey legislature is Democratic in both branches.

In Minnesota negro suffrage is defeated, and William Marshall probably elected governor by a small majority.

The New York Tribune estimates the legislature as follows: Senate, 18 Republicans to 14 Democrats; assembly, 71 Republicans, 51 Democrats.

It acknowledges that the returns are meagre, but says there is no doubt but that there will be a Republican majority.

BOSTON, November 6.—John Quincy Adams, though not elected governor, is elected representative. The legislature is overwhelmingly for license.

Death of Samuel Pursell.

We were pained to hear yesterday of the death of Mr. Samuel Pursell, an old and esteemed citizen of Carrollton. Mr. Pursell, on Saturday last, met with an accident while in the city of Jefferson, from which place he was removed to his residence in Carrollton, where he died yesterday from the injuries sustained.

The deceased was a member of the state constitutional convention of 1864, and proved himself to be an earnest and patriotic representative of his parish. More recently he has been recorder of Jefferson parish, and one of the school trustees for Carrollton. He leaves a wife and a family of several children, as well as a large circle of friends, to mourn his loss.

AN "IMPEDIMENT."

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

I observe that the organs of the opposition in this city still denounce with vehemence the military argument that their partisans in our places of trust are "impediments" in the way of reconstruction. Because the incumbent may be a gentleman, or because he may scrupulously observe the duties of his post, does not alone suffice to warrant his continuance in it. Nor does he derive a genuine title to it when elected by a constituency whose suffrage is vitiated by base partisan sympathies. To him the same rule applies that excludes a part of the Kentucky delegation from congress. Whether a candidate be by record personally disloyal or whether he embodies the disloyalty of his constituents his, election assures no right to the place in question.

He is the creature of his constituency, and receives his vitality and character from it. If as an avowed rebel, he can not justly claim the trust upon a majority of votes, neither can his rebel electors claim that he shall administer it for them, even though he were Sumner himself. He can boast no title from those who have none to confer. For one, I can not see but what every present incumbent who was installed by the opposition at our last parish election, in defiance of Republican tenets, is an impediment. They may not like to be stigmatized longer as rebels, but both their nomination and election were based too materially upon their rebel service not to force the conviction that they are more anxious to perpetuate the sorry distinction of rebel than any Republican can be to bestow it. They are arrayed with a party that seeks diligently to discourage the labor of reconstruction.

Every citizen can assist in that labor and should. In a larger measure can, and should the civil officer. Of what service to this end are for instance, the clerks of the several district courts? Do they not by their daily associations, their open avowals, and their late record as insurgents live a practical protest against reconstruction. Are they not impediments? They might indeed be reticent and yet the prejudices for which they strove in battle and upon which they even relied for election debar them from loyal confidence. Their reserve were but negative service. We must be for or against reconstruction. He that does not distinctly espouse and promote it, is an "impediment." P.

QUARANTINING AND YELLOW FFVER.—The Thibodaux Sentinel has this congratulatory article on the escape of that locality from yellow fever:

The suspense and anxiety that has been oppressing our minds for three months has passed away. Remembering the heavy hand which the "Bronze King" laid upon us in 1853, when over two hundred of our inhabitants were taken away, it was no wonder that a feeling of intense dread has pervaded our minds when daily anticipating the news of the plague in our midst. But with the exception of some five or six deaths and some twenty cases in the Gossin neighborhood, about three miles below us, not only has Thibodaux, but the whole parish, been free from yellow fever. We have never had a more healthy season in Thibodaux than the one now passing away.

The authorties of the town having no faith in quarantine against yellow fever, left the roads to come and go free to every one. Steamboats were arriving three to six times a week, and parties were almost daily passing through our place from New Orleans and the infected districts of Attakapas. The merchants did not receive any woolen goods from the city, and the mayor of the town allowed no cleaning of ditches or any disturbance of the soil in any way.

No disinfectants were used, but everything allowed to remain in statu quo. More danger was apprenehded from disturbing any filth, mud, etc., than would result from letting it alone.

We are no believers in quarantine against yellow fever, and we feel very certain that it was not kept away from us by any measure of that kind.

Let the causes be what they may, the people of Thibodaux feel thankful to the good Providence that has spared them from a visit of "Yellow Jack" in 1867.

Lingering Prejudices.

We learn from the Washington Chronicle that at the recent convention of the Young Men's Christian association of Maryland and the District of Columbia the name of a colored man, a Mr. William H. Becket, was proposed as one of the vice presidents. This nomination caused a very acrimonious discussion to spring up in the convention, as many of the members from Maryland, but chiefly from Baltimore opposed his election on account of being a colored man. The Chronicle says:

Messrs. M. B. Dennis, Joseph A. Bolgians, G. W. Maynard, J. D. Michael, James W. Gaddis, John R. Fairchilds, and W. L. Delacour. We scarcely know whether these gentlemen are more to be censured for the course they took or pitied for the wretched prejudice, the result largely, no doubt, of false education, against which even their Christianity was not proof. It is bad enough that such prejudices should seek to debar the negro from the enjoyment of his political rights, but when it comes in the way of his reception into full Christian fellowship in the church instituted by Christ for the salvation of men of every clime and color, it appears in its most repulsive aspect. "Nasby" represents a conclave of negro-haters revising the Scriptures to accommodate them to their own political creed, and makes them interpolate the word "white" in the passage "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Such conduct as that of the Baltimore members of the Young Men's Christian association above mentioned shows that his satire is not unmerited. We are pleased to see that the motion to add Mr. Becket's name to the list of vice presidents was carried by a vote of nineteen to ten, not that his being elected to that position was in itself a matter of any consequence, but because it shows that the spirit of Christ prevailed against prejudice.

Ex-Governor Andrew.

In the dispatches to one of our Western exchanges we find the following details in reference to the illness and death of ex-Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts. The dispatch was dated on the evening of the 30th ultimo:

John A. Andrew, ex-Governor of Massachusetts, died at six o'clock this evening. At nine o'clock last evening he was at his residence in Charles street conversing with friends, his family being present. He had premonitory symptoms of apoplexy and requested his family to leave the room, which they did, under the supposition that he had private business to transact. He then requested his friends to call in Dr. Derby, and subsequently Drs. Bigelow and Cabot were in attendance. He remained unconscious from the time of attack till death.

SUGAR MAKING IN FRANKLIN.—The Banner says:

Mr. Joseph Berwick set his engine and furnace in motion last week, and made about thirteen hogsheads of the finest sugar we have ever seen made in this parish. He uses the Pattison & Cage process of applying the fumes of sulphur. The yield is about a hogshead and a quarter to the acre. The cane is fine enough for two hogsheads to the acre, and one good frost will sweeten it up nearly to that point. Mr. Berwick will make from seventy-five to a hundred hogsheads, and his father, David Berwick, will make about a hundred and fifty hogsheads. Both of these plantations are on Bayou Sale, from four to six miles from Centreville.

Visit of the Congressional Committee.

The Nashville Press of the 30th ultimo, has the following in reference to the congressional committee while in that city:

The visit of the congressional committee to the state house yesterday, where they called on the governor and various state officials, and were formally, but cordially received by the senators and representatives in session, was an exceedingly gratifying occasion to all parties.

The faithful representatives of the national congress were placed for a short time in communion with the authorities and general assembly of redeemed and regenerated Tennessee, the first born of the free South. The greeting on both sides was joyous and hearty, and doubtless awakened reflections profitable to all.

Law Cases in the Supreme Court.

In this court it is ordered, that all the cases set for trial on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, 4th, 5th, and 6th November, be continued over respectively for trial to the corresponding days on the 18th, 19th, and 20th.

Ordered, that within six days after any cause shall be fixed for argument, the appellant shall file with the clerk a printed or fairly written brief or abstract of the cause, containing the substance of all the material pleadings, facts, and documents on which he relies, and the points of law and fact intended to be presented at the argument, with a reference to all the authorities upon which he intends to rely—six copies thereof to be furnished and filed with the clerk, one for each of the judges and one for the opposite counsel. Within twelve days after the fixing of the cause the appellee shall file a like brief or abstract, in like manner.

CUSTOM.—A writer on the government of Japan says:

The government of Japan is an unlimited despotism in theory. There is no written constitution. The will of the emperor, when proclaimed, becomes the law of the land without let or hindrance. The only external control upon the exercise of power is custom. All the people of Japan, including officials, are held beneath the sway of custom. What has been for a long series of years must continue to be. The precedents of a venerable past are of supreme authority. We may not safely transgress the traditions of the fathers. "Well enough" is to be "let alone." It is not best to enter upon novelties.

CCIDENT ON THE JACKSON RAILROAD.

ENGINE THROWN ACROSS THE TRACK.

No Passengers Killed.

General A. J. Hamilton on Board.

The train on the Jackson railroad, due in this city on Monday evening, met with a mishap about three miles this side of Magnolia, about four o'clock on Monday afternoon. At a narrow neck of land, where the road lay between a creek on one side and a lagoon on the other, a cow dashed out from the shelter of some bushes on to the track.

The locomotive was thrown, by the concussion, about thirty feet, and exactly across the track, completely blocking up the passage. There were four or five passenger cars, densely crowded, and quite a number of freight cars, some of them containing sheep, cattle, and horses. Fortunately the shock upon the locomotive wrenched away the coupling, and thus no lives were lost, where, otherwise, the sacrifice of life would have been fearful to contemplate. The cow, the innocent cause of the disaster, was, of course, instantly killed, as were quite a number of sheep in the forward car.

Hon. A. J. Hamilton was a passenger, and he, with two other gentlemen, climbed over the locomotive and walked down the track about five miles where they met a party of laborers with a handcar, in which they were taken to Osyka, where they remained till Tuesday morning. A train came down from Magnolia and took the remainder of the passengers back to Magnolia, where they spent the night. The morning train from New Orleans on Tuesday returned to the city at four o'clock, bringing the passengers who were on the unlucky train.

It is expected the road will be repaired and all the rubbish removed by to-day.

Military Orders.

The following disposition of hospital stewards in the fifth military district, has been made by General Mower:

Hospital Steward Otto H. Furrer United States army, is hereby assigned to duty at Camp Wilson, Texas, and will report in person to the commanding officer.

Hospital Steward Charles Ambrook, United States army, is hereby relieved from duty at Camp Wilson, Texas, and will report in person, without delay, to the commanding officer at Tyler, Texas, for assignment to duty at that station.

SUGAR AND THE CANE.—The Houma Guard says on these matters:

Some of our sugar planters will commence rolling next week and more the following week. The crop being short they are in no hurry to commence, on account that cane is later this year than usual, and the report from those who have already commenced is unfavorable, the cane yielding very poorly.

During the past week most of our planters have been putting down seed cane; others have begun planting for next year. Planting in the fall is always advisable where the land is thoroughly drained, as it greatly facilitates work in the spring and gives the cane the full benefit of the whole year to get its growth and ripen.

ASSASSINATION TO BE REVIVED.—We find the following copy of a handbill, now in circulation in Richmond, in the New Nation, published in that city:

YELLOW FEVER.—An exchange says:

MURDER IN CALDWELL PARISH.—The Monroe Intelligencer informs us that Mr. Tignor, of Prattsville, Alabama, agent for Pratt's Gin factory, was murdered about two weeks since, while going from Winnsborough to Columbia. He was found a few miles east of Columbia; he was shot in the head, and evidently killed for his money, as he was known to be on a collecting tour, and followed by his murderers from Franklin parish. When found his pockets had been rifled, his coat and boots were missing, and a fine bay mare which he rode was also missing. The robbers got but little money, as Mr. Tignor borrowed $100 from Mr. I. Crawford, at Winnsborough, to pay his traveling expenses.

A Case of Fraud Detected.

An attempt to defraud the revenue has just been discovered at the collector's office, and the facts are topics of general conversation on the streets. As the facts have been stated to us, a certain party having rum in bond paid the tax upon the three barrels and was given a receipt accordingly. It has since been discovered that ninety-three barrels, instead of three, were taken out of the bonded warehouse, and had the fraud not been discovered, the payment of tax on ninety barrels would thus have been evaded.

The receipt, as it now is, shows that the tax had been paid upon ninety-three barrels, the figure "9" having been interpolated before the figure "3" so as to read "93." By whom the forgery was committed will not probably be known with certainty until an investigation is had. Forty barrels of the rum have been recovered by the authorities, having been found in an establishment on Conti street, and it is said the detectives have a clue, which will enable them to discover where the rest of the lot is stored. Two parties, both of them of respectable antecedents and belonging to first-class business houses, have been arrested for committing the fraud.

Court Martial Sentence Disapproved.

A military commission was convened some months ago at Austin, Texas, of which General A. McD. McCook, lieutenant colonel of the twenty-sixth infantry, was president. General orders No. 37, from headquarters of the fifth military district, promulgates the proceedings of the trial of Charles Denny, civilian, before the above named court. Denny was arraigned on the charge of murder, pleaded not guilty and was found by the court not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter, and was sentenced to be confined at hard labor at such place as the commanding general may direct, for the period of three years and six calendar months.

General Mower, in reviewing the proceedings of the court, orders:

The proceedings, findings, and sentence in the case of Charles Denny, citizen, are disapproved. The prisoner's plea to the jurisdiction of the court should have been sustained. That the crime of which he is found guilty is alleged to have been committed prior to the passage of "the act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states" is a bar to his trial by military commission. Before the passage of the act referred to, this crime as charged was triable only before a state court of criminal jurisdiction, and not by any court organized under the laws of the United States. To give therefore to a court thus organized jurisdiction in matters which happened prior to their institution, and of which at the time no United States court could take cognizance, is to make that a crime by the laws of the United States in regard to which they had before been silent, and for the trial of which the courts of the state in which the offense was committed alone had jurisdiction. In so far, therefore, and inasmuch as it supercedes the trial by jury, this law if construed as retroactive would possess the character of an ex post facto law. But this is not the construction to be placed upon the wording of the act which should be held to apply only to such offenses as may have been committed subsequent to its passage. He will be released from confinement.

The Courts.

There was but little business of general interest before any of the various district courts in session Tuesday. The fifth district court was not in session, Judge Leaumont being sick. There will be no court in the first until Monday, Judge Howe being absent. The third was also adjourned, owing to the absence of Judge Fellowes. In the sixth, Judge Duplantier disposed of a dozen or so unimportant cases Tuesday forenoon. In the second (probate) Judge Thomas was on the bench, and the succession of Richard Murphy occupied most of the day.

Judge Theard, in the fourth district court, declared the following as the programme for busines in his court: Mondays will be devoted to promissory note cases; Tuesdays and Wednesdays to ordinary and appealable cases, and the court will devote its whole time to them, and will try no rules or exceptions; Thursdays will be set apart for unappealable cases; findings to trials of rules and exceptions; while Saturdays, after call of cases in the mornings, will be devoted to disposing of cases held under advisement, and to writing out decisions.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The board met at the usual hour last evening. Present: Dr. Smith, president, Drs. Austin and Stone, and Messrs. Creevy, McCourd, and Pennington.

Dr. Austin, on behalf of the committee on health, submitted a report announcing the opinion of the committee to be that the yellow fever is no longer epidemic, and that all may return to the city without fear of the disease.

The committee express their inability to report the number of cases which have been under treatment, unless physicians will report all cases treated by them, giving the names of those cured and those who have died; and they recommend that the secretary publish the names of all who have died, and the name of the physician attending them, as well as those under treatment and cured, if possible; which will furnish valuable statistics for future reference, as well as show the world that the yellow fever may be cured with proper treatment and nursing. Generally speaking, the disease has been of a very mild type. The report pays a high and deserved tribute to the Howard association for their zeal and energy during the past season. Their success has been truly wonderful, and much of it is owing to the selection of competent physicians who have been educated in the medical schools of New Orleans. Too much praise can not be given to the young men who have given their strength and time to the care of the sick and dying.

The committee recommend that daily reports be discontinued from and after the 10th instant, and that sextons be required to make verbal returns thereafter. The committee conclude by recommending the adoption of the motion offered at the last meeting by Dr. Stone.

Dr. Stone favored the adoption of the report except that portion which suggested the requiring of report by physicians of all cases treated by them, which he considered impracticable.

On motion of Mr. Pennington, that portion of the report was stricken out, and the remainder adopted unanimously.

On motion of Mr. McCoard, the secretary was instructed to notify the public through the press of the action of the board.

After the transaction of other business of no public interest the board adjourned.

FANNY WRIGHT, THE MURDERESS

The Story of a Fallen Woman as Given by Herself.

Fanny Wright, the woman who killed Officer McChesney last Saturday night, has been removed to the Tombs, and now occupies a cell in the upper tier of the female prison. The clothing stained with the blood of her victim, which she has worn since her arrest, was yesterday changed. In reply to interrogations she made the following statement respecting her life:

About ten years ago I was living happily with my parents at Poughkeepsie, in this state. Nothing that I could wish for was withheld. I was trained in the Roman Catholic faith, and attended to my religious duties with carefulness and pleasure until I was corrupted by a young girl of the same age, who was my schoolfellow. She had been reading novels to such an extent that her head became fairly upset, and nothing would do her but to travel out and see the world. The dull life of a small country place like Poughkeepsie would not suit her tastes and inclinations, and from repeatedly whispering into my ears, and persuading me that we would be great ladies, have horses, carriages, diamonds, and servants of our own, I finally reluctantly consented to flee from home, and we started together one beautiful night for the city of New York. [Here the poor woman gave away to teers again, and sobbed hysterically.] On our arrival in this city we took up our quarters with Mrs. Adams, at No. 87 Leonard street, and this was the place where I lost my virtue, and commenced to lead a life of bitter, bitter shame. My family ultimately succeeded in finding out my whereabouts and took me home, but I could not listen to the voice of reason. I felt that I had selected my mode of life, and was determined at all hazards to follow it out. I escaped a second time and went back to Mrs. Adams's, where I was confined of a sweet little girl shortly afterward. I used to keep myself very clean, and dressed with great care and tastefulness. From Mrs. Adams's I moved to Mrs. Willoughby's, at No. 101 Mercer street, and lived there until the death of my little girl, three years ago; that had an awful effect upon me, and I could not help taking to drink to drown my sorrows. From this period I date the commencement of my real hardships. My father emigrated to California, and I had no one left but a young brother; he tried to reform me, and also his poor wife, God bless her, she used to cry herself sick at my disgrace; previous to this the young girl who accompanied me from home in the first instance fell out lucky and got married. Drink was the only pleasure of my life, and it was not long until it began to have its results; I was arrested and committed to the island for six months; I got down before my time was up, and again took to liquor and street walking. I used to walk all the time between Green, Wooster, and Mercer streets in the eighth ward. I was soon arrested a second time, and sent up again for six months. During the last three years of my life I have been sent on the island six times altogether for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. On the night the officer was killed, (here she gave way again to tears, and rocked herself around on the bed in a fearful manner), I was walking through the street going home with a message, and picking the kernels out of a hickory nut with a small knife, when the officer came up to me; I was almost drunk at the time, and much excited; I did not know what I was doing, when, on the impulse of the moment, I struck him with the knife. I never had any enmity against the man, in fact, never saw him before until that time. It is not true that I had only just come down from the island; I was down from there at least six weeks; I don't feel myself guilty of his murder, when I never intended to do it, and I know God will forgive me.—*N. The Murder of Mr. Carter.

The Monroe Intelligencer gives this version of the murder of Elias Carter in Franklin parish:

We are pained to learn that Mr. Elias Carter, assistant assessor United States internal revenue, fifth division, third district of Louisiana, while in performance of the duties appertaining to that office, was brutally murdered in Franklin parish on the evening of the 21st instant.

Mr. Carter has resided ten years in Franklin parish, and leaves a wife and six children to mourn his loss. Furthermore, he was a brave and fearless man; always union, and a faithful and efficient officer of the revenue service ever since the establishment by the national government of this collection district.

Mr. Carter left Winnsborough about 4 P. M. the 21st for Prairie landing to attend to the shipment of cotton, and four miles from the former place was shot dead and left in the road.

His assassins, two in number, have not yet been arrested, but for the honor of our state we hope they will not long be allowed to go unpunished.

Confiscated Property.

WASHINGTON, October 29.—The case of a property owner here who went South at the breaking out of the war, and whose property was seized, confiscated, and sold by the government to the Hon. J. D. The court sustained the decision of the lower court, rendering the confiscation act of congress constitutional, and securing the present holders of confiscated property a life estate in the same. This decision applies to numbers of similar cases.—Telegram to New York Tribune.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." [feb3]

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. OLD FOLKS.

Ah, don't be sorrowful, darling,
And don't be so rowful, pray;
Taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day.

'Tis rainy weather, my darling,
Time's waves they heavily run;
But taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more clouds than sun.

We are old folks now, my darling,
Our heads are growing gray;
And taking the year together, my dear,
You will always find the May.

We have had our May, my darling,
And our roses long ago;
And the time of year is coming, my dear,
For the silent night and snow.

And God is God, my darling,
Of night as well as day;
And we feel and know that we can go
Wherever he leads the way.

Aye, God of the night, my darling—
Of the night of death so grim;
The gate that leads out of life, good wife,
Is the gate that leads to Him.

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

THE GENERAL MISSIONARY COMMITTEE.—The Board, at its late meeting, elected the following members to meet on their part with the General Committee at their session, which commenced Thursday morning, November 7, namely: C. C. North, G. J. Ferry, Schureman Halsted, D. L. Ross, J. H. Taft, M. D'C. Crawford, A. C. Foss, S. D. Brown, J. Ayars.

On motion, the committee was empowered to fill any vacancies occurring in its own body. This joint committee is to assemble at the Mission Rooms, No. 35 Union Place, on Thursday morning, November 7, at 9 o'clock.

STEADY! STEADY AT THE WHEEL!—Persons used to the perils of navigation have heard this cry from the pilot or captain, that the ship might be kept heading for her destined haven. The juvenile missionary societies, as the treasurer has often said, and with him the secretaries, have ever agreed that working the juvenile missionary on the plans of the Discipline would take the missionary craft safe into port. Rev. Dr. Lore, a staunch friend of our mission work, says: "The disciplinary plan for the support of missions is more or less familiar to all our readers, and deserves a careful study as an admirably devised arrangement for kindling and preserving a true missionary spirit, and making the church forever what it was in its early days—a missionary church. We have no better counsels to give them than are there presented. We do not think any pastor, mission committee, or official board can extemporize one-half as good." One item of it reads: "It is earnestly recommended that each Sunday school in our churches and congregations be organized into a missionary society, under such rules and regulations as the pastor, the superintendent, and teachers may prescribe."

HOW TO ORGANIZE THEM.—Is anything easier than for the officers and teachers to elect the pastor president, the superintendent or some other person vice president, another for treasurer, and another for secretary? All the officers and teachers, male and female, are managers. Each class is a missionary society, with an appropriate name or number, and every member a collector, with a book or card properly signed, to show that they are authorized. When the monthly meeting occurs, and the name of a class is called, its representative walks forward with the amount of their collection, in a box or neat envelope, with the amount marked upon it, and places it upon the table of the treasurer, who enters the amount received in his book opposite the name of the class. The money all in, another verse or two to be sung, and then the presiding officer introduces the speakers. After each speech sing a verse or two, always to be lively and spiritual. A collection is generally taken from the audience at the conclusion. At some stage of the meeting it is well to state the amount collected for the month. Dismiss with the benediction from the pastor.

WHERE WILL THE CHILDREN GET THE MONEY FROM?—They may probably get one cent a week from their parents, and as much from some relatives, or friends, or neighbors; but it is not well for them to ask of the members of the congregation or strangers indiscriminately, and on the Sabbath in or about the church. Teachers and parents will advise on these matters.

ANNUAL MEETING.—Let the children have the afternoon of the missionary day, and too much pains cannot be taken to secure for them interesting and instructive speakers. No man is too eminent for such a service.

SHALL WE GIVE CERTIFICATES OF MEMBERSHIP?—Use your own discretion in this matter. For every three dollars you give to the treasurer of the Parent Society you can, on application, be furnished with an elegantly engraved certificate of life membership. Collectors' books and cards can be had gratuitously, upon application at the Mission Rooms, 35 Union Place, New York. Brethren, pastors, steady at the wheel, and we shall go safely into port.

Rev. C. Willerup, the superintendent of our Scandinavian missions, was expected to return to Copenhagen October 26. October 19 was just seventeen years since he was ordained an elder in the Church of God by Bishop Janes, in the Bethel Ship. The congregation of the ship was a crowded one last Sabbath, while Brother Willerup showed that "if a man die he shall live again." It was a most effective discourse.

MARVELOUS IN OUR EYES!—Our miisssionaries, both in China and India, speak of the amazing openings and awakenings in their respective fields. In confirmation of this state of things in India, hear Dr. Duff:

The inhabitants of Cuttisghur, some forty or fifty years ago, were upward of half a million in number, and are now greatly more. The proprietors are Hindoos of the highest castes, while the Brahmans are all-powerful there, the bulk of the population being chumars, or workers in leather, who are of a low caste, though chiefly employed as agriculturists, who were very much tyrannized over by those whom they had been taught to regard as a sort of demi-gods. At last one of their own number professed to be sent by heaven as a deliverer. A small number of followers gathered around him, to whom he expounded his opinions, and they became enthusiastic admirers. But this leader said to himself, I will get more influence over my followers, if, like other holy men, I retire to the gloomy forests among the hills. I will go there for six months, and fast, meditate, and pray; in short, I will act out the grand law of Hindoo asceticism, and after that I will return with my revelations to them—my message from heaven. During his absence, his followers began to expound what he had been telling them to the rest of the people, and before the end of six months great expectations were raised. Upward of 100,000 people assembled in a spacious plain near the village of Girode, watching for the advent of the new prophet, and when the day at last arrived that he came down from the wooded heights behind, and appeared among them, they were satisfied that he was sent as a prophet from heaven. He told them his message to them was, that they were to throw off the oppressive Brahmanical yoke, to fling away their idols, to give up their superstitious worship, and were to worship the only one God, who created all things, and to worship him not by outward material symbols, but to worship him by meditating on him, and praying to him. The report is, that thousands, if not tens of thousands, obeyed the summons.

Church Items.

Rev. Henry Boehm, now nearly ninety-three years of age, was present at the preachers' meeting on Monday last, and made a brief and affecting address. Before closing, in response to a question from Dr. Foster, he stated that in his judgment, the Evangelical spirit of our preachers of the present day compares favorably with that of the ministry of fifty years ago, while their advantages in mental acquirements are greatly superior. Considering his advanced age, Father Boehm enjoys excellent health He is able to attend the public services of the church, and occasionally participates in them, He rejoices in a clear and most delightful Christian experience.

Rev. Dr. Mitchell, presiding elder of the North Carolina District of the Virginia and North Carolina Conference, called on us this week, having just completed the third round on his extensive district. He informs us that, saying nothing of the travel on railroads, it requires more than seven hundred miles' travel by buggy and horse to make the tour of his district, and it is daily enlarging. He has forded seventy-two rivers and streams, which most of the time during the winter and spring are impassable by a horse and carriage. As the results of the quarter, he reports that from August 4 to October 15, there were 215 converts are white. 1226 members and probationers have been received, two-thirds of whom are white. The missionaries are all abundant in labors. In two and a-half months Dr. Mitchell delivered forty-three discourses, of which thirty-six were in the open air. The spirit of revival pervades the district.

Rev. William Taylor, formerly known as the "California street preacher," is still in London, holding special revival services, and receiving more calls than he can accept. At the recent session of the California Conference, (of which he is a member,) a resolution was adopted urging him to return to the work on the Pacific coast.

DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—The opening services for the Drew Theological Seminary were to be held at Madison, on Wednesday, November 6. Addresses were expected from Rev. Bishops Janes, Simpson, and Ames, Drs. Durbin, John S. Porter, Curry, Johnson, President of Dickinson College, Cummings, President of the Wesleyan University, C. Walsh, Esq., of Newark, and C. C. North, Esq., of New York. The music was under the direction of Philip Phillips, Esq.

AVERAGE PER MEMBER.—Bishop Morris says that, having the mission funds of the Ohio Conference in 1820 placed in his hands to take to conference, Rev. J. S. Smart asks:

"How much missionary money do you suppose was paid in from the whole of the States of Ohio and Michigan, as well as parts of Kentucky, Virginia, ard Indiana, in 1820? The entire aggregate of all the collections amounted to nineteen dollars and a fraction over! Last year—1865 '6—Ohio and Michigan alone gave $78,562. The entire amount contributed by the whole church in the same year—1820—was $823. The amount contributed last year—1865 '6—was $671,090. A very respectable advance certainly, though I think you will agree with me that it is far less than it ought to be, when you consider that this amounts to an average of only seventy-seven cents per member. But this standard has been raised by slow degrees. In 1820 we gave an average of three mills per member; in 1825, one cent one mill; in 1830, two cents seven mills; in 1835, four cents six mills; in 1840, eighteen cents seven mills; 1845, eight cents seven mills; in 1850, fifteen cents six mills; in 1855, twenty-five cents five mills; in 1860, twenty-five cents; in 1865, seventy-eight cents one mill, the highest average yet attained. Will missions supported at such a rate ever convert the world?

Revival Items.

The M. E. Church in Hampton, N. Y., Rev. Carson Parker, pastor, is enjoying a precious revival season. Over forty have already united with the church, and others are earnest seekers. Efficient aid has been rendered by the Troy praying band, J. Hillman, leader. The pastor writes us: "The religious sentiment seems to be the ruling thought of the community. We expect to go into winter quarters around the cross. The membership are alive and active, fighting according to the old Cavalry tactics."

A glorious revival is progressing at Libertyville, N. J., Rev. A. L. Smith, pastor. The church is nightly crowded, and the altar thronged with penitent seekers.

A gracious revival is in progress on the Easton circuit, Rev. W. H. Adams, pastor. Over sixty have professed conversion; forty-one have been baptised. The interest continues unabated.

At Lafayette, N. J., Rev. W. E. Blakeslee, pastor, over eighty have recently professed conversion; of these seventy-five have united with the M. E. Church.

Precious revivals are now in progress in many of our institutions of learning throughout the North.

The North-western Farmer

for November sustains the reputation of that sterling rural magazine as the leading Farm Journal in the entire West, and one which is worthy of an immense circulation. We learn from the prospectus that it is to be enlarged and otherwise greatly improved on commencing the third volume, January 1. We know every farmer and fruit grower ought to take it. $1 50 a year, samples free. Address T. A. BLAND, Indianapolis, Indiana.

THE TERRIBLE HURRICANE.

Loss of Life Thereby.

THE LOST STEAMSHIP PISANO.

The steamship St. Mary, which arrived here Sunday night from Brazos Santiago, brings the following intelligence in addition to that already published:

List of persons—so far as known—drowned at Brazos Santiago, Texas, during the hurricane of the 7th of October, 1867:

John Anderson, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Mead and child, Horace Blakesley and wife, J. Vanhooven, J. Wright, two men unknown, one woman unknown, four United States soldiers, colored.

The Removal of the Sheriff.

The Galveston Bulletin in commenting on an article which appeared in the Crescent relative to the removal of Sheriff Hays thus sensibly remarks:

Now, as we understand the reconstruction laws of congress, the power is vested in the discretion of the commander of the district to remove any officer who is an impediment to reconstruction. The necessity for reconstruction was most favorably exhibited when New Orleans, just after the surrender, chose from among all her citizens for the position of sheriff, not a loyal man, who had been true to the Union, but the man of all her sons who has most distinguished himself for service in the confederate army, not even excepting Beauregard, and that was Harry T. Hays. Mr. Hays is a gentleman, learned and qualified for the position of a sheriff; but his election to that position, fresh from the confederate ranks, was a greater insult to the loyal men of New Orleans, and they were many, than his present removal by General Mower is an "unnecessary offense and insult to the people of New Orleans and Louisiana."

The Crescent evidently tries to assume the fact that reconstruction was over at the last election, that it having been decided that the convention shall be holden is all that can be done, and nobody hereafter can impede the reconstruction, and that the removal of Hays comes too late. We do not so understand it. That convention has to meet, and it must meet and adjourn without bloodshed; not to be dispersed by a bloody and fatal riot, as was the last convention held in New Orleans, when Hays was sheriff. Elections are to be held for the adoption or rejection of the constitution when framed, and for state officers, etc., as will be ordained by the convention, and in these elections the sheriffs of parishes will have an important executive duty, and we venture the opinion that these facts justified the order of General Mower, and are purposely ignored by the Crescent to make a wail over the removal of Hays. Men like Hays, whose record for position was only made in the confederate service, should stand aside from responsible political offices until the matter is settled by the loyal people and the state fairly reconstructed. We discuss this subject as we are also in the fifth military district, and subject to the orders of the same district commander, and a similar case might arise in Texas.

HUTCHINS HOUSE REOPENED.—The Houston Telegraph says the Hutchins house was to reopen on the 10th under the continued administration of George Moore, formerly of the City hotel in this city. This paragraph from the Telegraph is truthful:

He is now in charge of the Hutchins house, the great hotel of Texas, and was chosen, out of hundreds of others, as the man to conduct the first splendid hotel in the state. Henceforward, hotel keeping in Texas will improve until it is equal to anything of the sort in the United States. The Hutchins house is now as delightful a hotel as can be found in the whole country.

Daniel Webster's declaration is worthy of frequent repetition: "Cling to the constitution as the shipwrecked mariner clings to the last plank when night and the tempest close around him."—Rebel Exchange.

Why, then, did you not cling to the constitution, instead of inaugurating a war to destroy both the constitution and government of the United States?

DETENTION OF MAILS.—The Houston Telegraph of Wednesday last says:

The New Orleans mail, which arrived in Galveston Monday, at eleven o'clock, A. M. has been detained there ever since, and will not arrive in Houston until some time today, fully forty-eight hours behind time. While we do not censure anybody for this outrageous detention, we can not resist the conviction that a remedy should be speedily applied. If it is not, we may look for many repetitions during the coming winter

CIVILIZATION IN GALVESTON.—The Bulletin says:

We must be getting civilized. Christianity is on the advance, and all Galveston cries excelsior. That New York abomination, "pretty waiter girls," are coming Some who have been at the famous 444 say that waiter girls are a delusion. That may be, but it is sometimes pleasant to hug a

CASES IN BANKRUPTCY.

It is a matter of surprise to us that so few members of a business community like ours, which is so seriously embarrassed, have thus far availed themselves of the liberal provisions of the bankrupt law. Nothing better indicates the magnanimity of the federal government than the measures so carefully prepared to disburden the South, in her prostration after the war, of her heavy debits and to assist her again to her feet and to venture her past mercantile strides anew. Hardly a man upon change or a merchant in conspicuous standing in our midst but daily laments the financial depression, and yet, with a wide avenue open by which to escape the present stagnation and despondency, lingers in the old desperate ruts. Why is this? Not only are the means of relief prescribed available to all, but in each of the congressional districts of our state is a registrar in bankruptcy, a gentleman especially elected by the chief justice of the supreme court for his qualifications to carry out the provisions of the act. It should also be borne in mind that after the second of March next the debtor alone whose assets will discharge fifty per cent. of his liabilities can enjoy recognition in a court of bankruptcy. That the major part of our old merchants can not meet this requirement is too patent to require debate. If we say that five out of every fifty can do so we feel that we are allowing a liberal margin. But three months more intervene before March, when the indulgence will be no longer accorded in its present liberal measure. We enjoin our business men to bear this fact in mind. The interests of most of them, if not all, the trammeled credits, the best of which are daily scrutinized with suspicion—the paralysis of trade—the need of fresh encouragements—and our reputation and future as a great market are vital reasons why we should all discover and employ the marked advantages afforded us by the government. We frankly consider the bankrupt law as cardinal a measure of reconstruction as the military bill itself. Trade, "the calm health of nations," must receive a wholesome stimulus, and hundreds may engage confidently in it anew, if they will disembarrass themselves of the straight jacket of insolvency in the way indicated by the law in question. A revival of commercial activity will then bring universal cheer, until every man, however violent his sectional biases, will be forced in candor to admit that his government has a hand as generous for the deserving as it was austere to the refractory. Our duty to ourselves as a community, however, should impel each debtor to file his petition as a bankrupt forthwith, and should he still demur his creditors should prick him on. We have no doubt that many of our citizens seriously contemplate the step, but prefer to delay it until the short ensuing probation has nearly expired. This is injudicious especially to themselves, as they will thus postpone the date of their discharge all the longer, and suddenly incumber the registrars, moreover, with a quantity of cases which can better be distributed through the three coming months.

HON. R. KING CUTLER.

Our community was alike startled and gratified to learn by an order issued from military headquarters yesterday, of the appointment of R. King Cutler to the second judicial district bench. The popularity of the gentleman, his world-wide renown for valiantly combatting the hordes of rebels that have menaced his precious head, his eloquent appeals for liberty in the '64 convention, his recent brilliant senatorial career, his personal attractiveness in a blue coat and brass buttons, and more than all, his impressive cane, whose dogmatic thump can summon some 11,700 ardent partisans at his back, are each and all decisive reasons why we congratulate the bench of Louisiana upon its new incumbent. We can not longer deny that the chances of the modest gentleman, Mr. Johnson, of Tennessee, for a new nomination are well assured, especially since his powerful patron upon the second district bench can now afford him material assistance by the prestige of his new dignity.

Louisiana has had many trials during the last five years; but when out of the dark cloud there emerges a Cutler to interpret her laws, it does seem as though we could drop the curtain on the past. We only regret his appointment inasmuch as we had reserved for him his old desk in the national senate. We had fondly dreamed that there he might assume the championship which his superb talents warrant, and thus instead of confining him to one poor state, we had hoped to distribute him over the whole land and to be permitted to enumerate him as another of our national blessings to be reverently remembered until the pages of American history shall have been forever clasped.

We shall henceforth insist (and in fact specially invite the action of the coming convention here on the matter) that the old tradition of justice imaged as a woman in a night gown and bandage, be declared obsolete. Henceforth let it be masculine, imposingly bellied and in pantaloons, while own glorious blue, fulgently embellished with brass buttons. No night-gowns henceforth—no, no! Justice is henceforth awake, and the court is satisfied that it rather knows itself. An offender may well tremble when brought before the austere judicial eye of Cutler. We are willing to venture that nobody will be rash enough to sin twice in that jurisdiction.

Let us all congratulate ourselves that considerations of partisanship are henceforth at a discount. General Mower has but given expression, in his order, to the almost importunate wish of Governor Flanders that our distinguished Cutler should be exalted to the bench; and, although some may be ungenerous enough to intimate that his excellency relies upon the future support of the immortal eleven thousand and a few extra hundred, we are seriously disposed to question the imputation. May we not hope that the present lamented president is now more reconciled toward Governor Wells' successor?

We ought to close this article, but somehow we don't see how we can. A too grateful impulse drives our pen. At last a man has been summoned to a post, to whom no possible exception can be taken. A man, secure from the charge or even the softest and most subdued whiff of suspicion—a man, who on each eve stalks forth beneath the lunar ray up and down his spacious "orange orchard," without one self-reproach for a misspent life, while his ample form is radiant with moonshine; a man who, despite the awful destinies of a state, confided in so large a measure to his hands, calmly, modestly, and yet grandly mounts the judicial forum, elevates his solemn coat tails, and yields his undeniable weight to the bench of Louisiana!

Military Personal.

Leave of absence for sixty days, on surgeon's certificate of disability, with permission to go beyond the limits of this military district, is granted to Second Lieutenant H. R. Neal, twenty-sixth United States infantry.

Leave of absence for thirty days is granted to Second Lieutenant F. H. Hathaway, forty-first United States infantry.

Repeal of the Bread Ordinances.

By the proceedings of the board of aldermen it will be observed that Alderman Dewees introduced a resolution requiring grocers and other dealers in bakers' bread, to post in some conspicuous place in their establishments the weight and price of loaves, and another resolution repealing all existing ordinances regulating the sale of bread. These resolutions passed on the first reading.

YELLOW FEVER IN NEW ORLEANS.—We learn that a young man, son of a partner of one of the business firms in this city, who had been absent during the summer, returned to New Orleans last week, was stricken with yellow fever a day or two after his arrival, and died of that disease two or three days subsequently.

REPORTER FOR THE ALABAMA CONVENTION.—The Montgomery Sentinel announces the arrival there of Captain John E. Norcross, long connected with the editorial department of the Chronicle at Washington, and Press at Philadelphia. It adds that Captain Norcross is one of the most expert short-hand reporters in America, and says, we are glad to learn arrangements have been effected with him to furnish a full and complete report of the proceedings of the constitutional convention.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF THE OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—The Franklin Banner publishes the following information, which it qualifies with the declaration that it is from strictly reliable sources:

We have been informed that capitalists and railroad companies in Illinois are ready to contract to construct and put in operation the Opelousas railroad from Brashear to the Texas line, in one year from the time the contract is signed, provided the Opelousas company will sell the road, or lease it on reasonable terms. We have this information from a source which renders the statement strictly reliable.

RED RIVER NAVIGATION.—The Natchitoches Times says:

Navigation is difficult; even the smallest craft boats are stopped on their way up and down at the numerous sandbars. Freight is high, $5 to $7 per barrel.

SNOW AT THE NORTH AND WEST.—On Wednesday morning of last week there was a considerable fall of snow on the Erie road, between Elmira and Salamanca, New York, and the whole surrounding country was covered with the mantle of winter to the depth of two or three inches. Snow has fallen all through the West.

ICE, SUGAR MAKING, AND MILK AND WATER IN IBERVILLE.—The Iberville South says there was not only frost but ice in that parish on Wednesday morning of last week; that the planters who have sugar to make have commenced rolling; that one of the regular customers of a colored woman who was accused of watering her milk, replied that she did use water "because cows did not give milk enough these times."

APPOINTMENT.—Upon the recommendation of Governor B. F. Flanders, W. M. Naudain, fifth justice of the peace, in and for the parish of Jefferson, Louisiana, right bank, is removed from office, and John R. Beals is appointed in his place by General

Military Courts Martial.

The following orders organizing military courts martial have just been issued from General Mower's headquarters:

A general court martial is hereby appointed to meet at New Orleans, on Thursday, November 14, 1867, at 10 o'clock A. M., or as soon thereafter as practicable, for the trial of such persons as may be properly brought before it.

DETAIL FOR THE COURT:

1. Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Sheldon Sturgeon, captain first United States infantry.
2. Brevet Major Kinzie Bates, captain first United States infantry.
3. Brevet Captain P. H. Moroney, first lieutenant United States army, (retired).
4. First Lieutenant F. E. Pierce, first United States infantry.
5. First Lieutenant A. Bogle, thirty-ninth United States infantry.

First Lieutenant W. E. Dougherty, first United States infantry, judge advocate.

No other officers than those named can be assembled without manifest injury to the service.

The court will sit without regard to hours.

A general court martial is hereby appointed to convene at Austin, Texas, at 10 o'clock A. M., Tuesday, November 19, 1867, or as soon thereafter as practicable, for the trial of such persons as may be properly brought before it.

DETAIL FOR THE COURT:

1. Brevet Brigadier General James Oakes, colonel sixth cavalry.
2. Brevet Major G. M. Whitside, captain sixth cavalry.
3. Brevet Captain A. R. Chaffee, first lieutenant sixth cavalry.
4. First Lieutenant S. C. Plummer, twenty-sixth infantry.
5. Second Lieutenant G. W. Smith, twenty-sixth infantry.

First Lieutenant W. A. Rafferty, sixth cavalry, judge advocate.

No other officers than those named can be assembled without manifest injury to the service.

NEW PROPRIETORS OF THE WASHINGTON STAR.—The new proprietors of the Washington Star are Messrs. C. S. Noyes and C. B. Baker, for many years connected with the paper; Alexander R. Shepherd, a merchant in Washington, George W. Adams, a well-known Washington correspondent, and S. W. Kaufman, chief of one of the bureaus of the treasury department. Fourteen years ago Mr. Wallach bought this property for one thousand dollars. It has now been sold for one hundred thousand dollars.

The New York Election.

From a private letter, dated in New York city on the 5th instant, written by a citizen of New Orleans, formerly of New York, we extract the following:

The election to-day is progressing very quietly, and though some of the Republicans have hopes of carrying the state I think we shall lose the state ticket, while we may save the legislature. The fact that no congressmen are to be elected reduces the contest down to a squabble for place and profit. There seems to be considerable apathy among our friends, and I am very sorry that this is so, but though we may not carry the state this fall, I have no doubt but it will be all right next fall.

A Minneapolis teamster, with a load of lime, set fire with his pipe to a bundle of hay in his wagon. He attempted reduction of the flames by dashing water copiously upon his freight, and soon found himself in fresh trouble from the lime.

There are now over one hundred Republican newspapers in the Southern states where seven years ago there was not one. They are working, not only for the dissemination of correct political principles, but also for the development of the resources of the country, the extension of trade, and the spread of popular education.

The following returns of the offensive and defensive weapons which France has at her command is not without interest: 9173 bronze cannon, 2774 cannon obusier, 3210 bronze mortars, 3921 bronze obusiers, 1615 cast-iron cannon. 1229 obusiers, 18,778,549 iron balls, 1,712,574 percussion guns, 10,263,986 kilogrammes of powder, 4,993,668 bombs. Needless to remark that every cannon is in order, every gun new, every grain of powder dry, and every bullet perfect.

The old newspaper accounts of steamboat disasters on the Mississippi used to run somewhat in this way: "The pilot might have taken a little too much whisky, in his exultation at passing the other boat; and the engineer being at the moment engaged in the cabin playing poker with the captain, forgot that he had not released the safety-valve, which, of course, he was obliged to fasten down during the race. No blame is attached to the officers."

Some one speaking of a highly ornamented house whose proprietor was not particularly hospitable, said, "I should like to see a little less gilding and more carving."

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.—The Vicksburg Republican says that the election held there on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week passed off more quietly and orderly than any previous election ever held in that county. The colored suffragans, after having voted the Republican ticket at the election, quietly returned to their usual avocations. Their good behavior can not be too highly recommended.

The Cincinnati Times, enlarging upon the present dimensions of our land, and peering into the future says: "It must some day be said that the sun never sets on the American republic, and that one drum-beat can be heard all round the earth, and then when our present slow rates or travel shall be so improved that one can start from Cincinnati at twelve o'clock M., go round the globe and find it noon all the way, we shall have achieved some memorable results."

Mower and Cutler.

A cutler is necessary to make tools for a mower, and a mower is necessary to use a cutler's tools. The relation is reciprocal. But now that Mower has a cutler, he ought to cut down the hay (Hays.) But we don't like the way the general mows, nor do we like the judge's Cut-ler.

But now that the general has appointed Cutler District Judge, he ought to appoint old Jacob Barker clerk of the court, and Wm. H. C. King constable, and the winds of Jefferson will pipe eternal laughter.

The "Devil's Daily,"

sometimes called the New Orleans Times, favored us with a flaming notice in its last Sunday's issue. Such slanders are a good man's praises. We had rather be defamed by the "Devil's Daily" than praised. Were we to awake some morning, and find the Times sounding our praises, we should immediately inquire what offence we had committed against society, to commend us to the favorable consideration of such a journal. Suspect your virtue, honesty and honor when the Times praises you.

The Master said, "woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you." The good of all ages have been defamed by the wicked. Moses was called a "deceiver;" Elijah a "disturber of the public peace;" Jesus, a "wine-bibber and glutton;" St. Paul, a "mad-man;" Luther, "anti-christ," and Wesley, a "fanatic" In these times, one can well afford to be placed in such honorable company. All hail reproach!

And now, as our neighbor commenced his piece with a passage from Holy Writ, we will end our piece with a quotation from the same volume: "O, full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, will thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" Acts 13, 10.

Major General Mower.

With one exception, the military commanders of this Department have been singularly free from the charge of bribery, and we are happy to say that Gen. Mower is not that exception. That there are men in this city, mean enough to offer him a consideration for an office, we do not doubt; but that he would accept such an offer, or permit it to be made without a rebuke, we do not believe. We make the above remaks, as some supposed that in our last week's issue we designed to insinuate to the contrary against the general, which we did not.

Galveston Aldermen.—The Bulletin says it appears to be generally believed that the board of aldermen will be speedily removed, and their places filled by military appointment.

PERSONNEL OF THE CONVENTION OF 1867.

We commence this week a series of biographical sketches of the members of the Constitutional Convention, to meet in this city the present month. The first of the series is Hon. Wm. Rufus Crane.

This gentleman is too widely and favorably known to the people of this State to need any introduction. His long and arduous services in the cause of the Union, and of universal suffrage and equal rights, and his ardent and impulsive temperament, have endeared him to his political friends, while they, at the same time, have made him particularly obnoxious to his political opponents.

Mr. Crane was elected from the parish of Orleans to the Constitutional Convention. The prominent part he has taken in the organization of the Republican party in Louisiana, his courage and inflexibility as a leader, and his ability and influence with his party, will render him one of the most prominent men of the convention. It has been Mr. Crane's fortune to be the "best abused" Radical in the State. This fact, coupled with his boldness in the advocacy of Republican principles, has probably earned for him much of his wide and well-earned popularity.

Mr. Crane is a native of Washington, D. C. In his infancy his parents removed to Virginia. Here Mr. Crane received such scanty elementary education as the very poor country schools of that State afforded, purchasing his own school books by his labor out of school hours. At the age of twenty-two he was admitted to the bar in Beverly, Va., and supported himself for a few years by the practice of his profession and teaching school. In 1835 he removed to Brandon, Miss., and there devoted himself to his profession for the ensuing ten years. In 1846 he removed to New Orleans, where he settled permanently, and has resided ever since.

In 1851 Mr. Crane was first brought prominently before the public in connection with politics, by the nomination of his friends for the Legislature on the Democratic ticket, and was defeated. The next year he was elected.

He early evinced his keen and penetrating insight into the characters, motives, and schemes of the desperate plotters who were already intriguing and forming the conspiracy of secession, which culminated ten years later in an atrocious rebellion. Among these conspirators was the sly, insinuating Machiavelli of secession, Judah P. Benjamin, who, in accomplishments, versatility of mind, legal learning, and ability as a parliamentary debater, stood a giant among his compeers. New Orleans was one of the centres of the political schism then rapidly extending, which taught that slavery was the chief interest of the Southern States, slave-owners a privileged caste, and secession the true means of preserving their interest and power. To all the plots of the promoters of secession Mr. Benjamin lent his great abilities, and prostituted the influence of his high position as United States Senator to the furtherance of their conspiracy. Mr. Crane early detected the dangerous designs of these men, and Mr. Benjamin's complicity with them, and he signalized his début in the Legislature by boldly moving a resolution, intended to remove Mr. Benjamin from his seat. He also opposed strenuously the election of another arch conspirator, John Slidell, to the United States Senate. Mr. Crane thus incurred the violent hatred and opposition of the secessionists, and was by their influence defeated for re-election.

He afterwards filled an important position in the Custom House. He firmly and fearlessly confronted the Know Nothing party which swept the State.

At the outbreak of the rebellion, Mr. Crane refused to contribute money, or in any way assist it, and was among the faithful band who, while compelled to remain with their families and bow to the storm, remained true to their allegiance to the Union. In 1862, after the capture of New Orleans, Mr. Crane was appointed Collector of Taxes by Gen. Shepley.

In 1863 he was a member of the Free State Central Committee. At this time he also allied himself with the organization known as the Friends of Freedom, and declared himself in favor of universal suffrage.

He was an influential member of the State Convention in 1864, which nominated Mr. Flanders for Governor, in opposition to Governor Hahn.

Mr. Crane's convictions of duty and political principles, naturally placed him in opposition to the policy of Gov. Hahn and his friends, and his bold and impulsive nature could not suffer that opposition to be a silent or negative one. He became an active and prominent leader in the movement which resulted in the separation en masse of the Republican party from the schemes of Gen. Banks, and placed him in opposition to the policy of Gov. Hahn and the cenvention of 1864. He opposed that convention, and the constitution it formed.

Together with Mr. Durant and others, he organized in 1865 the Committee of Friends of Universal Suffrage, and he took an active part in the Universal Suffrage Convention at Economy Hall, and in the registration of the blacks subsequently. On the terrible 30th of July he was a marked man, and his life was threatened. He attended the Philadelphia Convention of Southern loyalists in 1866, and on his return worked hard and successfully in enlarging and organizing the party.

Mr. Crane's radical principles, and his uncompromising opposition to half-way men and measures, has not failed to provoke hostility among persons of this stamp in his own party. In opposition to this hostility he was nominated at the Republican primary meeting in his district for the convention, as an avowed radical, and a declared supporter of equal rights to all men, irrespective of color, in suffrage in the schools, the jury box, the witness stand, and in all civic relations, and was elected by an overwhelming majority.

In private life, Mr. Crane bears an unblemished reputation, and while some of his own party have differed from him politically, even his most bitter opponents will testify to his integrity and purity of life as a man.

His legal attainments, his great political experience, and his bold and unflinching advocacy of radical measures during years of obloquy and proscription, will naturally render him one of the most popular and influential members of the convention.

Hon. J. B. Hy. Bonseigneur.

Mr. Bonseigneur was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention from the parish of Orleans, by a majority of 3745. Mr. Bonseigneur is a young man, having been born in 1832 in Port au Prince, Hayti. He was educated in the Lyceum of that city, and in 1850 came to New Orleans and entered into business.

Upon the organization of the Republican party in Louisiana, he at once took an active part in its support. He was elected a member of the Central Executive Committee of the Friends of Universal Suffrage in 1866, and President of the Second Ward Radical Republican Club in 1867.

Mr. Bonseigneur is a gentleman of ability and education. He has been successful in business life, and has, by industry and skill, accumnlated a comfortable competence.

From his youth he has been an uncompromising abolitionist, and an advocate of liberal principles and equal rights to all men.

Few young men have warmer or more devoted friends, by whom his future career will be watched with interest. We predict that he will make his mark in the convention, and do yeoman service to his State and party. Of known probity and honor, the interests of his constituents in his hands will never be betrayed for place or lucre.

Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback.

Captain Pinchback, elected a member of the Constitutional Convention from the paris of Orleans, was born May 10, 1837, in Georgia. His father was Major William Pinchback, a wealthy planter.

In 1846 his father sent him to Ohio to school. In 1848 his father died. Then followed the usual tragedy so common under the reign of that giant abuse, slavery. The mother and children, being of the proscribed blood, were suddenly cut off from participation in the father's wealth. It was even deemed a great favor that they did not at once sink from members of his family to chattels of his estate. They were shipped to Ohio with barely money enough to keep them from starving. Thus, at the age of twelve years, young Pinchback found himself alone in the world, without friends, exiled from a rightful home, and charged with the support of his mother and two sisters. He responded to these duties as manfully as any one of the purest Saxon blood could have done, engaging in steamboating in various capacities.

In May, 1862, the steamer Alonzo Child, on which he was engaged, ran up the Yazoo River to escape the Yankees. Mr. Pinchback left her secretly, ran the blockade into New Orleans with great difficulty, and very soon enlisted in the 1st Louisiana Volunteer Regiment. On August 27, 1862, he obtained permission to raise a company of colored men, under Gen. Butler's order No. 63, and was mustered into the United States service as captain of company "A," 2d Louisiana Native Guards. He was placed in command of a detachment of three companies at Fort Pike. During his service at this station, Capt. Pinchback received the high commendation of his superior officers for efficiency and gallantry as an officer. In October, 1863, he was appointed captain of company D. 1st Cavalry Corps d'Afrique by Gen. Banks, and recruited his company. After this service the question of color was raised, and his commission refused by Gen. Banks, at the advice of Lieut. Schuyler Crosby, then an aid de camp. The question was carried by him to President Lincoln, but before it was decided the war closed.

Capt. Pinchback has been an active and zealous member of the Republican party, and of various organizations under it. He is a fluent and forcible speaker, and an ardent radical, constant to his friends, and unsparing to his opponents. Impetuous and excitable, he has yet a sound judgment, and will make one of the most active and influential members of the Convention.

Persecution of Union Men.

Once more the New Orleans Times has arrayed its infernal enginery against the Union men of this city. Once more it essays to fire the Southern heart against the loyal citizens of our government. Once more it invites the vulgar to the assassination of the true patriots in our community. Itself incapable of a virtuous thought or a refined feeling; a stranger to whatever ennobles human nature, and covers humanity with glory, and ever destitute of those sublime sentiments which inspire the patriot, the philanthropist and philosopher, it is the embodiment of selfishness, and the "sum of all villainies." Its successful publication is one of the saddest evidences of the demoralization of the South, and of the moral corruption of the community in which we live. Without literary merit to commend it to the scholar, and without noble sentiments to commend it to the good and the true, it is notorious for its Billingsgate, and popular for its slanders. No journal in the South has so seduced our youth, so vitiated public morals, so traduced our most honorable citizens, as the New Orleans Times. Himself an apostate from the faith of his youth, and excluded from respectable society by a private history which brands him with infamy, the editor-in-chief is no less mean as a man than unprincipled as a journalist. How such a paper is tolerated in this community, is the mystery of mysteries.

Too cowardly to attack Union men while the great North stood firm with Congress, the Times has taken advantage of the apparent defection of the North to persecute our Union citizens. It has held up to public contempt such immaculate patriots as Flanders and Waples, Crane and Heath, and sought to rob them of the priceless boon of an unsullied reputation. They are charged with no crime, they are accused of no immorality, but their Unionism is the "front of their offending." It is political animosity; it is opposition to Congress; it is contempt for the loyal dead who fought for the Flag. Regretful as we may be to make the declaration, we believe it nevertheless true, that Union men are not welcome in the South, nor are they safe without military protection. The enmity is deep-seated and ineradicable, and is manifested in the social and business proscription which every loyal citizen feels most painfully. This feeling permeates every branch of society. Northern physicians and lawyers encounter such professional opposition as to render their professions worthless, and Northern merchants are compelled to maintain unbroken silence as to their loyalty, or fail in business. Complaints come to us every day from gentlemen who are not politicians, but who are forced to leave our city because of their Northern birth; and the tone of the New Orleans Times is at once their warning to leave, and the exponent of the Southern mind. But this opposition comes not altogether because of Northern birth, but from a profound hatred of their Loyalty. The opposition is against everything that is loyal, and every man who stands fast for the Union of his fathers. The native-born Southern loyalist is the object of the intensest hate. Opposition to the congressional plan of reconstruction is settled and determined. Because our present City Council is an appointment under that plan, its credit is not worth a dollar in any of our city banks. Monroe's city government, notwithstanding its notorious squanderings of the public moneys, could negotiate a loan of any amount in our banks, but the present loyal government can't borrow a dime. As a merchant, Mr. Gauche or Mr. Clay can be accommodated to any amount, but not as Aldermen, appointed under the authority of Congress.

For this state of things the Times is largely responsible. By chance it became a prominent journal. It started a Union paper, and continued such till firmly established, when it cropped out an out and out treasonable sheet. Never a leader, but always a follower, it panders to the basest passions, and will sell its best friend for "thirty pieces of silver." It is the most insincere journal in the South, crying to-day "good Lord," and to-morrow "good Devil." He who confides in the Times leans upon a broken reed, and trusts in a rope of sand. Its files will prove that it has praised and damned in turn, every commanding general of this department, and every Union man of any prominence. Look over its files, and there you will find eulogies on Banks, Canby, Sheridan, and Mower, and on Flanders, Waples, Hahn, and Howell; and therein you will find the most bitter denunciations of these distinguished men. "Out of the same mouth proceed blessings and cursings." Canby was the only general here, that King ever had any influence with, and this was secured by dogging that kind-hearted man; but the general at last shook off the editor, as Paul did the viper at Miletus.

The animus of the Times' late assaults upon our Union citizens is assassination. Familiar with blood, it loves blood. It instigated the 30th of July massacre, and it aims to have repeated the scenes of that terrible day. Let our friends, therefore, be on their guard against the danger, and let the good sense and better judgment of all our citizens, of every political shade, unite in solemn condemnation of a public journal, the legitimate influence of which is the destruction of our commerce, the intimidation of Northern capitalists, the depreciation of our State and City credit, the perpetuation of party strife, the contempt for civil and military authority, the inauguration of the war of races, and the reign of terror.

Editorial Items.

In a recent letter to Brother Brakeman, Rev. James Hayward says:

"A congregation down in Ascension parish heard of the 'Mother Church,' and wishing to be sheltered by her, they sent for me to come down there and take them in care. I went down on last Sunday, and am happy to say that after preaching to them, and reading to them our General Rules, 137 joined the Church! They are going to buy a piece of ground for church purposes as soon as they can. This congregation is on the Homer plantation, and in a large settlement, and the society will increase. At night I preached for my Brother, Isaac, on Boughton's plantation.

"Our church here in Baton Rouge prospers finely. We have put in new seats through the centre of the house, and otherwise repaired and fitted it up, and are trying to make it more comfortable.

"We have also organized a Benevolent Society—'The Sons and Daughters of Louisiana'—with the following officers: President, Rob't J. Morris; Vice President, Wm. W. Taylor; Secretary, Alexander Reels; Ass't Secretary, J. K. Sabb; Treasurer, Rev. James Hayward. Sam'l Sharp and Geo. R. Eubank are first and second Sergeants, Sam'l Carter Director, and Henry Mumford Marshal. Martha Morris, Ellen Flowers, Martha J. Harrison, Margaret Buggs, Rockcyann Mumford, Ellen Hayward, and Rachael Graham are lady Directors.

"I found Brother Isaac down with the fever, but left him much better. His charge increases steadily; some join every Sabbath. Seven persons united with us here in Baton Rouge Sunday before last. So the good cause moves on. Thank the good Lord, who has overruled our trials for our benefit. All things work for good to God's children. Our Zion's ship has her sails all set, and well filled for glory."

How to Become a Christian.

The mind that has been awakened and interested in the great ideas of the Gospel—God, Eternity, the Soul, Immortality, Sin, Holiness, Christ, Redemption, Truth, Duty, Hell, Heaven—has reached an era in its history. And where, to the awakening, there is added a sincere desire to know the import and truth of these terrible and sublime ideas, a new interest attaches to that era. Of all such it may be said, as of the young man and the scribe in the Gospel: "And Jesus beholding him lovod him, and said: 'Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.'" How may those who are so near the kingdom find the door and a full admission? There are three conditions: 1. Cease to do evil. 2. Learn to do well. 3. Do what you have learned—i. e., reduce your knowledge to practice—do what you know to be right. The first point is self-denial. This is plucking out right eyes, cutting off right hands, "denying ourselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts." The second embraces a careful study of the Bible; a habit of prayer; a ready yielding to the convictions produced by, and prompt following the leadings of the Holy Spirit; for it is thus that we "learn" what is "well"—i. e., what is right, what is duty. And the third point embraces the great principle of obedience; it requires the performance of all the "good works," the "labor of love," which the Gospel enjoins; it embraces all that is meant by Repentance, Faith and Love—love of God and man. This "obedience" must be voluntary, (the unconstrained act of our own free will,) cheerful, prompt, entire, constant, perpetual.

This is "the way of life." These are the steps to the throne. This is the road to endless glory. These the rounds in that more than Jacob's ladder, which connects earth and heaven. And whenever and wherever the enquiring mind calmly, trustfully reposes upon these truths, then and there it shall find a Bethel; then and there heaven shall be opened, and angels of mercy and love descend. To the patriarch of old it was seen in vision; to the obedient soul, now, it shall be a living reality, a conscious experience, a demonstrable fact.

"And how is all this to be wrought out? This system to be made my own; this truth, this life, this practical demonstration, which ends all theory, all doubt, to become my experience?" Such is the questioning of many who stand afar off, and behold, and hear; so full of moral darkness, sin and death, that to them we only "speak in parables," and our words scarcely bring them light and hope, to say nothing of purity and life. Let us question that sad inquirer:

How does that little black, dry, hard, and apparently lifeless seed, in your hand, become "a thing of beauty"—a blooming, fragrant flower? It is planted in the garden, in a carefully prepared place, and soil, and dew, and rain, and sun bring forth the germ, and the gardener does the rest. Plant yourself, sinner, in the garden of the Lord—a beautiful, fertile field—and heaven's dew shall distil upon you, and showers of grace descend, and the rays of the Sun of Righteousness, with warming, life-giving power, shine upon you and bring forth germs of a better life, and at last the beauty of holiness.

How does the infant become a man? By nourishment, exercise and growth, till the "full man" is developed. In its first attempts at walking it stumbles, falls, and is wounded and bruised, it may be; but rising with new strength from its overthrow, it pursues its onward way thro' tears and trials, till at last it "rejoices, as a strong man to run a race." "Babes of Christ" is Bible language. And you, though ignorant, impotent and helpless—you can go to the Bible and the sanctuary, and feed upon "the sincere milk of the word," and "grow thereby," till you begin to "walk and not faint," nor fall; then to "run and not be weary," and so on till you shall have come to "fill the fullness of the measure of the stature of a man in Christ," and shall have "run with patience" the whole length of the Christian race. (See Heb. 12, 13, and 1 Pet. ii, 2; Heb. xii, 1, 2.)

How does a man become a gardener, a farmer? First, he says: "I will!" and having passed the resolve, he goes to the garden, or to the farm, and asks to be instructed, and follows the directions given, and does the work of the farmer, or the gardener, and thus he learns to till the soil, and guide the plow, and sow, and reap, and gather into barns. Thus go you into the vineyard of God, and learn to "cultivate Immanuel's lands," and reap the harvest of eternal life.

How does a man come to be a Professor of Law, or language, of medicine, or mathematics? He says: "I will" acquire the knowledge, and acts upon the resolution. He goes to the place of instruction, puts himself under a competent teacher, and applies himself diligently to the study of the books put into his hands, and follows, carefully, the leadings of precept and preceptor. "Come unto me," says Christ; "take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." "I am the way, the truth and the life:" "Search the Scriptures," for "they testify of me, and in them ye shall find eternal life."

How does a man become a mechanic, or a master-workman? He enters upon the work, follows the design upon the trestle-board, working to the line. Poorly and worldly at first, till practice has made him perfect. So begin you the life and work of the Christian, following the line of Christ's example and teaching, and go on to perfection in the graces and character of goodliness.

How does the civilian become a soldier? He says: "I will be a soldier!" And having thus decided he acts—he enlists, (volunteers,) and then he seeks the place where he is to "learn." He goes to the "camp of instruction," doffs his citizen's habit, dons the soldier's uniform and equipments, takes up arms, surrenders himself wholly to the drill-master, and thus he becomes a soldier, fitted for service, and subject to the "army regulations." Thus must you, reader, become a Christian warrior. Pass, calmly, deliberately, intelligently, firmly, and forever pass the high resolve—"I will be a Christian! Volunteer — enlist — under the banner of the cross, join yourself to the Christian army, lay aside the habiliments of sin for the garments of salvation. "Put on the whole armor of God;" the breastplate of righteousness, the girdle of truth, for "greaves," let your feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; to protect your head, take for a helmet the hope of salvation; for a sword take the word of God; for a shield, the power of faith; for re-enforcements and never-failing supplies' take the spirit of prayer—all prayer—secret, domestic, social and public prayer; believing, earnest, frequent, importunate, unceasing prayer, and thus armed, go forth to fight against all sin, of every name. Do this not in your own strength, but in God's name; look for the Spirit to help your infirmity. Without this you can do nothing. But you can do all things through Christ's strength.

"The willing and the obedient eat the good of the land." "If any man will do his (God's) will, he shall know of the doctrine." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." "And if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an admittance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ." "Yes, this is the way, now walk ye in it." There is no other but this plain, practical path to heaven—no other way to become a Christian. We have walked this road for years. Reader, come thou with us.

Yellow Fever at Shreveport.—According to the Southwestern of the 30th ult. there is no abatement of yellow fever at Shreveport. One hundred and twenty-five were under treatment, but there were only thirteen deaths.

LATE BY TELEGRAPH.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 8.—The Democrats are betting on 45,000 majority in New York state.

It is settled that the president will withhold his annual message until the first Monday in December.

All the members of the cabinet were at the meeting to-day, except Welles, who is sick.

The propeller Acme has been wrecked on Lake Erie.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $317,000.

The Herald's special has the following: "I learn to-night that an ex-member of the cabinet to-day presented to General Grant a copy of Forney's double-leaded editorial on the presidency, and asked them if he indorsed it. It is said Grant disapproved of some of the article, and declared he had not authorized Forney to speak for him."

The Tribune says editorially: "As human life in New York is too short for anybody to read five columns of the Press, we have reduced Colonel Forney's points to these: First, General Grant succeeded Mr. Stanton as secretary of war, this being an act of rare sagacity and courage. Second, General Rawlins believes in Grant. Third, E. B. Washburne believes in Grant. Fourth, Senator Thayer, of Nebraska, believes in Grant. Fifth, several gentlemen named in connection with the presidency have pronounced to vote for him. Sixth, what his principles are is nobody's business."

A canvass of the Ohio legislature gives Thurman the senatorship undoubtedly.

WASHINGTON, November 8.—The fog with which Grant allows himself to be surrounded is more dense than ever this morning. A widely published special makes him say, through a friend who had a prolonged interview with him yesterday, that Washburn has no authority to speak for him, and that for a long time he has endeavored to shake Washburn off. In opposition to this are the fact that Washburn domiciles with Grant, and that yesterday General Rawlins, Grant's chief of staff, presented Washburn with a cane made from the tree under which Pemberton surrendered to Grant at Vicksburg.

A radical senator of the most ultra school claims that Grant suits him, and it is stated that the article in the Chronicle was preceded by a long consultation between Logan, Thayer, and Washburne, during part of which Grant was present.

An oil refinery near Pittsburg, with 1500 barrels of oil, was destroyed by fire yesterday. Harry Cook, foreman, was burned to death.

Many stores on South Main street, Sedalia, Mo., were destroyed by fire yesterday. Loss $150,000.

The Tennessee senate has reconsidered the vote prohibiting distinction on account of color on the cars, and a motion is pending to compel the roads to have special negro cars.

[Dispatches to the Associated Press.]

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 9.—The following circular has been sent by the war department to the several assistant commissioners of the freedmen's bureau:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Bureau Refugees, Freedmen and Aband'd Lands,
WASHINGTON, November 5, 1867.

SIR—As there is still quite an amount of abandoned property on your returns, and much of it occupied by the former owners who abandoned it, according to the definition of the law, and who, through contempt of the government of the United States, and of the president's authority, decline to make any application under the orders approved by him for its restoration, you are hereby instructed to give notice to all such persons through your officers and agents that their property coming under the above head of abandoned property held by the government, and now on your returns, will be taken formal possession of on the first day of January next and rented to refugees and freedmen, in accordance with the provisions of the law. In case they make application in accordance with law, formal restoration will be immediately made and reported at this office.

Very truly yours,
U. S. GRANT,
Secretary of War ad interim.

General Howard has departed southward on a tour of inspection.

The clerks of the war office are forbidden to communicate with claim agents on business affairs. Claim agents approaching clerks on interdicted points are to be excluded.

The president has accepted a serenade for Wednesday evening.

Judge Fisher's disbarment of Bradley was confirmed to-day by a full bench. Bradley thanked the court for kindly expressions, but announced his previously formed determination to abandon practice. Robert J. Walker argued Bradley's case.

General Grant has forbidden leaves of absence unless the applications come through regular channels.

H. R. Myers has been appointed assistant special agent of the postoffice department.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $327,000; for the week $4,031,000; for one year to date $77,842,000.

This morning's Chronicle in an editorial which was also telegraphed last night to Philadelphia, and appears in the Press, referring to the special dispatch alluded to yesterday, which it publishes, says: "We are authorized to state that the above is unqualifiedly false." The Chronicle insists that it has fairly represented Grant's political status.

Among General Grant's visitors during the day on which the questioned conversation occurred, was Hon. Montgomery Blair.

Cabinet changes are again rumored, but no immediate changes are probable.

Captain L. M. Chenley, of Louisville, is here with a committee of Western steamboatmen, of which he is chairman, to seek modifications in the steamboat laws.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, November 9.—Yesterday at Blountsville, Tennessee, suit was brought against an express company, in which the plaintiff claimed damages for goods destroyed by federal troops on an express car on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad. The express company plead that their receipts provided against damages for loss by fire or the common enemy.

Judge Butler decided that the federal troops were not the common enemy, and a verdict for $16,000 was given against the company.

An excited Republican meeting was held at the headquarters of the colored voters last night. A committee was appointed to wait on General Schofield and request him to order city elections. Lewis Lindsay, a colored delegate elect to the convention, made a speech. Alluding to the discharge of negroes for voting the radical ticket, he said: Before any of his children should suffer for food the streets of Richmond should run knee deep in blood.

He thanked God that "the negroes had learned to use swords and arms." All efforts of the more peaceful negroes to stop these demonstrations were hooted down. The citizens here are apprehensive of trouble. Wordwell and other white radicals left the meeting.

Alabama Constitutional Convention.

MONTGOMERY, November 9.—The reconstruction convention has decided against the proposition to insert no proscriptive feature in the new constitution.

The Republican party propose to elect all state and county officers at the same time that the constitution is submitted to the people, in hopes of getting a larger vote on its ratification, and prevent any loss to the Republicans on account of the freedmen changing homes on the first of January.

From New York.

NEW YORK, November 9.—Steamer Rising Sun arrived from Aspinwall with $330,000 in treasure.

She brings the news that a rupture had occurred between the executive and legislature of Equador, which led to the arrest of several legislators, but resulted in harmony after the resignation of an obnoxious home secretary.

From Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, November 9.—There has been a full meeting of the Chamber of Commerce here, nine hundred members being present. They unanimously adopted a report praying congress to take off the cotton and sugar tax.

From Philadelphia.

PHILADELHHIA, October 9.—The Presbyterian convention has adopted a basis of union and adjourned, after recommending similar conventions every year.

Prize Fight.

NEW YORK, November 9.—Jack Walsh knocked Dan McGill senseless on the fifty-seventh round. The fight lasted two hours and fifteen minutes.

Wisconsin Election.

CHICAGO, November 9.—Wisconsin returns indicate 4000 Republican majority.

From Omaha.

OMAHA, November 9.—The steamer Deer Lodge, from the upper Missouri, has arrived with 120 passengers and $2,000,000 in treasure.

Financial Matters in New York.

NEW YORK, November 9.—Money easier this afternoon, with large offerings. Call loans generally 6 to 7, though large balances are loaned at 5 per cent. The bank statement will be less favorable than last week, and shows a loss of deposits and legal tenders, the result of currency moving to the South. Gold closed steady at 138⅝. Quiet shipment of specie this week $298,000.

Alabama Constitutional Convention.

MONTGOMERY, November 8.—The reconstruction convention on a test vote, tabled by a vote of 45 to 42, a proposition to abolish the present provisional state government within twenty days. An ordinance was introduced, and referred to the appropriate committee, to organize a provisional government for the state, and vacating all important state offices on first of January next. The provisional governor to be appointed by the convention, which shall fill all offices by the appointment of men who can subscribe to the test oath.

A resolution was introduced and referred, proposing to disfranchise all persons implicated in the murder of Union men during the war.

From Havana.

HAVANA, November 7.—General Santa Anna is here, buying a farm.

The steamer Georgia, from Vera Cruz 31st October, has arrived, and brings news from the Mexican capital to the 29th.

Juarez had been re-elected.

A commissioner had come on to negotiate a loan of twelve millions of dollars at Washington.

FLORENCE, November 8.—Garibaldi is to be tried.

PARIS, November 8.—Moneura asks the withdrawal of French troops from Rome.

LONDON, November 8.—It is said that Lavalette will soon resign, and that Roher will succeed him.

The friends of Garibaldi say he had but four thousand men—they also say that Garibaldi's sons are hidden—not captured.

LONDON, November 9.—The relations between France, Rome, and Italy, are delicate, and cause great distrust. France asked Rome to release the insurgent prisoners, but was refused.

An explosion occurred in a coal mine in Wales, by which it is thought nearly 300 lives were lost.

The sultan in reply to the last joint note from the European powers declines their advice and accepts the responsibilty of consequences. England, France, and Austria are agreed on the Eastern question.

The Moniteur says the popular tumults in Italy were quelled by the Italian government, but also acknowledges that the French troops decided the day at Monte Rotondo. Italy asks France to withdraw her troops on the ground that Italy can and will maintain peace, and that Garibaldi and his lieutenants will leave Italy and go to the United States.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 11.—Papers by the steamer Deutchland, contain the following item: While the emperor of Austria was enjoying himself at the steeple chase at Vincennes, the Emperor Napoleon drove in from St. Cloud and paid a short visit to the exhibition. It was long enough, however, for comfort, as a scene occurred as unlooked for as it was disgraceful. During his visit an egg was thrown at the large picture of him by Flanding, and when he made his appearance in one of the galleries a loud and distinct hissing took place on the part of a collection of men in blouses. The impartiality of the Italian intervention and the general state of uneasiness and dissatisfaction which exists there among the lower classes were probably the causes of this demonstration.

The Democratic majority in New York was 46,000; in Maryland, 41,000. The Democrats have gained 7800 in Minnesota, while negro suffrage, which was voted on last year as well as this, shows a gain of 500 votes.

Returns from the western counties of Kansas indicate that most of them have gone Democratic.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $650,000.

The Tammanies nominate Hoffman; the Mozart's nominate Fernando Wood, and John J. Anthon is prominently mentioned by the Democratic Union party for mayor of New York.

Thad Stevens has written a five column letter opposing national banks, and arguing that while interest is payable in coin the bonds can honestly be liquidated with legal tenders.

General Emory has disbanded the unauthorized military organizations in the district of Columbia.

It is said that Sheridan telegraphed General Grant, advising that General Mower's action in removing General Hays from the New Orleans shrievalty be disapproved.

The American vice-consul at Havana, telegraphs to the state department to-day that the cholera is serious at that point, and officially declared that the number of cases daily was increasing.

The following vessels were sunk in the harbor of St. Thomas on the 29th of October during the gale: Spanish war steamer Camaguci sunk and 16 persons drowned; British steamer Columbia, 6 men lost, cargo worth from one to two million dollars; British steamer Rhom, lost at Peters island, 160 men lost; British steamer Wye, Captain Taylor, lost off the harbor, 59 men lost; British schooner Proctor; British brig Onesiphorus; British schooner Ocean Gem, 3 men lost; American schooner Clinton, Captain Holmes, from New York; French bark Vilose; French tug boat; French bark Emma; French sloop Sylph; Spanish schooner Union, captain lost; Spanish schooners Rapido and Inez, captains lost; Trinidad, Veloz, Attagracia, and Alphonso; Venezuelan schooners Joram, Palacietta, Oriental, Pinchita, and Conception, the latter with $5000 of specie; Danish schooners Maggie, Nanette, and Danish bark Ludwig Hahn; Dutch schooner Amelia; Bremen brig Johana. Two tug boats and all the lighters were destroyed. The German brig Bertha with all on board lost but two men; Prussian brig Tuffen ashore and damaged; ship Sarah Newman probably a total loss; ship Charles Sprague a total loss—thirteen men lost; bark Aberdeen driven ashore and badly damaged; brigs Mecosta and Nelly Gray; British brigs Wild Pigeon and R. S. Cole; British ship British Empire dismasted and sinking; British brigs Her Majesty, Ida Abbott, and Princess Alice; British bark Agnes Lamb; British schooners Water Witch and Elizabeth; British steamers Robert Todd and Derwent; French barks Brume, Berenicia, Gazelle, and General DeTourmel, and brig Jacmel; Danish brig Vaulkyien; bark Nordskey and schooner Dashermanas; French schooner Petrel: German brigs Helions and Edward; Norwegian ship Veloz; Dutch brigs Moria, Anna, and Anytie, and schooner Juliet; Spanish steamer Velogo and Spanish war steamer Vasco Nunez de Bilboa—all dismasted.

About all the coverings of the roofs of the houses were blown away, such as tile, zinc, etc.; all the wharves were smashed, and the fort and barracks are gone. The lighthouse was destroyed, and about three hundred persons have been buried, after having been picked up in the harbor. The loss both on the shore and in the shipping was very great.

From Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, November 11.—In the constitutional convention to-day the elective franchise committee presented majority and minority reports. The majority report disfranchises all who refuse to vote for or against the constitution when submitted to the people, and is otherwise proscriptive. These reports were made the special order for to-morrow.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 11.—Frederick A. Packard, long prominently connected with the American Sunday School Union, is dead.

The schooner Atlantic, from Norfolk for Boston, sunk off Montauk point. Crew saved.

There seems to be little doubt that Grant told Montgomery Blair on Thursday that no one was authorized to speak for him. It is however equally well established that Grant was advised of the bearings of Forney's article previous to its publication, and that he made no objection to it.

It is ascertained from a reliable source that the government will be ready to proceed with the trial of Mr. Davis on the 25th.

Both sides, however, desire that Chief Justice Chase shall preside with Judge Underwood, and therefore it is possible that the trial may be postponed for a short time to enable Chase to make the arrangements to preside.

Legal considerations alone prompt the desire that the two judges should sit in the case.

The Hair Trade in France.

According to a Paris exchange report human hair is chiefly supplied to the world of fashion by France. The departments of Puy de Dombes, Cantal, Correze, Lozere, La Vendee, Les Deux Sevres, La Vienne, L'Allier, La Manche, Les Cotes du Nord, L'lle et Vilaine are the best markets for this commodity. Italy, Germany, and Belgium likewise compete with France, but cannot beat her out of the field as to the supply of the raw material. Religious houses and nunneries supply large quantities.

The price of undressed hair varies from 50 francs the kilo to 60 francs. In 1865 the price rose from 65 francs to 100 francs the kilo. In France 68,000 kilogrammes of human hair are sold annually, 25,000 of which are worked up into postiches. Thirteen thousand kilos are exported to foreign countries. The sale of the raw material and its value when worked into the plaits and puffs and chignons which adorn the heads of the belles, represent above 80,000,000 francs—that is £3,200,000 or $16,000,000.

A CURIOUS CASE.

A CHAPTER FROM ST. LANDRY.

BEFORE COMMISSIONER WARREN

A rather singular case has just been concluded before United States Commissioner E. Warren, the particulars of which will be found below:

On the twenty-eighth day of October there appeared before E. Warren, Esq., U. S. commissioner, two persons, giving their names as Michael Garry and George F. Belden, of the parish of St. Martin, who swore to an affidavit that one John Woods, of the parish of St. Landry, had been without cause or provocation killed by one David Speer, of the parish of Lafayette; and that Banajor Spell, Hugh Wagner, Turner Foreman, Wallace Hilliard, Edward Haufpower, Ford Haufpower, Elisha Haufpower, George Morgan, and Edward Hilliard, of Lafayette parish, and J. M. Marsh, Benjamin Porill, Isaac Haufpower, Howard Haufpower, Dr. Rooker, Edward Foreman, Walter Foreman, and Joseph Foreman, of Vermillion parish, are all accessory thereto.

One of the deponents swears, also, that he had been instructed by those parties to leave the parish, and his life was threatened in case he should ever return.

They depose, furthermore, that the murder of Woods had been reported to the civil authorities, and that they had applied for address, in vain; the constituted civil authorities had refused to take cognizance of the offense of these parties, and they had in vain sought redress in the courts of the state.

On the strength of this deposition, the United States marshal ordered the arrest of the parties accused, and placed the writ in the hands of Mr. McKenna, deputy marshal, furnishing him with a squad of twelve men, and instructing him to bring the accused to this city for trial.

On Monday evening Deputy Marshal McKenna returned to the city, having in custody six of the parties, to wit: Dr. A. P. Rooker, O. M. Marsh, B. Z. Powell, Hugh Wagner, Isaac Haufpower, and Edward Haufpower. They were committed to appear for examination on Wednesday, and the complainants notified to appear.

On Wednesday these six parties were arraigned, but the men who signed the affidavit against them, although in town and properly and legally notified, failed to appear.

The parties appeared before the commissioner, accompanied by Captain James Fry, recently appointed sheriff of the parish of Lafayette by General Mower, and by D. C. Robins, formerly a paymaster in the United States navy.

The accused parties signed and swore to an affidavit before the commissioner in which they state that they are not only innocent of the alleged offenses, but had no knowledge of a murder having been committed; that the affidavit of Garry and Belden was purely malicious and false, and was founded on the fact that the affiants were witnesses against these two men for cattle stealing. One of the party had confessed his crime, and they had assured him if he would leave that part of the country and not return they would not prosecute him.

This affidavit was also sworn to by Captain Fry and Mr. Robins as true to the best of their knowledge and belief. Captain Fry states that no murder has been reported to the civil authorities, and no coroner's inquest held on any such case as the prosecutors allege. The commissioner therefore released the parties on bonds to appear when summoned to trial.

These men, together with Sheriff Fry, have made some very serious charges against Deputy Marshal McKenna in connection with this affair, which are now undergoing investigation before the marshal, and in case they are proven, it will go hard with the deputy.

It is alleged that McKenna while at New Iberia became very much intoxicated, and drawing his pistol upon many of the citizens threatened to burn the town. He is also charged with treating his prisoners with undue and unnecessary severity, and with appropriating money found upon their persons to his own uses. We hope for the credit of the government and his own good name Mr. McKenna will be able to refute these charges and clear himself from all stigma.

The Alabama Constitutional Convention.

Before he was elected to the constitutional convention now holding its session in Alabama, of which Judge Peck is president, that gentleman expressed his views of what should be done by the convention in this manner:

The convention, soon to be convened, in our opinion, should confine itself to an honest compliance, in good faith, with the requirements of the several acts of reconstruction, and not go beyond them.

The fifth section of the act of the 2d of March, 1867, declares that the constitution to be framed by that convention shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all the male citizens of the state, twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition who have resided in the state a certain length of time before the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law.

This settles the question as to what persons, citizens of the United States, shall have the right to vote under the constitution to be made by said convention.

In our opinion, there should be no restrictions upon the elective franchise inconsistent with, or in addition to, the exceptions contained in this section of said act—certainly none on account of race, color, or previous condition.

Second. As to the judiciary, some mode, if possible, should be devised that will make our judges, when elected, independent and fearless to do right.

Our apprehensions are it may be too late to enable the convention to accomplish such a desirable object. Between an election by the people, and an election by the joint vote of the two houses of the legislature, we greatly prefer an election by the people. If it can be done, we would say let the governor nominate, and by and with the consent of the senate, appoint the judges of the several courts.

We would confine the legislature, as far as possible, to their proper business of making laws, and not making officers.

Electing the public officers by the legislature, has ever had a corrupting and demoralizing influence, besides distracting their attention from the great duty of making laws.

With respect to the tenure of their officers, we would have them appointed for not less than eight, and not more than ten years. We think that better than to appoint them during good behavior.

If elected by the people, or in any other way, we would make their tenure the same time—eight or ten years—and not eligible to re-election.

Third. We should make it the duty of all governments to provide by some permanent system of common schools for the education of all the children of the state, and that education, as far as possible, should be made free, especially for the poor—and further, in our opinion the expenses of such a system should be provided for by a uniform tax to be levied upon the people and property in the state until a permanent fund for that purpose can be provided.

Fourth. We would exclude no one from the jury box on account of race, color, or previous condition, nor would we permit any one to enter it who is not competent to discharge the duties of the office.

Our present law on the subject of selecting jurors, if honestly and fearlessly executed, will always secure competent and intelligent jurors. [See section 3436 of the code.] By this section it will be seen that it is made the duty of the sheriff, every two years, to make and return a list of the house holders and free holders of their respective counties, and then it is made the duty of the sheriff, judge of probate, and the clerk of the circuit court to select from such list the names of such persons as may be thought competent to discharge the duties of grand and petty jurors, with honesty, impartiality, and intelligence.

Now, suppose these officers to do their duty under this law, fearlessly, with integrity, and without respect of persons; and can there be any reasonable ground for apprehension that the courts will not always be attended by good and competent juries?

Reject from such lists the names of all who are not competent to discharge the duties with "honesty, impartiality, and intelligence," and there need be no fears, because such lists are made out of all the householders and freeholders in the several counties, excluding none on account of race, color, or previous condition. This law, in the code, will not be affected by the new constitution to be made; and it, or some law like it, will, no doubt, always exist in this state.

Fifth. We would elect the governor and senate every two years, and the members of the house of representatives every year.

In the present state of the country, we think four years too long a period to elect the members of the senate.

LATEST FROM SHREVEPORT.

Low Stage of the River—Severity of the Yellow Fever.

The Caddo Gazette, of the 2d instant, says:

The river rose three inches from the rain of last week, but has since fallen several inches below any previous mark of the season. The steamers Caddo and Pioneer Era have arrived from New Orleans this week, after long and persistent efforts in pulling over sand-bars.

There is only two feet water on the worst bars, with no immediate prospect of an improvement in navigation.

The necessities of commerce demand that all the waters in Red river valley should be confined to one channel by cutting off the water from Tone's bayou with a tumbling dam. The planters have gathered their scanty crops of corn and cotton, and will be compelled by poverty to discharge thousands of laborers.

In our present impoverished condition we can not collect a sufficient fund with which to complete the work. Our merchants and real estate men would cheerfully pay a heavy tax, yet it would be inadequate. The suggestion that the military should take this matter in hand is based upon the ground that all the posts in this country for hundreds of miles west and north of this place are dependent upon the navigation of Red river for commissary stores.

The Southwestern of the 6th says: We regret to state that we have not perceived any abatement in the plague during the past week, while the mortality has largely increased. The weather has been just the kind to propagate the disease and cause it to terminate fatally. Every few days it will clear off cold and wet, and kill those who are down with it, and then turn warm and develop new cases. We have been living here upward of fourteen years, and have never seen the like before. There are actually not enough well persons in the city, who are disposed to nurse, to take proper care of the sick and dead. To procure a regular nurse is out of the question, and the patient may consider himself in luck to have somebody to sit up with him during the night.

Wages of Field Hands.

The editor of the Franklin Banner must have left Maine long ago, or he would have known that New England farm hands get more than $15 a month. This is what he says of field hands:

There are no white field hands in the world that get as high wages as those of the sugar parishes of this state. Fifteen dollars per month, and house rent, wood, corn, vegetables, and nearly a support for laborers' families would in most instances amount to thirty-five or forty dollars per month, if laborers here were reckoned as closely with as in the North and in Europe.

Field hands are crazy when they demand higher wages than fifteen dollars per month, and such other considerations as they usually receive. If planters pay extravagant wages they may stand it one year, or more, if crops and prices are both good. But one or two failures in the sugar crop would break nearly every planter in the country. Planters must expect occasional short crops, and sometimes nearly an utter failure. And these must be provided for. He who attempts to pay every year such wages as full crops and full prices justify him in paying is a broken planter.

The sugar planters may not ever be able to realize the same profit on free labor that they did on slave labor. We do not think they can do it. But one thing is practicable—and that is to sell their land in small tracts to actual settlers on reasonable credits and realize a competency by the enhanced value of their now comparatively unproductive and unprofitable plantations.

Appointments by General Mower.

Upon the recommendation of B. F. Flanders, governor of Louisiana, the following named persons have been appointed to the offices set opposite their names, to fill existing vacancies:

J. W. Doswel, constable, third justice's court, parish of Carroll, Louisiana.

THE BAKERS ON THE LOAF.

GREAT INDIGNATION AMONG BREAD MAKERS.

No Bread to be Made after Three Days unless the Tariff be Rescinded.

A meeting of the Boss-Bakers' association was called at noon Friday, at the Coliseum hall, on Bienville street, to take action in the matter of bread tariff. About fifty members were present.

The president, Mr. Baumgarten, took the chair at about twelve o'clock, with Mr. Langles as secretary.

Mr. P. Clerc called the attention of the society to the recent action of the city authorities in causing the arrest of several parties in the second district for selling light weight bread. He declared that he had always made his bread of the best flour, and knew that most other bakers had done the same. He had made up his mind what to do in the matter, and wanted to know what others had to propose.

Mr. Sliner had tried to conform to the law, and had lost money by it. He paid $14 75 and $15 for his flour, and according to the law he got only $12 worth of bread out of a barrel of flour. He insisted that there was no law that could compel a man to lose money in his business.

Mr. Langles said that the mayor made his calculations in his orders upon the wholesale price of flour, and the bakers were compelled to pay a considerable advance on these prices.

The president, Mr. Baumgarten, said that everybody was getting rich except bakers. They pay in greenbacks for their flour, and get city money in return. The bakers give away their bread every day to poor people who come along needy and hungry. Then there are expenses of hiring help, keeping wagons, horses, buying feed, and paying high rents. He had been trying to sell out for a long time, and no one would buy. The present tariff is the merest nonsense, and made by one who knew nothing about the business. He proposed to give the public three days notice that they will stop making bread at the end of that time unless the tariff is repealed.

This suggestion was embodied in a motion by Mr. Clerc. Mr. Clerc pledged himself to forfeit to an asylum the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars in case of a violation of his pledged faith to the society, and embodied this proposition in the motion.

It was proposed to extend the time till the next meeting of the council. Whereupon it was declared that the mayor had "charge of the building" and had all authority to act in the matter.

It was finally decided to await the action of the common council, which would be in three working days' time.

The motion of Mr. Clerc was adopted by a vote nearly unanimous.

The question of how to carry out the vote of the society arising, it was stated that the mayor had informed a committee of the society that he had no authority in the matter, and that the subject was already before the board of aldermen.

A motion made by A. C. Herron, to bake no bread until the tariff was repealed, was lost—only two votes in its favor.

The meeting voted that when it adjourn it should be till Monday next, at two o'clock.

The meeting unanimously voted to appoint a committee to prepare a statement for publication, setting forth the expenses of making bread per barrel of flour.

The chair appointed Messrs. H. Nolthing, J. C. Langles, John Buehler, B. Moses, and P. Clerc.

The meeting then adjourned.

Death of Northern Men in Texas.

We learn from the Brownsville Courier that Colonel Joseph Graham, formerly of Pennsylvania, appointed consul to Buenos Ayres under the administration of President Harrison, died at Boerne, Kendall county, on the 14th ultimo. He was engaged in sheep raising in Kendall county. In the early part of the war he was elected chief justice of Texas, but subsequently engaged for a short time in commercial pursuits at Brownsville.

The same paper informs us of the death by yellow fever, on the 18th ultimo, at the ranch "Brazil" on the Matamoras and Monterey road, of Henry H. Dye, of Marietta, Ohio, for the last two years a resident of Brownsville. Mr. Dye went to Brownsville as a commissioned officer in the seventy-seventh Ohio volunteers, twenty-fifth army corps, in June, 1865. When the regiment was mustered out he remained in Brownsville as deputy to George Dye, Esq., the sheriff of the county. He afterward accepted the situation of mounted inspector under the late collector of customs, Richard L. Robertson, Esq. A few days after the storm Mr. Dye evinced much alarm of the yellow fever, and in order to escape from the terrible scourge determined on going to Monterey and there remaining until all danger was over. He started by the Monterey stage on the 14th ultimo. On the evening of the same day a fever, which perhaps he had contracted before leaving, developed itself in a malignant form and he died after an illness of four days. His body was consigned to the grave at the Rancho Brazil.

Last of the Epidemic.

The deaths by this disease during the past week have been only nineteen less than they were the week before. The lingering cases are generally those of persons who have remained here all the season. With the exception of the two Germans, whose deaths were reported last Sunday, there have been, so far as can be ascertained from the reports to the board of health, no deaths by yellow fever

THE MURDER OF ELIAS CARTER.

Official Statements.

The following letter from Captain Norcross, assessor of internal revenue for the third district of Louisiana, to Governor Flanders, and the statement of the deputy sheriff explain themselves.

U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE ASSESSOR'S OFFICE, Third District Louisiana, Monroe, November 2, 1867.

Hon. B. F. Flanders, Governor of the State of Louisiana, New Orleans, La.:

DEAR SIR—Herewith I inclose copy of a certificate of A. W. Moore, sheriff of Franklin parish, Louisiana, relative to the murder of Elias Carter, assistant assessor of internal revenue for Franklin parish.

Mr. Carter was a thoroughly loyal man, and a resident of Franklin parish for the past ten years, except the time he was within the United States lines from 1862 until it was safe for him to return to Franklin parish.

He has been an assistant assessor since the establishment of this district, and during registration a register of voters in Franklin parish. He leaves a family consisting of a wife and six children, most of whom are young.

From all that I can learn, he was undoubtedly murdered by a set of assassins who infest the swamp of Bœuf river, and because he was a Union man and an officer of the United States. I have seen several letters from Franklin parish, and they show such a state of terror existing there that good citizens for fear of their lives dare not name the supposed murderers. Judge Crawford has sent me a message, but does not write a letter. I have assurances that the names of the gang who perpetrated the deed will be furnished me.

Since the removal of the troops two other murders have also been committed.

Immediately upon the reception of the intelligence of Mr. Carter's murder a detachment of ten men, twentieth United States infantry, were sent from here to Winnsboro. I also telegraphed Major General Mower for a detachment of cavalry, as infantry are of no use except as guards in a town, all of these desperadoes being mounted.

I have officially reported such facts of the case as have come to my knowledge to the commissioner of internal revenue, and recommended that if other means fail a reward be offered by the department for the apprehension of the murderers of Mr. Carter.

The civil authorities are powerless, and even when aided by the military, I doubt if anything short of a price upon the heads of these wretches will bring them to justice.

As the executive of this state, I respectfully call your attention to this inhuman and cold-blooded murder of one of its citizens, and would urge upon you the propriety of offering a reward for the apprehension and conviction of the murderers of Mr. Carter.

I remain sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, A. W. NORCROSS, Assessor Third District, La.

[COPY.]

I hereby certify that on the evening of the 21st of October, 1867, Elias Carter was wilfully murdered, and to the best of my belief, by two men with double-barreled shot guns, well loaded with low mould buck shot, the said Carter being on his way to Bœuf Prairie Landing to weigh cotton, and the murderers well knowing that he made weekly trips to said landing to weigh (assess) cotton. I also think it necessary for the protection of civil officers that a detachment of United States should be garrisoned here. It is well understood and almost impossible for officers of the government to transact their business here unmolested, meeting opposition in almost every instance.

(Signed) A. W. MOORE,
Deputy Sheriff.

Winnsboro, Franklin Parish, Louisiana, October 22, 1867.

An Ingenious Dodger.

The London Telegraph says that lately a respectable looking man took his stand close by the weighing house in Plymouth market, holding in his hand a large and elegant snuff box full of wedding rings, and began with the following tale:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I am sent here from a party of gentlemen who are waiting for me at the hotel to sell this number of gold rings in one hour. My friends, don't let this opportunity slip, for you may depend upon it they are gold and the wager is heavy. Look at the wager of the great Berkeley of the one hundred sovereigns that were to be sold in one hour; those that bought them for a penny freund them to be real gold sovereigns, but the wager was lost, and I am afraid that this wager will be lost." Of course the rings were soon bought by those eager to hear his tale. He said the ramping lion was all stamped on them, but it turned out to be a dog with a curly tail. He also said—"To-morrow you will see this wager in the papers." Every now and then he put his hand to his hat as if a gentleman were watching him, and then he would say, "I am watched that I don't sell more than one to each person, and to no person under fifteen years." All the rings were soon sold, and of course there is no occasion to say that they turned out to be good brass.

Confiscated Property.

WASHINGTON, October 29.—The case of a property owner here who went South at the breaking out of the war, and whose property was seized, confiscated, and sold by the government to the Hon. J. D. Defrees, was heard in the supreme court of the district to-day, coming up from a lower court on an appeal. The court sustained the decision of the lower court, rendering the confiscation act of congress constitutional, and securing the present holders of confiscated property a life estate in the same. This decision applies to numbers of similar cases.—Telegram to New York Tribune.

COTTON PICKING.—The Nashville Press says this of cotton picking:

Cotton growers have abundant cause to be thankful for propituous seasons. Never was there a more favorable fall for getting out cotton. We are glad to see, too, that the farmers are stirring themselves in this matter. It is true there is no great inducement for them to pick out at the present prices. Nevertheless it will pay better to pick it out than to let it cumber the ground any longer. The dry season that has been so favorable to cotton has been death to grass, and has worried the would-be turnip growers prodigiously.

Travels of a Railroad Car.

Of the new route from the seaboard to St. Paul the Milwaukee Wisconsin of the 24th ultimo says:

On Monday a freight car from Boston arrived at Minneapolis. It passed over a dozen lines of railroads, the only interruption being the passage of the river at Prairie du Chien, which the car made in a ferryboat with track built for the transportation of cars. The car passed through Springfield, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Prairie du Chien, and will be freighted back to New York with a load of freight.

The above is a fair specimen of the rapid extension of railroads in America. Already the country is gridironed with railroads from the extreme East to the Rocky mountains, and with the present progress in building the great Pacific railroad, California will be reached in a few years. This will give an additional impetus to the great mining interests of the Western territories, and open to us the rich trade of the East Indies.—New York Express.

The Late Ex-Governor Andrew.

We copy the following from the Chicago Journal:

Just as we were joing to press yesterday the wires brought the intelligence that the Hon. John A. Andrew, late governor of Massachusetts, had been stricken down with apoplexy the previous night, and was in a critical condition. We have now the sad news that the attack proved fatal about six o'clock last evening. A dispatch from Boston says of the circumstances attending this mournful event, and of the public sentiment occasioned by it:

"Ex-Governor Andrew died this afternoon at about six o'clock. He was attacked with apoplexy last evening, while in convocation with his family and friends. Feeling the premonitory symptoms he prepared to leave his family, and caused his physician to be sent for. Soon after he became insensible, and the best medical aid proving of no avail, a fatal result soon followed. No man living was more highly esteemed by this community, and it would be hard to name one who would be so generally and greatly missed. The news strikes the public here, where he was seen so few hours ago in the apparent enjoyment of health, with a peculiar shock. The demonstration of sorrow and of respect will be universal throughout New England."

The dispatch might have added, with truth, and the entire country; for Ex-Governor Andrew was one of the foremost men in the nation and second to no civilian in point of service to the government in its day and hour of peril. The rebellion found him in the gubernatorial chair of his state, which position he occupied until January 3d, 1866. During these eventful years he conducted the affairs intrusted to him with a consummate ability worthy the successor of Hancock and of the proud record of the State. The noble band of loyal governors—Andrew, Yates, Morton, Curtin, Kirkwood, and others hardly less praiseworthy, will always fill a prominent and distinct place in the history of our country. None had such perils to encounter and scheming traitors to circumvent as our own Yates, especially in the winter of 1862-63; but each was taxed to his uttermost in giving efficiency to the patriotism of his state.

Ex-Governor Andrew was uniformly supported by the overwhelming majority of the people. All loyal men felt that he was just the man for the place, and they were entirely right. The only fault with him was a zeal bordering on impatience. This was especially true in regard to the abolition of slavery. Viewing the subject from a New England stand-point, he could not realize the wisdom, and, we may say, necessity, of Mr. Lincoln's caution. He repeatedly urged the premature issuance of the proclamation. It is, however, due to both those great statesmen to say that the most cordial friendship always existed between them and that the ex-governor had the magnanimity afterward to acknowledge that the president was right in his exercise of prudence.

Having been governor of the state from the commencement of the war to its conclusion, ex-Governor Andrew declined in the fall of 1865 to again be a candidate, and Hon. A. H. Bullock was nominated and elected as his successor. On retiring from the office which he had so worthily filled for four years, ex-Governor Andrew delivered a valedictory address to both branches of the legislature, in which he maintained that the national government ought to require the rebel states to so re-organize their political institutions as to afford guarantees against future rebellion, and to secure the freedmen in the enjoyment of all their civil rights. His logic was unanswerable, and the policy which he then foreshadowed was essentially the same as that finally adopted by congress and sanctioned by the voice of the people.

After his retirement from the gubernatorial chair, ex-Governor Andrew confined himself almost exclusively to the practice of his profession. An effort was made to secure him for president of Antioch college, a position once filled by Hon. Horace Mann, and rumor subsequently associated his name with a portfolio in Mr. Johnson's cabinet, but the former would have been too narrow a field for his services and the other, had it been offered him, he would not have accepted, thoroughly opposed, as he was, to the policy of the administration. His name was mentioned frequently in connection with the next vice presidency, and it is quite probable that he would have been the choice of New England, and perhaps of the nation. But he has been summoned away by a mightier than the American people, and all that now remains of the great, good man is the healing shadow cast by his exemplary life. Pure as he was great, the good he did will live after him.

Romantic Wedding—A Couple Marrie to Save Hotel Room.

[From the St. Paul (Minn.), Pioneer.]

Thursday evening at a late hour John Streeter, Esq., George Mann, Esq., Miss Mann and Miss Pritchard, of Hudson, Wis., arrived in this city and registered their names at the International hotel. The several individuals desired separate rooms, though all belonged to the same party, and it did not seem unreasonable that the two ladies should occupy one room, while the two gentlemen occupied another. On account of the crowded state of the hotel it was found impossible to give each a separate room, and they were so informed. They then retired to the ladies' parlor, and held a council of war on the subject of the manner in which they were to be accommodated. After a short time, Mr. George Mann sought an interview with the proprietor of the hotel, and said he thought the matter could be satisfactorily arranged if the proper officials could be procured.

"What officials do you require, my dear sir?" was the very polite but peremptory request of the host.

Mr. Mann replied that either a clergyman or a justice of the peace would answer. No sooner said than done! A justice of the peace was summoned, and in about five minutes Mr. Streeter and Miss Mann were made one flesh, according to the statute in such cases made and provided.

Colonel Johnson, of the International, and Major Dyke, of Faribault, were the witnesses, Mr. George Mann giving away the bride. This little ceremony, costing the hotel nothing, and only involving the parties in the expense of the fee to the justice and the revenue stamp on the marriage certificate, saved to the hotel one room, which was soon after let to an elderly gentleman from the country at the rate of three dollars a day.

Military Items.

General Mower, of the fifth military district, orders thus:

Upon the certificate of Surgeon B. A. Clements, United States army, stating that the climate of Texas will be beneficial in preserving the health of First Lieutenant Patrick Branaghan, first United States infantry, that officer is hereby ordered to report to the commanding officer, district of Texas, for assignment to such light duty as he may be able to perform in the western or northern parts of that state.

Leave of absence for thirty days, with recommendation to the war department for an extension of forty days, is hereby granted to First Lieutenant and Brevet Major James Callehan, 4th United States cavalry.

A "Lovely girl" in Wisconsin, recently recovered $11,400 damages in a breach of promise suit against a perfidious lover. Her lawyer congratulated her on the amount, when she exclaimed with a ferocious glance at the mulcted defendant, and nervously clinched her fingers, "I'd give every penny of it just to have one pull at is hair."

NEW RELIGIOUS ALMANAC.

Indispensable for Every Clergyman!

Important for every Church Member, and every Friend of Religious Movements!

The "American Ecclesiastical Almanac for 1688," by Professor A. J. Schem, which will be published about the first of January, 1868, will fill a want long felt by Clergymen and members of all religious persuasions, and by all taking an interest in the religiious questions of the day. As the title page, which we give annexed, indicates, it will give a brief account of all the important events in the religious history of the year 1867, the proceedings of great Councils, Congresses, Assemblies and Meetings of particular denominations, the work of the Bible, and Missionary Societies, the progress of the Young Msn's Christian Associations, of the Temperance and Peace Movements, the advance of Religious Freedom and Toleration; the most memorable facts in the History of every Denomination not only in the United States but in the whole world; and an obituary account of persons distinguished in the religious world who died in 1867.

In addition to this large amount of historical information, this American Ecclesiasticol Almanac will contain the completest statistical Tables of Religious Denominations ever published. These tables will show the relative number of the Christian and the principal Non-Christian Religions of the world, the ecclesiastical statistics of America, Europe, Asis, Africa and Australia, and a complete statistical exhibit of every important religious denomination of America and Europe.

In short, it will contain an immense amount of intelligence, not accessible in any other volume, of the greatest interest to every one who is not indifferent with regard to religions question, and constantly needed for reference.

The name of the author of the "American Ecclesiastical Almanac" guarantees for the accuracy and completeness of the information that will be furnished.

Price 30 cents—A liberal discount allowed to dealers; also to clergymen, teachers, and others wishing to form clubs for the above Almanac, among their church members.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

A REPOSITORY OF

Fashion, Pleasure and Instruction.

HARPER'S BAZAAR, the publication of which has just been commenced by Harper & Brothers, is an illustrated Weekly Journal, devoted to Fashion and Household Literature.

It is the first weekly journal of fashion ever published in the United States. By arrangements which the publishers have perfected, at great cost, with the most celebrated European fashion journals—particularly with the well-known "Bazar of Berlin"—illustrations of fashions for each week of the year will appear in Harper's Bazar simultaneously with their publication in Paris and rerlin; an advantage which will belong exclusively to this journal

In a country where three hundred millions of dollars are annually expended for dry goods, to be transformed into articles of dress, trustworthy and practical instructions as to the most tasteful and economical methods of fashioning these articles become of the greatest value to American women. The Bazar will contain full and explicit instructions, with illustrations, which will enable every lady reader to cut and make her own and her children's entire wardrobe, with a large portion of her husband's. Each alternate number will be accompanied with large pattern plates, containing from forty to fifty full-sized patterns, applicable to every article of wardrobe made in the family, with the necessary directions for cutting and making. Similar illustrations and descriptions of fancy work will also be furnished. These patterns will be executed in Paris and Berlin, and will surpass anything of the kind hitherto produced in this country. Frequently an elegant colored fashion plate will be presented with the paper. Practical descriptions will also be given of the fashions especially in vogue in New York—the centre of fashion in America.

Harper's Bazar, besides being the leading Fashion Journal in this country, will also aim to present before its readers the very best specimens of Household Literature. It will contain original and selected serial stories, poetry, novelettes, articles on the topics of the day, (excluding politics,) on books, art, morals, familiar science, education, amusements, hygiene, etiquette, housekeeping, gardening, with home and foreign gossip. No subject of household interest will be excluded from its columns.

In the first number of the Bazar will be commenced a novel, entitled "The Cord and the Creese; or, The Brandon Mystery," by James De Mille, Esq., author of "The Dodge Club." This novel has been read in manuscript by several of our most competent critics, who unanimously pronounce it, in point of interest of plot, variety of adventure, and graphic delineation of character, to be fully equal to any of the novels of Wilkie Collins.

Harper's Bazar will contain 16 folio pages, of the size of Harper's Weekly, printed on superfine calendered paper, and will be published weekly, at ten cents per single number, or four dollars per year.

Ladies in the country will be supplied gratuitously through the mails with the first six numbers of Harper's Bazar, upon written application to the publishers.

Postage, five cents for three months.

Single subscribers will be supplied from the beginning to the end of the year 1868, which will complete the first volume, for the yearly price of four dollars.

An extra copy will be supplied gratis for every Club of five subscribers, at four dollars each, in one remittance, or six copies for twenty dollars.

"EUREKA,"

THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THE CLASSIC POETS have sung to us of a spring whose pure, ethereal waters impart perpetual youth and beauty to all who will drink of them. It is now conceded by all that the EUREKA is made of the water of that same spring, and its magical effects will be seen at once by those who use it. The hair will be restored to its youth and beauty, even where the snows of winter have fallen. In presenting this Hair Restorative to the public, I have no hesitation in saying that it is no humbug: that it will do all that is claimed for it, viz: Restoring the hair to its original color; preventing its falling off, and giving it a softness, youth and lustre that no other preparation can produce. The Eureka has been used by tens of thousands, and in every case has given entire satisfaction, and is now used universally. Dr. Van Zandt has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair—preventing it falling off, by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the EUREKA, and you will not be disappointed.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 25. Mailed post-paid.

The New-Orleans Advocate

Poetry.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

"Silence Is Vocal If We Listen Well."

I've been listening in the stillness,
Listening till an echoing chord,
Touched upon the soul's Æolian,
Vocalized each slumbering word.

Sweetest melody came stealing
On my waiting spirit's ear,
To it's raptured sense revealing,
Glories of a brighter sphere.

Not one note of earthly discord
Mingled with each thrilling tone;
Oh, I seemed to catch the chorus
Of the white robed, round the throne.

"Is it an angelic convoy,
Crossing from the farther shore?
Do they bring the joyous message—
'All thy wanderings are o'er?'"

Thus, with eager questions musing,
Hoping for a welcome home,
How my weary heart was longing
For the summons—"Hither come!"

But amid the silence dying,
Soon had flown the inspiring sound;
Yet, the air was still responsive
To my anxious list'ning found.

From a voice of soft, low cadence,
Words of peace in accents clear,
Came so gently!—though rebuking
My impatient 'biding here.

"Earth has need of earnest workers;
Will you Heaven be less bright,
That unto life's darkened pathways
Thou hast brought one gleam of light?

"Burdened ones 'neath trials bending,
Have not known a Savior's love;
That He carries all our sorrows—
That he beckons us above.

"Will a few more years of toiling
Be regretted, when at last
On the work a Father's blessing
Rests, and weariness is past?"

I am list'ning for the music—
List'ning for the words of cheer—
Working—while the time is given—
Waiting—till the end appear.

BELLE.

New Orleans, November 11, 1867.

PERSONNEL OF THE CONVENTION OF 1867.

Our article this week will be of more than usual interest, comprising as it does, the memoirs of several of the most widely known and influential leaders of the Radical party.

Hon. Lazare Simon Rodriguez.

Mr. Rodriguez is a native of New Orleans, where he was born in the year 1826.

Being tinged with the proscribed color, he was, as usual, debarred from the advantages of an early education, but by his natural talents, and an indomitable purpose to improve his mind, he acquired the rudiments of learning, and qualified himself for business life, making himself thus one of the thousand living refutations of the stale calumnies of the rebel and democratic press on the colored people, as to their incapacity for self-improvement and mental culture.

By honest and skillful industry he has built up a paying business, and what is far more valuable, both to himself and the people he represents, has established an enviable character for integrity and business capacity among a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

In 1863, his prominence and influence with his people secured him a captain's commission in the army, from which he received an honorable discharge.

He was elected member of the Central Executive Committee from the parish of St. Tammany, and in September last was elected to the Constitutional Convention from the First District of this parish. Mr. Rodriguez is an ardent and consistent radical, and will uncompromisingly advocate the equality of all citizens before the law, in the jury box, on the witness stand, at the ballot box, in the school-house, and in all places of public resort. He is a hard working, and not a noisy radical, and his qualities are such as to make him one of the most useful and practical members of the Convention.

Hon. Jas. Mushaway

Is a native of Boston. He removed to New Orleans in 1838. He has never been ashamed of his New England origin, but has always been proud of his Puritan descent. He was a clerk for Joseph Jewell, the father of the present editor of the Bulletin, for over six years. He then entered the well-known house of Alfred Monroe as a clerk, and after one year's service was received into the firm as a partner, under the style of Alfred Monroe & Co., where he continued till the rebellion.

After the war broke out, Mr. Mushaway maintained his Union principles at a sacrifice of his pecuniary interests and health, suffering a severe attack of paralysis, from which he has never entirely recovered, from the anxieties and trials which were the consequences of Unionism. Confederate assessors harassed his house with threats of confiscation, and his business was broken up. He felt it his duty to remain at home, and take care of an interesting and dependent family.

Mr. Mushaway has never been a politician, and has never sought an office, but is strictly a business man, and it has been his chief ambition to conduct his business successfully, and preserve unblemished his mercantile credit. At the solicitation of his friends, he represented them in the Convention of the Friends of Universal Suffrage, at Economy Hall, and was afterwards elected President of the First District Radical Club, and was, in September last, elected to the Constitutional Convention from this parish. He is a firm and outspoken radical, and will earnestly support the distinctive policy of that party. Mr. Mushaway's moral character is unimpeachable in every respect, and his high reputation for honesty and uprightness will give him deserved weight in the Convention.

Hon. Geo. M. Wickliffe

Was raised and educated in Virginia, and is a graduate of Hampden Sidney College. He studied law with his father, but did not practice at the bar for several years.

In 1863 he was admitted to the bar in New Orleans. Previous to the war Mr. Wickliffe was a Democrat in politics, and at the time of the Know Nothing organization he warmly espoused the cause of our foreign-born citizens, deeming them the objects of an unfounded and oppressive distinction.

Mr. Wickliffe was for several years connected with the press of this city in various capacities, as a humorous and political writer. In connection with Wm. H. Burrill, Esq., he for a long time devoted himself to industrial science, in those branches which practically concerned the development of the material resources of Louisiana.

Mr. Wickliffe has identified himself with the Radical party. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of June last, and was elected to the Coustitutional Convention from the parish of Orleans.

M. Wickliffe will be an uncompromising advocate of the equality of all men before the law, and of the abolition of all civil disability on account of caste or color. He justly believes, however, that these questions are virtually decided, and that other important questions, bearing materially on the future welfare and progress of the State, will likewise claim the attention of the Convention. Among these are the reform of the judiciary, the re-organization of the courts, the abolition of those legal fictions which have encumbered and complicated the real estate of Louisiana, to the hindrance of emigration, and of the development of her resources; the simplifying and curtailment of legal processes, by which justice can be dispensed more promptly, and less expensively than at present; the remodelling of our levee and drainage systems, the re-establishment of the State credit, and the re-assessment of taxation of the lands of the State, so as to make them bear their true proportion of the public burdens.

In the initiation of these important reforms, Mr. Wickliffe will take a prominent part; and if he succeeds in their accomplishment, he will have the satisfaction of inaugurating a new era of prosperity and improvement in this State.

Hon. S. R. Moses

Was born in Boone county, Kentucky, in 1823, but raised in this State.

In 1863 he enlisted in the army as a private, served faithfully for three years, and was honorably discharged. He was a member of the Republican State Convention in June, 1867, which organized the party in this State, and in September was elected from the First District of this parish to the Constitutional Convention.

Mr. Moses is a Radical, and will act with that party. He is a gentleman of good hard sense, and will be in favor of quiet work, with as little talk for "buncombe" as possible.

Hon. Jas. M. Ingraham

Was elected to the Constitutional Convention from Caddo parish. He was born in Natchez, Miss., June 11, 1832, and was by the laws of that civilized State a slave to his father. This relative sold his son and the mother to Nicholas Norwood, of Rapides parish, La., who sold them to Napoleon R. Martin in 1844. The latter gentleman emancipated both son and mother in 1847. His mother kept him at school till 1851, when he was apprenticed to his trade to John M. Bradford, of New Orleans. He practiced his trade in New Orleans until 1862.

When Gen. Butler took the city, Capts. Ingraham and Antoine were among the first of our colored citizens to welcome him, and in September, 1862, he was appointed First Lieutenant in the 1st Louisiana Native Guards. He was assigned by Col. Ramos to the command of Bayou Ramos, on the Opelousas Railroad. While in this command he intercepted a large lot of valuable stores in the hands of the rebel forces, and was complimented for his skill and gallantry by Gen. Weitzel, in general orders, and was promoted successively to acting adjutant and quartermaster. He was wounded at Port Hudson, where he behaved with distinguished bravery, continuing with his regiment the whole day, notwithstanding his wound. The severity of his company's loss is shown by the list of killed and wounded. Out of an aggregate of 69, ten were killed and forty wounded. He remained in the hospital some time, and returned to his company in time for the second assault on Port Hudson, in which he took part with his company, which lost again five killed and fourteen wounded. He was promoted to a captaincy for his gallantry in this action. He accompanied Gen. Banks in his ill-starred Red River expedition. In 1844 he resigned his commission, for the following reasons, as stated in his resignation: "I deem it just to my brother officers of color and my race, that I leave a service which honors not its defenders, on account of their color, unless they serve as the rank and file of the army." Since that time he has followed his profession as a teacher in Caddo parish.

Capt. Ingraham was elected Vice President of the Central Committee of the Radical party, and in 1864 was sent as a delegate to the "Colored Men's National Convention," at Syracuse, New York.

The people of Caddo parish, in September, elected him to the Convention as an "ultra Radical" of the Wendell Phillips stripe, and he does not intend to disappoint them.

Capt. Ingraham is a gentleman of sound judgment and practical ideas, and a good speaker; and we look to him to be true to his party and State in the important crisis in which he is called to his present responsible

Hon. Robert H. Isabelle

Was born in St. Landry parish, La., in 1837. His father, Dr. J. B. Isabelle, was a native of France. He discharged a portion of his duty as a parent by sending Robert to school at Opelousas. After his father's death, in 1849, Robert came to New Orleans, where he has since lived. In 1802 he enlisted in the 2d Louisiana Native Guards, in which he was subsequently commissioned by Gen. Butler as a first lieutenant. While in this position he devoted his leisure time to building schools for the people of his own color.

In 1863 he was summoned before the Examining Board appointed by Gen. Banks, with the object of turning out as many of the colored officers as possible, and was among the few retained. He was promoted to a captaincy in the 7th Louisiana Volunteers. Since the expiration of his military service, Capt. Isabelle has devoted his time to the establishment of schools and asylums for the colored people. By his efforts the following schools for colored children were opened and maintained by voluntary contributions in New Orleans: The Wesley Chapel School, the Canal and Franklin street School, the Bienville street School, and the Urquhart street School; besides an asylum on Race street, which has now some 36 inmates.

In 1863 he was a delegate to the colored convention at St. James Chapel; in 1865 to the Equal Rights Convention in Carrollton; and in the same year to the convention of the Friends of Universal Suffrage, and to the Republican State Convention of June last.

In September he was elected to the Constitutional Convention from the parish of Orleans, by a majority of over 3500 votes. He is a member of the Central Executive Committee, and has taken an active and prominent part in the organization of the Republican party.

Capt. Isabelle is a member of the Methodist Church, of the Home Missionary Society, of which body he was for four years Secretary. He is a Radical in politics, and will earnestly support the men and measures of that party. His strict integrity and uprightness of character give Capt. Isabelle deserved weight with his party and people. His life is another instance of the cruelty and falsity of the rebel and copperhead charges of incapacity and dishonesty of the colored people, and an encouraging example to other young men of his color, of what honesty, industry and perseverance can accomplish, even with the humblest advantages.

Hon. Simon Jones.

Col. Jones is a native of Mississippi, and was born in 1833. He removed to Texas in 1851, and is a graduate of Aranama College, Texas, where he received the highest honors of his class, having been selected to deliver the valedictory address.

He studied law in the office of D. C. & J. D. Giddings, Washington, Texas, in 1856, and was admitted to the bar in 1858. He opened a law office in Corpus Christi, where he lived till the rebellion broke out.

When Jefferson Davis issued his proclamation requiring all persons who refused allegiance to the Confederacy to leave its limits, Colonel Jones went into exile, and penetrating the lines, reached in safety the Union forces, which he joined. His knowledge of the country, and the enemy's plans, enabled him to be of great assistance to the Union commanders. In 1863 he was transferred to the Quartermaster's Department, from which, for his efficient services, he was soon promoted to the colonelcy of the 25th Regiment Corps d'Afrique, which afterward was made the 93d United States Colored Infantry. For a time he mand of Fort Berwick, and of the 3d Brigade, 1st Division United States Colored Troops, and subsequently commanded the United States forces at Brashear City, where he completed the works in course of construction, and remained until 1865. He was mustered out of the service at Camp Parapet, and settled in New Orleans.

Col. Jones early identified himself with the Republican party, and has been an active and zealous worker in the cause of radical and liberal principles.

His services were warmly appreciated by the party, and his friends nominated him for the Constitutional Convention, to which he was elected by the flattering majority of 3700 votes. He is an open radical, and stood side by side with the advocates of equal rights and universal suffrage, when that party was under the ban, and its friends proscribed from all places of trust and emolument.

Col. Jones is a practical business man, of sound judgment. He is also an effective speaker, and familiar with parliamentary usage, and we look to see his abilities called into active and prominent service in the Convention.

Churches of the United States.

At the General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, recently in session at Amsterdam, a report of great interest on the "State of Religion in the United States of America" was presented by Rev. Henry B. Smith, D.D. of the Union Theological Seminary. The report has just been issued in pamphlet form; but as it may fail to reach some of our readers, we copy from it those paragraphs which furnish the statistical exhibit of the American Churches. The figures show the condition of the denominations at the beginning of the current year:

METHODISTS.

Foremost in numbers and zeal is the Methodist Episcopal Church. Last year it celebrated the Centenary of its introduction into this country. Proposing to raise a thank-offering of two millions, its receipts have actually come near to four millions, a large part of which is to be devoted to the interests of education. The Northern Church reports 64 annual conferences, 13,172 preachers, 1,032,184 church members, (an increase during a year of 102,925;) 82,925 baptisms of adults and children, 10,462 church buildings, of the value of thirty millions of dollars; 25 colleges and theological schools, a Book Concern, with a capital of $837,000, and 56 official periodicals, with a circulation of a million a month. The Methodist Church South, separated in 1844, with 1345 ministers, 495,282 members, now has about 700,000 communicants. Other branches are: Methodist Protestants, 105,000; African Methodists, about 112,000; the Evangelical Association, (Albright's,) 56,734; Wesleyan Methodists, 25,670; Free Methodists, (since 1860,) 4890; Primitive Methodists, 1805. The total Methodist Church membership is over 2,000,000. In Canada there are 85,000. All this is the growth of a century; in 1826 there were 360,800 members. No church in the country is moving onward with a more definite aim or larger plans. Among the German population it has 334 preachers and 30,000 church members. In Germany, it has 84 preachers, and 5370 members; in France, 119 preachers, and 1358 members. Its appropriations for foreign and domestic missions for 1867, amount to $1,030,978. Some of the subdivisions may soon be reunited with the main branch of the church; but the Southern churches still stand aloof.

BAPTISTS.

Next in numbers are the Baptists. Their total church membership is given at 1,689,845, with 17,220 churches, namely: Regular Baptists, 1,040,303; Campbellites, (Disciples,) 309,000; Free Will Baptists, 56,258; Seventh-day Baptists, 7014; Six Principle Baptists, (Heb. vi, 1-3,) 3000; Winebrennarians, (Church of God,) 23,800; Anti-Mission Baptists, 50,000; Christians, (Unitarians,) 180,000; Dunkers, (Tunkers,) Southern number 645,551. The denomination has 23 colleges, 11 theological schools, and 23 periodicals. The Northern Baptist Home Mission Society, 1867, reports its receipts at $176,889, $70,000 larger than last year; the Missionary Union, $191,714; the Publication Society, $199,727; the Bible Society, $51,457. The Southern Baptists report, 1867, $44,000 for domestic missions, $22,000 for foreign missions, with 16 missionaries. The Baptists have a number of churches of Germans, and 200 missionaries in Germany and Scandinavia. Large subscriptions, amounting to more than $1,000,000, have been recently made for their colleges and theological seminaries. The Mennonites, numbering (1858) 110 churches and 36,280 members; the Reformed Mennonites, 5000 members, and the Hooker (Amish) Mennonites, are also Baptists. An attempt to unite the Campbellites with the regular Southern Baptists has failed. In Canada and the West Indies, the Baptists number 795 churches, and 79,507 members.

PRESBYTERIANS.

Outside of New England, where Congregationalism has the ground, the Presbyterian churches extend, in various subdivisions, throughout the country. The main branch of the church was divided in 1838 on divers questions of doctrine and polity. The two main divisions are popularly, not ecclesiastically, known as Old School and New School. The Old School, 1867, reports 35 synods, 176 presbyteries, 2622 churches, 2302 ministers, 246,350 communicants, and contributions to the amount of $3,731,164. In its foreign missions it has forty churches, 330 ministers and teachers, 1200 members. The New School, 1867, reports 23 synods, 109 presbyteries, 1870 ministers, 161,539 communicants, 163,242 Sunday school scholars, and contributions of $3,106,870 for all its objects. Its increase last year was 10,938 members, and nearly a million of dollars in contributions. The United Presbyterian Church was formed in 1853, by a union of the Associate Presbyterian and Associate Reformed Churches. It reports, 1867, 7 synods, 54 presbyteries, 543 ministers, 717 congregations, 63,486 members, $1,277,204 contributions. In the eighth year of its history it has increased in its ministry from 408 to 543; and in its contributions from an average of 41 cents per member to an average of $9. It has missionary presbyteries in India, China, Syria and Oregon. It is anti-slavery, and close communion in its character. The Presbyterian Church in the United States (the style of the Southern Church) was formed by a union of the Old and New School churches during the war. They report, 1867, 10 synods, 46 presbyteries, 66,528 communicants, 829 ministers, 1290 churches. The contributions are set down at $409,282. There are 340 churches and 4 presbyteries, from which there is no report. The numbers given are probably much below the facts. There is no prospect of reunion with the Northern churches. The Cumberland Presbyterian Churches, North and South, are reunited. They had before the war 588 ministers, and 48,600 members. An effort to unite with the Southern Church is in progress. The Associated Reformed Presbyterians of the South also maintain an independent organization. The Reformed Presbyterians in the North have two synods, one of about 100, the other of about 60 ministers.

CONGREGATIONALISTS.

Churches, 2780: ministers, 2919; members, 267,453. Including Canada, there are 2900 churches, 3009 ministers, 272,974 members. The amount of contributions reported is $1,024,720; but there was no report from thirteen States and Territories. The American Home Missionary, and the American Board of Foreign Missions, the American Education Society, the American Tract Society of New England, and the American Missionary Association, are chiefly supported by Congregationalists.

The Unitarian Congregationalists have 289 societies, (of which 171 are in Massachusetts,) and 355 ministers. The contributions for various objects amounted to $235,000.

LUTHERANS.

The Lutheran Church numbers in all 421 synods, 1644 ministers, 2915 congregations, 323,825 communicants. Of these, there are connected with the General Synod 23 synods, 695 ministers, 1255 congregations, and 110,450 communicants. The South. A new synod is projected, on the basis of a more strict adherence to the symbols; a convention for this object was held at Reading, Pa, in December, 1866, attended by representatives from 15 synods; but no further action has yet been taken. The two Western Scandinavian synods number 40,000 members. The emigration from Scandinavia alone, last year, was 20,000, chiefly Lutheran. There are 29 Lutheran periodicals in the United States, (14 of which are in the German language,) 15 theological schools, and 17 colleges.

EPISCOPALIANS.

The Protestant Episcopal Church numbers 34 dioceses, 44 bishops, 2416 priests and deacons, 2305 parishes, 161,234 communicants, 151,819 Sunday school scholars. Its contributions in 1866 were over $3,000,000. The Southern dioceses, separated during the war, are now restored. The Board of Foreign Missions expended $71,000; domestic missions, $54,465. The receipts of the Evangelical Knowledge Society were $40,998. Twenty-eight of the bishops of this church have protested against ritualistic innovations.

REFORMED DUTCH.

Churches, 444; ministers, 461; communicants, 57,846; Sunday school scholars, 46,411; contributions for congregational objects, $765,890; for benevolent objects, $277,209. Its last synod, by a vote of 109 to 10, has submitted the question of dropping the word "Dutch" from its title, and adopting the name of the "Reformed Church in America."

GERMAN REFOMRED.

Both classes from the late Confederate States, Virginia and North Carolina, were represented in the Triennial Synod of 1866. It has 2 synods, 29 classes, 476 ministers, 1162 churches, 109,258 communicants, 11,988 baptisms; contributions for benevolent objects, $60,882; 5 colleges and 3 theological schools; 9 periodicals. The Tercentenary of the Heidelberg Cathecism was duly celebrated, and an excellent edition of the same was issued. In connection with this, more than $100,000 were raised for the colleges of the church. It is proposed to drop the word "German" from the title of the church. A new liturgy is under discussion, opposed chiefly on account of its high sacramental tendencies.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The Roman Catholic Church in the United States consists of 43 dioceses, 3 vicariates-apostolic, 45 bishops—the diocese of Baltimore being the Metropolitan See. There are 3795 churches, 2317 clergymen, 49 ecclesiastical institutions, 29 colleges, 134 schools for girls, 66 asylums, 26 hospitals. The whole number of Roman Catholics in North and South America is supposed to be forty-five millions; in the United States there are probably about four millions—much less than the immigration of Catholics with its natural increase. The second national council of this church was held in Baltimore, October, 1866; it professed anew the unconditional adhesion of the church to the papacy and its temporal power.

The amount subscribed to the papal loan in the United States, to March 1, was $2,300,000. The power of Catholicism is here chiefly felt in the large towns, where foreigners congregate; its political influence is strong in a few localities.

OTHER DENOMINATIONS.

The United Brethren in Christ (organized 1774) is "Arminian in doctrine and Methodistic in policy." It has 4256 preaching places, 3297 societies, 91,570 members; contributions, $341,279.

The Moravians, 89 mission stations, 307 preaching places, 213 missionaries, male and female, and 882 assistants; expended, $120,189. Under the religious instruction of the Unitus Fratrum, there are 177,669 persons in Europe and America. The adult communicants number 14,240.

The Universalists number about 600,000; they raised for their denominational objects last year $1,665,000; they propose collecting $100,000 for a missionary fund. There have been some attempts at a union between them and the Unitarians.

The Friends or Quakers, of the orthodox side, number 54,000; the Hicksites, 40,000. They contributed largely to the funds for the relief of soldiers during the war, and aid the freedmen liberally. In Philadelphia they have recently contri-

Single copies of the Advocate can be had at Simon's on Baronne street, and at the book stand in the Post Office.

Rev. Dr. Newman

will preach in the chapel of his Church to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock, and also on next Thursday, (Thankgiving Day,) at the same hour.

Rev. R. K. Diossy

has been spending a few days in town.

Rev. A. C. McDonald

is again at his post in the Institute

Gen. Brown and Mr. Paige, of the New Orleans Republican, are again in our midst. They are both highly appreciated by our Union citizens, and we know that their presence will give increased power to the Republican.

A Good Revival

has been in progress at First Street Church for nearly two weeks past. Fifty conversions are reported. There has been a good work, also, at Marais Street Church, where Bro. Chinn is stationed.

The Convention.

To-day this important body meets. The first body representing the sovereignty of this State, elected on the basis of a manhood suffrage, its personnel and acts will be closely and anxiously scrutinized by the people of the Union. The friends of liberty and eqnal rights will look to it to sustain their pledges and promises, and to put in their mouths additional arguments for the cause which they are so nobly fighting for at the North. Their enemies will eagerly watch it, to detect any error or immoderate action on which to predicate further incendiary and alarming appeals to the passions and prejudices of the North. Such a pretext, we feel assured, the convention will not afford them.

Let the members realize the grave responsibility which attaches to their position, and rise to meet the occasion. Let all partisan squabbles be hushed. Let principles alone be looked to. Let justice and equality to all men, regardless of color, race or condition, be made the foundation of our civil polity. And on this foundation let the convention proceed to build a good, fair and impartial constitution, under which the liberties of all men will be safe, the free and impartial education of the children of the State in common schools provided for, and the industrial and commercial interests of our State revived; her grand resources developed, and the wealth and enterprise of older regions invited and encouraged to flow hitherward. Let this work be done well, firmly, quickly cheaply. And let the result go back to the North as an irrefutable answer to the gross calumnies which have been circulated against a large and valuable portion of our citizens, and to the ill-founded apprehensions as to the result of universal suffrage. Let this be done, and we will speedily see a reaction at the North in our favor, which will sweep before it all opposition, and give the party of Union and Liberty the control of national affairs at the next elections, and elect a Republican President.

Men of Louisiana, the eyes of the nation are upon you. Be true to your constituents and the principles which elected you, and you will make a glorious future for yourselves and your children.

The Attack of the "Times" on Mr. Crane.

The Times has proved itself the inveterate foe of every true Union man. It is, therefore, not surprising that it should assail the reputation of so well-known and tried a Union man as Mr. Crane. Its assertions have little weight in this community, and will have no influence with any good men, but to bring the blush if possible, to its cheek. We expose the false words of its article on Mr. Crane:

First, it asserts that Mr. Crane "was a Southern rights man, and voted with the secessionists." The facts of the record show that Mr. Crane was a Jackson Democrat, sustained his anti-nullification proclamation, opposed Calhoun and his followers, and sustained the anti-Breckinridge and Douglas wing of the democracy in opposition to the secessionists and the Know Nothings.

Second, it charges that Mr. Crane joined voluntarily a rebel company. The facts are that Mr. Crane was a member of an organization of citizens of a civil character purely; that this organization resolved to organize as a military company, and uniform and arm for the rebel service; and that immediately upon this action of the organization, Mr. Crane withdrew from it, and never was a member of, or contributed money to any military organization in the rebel service or interest.

Third, it charges that Mr. Crane was elected a justice of the peace under the Confederacy, and took the oath of allegiance to the Confederate Government. The facts are these: Mr. Crane, for some years prior to the war, had been urged by his friends as a candidate for justice of the peace, and had been defeated by unfair and dishonorable means. The contest had come to be a personal one between him and his opponents and their respective friends. And in 1859 and 1861, these same friends continued the contest by presenting his name for that office, against his old opponent. But, as usual, the rebels and disunionists triumphed, and Mr. Crane was not elected. He never held an office under the Confederacy, or took the oath of allegiance to it as an officer.

The oath referred to in the Times was an oath prescribed under rebel martial law, and which was prescribed, the alternative being banishment or death to every person within their lines. It was such as thousands of Union men have taken under duress, and the compulsion of military force. It was taken to avoid violence and robbery. Every one knows this, and the Times is welcome to all the capital it can make out of its distortion of the facts.

Mr. Crane, as soon as the government renewed its protection to its citizens, in April, 1862, proclaimed his allegiance to it, and was known and recognized by all the military commanders as a Union man.

Missionary Appropriations, 1868

The South is deeply interested in the result of the late action of the General Missionary Committee. Four years ago our church entered this sadly neglected portion of our national domain, and it is within the bounds of truth to say that during that time, the Methodist Episcopal Church has been the chief source of evangelical light to this dark section. No other church has entered the field with like faith, zeal, and liberality; no other comprehended the wants of this people, and no other has been more successful, or more warmly received

For the salvation of the people, our church has expended more than a million of dollars during the past four years, and now behold the precious results: 13 conferences, 784 traveling preachers, 1724 local preachers, 156,911 church members Such results are marvelous; they awaken our deepest gratitude; they inspire the exclamation: "Glory to God in the highest."

Although the appropriations for the Southern work are not so large as those of last year, yet they are such as will enable us to hold our own, and add thereunto. Of the whole amount appropriated, viz: $850,000, $318,450 are distributed among our 61 annual conferences, and of this amount $175,000 comes to the South. This is cheering.

No doubt, had not the whole country felt the financial panic which is still upon us, the collections and appropriations would have been largely increased. This fact should be well considered, and especially by those who had hoped for greater things.

Although the time has not yet come, yet we hope it will soon be here, when the South will provide for her own spiritual wants; and had it not been for floods and army worms, which have desolated the lands and destroyed the crops, our new societies would have contributed largely toward their own support. Therefore, while we are deeply grateful for what the church has done for the South, we hope soon to be able not only to support ourselves, but to send up our contributions for the evangelization of the world.

Harper's Bazar.

"A repository of fashion, pleasure, and instruction." The first number of this beautiful journal has been received. Price, $4 per year, in advance. Having read the number carefully, we most cheerfully commend the Bazar to all our readers. If the mission of this paper is faithfully carried out, it will be of incalculable importance, and a blessing to American women especially. Here is a field vast and white for harvest. It is really unoccupied; hence the Bazar is a desideratum. Woman herself is always such a study, that she never fails to be interesting; and if we add her wardrobe, her toilet, and her domestic relations to herself, she is the most absorbingly attractive object in the universe. There is nothing like it; nothing is comparable to it; nothing ought to be mentioned in connection therewith. Why, what were the world without woman? Where on earth would we male mortals have been, had not our mothers been women? If it is true that "woman was made for man," it is logically true that man is only a half creation without woman. The good and evil come from woman. She is the most potent of beings. The hand that rocks the cradle, rocks the world. Yet it is remarkable that woman is so thoroughly neglected. Rarely do we hear of "Young Women's Christian Associations," or of "Libraries for Young Women." The young men must have everything; this must be because they are more helpless.

We are much surprised that the idea of the "Bazar" had not struck the Harpers years ago; it is true, the Harpers are not easily struck, but when they are they always make a hit. We judge it the pious duty of the Bazar, first of all, to pay attention to woman's wardrobe; not so much to the fashion of the garment, as to the quantity of material requisite for one's outfit. There is not a physician in the land who does not favor the opinion, that the amount of clothing worn by woman impairs her health and shortens her life; and if he is a man of taste, will add, detracts from the beauty of her form. It is now within the power of the Bazar to shorten the "skirts of woman's influence," place upon her delicate feet substantial shoes, and put a sun shade upon her head. These are the four pressing requisites: fewer clothes, shorter clothes, stouter shoes, and the same kind of hats, but a little more of them.

We are not of those who believe that woman's wardrobe is the expensive cause why so many young men do not marry; for considerable observation has taught us that the current expenses of a young man are far greater, including club houses, intimate friends, etc. The truth is, what woman spends appears upon her person; but not so with what a young man spends. What's seen and what isn't seen make just the difference between man and woman. The fact is, both are too extravagant, and the Bazar should teach them greater economy. We consider the whole of social life is the legitimate sphere of the Bazar, and judging from its first number, it will be tastefully and successfully occupied.

The literary character of this new weekly is admirable—it is womanly. There is exquisiteness of taste, variety of style, and freshness of thought and diction. We bespeak for the Bazar large success.

"Tilman Loring; or, Minister and Merchant:" by Rev. J. K. Nutting. Published by J. C. Garrigues & Co., No. 148 South Fourth street, Philadelphia, Pa.

This is a very interesting work, and would prove a valuable addition to every Sunday school library; and as the holidays are approaching, when the young will expect presents, we would say to parents that this book will be appreciated by their children, especially the boys, if presented to them. It can be obtained of the publisher.

"I think our church will last a good many years yet," said a waggish deacon to his minister; "I see the sleepers are very sound."

Drew Theological Seminary.

This "school of the prophets" was formally opened on the 6th inst. Located at Madison, New Jersey, it is "beautiful for situation," and may it be a "joy to the whole South." Its honored founder, Mr. Daniel Drew, has given $150,000 for the purchase of the grounds and buildings, $25,000 as the foundation of a library, and $250,000 for the endowment of the institution. He was present at the inauguration, the observed of all observers, but the most unassuming person in that grand assembly. More than three hundred guests were present, and among them were the bishops of our church, together with representatives from nearly all the great centres of population in the land; and it is said that the occasion forms an era in the history of our Methodism. Addresses were made by Bishop Simpson, Dr. Durhin, Dr. Curry, Dr. Johnson, C. C. North, Esq., Dr. McClintock, Dr. Foster, Dr. Cummings, Bishop Janes and Dr. Allen, all which were the product of ripe scholarship, and of long experience.

We regard the Seminary as most fortunate, in having for its president Dr. McClintock. The foremost scholar in our church, an ardent lover of her institutions, a pulpit orator of rarest gifts, an evangelical preacher of power and pathos, he is, of all men, admirably adapted to discharge the duties of his present position. Thank God for such men! And let the whole church earnestly pray for the continued baptism of the Holy Spirit on this new Theological Seminary.

Lay Representation.

One of the largest and most enthusiastic meetings of this kind was held in Bedford street, New York, on the 9th inst. The venerable edifice was densely crowded by an intelligent audience, in deep sympathy with the subject of Lay Delegations. E. L. Fancher, Esq., presided, and among the speakers were Dr. Eddy, Bishops Simpson and Kingsley, and others.

We greatly rejoice in this meeting, especially in view of its good results to our whole church. Here in the Southwest, where we are re-establishing our church, we feel the necessity of this important change in our economy, and we cannot but express the belief that when the South shall have a vote in the supreme council of our church, her vote will be for Lay Delegation.

George Muller.

George Muller, the renowned founder of the Orphan Establishment, Bristol, England, has received and expended $2,750,000, every penny of which was sent voluntarily, and without solicitation. He has 1200 orphan children under his charge, occupying five large stone houses, each distinct from the others. The following personal description is from the Boston Journal correspondence:

He lives in the simplest style, and does not allow himself a lounge or a rocking chair, unless he is sick. He was a poor man when he began, and he is a poor man to-day, though he has handled millions of money, and could have spent it as he would. Muller is a Prussian, and was born in 1805. He was in the Prussian army. He was very wicked, and was converted by some signal displays of grace, and he devoted himself from that hour to the cause of the poor. He is a tall, slim man, with the bearing of a soldier—with dark hair and gray whiskers—wears a black frock coat buttoned to the neck, and a white cravat, without a collar. He speaks with a brogue. His preaching is very simple, earnest, and full of Christ. He is a man of great executive ability, and is the sole manager of this immense concern. I have been all over his establishment. It would do credit to any government on the face of the earth. I have talked with the people of Bristol about Muller—merchants, tradesmen, draymen, storemen, and all classes, religious and irreligious—and they all express the highest confidence in his piety, integrity and honor, and assign him a high place among the model men of the world. His theory is this: that God is a hearer of prayer; that he is the same faithful God that he ever was; that this he believes and this he trusts, and has never been disappointed.

Suppression of Lotteries in Germany.—An ordinance of the Prussian Government orders that the lotteries of Hanover, Osnabruck, and Frankfort-on-the Main, shall be suppressed after the termination of the second drawing of those of this year. The city of Frankfort looses by this step resources amounting to 200,000 florins annually.

The internal revenue inspector seized $1,700,000 of property in New York during the past fortnight.

Cheap Benevolence.

A witty English writer says: "There are people enough in the world to play the good Samaritan—without the oil and two pence." And looking about us, we see the truth of the remark. We find a numerous class very willing to cross the street; unlike the priest and the Levite—to look compassionately on a sufferer, and even to make a fine speech to him, graced with the flowers of sympathy. But suggest to these philanthropists of sentiment, that a little oil would mollify his wounds, and a little gold purchase a shelter, and you will see them slyly crowd the cork more tightly into their flask, and make sure that the button is all right over the money pocket.

Talking is the cheapest sacrifice in the world. Indeed, many men would cheerfully pay for the privilege of making it, if thereby they could secure patient listeners. But offer to take gold in place of words, and their eloquence dies; they are "good Samaritans without the oil and two pence."

Some men are deeply impressed with the duty of, and the awful responsibility resting on other people. These are posted up on all charities, public and private. Their own names, however, are often wanting, and you doubt the sincerity of the philanthropy which is more anxious to clear your skirts than its own; you suspect the aim to be the praise of men, earned by acting a lie, rather than the benefit of needy fellow-creatures.

A cheap benevolence, which is all for ornament without any cost, is far meaner than the brave, independent avarice of the miser. He is honest. He adores gold, and owns it boldly as his god. But the other class, loving it as well, pretend to scorn it, while they hug it with a death grasp that nothing can unloose; thus adding hypocrisy to parsimony, and making themselves more vile and sinful than he who professes to worship no other deity. They are worse than the treacherous Jew, who offered the blind and lame on God's altar, for they offer nothing at all. They are all "good Samaritans without the wine and two pence."

Letter from Mississippi.

Shubuta, Clarke Co., Miss., October 25, 1867.

Mr. Newman, Editor Christian Advocate, New Orleans, La.:

Dear Sir—We are having a protracted meeting at this place, and have been so far well rewaaded for our labors, there having been fifty odd members added to the church since I came here two weeks since. The church now numbers about one hundred and fifty members. We also have a church at Quitman, the county seat of Clarke county, which has only been organized about three weeks, and numbers fifty members. I am trying to get a school organized at Quitman, as there are a great many there who are anxious to attend school, and I think I will be successful.

We are doing good work, also, at De Soto, in this county, where I organized a church three weeks ago, and which now numbers twenty-five members. The colored people are willing and anxious to do right, and to be educated. What we want is teachers.

We organized a church at Beaver Dam about two weeks since, with a membership of thirty-three, including new converts.

We have also a church established at Fortnets Bend, with about twenty-five old members. I organized that church about a month since, when I held a protracted meeting of four days, and added to the church twenty-five converts.

We also have a church at Mr. Lang's place, about two miles east of here, which contains about sixty members; and also one at Liberty Hill, in Clarke county, which contains acout seventy members, of which about thirty-three are young converts. I am, very respectfully,

Your ob't servt,
Jesse Ferren,

Religion of Natural Sensibility.

Mere discussion of great religious truth may leave the majority of an audience unmoved and uninterested. On the other hand, highly wrought pictures with impassioned utterance may only awaken natural sensibility, which may be mistaken for pious feeling.

The famous Louis de Crellon, who earned by his valor the title of the Brave, from Henry IV of France, was, upon one occasion, present when a popular preacher of that day was dwelling with much pathos upon the indignities and cruelties endured by the Lord Jesus, from the creatures whose salvation He came to effect. Crellon, moved to feeling by all he heard, suddenly rose from amongst the congregation, and placing his hand upon his sword, exclaimed: "O, Crellon, where wert thou, where wert thou?"

Esthetics in Collegiate Education.

Such is the title of a pamphlet just received from the author, George F. Comfort, A. M., of Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. After examining it, a more extended notice may appear.

Missionary Appropriations, 1868.

The General Missionary Committee completed its work on Monday evening, and the Board of Managers confirmed the appropriations, as follows:

I. Foreign Missions.

	1868.	1867.
Liberia	$14,000 00	$15,400 00
South America	14,287 50	43,645 00
China	38,481 00	20,344 00
Germany and Switzerland	36,500 00	34,884 00
Scandinavia	22,674 96	15,545 60
India	68,188 50	46,924 59
Bulgaria	11,493 17	4,112 11

In this year's appropriation the exchange is included; last year it was not included, but provided for in a separate item, add amounted to $115,518 70.

II. Foreign Populations in United States.

	1868.	1867.
Scandinavian	$10,900	$13,200
Chinese	4,700	4,000
German	33,000	47,000

III. Indian Missions.—The appropriations in this department are $3800; last year it was $4600.

IV. American Domestic Missions.—The appropriations for 1868 are $318,450; last year, $439,100.

V. Missions of Third Class.—Indian Territory, etc., $5000; Dacotah and Montana, $4000; Utah and Idaho, $3000; total, $12,000; last year, $25,554.

VI. Miscellaneous.

Contingent fund	$25,000
Incidental expenses	15,000
Office expenses	20,000
Missionary Advocate	25,000

VII.—For outstanding obligations, $178,524 87.

VIII. Recapitulation.

Foseign missions	$203,625 13
" populations	48,600 00
Indian missions	3,800 00
American domestic	318,450 00
Third class	12,000 00
Miscellaneous	85,000 00
Gutstanding obligatioes	178,524 87
Totai	$850,000 00

The above results were reached after a most thorough and painstaking examination of the whole subject of our missionary work. It was found absolutely necessary to retrench expenses at some points, which was accordingly done, often very reluctantly. The total amount, namely, eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, is the exact sum distributed to the several annual conferences last year. Though the amount has not been raised by the conferences, yet such has been the confidence of the committee and the board in the ability and the willingness of the church to sustain the missionary work, and soon to extend it, that it was felt that the appropriations made are as small as our people would allow. We have no fears as to the future of this important department of our church's work.

Universal Suffrage.

Editors of the New Orleans Advocate:

Gentlemen—As your paper has a large circulation among Radical Republicans in the Northern and Western States, I will take this chance to show them, by figures, that the colored men of the Southern States do not want a negro government. The Constitutional Convention meets in this city on the 23d of this month, and the members have been elected by about seventy-five thousand colored votes—hardly any white votes in favor. Now, with this large number of votes, if they wanted a negro government, could they not send all colored men to the convention? Now, what is the complexion of this convention? It stands 49 white and 49 colored. That proves they do not want a negro government. We often hear of repentent rebels, but I can tell the loyal men of our country there is no such person. They would raise their sacrilegious hands tomorrow to destroy the government, if the Radieal Republican party did not keep them in subjection. The colored men are true to the Govern ment, and will die to defend it.

Let us have universal suffrage—no people can be free without it. We have the power, and let us keep t. J. M. Davis.

The Hope of Man.

Final success—the joy of life's ripe harvest—is the goal of our hopes. No wise or thoughtful man will live merely for to-day. The pilgrim who seeks a home is not content to linger and loiter for the mere flowers beside his way. The sower looks onward to fields white and ready for the sickle. Wisdom has regard to the grand issue. The triumph or pleasure of to-day is transitory. We want a hope that does not sink with the setting sun. The true success of life is that which does not fail the evening of our days, and leave them to blight or barrenness. We want that shout of "harvest home," that will not die into silence with the failing breath, but makes the passage to the grave a whispering gallery where heaven and earth talk together.

A lady visited New York city and saw on the sidewalk a ragged, cold, and hungry child gazing wistfully at some of the cakes in a shop window. She stopped, and taking the little one by the hand, led her into the store. Though she was aware that bread might be better for the child than cake, yet she desired to gratify the shivering and forlorn one, and bought and gave her the cake she wanted. She then took her to another place, where she procured her a shawl and other articles of comfort. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent lady full in the face, and with artless simplicity said: "Are you God's wife?"

Fort Edward Collegiate Institute.

The annual catalogue of the Fort Edward Collegiate Institute has been received. This institute needs not our recommendation, as it is already widely known and well patronised. The number of students for the past year is 500. Average per term 300. This institution is located on the banks of the Hudson, seventeen miles north of Saratoga Springs. The buildings are spacious and comfortable. Those wishing to pursue an academic collegiate course, will do well to send for a catalogue. Address the Principal, Rev. J. E. King, D.D., Fort Edward Institute, New York.

From the New Orleans Republican.

OUR CITY OFFICERS.

A stranger to New Orleans would imagine on reading the Times that the present heads of departments in the city hall were no improvement upon their immediate predecessors. That Heath was no improvement over Monroe, Howell over Hernandez, Mandell over Mohan, Bell over Pilie, or Baker over Belanger. The people of this city, however, smile audibly at the vaporings of that sheet, and pay no further attention to it. Everybody who has ever had any knowledge of municipal affairs here is satisfied that the city is now governed and its affairs administered on the most economical scale that can be adapted to the public interests. All the large fat contracts, nominally for cleaning the streets, but which was never done, have been lopped off. The money spent upon the levee now is for substantial improvements to the wharves, and is not squandered away for work poorly done, for piles half driven home, and grading badly done.

The hundred of hangers on around the hall who were always ready to do work and furnish supplies, or at least pretend to do so, for a greater sum of money than they ever collected have been driven out of the temple. All bills that are now presented against the city are closely scanned, and the total corresponds exactly with the controller's warrant on the treasurer for the money. There are no perquisites. A few hundred, more or less, honest souls can no longer make an honest living by being friendly with the city officials. Their occupation is gone. They have spent the money they made so easily. The "nigger won't work," at least for them, for nothing, and their cases are becoming desperate. Hence the fierce and hungry growls from Camp street.

Of course it is Mr. Howell's fault that Messrs. Mohan and Hernandez, aided and abetted by the old finance committee, issued a million of dollars without the shadow of lawful authority, and that all in large bills. And Mayor Heath is guilty of the imprudence of having caught these men at their little game and calling the attention of the council to it. He merely discovered the house was on fire. He did not apply the match. The political brethren of the complaining witness perpetrated that piece of mischief. And now that the "people" who put these men in office merely because they were disciples of the "lost cause" have virtually repudiated their acts by refusing to take the currency they put out from the hall in such an immense volume, Messrs. Howell, Mandell, Heath, and the common council are loudly blamed by the really guilty parties.

With a legislature as subservient to a certain element as a Tudor parliament was to the monarch, there was no difficulty experienced in procuring a state law suspending the payment of all taxes in arrears. Union men stayed at home in 1861, '62, '63, and '64 and paid their taxes. Anti-Union men did no such thing. They paid all the money they could raise for other and questionable objects. The payment of their taxes was therefore suspended till 1870. This act of the legislature cut off city revenue to the tune of four millions of dollars. Instead of practicing a rigid economy in consequence of this act of magnanimity to "our returned fellow-citizens," the city government plunged into unprecedented extravagance, and issued a million of dollars in twenties to foot the bills.

An immense load of debt and distrust was thus built up, which nothing but prompt payment can remove. The city can not pay because the legislature has permitted the property owners to withhold the accustomed dues from its treasury. If all the property the city possesses that is not needed for use were put up at auction and disposed of in a week, it would not realize enough to redeem the over issue of the late administration. There is no remedy but in the collection of taxes. And neither Mayor Heath, Controller Mandell, Treasurer Howell, nor even the common council, can apply the remedy. Either the commanding general must afford the necessary relief or we must wait for the good time to come when we shall have a loyal legislature.

In the meantime every complaint at the present deplorable condition of affairs is a direct reflection upon the late city government. We forbear to complain, because complaint is useless. Our neighbor should keep silent out of consideration for his erring political friends.

The Sensation Dispatch.

The following is the sensation dispatch from the New York Herald correspondent in this city which appeared in that paper on the 15th instant:

MONEY PANIC PROBABLE IN NEW ORLEANS—THE GERMAN CITIZENS RAMPANT OVER THE DEPRECIATION OF THE CITY CURRENCY.

New Orleans, November 14, 1867, Eight o'clock P. M.

A money panic, and possibly a riot, is near unless Hancock arrives soon and reconstructs the city government. At a mass meeting of five hundred citizens, mostly Germans, last night, violent speeches and profane oaths were uttered, and a riot was openly hinted at. A committee was appointed to confer with Hancock, and a mass meeting will be held in Lafayette square at an early day. The grievance complained of is the depreciation of the city currency from two and a half before military interference to eighteen per cent. This is not a political movement; it is vox populi.

LATE BY TELEGRAPH.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, November 15.—It is confidently stated that the committee on Kentucky elections will report unfavorably to all Kentucky representatives, except Knott.

This will leave Kentucky with but two representatives, Knott and Adams, the latter admitted previously on presentation of his credentials.

G. B. Crittenden, who commanded the confederate forces at the battle in which Zollicoffer was killed, but afterward took no part in the war, has been pardoned.

Italian advices say that the feeling against the French amounts to a furore. Precautions have been taken to prevent an outbreak which is imminent.

Additional French troops are going from Toulon to Civita Vecchia. Ratazzi has joined the radicals. Victor Emanuel has called out the reserves and established their camps. Garibaldi is still confined in Florence.

Latest Minnesota dispatches say negro suffrage is carried.

WASHINGTON, November 15.—A hurricane swept over the southern portion of Porto Rico, causing the loss of two hundred lives, and placing four thousand families in a destitute condition. Provisions are to be landed two months free of duty.

Tortola, one of the smaller British West India islands, was entirely submerged by the flood following the gale of the 17th October. It is estimated that ten thousand lives were lost.

Receipts of customs from the 1st to the 9th inclusive was $3,366,000.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $274,000.

The congressional committee did nothing important to-day.

The cabinet session lasted until two o'clock. Grant was present during the entire session, and remained with the president after adjournment.

John S. and George D. Wise, who assailed Pollard in Baltimore yesterday are here. The were bailed in three thousand dollars each.

Alexander H. Stephens will address the citizens of New York, by invitation, on the condition of the South.

The Democratic majority in New York, by the latest advices, indicates 52,000.

Boutwell, Williams, and Lawrence, of the judiciary committee, have each written minority reports in favor of impeachment. It is thought likely that they will combine their views in one document.

A meeting of the strong men at the Fifth avenue hotel, New York, on Tuesday night, adopted General Sherman and J. P. Stockton, of New Jersey, as candidates for president and vice-president of the United States. The movement seems to meet with much favor here. Sherman will be here on Monday.

Thad Stevens will press his confiscation bill to a vote early in the session.

WASHINGTON, November 16.—The judiciary committee to-day examined several unimportant witnesses regarding the government of Maryland, and have postponed the further investigation of that subject until after the first week of the session. The time of the committee will now be occupied with the impeachment investigation until the report is ordered by the house.

General Sickles has been mustered out of service, but retains the rank of colonel in the regular army.

The internal revenue receipts to-day were $286,000; for the week, $2,050,000, and for the year $79,892,000.

Secretary Wells is improving.

Major General Barry has been assigned to the command of Fortress Monroe.

Senator Wilson in a letter to the North Carolina negroes, dated November 8, says: "I came home from the South with the conviction that the cotton tax ought to be repealed, and that it ought to apply to the crop of this year, and I am confirmed in this conviction by all I hear from your section. I hope congress will at once repeal the cotton tax."

WASHINGTON, November 16.—Stevens is quoted: We must take no step backward. The reconstruction of the Southern states on the basis of the military bill must be hurried up so that as many as possible of them may be represented in the coming presidential nominating convention.

The Republican party would assuredly elect their nominee in the next presidential contest, and there was no need to run after or coax any man into accepting their nomination.

In less than three years they could recover the Northern states, and with the federal patronage the loyal white element of the South would always carry the negro population with them, and thus give the party a base on power for the next fifty years.

WASHINGTON, November 18.—Colfax has arrived.

An evening paper reports a caucus of the leading Democrats here, who, after several hours consultation, settled upon James B. Steedman and John Quincy Adams as candidates for president and vice-president.

Hon. E. Cooper has been appointed assistant secretary of the treasury, and will enter upon his duties the first of December.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $525,000.

A private letter from General McClellan says he will under no circumstances accept public office.

Canby's report to Grant, as commander of the second military district, has been published. Troops in the district, 141 commissioned officers, 2773 men; 959 cases have been tried by military tribunals. The expense of reconstruction so far materially exceeds a quarter of a million.

WASHINGTON, November 19.—There was a prolonged session of the cabinet to-day. All the members were present except Welles.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $299,000.

It is stated that the English do not like Seward's negotiations with Denmark for the purchase of the islands.

Unless ordered to do so, Colfax will not name the committees until the commencement of the regular session.

Juarez has given permission for the transportation of army stores through Mexico to the federal troops on the northern borders.

The Greek legation has advices that the Candian war has been resumed vigorously.

The Peruvian minister presented his credentials to the president to-day.

The amount to be paid for St. Thomas and St. Juan is $7,500,000 in gold for a clear title.

There is no truth in the story about French liens. The cession depends upon the votes of the inhabitants.

The federal government has appealed for clemency in the case of the American Fenians convicted at Manchester.

WASHINGTON, November 19.—Gossip says the president is displeased with Commissioner Rollins' evidence before the impeachment committee.

Sheridan has been summoned to testify before the impeachment committee.

Colfax has not prepared lists of committees.

Stevens will introduce a bill dividing Texas into two or more states. Rollins will probably pe ren oved on December 1.

Henry Sherman, of the law branch of the third auditor's office, is the author of the article attributed to Stanbery.

General Imboden applies for an injunction against Schofield's denying him suffrage. If an injunction is refused he will apply to the supreme court.

The Southern radicals will hold a convention February 22.

WASHINGTON, November 20.—Colonel Wisewell is a prominent candidate for the office of revenue commissioner.

There are six cases of suspension from office in the treasury department which require reports of causes to the senate.

The Southern railroad committee has summoned further witnesses.

Nothing definite has occurred regarding the Davis trial.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $255,000

General Stevenson, formerly a confederate officer, and lately superintendent of the Vera Cruz railroad, is reported dead.

From Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, November 15.—The reconstruction convention to-day adopted a memorial to congress, praying the removal of the cotton tax and that all taxes paid since the 1st of September, 1867, be refunded to the producers.

An ordinance was passed abolishing the new county of Jones, created by the last legislature, and restoring the old boundaries of the counties of which it was formed.

A resolution was adopted by a vote of 53 to 32 to raise a special committee to inquire into the expediency of removing the state capitol from Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, November 16.—In the reconstruction convention to-day a resolution was adopted by a vote of 57 to 33, instructing the proper committee to change the names of all new counties created at the last session of the legislature that were named in glorification of the rebellion, or after those who participated therein.

Afterward an ordinance to change the name of Colbert county to Brownlow, was tabled—yeas 76; nays 12.

Committees on several parts of the constitution have reported. The officers of the executive department are to consist of governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor, and treasurer. The auditor to hold office for four years, and the others for two years—all to be elected by the people. The governor only has been elected by the popular vote heretofore.

MONTGOMERY, November 19.—In the constitutional convention to-day the committee on militia reported an ordinance to organize a state volunteer militia force, which shall be subject to the orders of the governor.

The question of substituting the minority report on the franchise question for the majority report was decided in the negative by a test vote of yeas 19, nays 76. The majority report will be carried. It disfranchises all persons who do not vote on the new constitution, and binding the voter not to contest negro suffrage thereafter, and not to maltreat any person on account of their past or present support of the United States government or the policy of congress.

Evening Session.—In the night session of the convention the majority agreed to strike out of the franchise article that clause which disfranchises all who do not vote on the new constitution. This action is said to be in consequence of orders from the radical leaders in Washington.

MOBILE, November 19.—The steamer Onward with 700 bales of cotton on board was burned yesterday near Bell's landing on the Alabama river. No lives lost.

MOBILE, November 20.—Later accounts of the burning of the steamer Onward report eleven lives lost—Mr. Conklin, of New Orleans, and ten negroes.

The cotton destroyed is valued at $55,000 fully insured. The boat is valued at $20,000; no insurance.

MONTGOMRY, November 20.—In the night session of the reconstruction convention, after a protracted contest, the third clause of section second of the article on franchise, which disfranchises all who do not vote on the new constitution, was stricken out by a vote of 53 to 32, and the article was perfected, but final vote deferred until to-morrow.

From Richmond.

RICHMOND, November 15.—No business being before the United States circuit court to-day, it adjourned over until the 25th, when the Davis trial will be commenced.

Chief Justice Chase will leave for Washington to-morrow. To-night he will be present at the opening of the African high school. It is well understood that he will not be present at the Davis trial.

The conservatives are holding ward meetings to-night to appoint delegates to the state convention.

RICHMOND, November 16.—The large distilleries of Johns & Burnes, and Myers & Bro., were seized to-day for violation of the revenue laws.

The Messrs. Wise, who assaulted Pollard in Baltimore, publish a card denying the truth of the report that his (Pollard's) wife was near, saying that she was inside of the hotel entrance; also asserting that George A. Wise did not fire until fired upon by Pollard.

Chief Justice Chase returned to Washington to-day.

RICHMOND, November 18.—Judge Burnham delivered his charge to the grand jury to-day, in which he said: "A happier state of society is beginning to appear, and while we can not close our eyes to threatened evils and disturbances in this community, yet the crisis may be safely passed by forbearance and a firm and impartial administration of the law."

He called attention to the fact that the greater number of the crimes brought before the court were committed by freedmen; all cases must be tried critically and impartially.

A telegram to the Enquirer from Danville announces the robbery of J. M. Walter last night of $20,000.

RICHMOND, November 20.—The colored conservatives have called a meeting for to-morrow night to give expression to their utter abhorrence of such firebrands and incendiaries as Lewis Lindsay and others.

Seven distilleries around this city have ceased operations, the owners not finding them profitable.

Reports to military commissioners show that one hundred colored men in this city were discharged for voting the radical ticket, and two hundred more are reported as being discharged for the same cause, but the employers say they had no work for them. In many of the cases reported the negroes were discharged before the election.

From Georgia.

SAVANNAH, November 15. The report extensively circulated in this city and elsewhere that a true bill had been presented by the grand jury in the United States district court against Foster Blodgett for perjury in taking the official oath as postmaster at Augusta, is found to be entirely false. District Attorney Fitch stated in court this morning that no case against Blodgett was before the court. It is reported that action will be taken against the instigators for malicious prosecution. It is said to be an attempt of Blodgett's political enemies to destroy his influence as a leader of the radical party in Georgia.

SAVANNAH, November 16.—In the United States district court to-day, Judge Erskin presiding, ex-Governor Brown, counsel for the Hon. Foster Blogett, objected by way of challenge to a large majority of the grand jurors, on the ground of their inability to take the oath prescribed in the act of congress of June 17, 1862. The court sustained the objection, and directed the marshal to impannel a new jury.

ATLANTA, November 16.—The official vote of Georgia has been declared. The registered votes numbered 188,647. Votes cast 106,410; for convention 98,158; number of whites voting for convention is about 36,500.

AUGUSTA, November 18.—Returns from Florida show convention carried by a decided majority of the registered voters. Nearly all the blacks voted, and but few whites. A large number of negroes were elected to the convention; in Leon county three of the four delegates are negroes.

The conservative press of Georgia advocate the meeting of a convention at Macon on the 5th of December, for the purpose of organizing a party in opposition to reconstruction under the military bills, and with a view of defeating the constitution which is to be submitted by the reconstruction convention; the conservatives taking it for granted that no constitution emanating from such a body can be acceptable to that party.

Neither time nor place of meeting of the reconstruction convention has yet been made known.

AUGUSTA, November 20.—General Pope orders the reconstruction convention to meet in Atlanta, Georgia, on the 9th of December.

County meetings are being called to elect delegates to the conservative convention which meets at Macon on the 5th of December.

From South Carolina

CHARLESTON, November 16.—Governor Orr and General Canby are in conference on the subject of future taxations and appropriations in the state. It is understood that material changes will be made which, while developing the resources of the state, will lessen the burthen upon the people.

COLUMBIA, S. C., November 16.—The Columbia and Augusta railroad bridge over the Congaree river was crossed by trains for the first time to-day, the directors of the road, with many citizens, crossing on the first train. The bridge is a handsome iron structure of the Fink pattern. The entire length is 1040 feet.

This road, when completed, will be on the great through line from North to South, and will shorten the distance between this city and Augusta over sixty miles. The track laying is being pushed forward.

CHARLESTON, November 18.—It is expected that a new state tax bill will be issued shortly by General Canby. The merchants have requested him to lower the taxes.

CHARLESTON, November 19.—The convention elections in this state began to-day. The vote in the city for convention—2428 blacks, and 13 whites; no votes against it. All quiet in the city and state. Whites take no part in the election. Business goes on as usual.

The Grand Lodge of South Carolina assembled to-day—seventy-five lodges are represented. The grand master, Governor Orr, in his address, declares the condition of masonry in the state as encouraging. He acknowledges contributions for the benefit of the destitute from Masons of the North and West.

CHARLESTON, November 20.—The election to-day is passing off perfectly quiet. The voting is confined entirely to negroes. Accounts from the interior districts represent the whites as everywhere declining to participate in the election.

The state appropriation bill which will be issued soon by General Canby provides liberally for the judiciary, penitentiary, and public institutions. The state tax bill will be issued at the same time.

From North Carolina.

WILMINGTON, November 16.—A conservative ticket has been brought out here, and considerable reaction has commenced among the colored voters. Some of them will vote the conservative ticket.

WILMINGTON, November 18.—Arrangements are complete for the election to-morrow. In some counties a good many negroes will co-operate with the Southern whites. In Halifax county there is one negro candidate on the conservative ticket.

RALEIGH, November 19.—The election to-day passed off quietly—no disturbance of any kind. The negroes behaved with the utmost propriety. A strong military and police force were stationed at the polls and paraded the streets all day.

It is impossible to tell the result of to-day's voting, but it is estimated that about 1200 votes were polled, most of the negroes and all the radicals, with but two exceptions, voting. The whites are reserving their strength for to-morrow. Many of the blacks forgot the names under which they registered, consequently lose their votes.

It is thought the radicals are ahead, but a vast majority of the whites are yet to vote, while the principal strength of the radicals has already been polled.

The conservatives are jubilant and confident of success.

The votes will not be counted until to-morrow evening.

WILMINGTON, November 19.—The election is passing off very quietly. About 1400 votes polled, mostly for convention, 125 only voting against convention; all whites. The whites will vote to-morrow almost unanimously against convention.

RALEIGH, November 20.—The election went off very orderly to-day. The whites voted heavily and almost unanimously the conservative ticket. Many voted against a convention, but over 300 whites who were registered refused to vote at all. About 1000 votes were cast to-day, making 2000 for two days. The ballots are not yet counted, but it is thought the negroes have carried the city by about 250 majority.

WILMINGTON, November 20.—The election passed off quietly. Great apathy exists among the whites, while the negroes have polled their full strength. Not a black is known to have voted the conservative ticket. Very few white radicals vote in this city. The vote in three wards of this city stands: radicals, 843; conservatives, 400. The total registered votes were, whites, 905; blacks, 1583. This county will probably give 1500 radical majority.

From Havana.

HAVANA, November 14.—Arrived, brigs Olivia and Robert Peel, from New Orleans. Sailed, Uncle Perry for Mobile, and the Nicaragua for Charleston.

There is considerable excitement here about the cholera, but the disease seems to be abating.

HAVANA, November 16.—The hurricane at Porto Rico was more severe than previously reported. All the towns were desolated, and in some instances whole streets were demolished and the roadways hidden by ruins.

No news has been received from the central portion of the island, but elsewhere cattle were killed and fields swept bare. The loss is incalculable.

The island of Tortola entirely disappeared for eight hours, and every man and animal perished.

HAVANA, November 18.—Neither the British consul nor other parties have particulars of the Tortola island disaster, only rumors of serious disasters from the hurricane of the 29th of October, and it is now believed that the reports were greatly exaggerated.

HAVANA, November 17.—The French war steamer Orleans, and Austrian frigate Navarre have arrived from Vera Cruz. The United States revenue cutter Wilderness arrived at Vera Cruz on the 4th inst., having had a rough passage. She was nearly ready to sail for New Orleans.

ADDRESS OF THE GERMANS OF NEW ORLEANS TO THE NORTH GERMAN PARLIAMENT.—The following address to the North German parliament from the Germans of New Orleans was drawn out by Mr. H. Heidenhain, on behalf of the committee, and accompanied the magnificent flag of the new confederation presented to the parliament, and which was intrusted to Captain Meyer, of the steamship Bavaria:

To Dr. Simpson, President of the North German "Reichstag," Berlin, (Confederation.):

Much Honored Sir President: The arrival in our port of the first steam vessel direct from Germany, is an occurrence that has touched and warmed the hearts of our resident German population; the good old fatherland seems to have been brought nearer to them; the glowing love they bear it appears to have been fanned into a more glowing flame, and the hearts of its distant sons warmed and expanded with enthusiasm, as they, with joyous tongues welcomed the "North-German Confederate flag," as it proudly waved from the masts of the Bavaria.

The resident Germans here, though loyal to the country of their adoption, can not forget the land of their birth. Born and educated under the noble lights of and the sciences which burn so brightly there, they hail with pride the industrial, mercantile, and, more particularly, the political advancement of Germany.

The recent events, whereby the various German states have become united under ample and wise constitutional provisions, thereby calling into stronger life national feeling and pride, have furnished another instance of the power inherent in the German race.

Strong as the oak, which, in its time-honored forests defies the storm, is the German Confederation! a political power of primitive rank; firmly bound in the heart of Europe, as the United States of North America are on this side of the Atlantic ocean.

While the undersigned in behalf of their resident countrymen thus respectfully transmit their sentiments and express their feelings, they at the same time send to you, as the president of the North-German "Reichstag," the accompanying flag. We hope that you will place it in your hall, and that its folds may always serve the representatives of the German people as a symbol of their union, enlightened freedom, and genuine patriotism.

We hope that it may be the privilege of yourself, the president, and your honored colleagues of the North German Reichstag, under the protection of his majesty King William, and under the wise counsels of the Count Bismarck, to preserve the glorious principles of German unity, and that you may long continue to work for the good of our German fatherland.

We have the honor, with the assurances of our highest esteem, to subscribe ourselves,

Signed: J. C. Kathman, H. Heidenhain, Jacob Hassinger, L. Pfaff, R. Mogul, Wm. Sammers, P. Kraemer, P. Hanning, Otto Hettzel, G. Roschel.

How to Get a Husband.

From an excellent communication, published in a Northern paper, we copy the following "expressly for the girls:"

Being old, and therefore allowed license for teasing the girls on matrimonial subjects, I consult them about their future prospects often, and find that the opinion obtains with them that the young men were never so slow in proposing as in these days, which, we must admit, gives them a good, not to say all-powerful reason for not taking a husband. Now, young ladies, the whole secret with nine-tenths of you of not being able to get off your parents' hands, is simply that you don't know how to work. You can't keep house. You can't make a pair of breeches. You can't tell for the life of you the difference between bran and shorts, or which cow gives the buttermilk. The young men generally came out of the war "with the skin of their teeth," with no fortune, I might say, but their wardrobes of blue and their canteens, and to marry with them now, rest assured, relates more to making a living with the assistance of a loving, industrious helpmate than indulging in opera music, moonshine, and poetry. Do you know what they say of one of your butterfly young ladies who has held them in the parlor engaged by the hour listening to "elegant nothings?" Nineteen times out of twenty it is this: "Well, she's all right for an evening's entertainment, but she will not make a good wife."

There is no possible objection to the accomplishments of music, painting, and the like as such, but the idea is to be able to set these prior amusements aside for the period when the stern duties of married life call for your practical knowledge. Show the young men that you can do your part of double business; that you can cook a meal's victuals on a pinch; that you can sweep up, and dust, and darn old stockings, and save a penny toward an accumulated pound; that you will not be a dead expense to him through life. Believe me, young friends, as many true, heroic, womanly hearts beat over household duties as flutter beneath the soft light of a parlor chandelier. Your kiss is just as sweet, your smiles just as bright, your heart as happy and tender, after a day's exertion in a sphere worthy of true womanhood, as in places of dissipation, frippery, and silly amusement. Have an ambition to do your part in life; cultivate industrial habits, and let the parlor accomplishments go with the higher accomplishments I have roughly enumerated. It is astonishing how soon a domestic young lady is found out and appreciated. It is because she is such a rare exception to the general rule.

A ROMANTIC SENSATION IN PLATTSBURG.

A Man "Known to Have Been Murdered" Eleven Years Ago Returns to the Village—Strange Case of Circumstantial Evidence.

In the latter part of June, in the year 1856, Captain John G. Weatherwax, one of a numerous family of that name living six miles south of Plattsburg, sailed as the owner and commander of a vessel on Lake Champlain for a Canadian port, taking with him as employes his cousin, Andrew Weatherwax, and another boatman. On the return trip they one morning put into the mouth of Pike river, a small stream which empties into the lake on the east side and just north of the Canada, line for the purpose of taking on a cargo of wood. During the day the third man of the crew, as he afterward testified, observed the captain and his cousin in a violent quarrel. There were high and passionate words, and threats employed without stint or measure. The quarrel and wrangling continued at intervals, and the angry feelings of the parties seemed to increase as the day wore on, and the quarrel was at its height near nightfall. At evening, while the witness stood alone at the stern, the captain and his cousin resumed their quarrel near the bow, and for a long time the noise of a wordy conflict and threats of violence continued to be heard by him. Finally, however, the quarrel seemed to have been brought to a sudden termination, and in a very singular manner. There came through the darkness to the ear of the listener the sound of a dull, heavy thud, as of a powerful blow with some heavy weapon crushing through a skull, and then all was still. A few minutes more elapsed and the captain came aft, but without his cousin. Nothing was said by him or the witness about the matter, and the night passed away.

In the morning, the hat of Andrew Weatherwax lay upon the forward deck, and near it a pool of blood. The captain was taciturn and moody, and said nothing of his cousin; and the assistant, being now the only occupant of the vessel with him, did not care to agitate the matter. It turned out afterward, however, that the captain of a vessel lying near heard also the quarrel and the blow, but, like the near witness, of whose presence he was not aware, he preferred to say nothing about it; and the captain, after a few more days had elapsed, returned unmolested to Plattsburg, where, in answer to inquiries concerning his cousin, he gave only vague and what were considered evasive replies, stating that he had gone here or there to some indefinite place of which the captain seemed unwilling to give any account.

The second scene in this remarkable tragedy was the discovery of the dead body of a man in Pike river, in the exact spot where Captain Weatherwax's boat had been moored, only six days after the quarrel and supposed murder above related. The man had evidently been murdered, as his skull was crushed in, as though a blow had been given him, precisely such as the two boatmen had heard. The body was identified as beyond all doubt that of Andrew Weatherwax. This led to a revelation of the occurrences upon the boat, and in ten days thereafter Captain Weatherwax was arrested and imprisoned on the charge of having murdered his cousin. The warrant for his arrest was issued by S. D. M. Beckwith, then a justice of the peace, and now a resident of Canton, N. Y.

At the preliminary examination, which lasted nine days, the evidence was so strong and conclusive against the prisoner that Mr. Beckwith gives it as his opinion that if it had been given to a jury upon his trial, no earthly power could have saved him from conviction and execution. But as the transaction had taken place in Canada, it was decided that Justice Beckwith had no jurisdiction in the matter, and the prisoner was set at liberty. His counsel advised him upon his release to leave the country, change his name, and live in the greatest possible obscurity, so firmly convinced was he, as well as the entire community, of his guilt. But the captain boldly and resolutely refused to do this, claiming that he would yet be able to vindicate his entire innocence.

After a time, however, the news of the crime reached the British authorities in Canada, and in obedience to their requisition, Hon. Wm. L. Marcy, then secretary of state, issued a warrant for the captain's arrest, and he was conveyed a prisoner to Montreal, and closely confined in jail. Thither his faithful counsel followed him, and upon the trial managed to secure his acquittal by such means only as are best known to skillful lawyers. Suffice it to say that there was not elicited a particle of evidence to weaken the conviction of his guilt, and yet the judge charged the jury that the evidence was not sufficient to convict. He was accordingly released and returned to Plattsburg, which for ten years he has walked among his neighbors, spurned and despised of all, bearing the brand of Cain, and even abandoned by his own family relatives because he had murdered their kinsman. Of all who had known him, not one believed him innocent.

And here we reach the last, and above all others, strange event of this history. Early in the present month of October, Andrew Weatherwax appeared among his friends and relatives in the southern part of the town of Plattsburg. When intelligence of his return was brought to those who participated in the scenes of 1856, they refused to credit it. But he is nevertheless the veritable Andrew, and as such is received and recognized by his astonished and delighted friends. The account which he gives of himself is, that on that July night, in 1856, he left the boat lying at the wharf at Pike river, and wandered off to a rum shop somewhere in the neighboring settlements. Already partially intoxicated, and irritated by the events of the day, it did not take long for him to become embroiled with certain tipsy fellows he found there.

He says he was arrested, brought before a magistrate, and fined. Not having the money to pay the fine, he was about to be placed in close confinement, when a man stepped forward and offered to take him as a seaman, giving an advance of wages to pay the fine. Andrew accepted, and was speedily shipped on an English vessel. He went as a common sailor to China, to Australia, and to various parts of the world in different vessels. He returns now and learns for the first time of his supposed death by violence.

Since the return of his cousin, Captain John G. Weatherwax is another man. The confidence, vigor, and light-heartedness of his younger days have returned to him. Friends can not do enough to recompense him for the sufferings he has endured through their unjust condemnation.

There is still a mystery connected with this case. No rational account can be given of the body that was found and identified as that of Andrew Weatherwax. No other man was missing, no other stranger or settler, far or near, was known here or at Pike river to have suddenly disappeared. Too great an interval of time has now elapsed to solve this mystery, and the truth in regard to it must be left to conjecture.

CURE FOR SWEARING.—In a recent speech on women's rights, George Francis Train said he knew a family of sisters who cured their brothers from swearing by saying damn every time their brother did. At the table Susie would say to Georgie, pass me that damn butter [laughter], and Minnie would ask Elsey for that damn buckwheat cake. [Laughter.]

Three hundred and sixty colored citizens of Richmond, Virginia, have testified on oath that they have been discharged for voting the Republican ticket. It is supposed that five hundred in all have been discharged for that reason.

THE CITY CURRENCY AND THE CITY CREDIT.

The depreciation of the city currency has been produced by combinations of brokers and speculators, and not by any depreciation of the city credit. These facts can not be disputed, for it happens that on Tuesday an officer of the city government, who receives only a small salary, was under the necessity of buying a draft on New York for the amount of $100, and he was forced to submit to a discount of twenty-two per cent on his city notes to procure this draft.

On the evening of the same day a prominent banker was a spectator at the meeting of the city council. He said privately there that if the city would issue bonds bearing five per cent interest to redeem the city notes in the form of currency, his banking house would take a hundred thousand dollars of these bonds.

We deeply regret the loss which has fallen and must yet fall upon the people in consequence of the depreciation of the city promises to pay created by the criminal speculations in its currency. It represents the floating indebtedness of the city, and though its intrinsic value is as great as that of any paper money in the United States, yet it is not current outside of the immediate vicinity of New Orleans.

Merchants can not pay for their purchases in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburg-Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or, Boston with this currency, and hence its circulation as money has only a local character and local value. No amount of legislation can keep its value up as the exclusive circulating medium of a city which purchases so largely from abroad as New Orleans does. These notes may depreciate, but the credit of the city must be maintained.

One of our Philadelphia exchanges, the Inquirer, accepting as truth the statements telegraphed to the Northern press that the presence of General Hancock is needed here to regulate the value of the city currency, closes with this sentence:

General Hancock will be a wise man if he is able to find a remedy for this evil, and it can scarcely be expected that he will be able to do so, unless by a decree that the city issues shall no longer have the properties of money, an order, which it may be presumed would be difficult to put in operation.

Herein lies the whole trouble—The attempt to use the indebtedness of the city as money, and as the almost exclusive circulating medium of a mercantile city like New Orleans.

If the city council will adopt the suggestions repeatedly urged through the columns of the REPUBLICAN, and compel the immediate collection of the four million and two hundred thousand dollars arrears of taxes, sell the city real estate not required for municipal purposes, and apply the proceeds thereof to the extinction and extirpation of the city money, the credit of the city of New Orleans will no longer be impaired by a depreciated currency, the people will no longer suffer loss by it, and paper currency possessing a national value will be substituted for what, under the name of money, is nothing but a loan from the entire community of a great, prosperous, and powerful city.

Let us indulge again the hope that the council in the consideration of this question will act wisely and promptly.

Postal Arrangements with the Netherlands.

Official publication is made of the convention between the United States postoffice department and the general postoffice of the Netherlands. The offices for the exchange of mails are to be at New York and Boston. The single rate of postage on the direct correspondence from the United States is fifteen cents, and from the Netherlands forty cents. On all correspondence, including newspapers, book packages, lithographs, etc., and grains and seeds, the rate is to be for the mails dispatched that which the dispatching office shall adopt, adapted to the convenience aud habits of its interior administration. On registered letters and newspapers, books, etc., prepayment is obligatory. Registered letters are subject to a fee not exceeding ten cents in the United States, and not exceeding twenty-five cents in the Netherlands. Whenever regular mail steamers shall be established between the two countries the postage is to be reduced; this convention to take effect on the first of January.

CLAIBORNE.—Since it has been understood that the federal troops are to be soon removed from this section, many colored men have expressed fears that they will in the meantime fare but badly—especially as there is no bureau agent in this parish. It is especially feared and apprehended that the colored member elect to the convention from this parish will be murdered. We have never been disposed to feel any fear or apprehension of violence from any portion of our citizens since the close of the war, even in the absence of an armed soldiery, and have never, in an individual capacity or in our own behalf, advised the sending of any troops to this parish, but we deem it our duty here and now to state some facts in these premises, and leave it to the federal authorities to determine what is right and proper in the case. We state then emphatically, and in round numbers, that there is a spirit of mobocracy and desperation in the parish of Claiborne which needs watching. It would be any easy matter to enumerate and specify facts to prove this; but for the present we simply appeal to all honorable, law-abiding men, regardless of political castes, to substantiate what we say. We challenge an investigation.—Homer Iliad.

OLD-TIME HUMOR.—Everybody who remembers Boston thirty years ago, will recollect the hat store of Colonel Messinger, (father of the present alderman George W. Messinger), on Washington street. It is related that two of his apprentices, Sol and Ben, one summer, coveted the fruit of Colonel Roulstone's beautiful pear trees, in the next inclosure, which was surrounded by a very high fence. Ben says to Sol, "I should like a few of those nice pears; how can we get them?" "Easy enough," says Sol; "fetch me your fishing-pole. The

When we hear the music ringing,
In the bright celestial dome,
When sweet angel voices singing
Gladly bid us welcome home,
To the land of ancient story,
Where the spirit knows no care,
In that land of light and glory,
Shall we know each other there?
Shall we know each other?
Shall we know each other?
Shall we knew each other?
Shall we know each other there?

When the holy angels meet us,
As we go to join their band;
Shall we know the friends that greet us,
In the glorious spirit land?
Shall we see the same eyes shining,
On us, as in days of yore?
Shall we feel their dear arms twining
Fondly round us as before?
Shall we, etc.

Yes, my earth-worn soul rejoices,
And my weary heart grows light,
For the thrilling angel voices,
And the angel faces bright;
That shall welcome us in heaven,
Are the lov'd of long ago,
And to them 'tis kindly given.
Thus their earthly friends to know.

Evermore their sweet song lingers,
"We shall know each other there!"

THE EQUAL RIGHTS RAILWAY PLAN.

Letter from Hon. Lorenzo Sherwood.

WASHINGTON, November 5, 1867.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your paper of the 27th ult., containing an article on the subject of the proposed cheap freight railways system to be inaugurated under congressional legislation. I feel gratified at the view you take of the question, and feel confident that Texas will congratulate itself upon the probability of having found a strong ally in Louisiana. It is now fifteen years since this plan of a railway substantially was brought out in Texas through a convention that was assembled at Galveston. That convention proposed what was called the state plan, known as such in Texas, whereby it was proposed that the state should construct and own the roadbed and stationary appurtenances, but open the thoroughfares to free competition and equal rights in transportation; in other words, to apply the same principles in construction and management that appertain to the canal system of New York. There was a proposition connected with this plan to this effect: that we should take the United States bonds, known afterward as the Texas indemnity bonds, or the balance after paying the debts of Texas, together with fifty million acres of the public domain, put them into an internal improvement fund, construct the roads on the credit of the state, and as the public property appreciated sell it out, pay for the improvements, and dedicate them to the free use of the public. This plan was entirely feasible at the time had it been supported under steady policy. The cause of its failure became a lesson almost as profitable to Texas as the rest of the lessons she has learned from such calamity as has followed the delusions of error.

The cause of the failure of the proposed system was mainly this: We had our 100,000,000 acres of public domain, and the fashion had got in vogue of giving land bonuses to companies for constructing roads. The broad fertile acres of Texas were peculiarly attractive. They seemed to invite more than our share of the pretending, moneyless, creditless adventurers of the earth, who knew nothing of internal improvements, and the necessary principles of finance to be engrafted on them. Our legislature was deluded into the belief that companies could be formed, fictitious stock could be issued to represent the road, construction could be carried forward on bonds, that the bonuses of 10,240 acres to the mile could be sold to discharge the bonds, and that the corporators would get the road in the clear for nothing. I am unable to state whether the members of the legislature who supported this plan still hold their stock, or to give any intimation of its value, but rather suppose it has been brought to par in funds of the confederate war debt. The four or five thousand miles of road, however, are missing.

It may be of consequence to mention an attempted enterprise in Texas illustrative of the principle engrafted on the congressional bills of Senators Henderson, Harlan, and Nye, requiring a capitalization on cash, and construction for cash. After the people of Eastern Texas had waited from 1852 to 1859 for the road to come, they found it necessary to put their shoulder to the wheel and go to work themselves. They accordingly got the charter passed, a mere ordinary loose charter, for the "Houston, Trinity, and Tyler road," and then applied to Galveston for help. The people of Galveston were believers in the cash principle, and would consent to no other plan than that full paid up stock alone should represent the road, and would not embark unless bonds and mortgages on the road were interdicted by the charter. To gratify Galveston the bill was supplemented and amended so as to inhibit the company from mortgaging its road or franchise, and furthermore to make the directors personally liable in case they contracted a debt without money in the treasury of the company sufficient to pay it. Under this charter the company was organized. Now for the result.

Everybody in Texas knows that there never was a company organized that commanded more confidence. Cash subscriptions flowed in liberally, more money and faster than needed for the time. The grading of the first twenty miles was contracted for, the iron and cross-ties, chairs, spikes, and a little rolling stock paid for, and the whole cost of a good single track was made less than $8500 to the mile. It may be proper to state that the planters on the line of this road, under the assurance that we were making a stock that would always be at par or above, promised to take their hands out of the cotton field if necessary, and grade the road from county to county, furnish the cross-ties, and take it all in the stock of the roads, leaving it to the directors to say what was a fair cash price. Some of the railroad iron men of New York declared that the charter for this road was the only sensible one they ever saw, and one of those gentlemen, largely in the iron trade, gave a very strong assurance that in case the company kept to the economic cash principle in construction, the iron could be furnished for the whole 250 miles at the lowest cash price, and taken in the stock of the road; that although it was out of the question for iron men or manufacturers to do this in ordinary cases, he plainly perceived that we would make a stock that would be worth more than the bonds of any company. Another negotiation. We required a couple of construction engines, and applied to a locomotive builder of Philadelphia. He proposed to throw off fifteen per cent. from what he called his cash price for the first one, and for the second the same price, taking one-half of the price of the second engine in the stock of the road; further, he also gave the assurance that in case the company did not depart from the cash basis in their operations he would make the arrangement whereby we could have all the locomotives we needed at the lowest cash price for the company's stock at par. The ultimate result of our enterprise was that the confederates stole our iron, and made rebel fortifications of it. This was an end of the chapter that contained this little gem in the history of railroading.

The illustration of economy would not be complete without instituting the comparison between the road mentioned and other enterprises in Texas. The Mexican Gulf and San Antonio road over a very level route was contracted for at $27,000 to the mile in gross, payable in the bonds of the company, it being a single track without rolling stock. The "Galveston, Houston, and Henderson" road from Virginia Point to Houston, fifty miles, was indifferently constructed at a nominal cost of fifty-six thousand dollars to the mile, no rolling stock, (except the stock of the road which was all fiction), the bonds of the company having been sold in England, France, and Germany for whatever price could be obtained, not half the avails in all probability ever entering into actual construction account. A better road could have been built at the time for a price corresponding with the price of the road first mentioned. The "Houston and Texas Central" road with a small amount of rolling stock stood before the war at a nominal cost of $33,000 to the mile, the route being an almost level one, and equal in cheapness and feasibility to the route of the roads first mentioned, all of them being level routes.

Another paragraph and I will be done with this local branch of the subject. The charge for carrying a bale of cotton on the Houston and Texas Central for less than 100 miles, I am informed, has been $5. At this rate the freight on a bushel of wheat from Red river to Galveston would amount to over $1 80, provided the road ever reaches that point. This would be a poor show for agriculture. The price of freight on wheat from Red river to Galveston should not exceed eight cents per bushel. Without alluding to the wanton habit of companies in making over charges where they have it in their power, I have drawn this comparison to show the difference in the exactions of commerce in order to make a dividend on the stock where a road costs $9000, $27,000, $30,000, or $56,000 to the mile. The public is the party most interested in this question of economic construction, and I think I may assert with truth that the Houston, Trinity, and Tyler charter, and the bills now before the senate committees in congress, embrace the entire railway charters that have ever been proposed for the protection of the public.

The enterprise proposed by the congressional bill for establishing the "Galveston, Kansas, and Little Rock railway" we intend to make a precedent worthy of being followed. It is over a very level route, as yet untracked by a railway. By keeping it on the economic plan of construction, so as to get a dollar's worth of work and material for each dollar expended, then put it on the "equal speed," "equal rights" plan of management, with their great freight capacity and power to command patronage, and we would have no fear as to the amount of business to be done, nor should I be in any doubt as to our ability to associate the necessary capital. I question not that we could make a road that would command a patronage sufficient to allow of very low freight, pay a good dividend, and to establish a sinking fund that would enable the road to be dedicated to the free use of the public, with the exception of revenue for superintendence and repairs, in less than thirty-five years. Eight or nine per cent. a year would be saved in the preservation of the road by the low rate of speed, while the equal rights principle and low freight would multiply many times over the tonnage to be carried. I entertain no doubt that a road from New Orleans to Shreveport, or to connect with this, could be successfully established on the same principles.

The United States, as all patriotic men hope, have a great future. The principles of public economy, and especially railway economy, have hardly been entered upon. It is almost sickening to see the waste, the deterioration, and sacrifice that are going on, and at the same time witness the feebleness of our system to perform work; and all this the result of a disregard of the simplest, plainest principles of economy. When we assume that we can add a ten-fold power to carry freight with a five-fold economy in preserving the road and rolling stock, with other economic principles all tending to reduce expenses, we have no doubt that an improved system may be made to save the people annually more than the interest on the national debt; and when we add to this the certain result of a new creation of taxable property to the extent of from three to five thousand millions, I feel like pressing the subject.

The South is in peculiar need of the national system we are aiming to inaugurate. I hope the people in mass may be disposed to co-operate, following the example lately exhibited in Texas. If not, then I hope the Unionists, white and colored, will take it up. It would be needless to tell me that our colored population would be incompetent to understand this subject. Children can understand it, and if we give our colored population something to think for, act for, work for, and vote for, they will soon become just as sensible public economists as any other class.

Very truly, yours,
LORENZO SHERWOOD.

Money Going a Begging.

For eighteen months past there has been an extraordinary dullness and depression in many kinds of business in Europe. Public confidence was first shaken by the panic in Great Britain in May, 1866. Since that time capital has been steadily accumulating in the banks, until the amount has reached a point never before touched in the history of commerce. At present money is so plenty in London that it may be borrowed at two per cent. Millions of pounds are lying in joint stock banks upon which only one and a half per cent interest is paid, and this at a time when the British government is paying three and one-fourth per cent interest upon its securities, and when five per cent is offered for money to be invested in private domestic enterprises that will bear the strictest scrutiny. Probably the total amount of capital thus drawing only a nominal interest, and comparatively idle, in Great Britain exceeds one hundred millions of dollars. If to this vast sum be added similar accumulations in France and Germany, the aggregate capital in Europe now seeking profitable investment will not fall short of two hundred millions of dollars. Should not some means be adopted to attract at least a portion of this wealth to the United States?

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE BUREAU SCHOOLS. The Galveston Bulletin reports the appointment by General Reynolds of E. M. Wheelock, Esq., as superintendent of schools under the bureau of refugees, freedmen, and abandoned lands, district of Texas.

Mr. Wheelock, the gentleman appointed to this responsible position, is the recently appointed state superintendent of public schools. He is a gentleman of fine attainments and classical education, and a graduate of Cambridge University, and is an ordained minister of the Unitarian church, and well qualified for the position to which he has been appointed.

Why can not Texas have a conservative state convention?—Houston Telegraph.

There is no reason in the world why we can not have a conservative convention if we want one, but what good will it do anybody?—Galveston Bulletin.

It is proposed to hold a convention of the sea island planters on the 1st of December, in the city of Charleston, to consider the necessities of the seacoast of South Carolina, and to provide for the prosecution of planting during the coming year.

NEW RELIGIOUS ALMANAC.

Indispensable for Every Clergyman!

Important for every Church Member, and every Friend of Religious Movements!

The "American Ecclestical Almanac for 1688," by Professor A. J. Schem, which will be published about the first of January, 1868, will fill a want long felt by Clergymen and members of all religious persuasions, and by all taking an interest in the religiious questions of the day. As the title page, which we give annexed, indicates, it will give a brief account of all the important events in the religious history of the year 1867, the proceedings of great Councils, Congresses, Assemblies and Meetings of particular denominations, the work of the Bible, and Missionary Societies, the progress of the Young Msn's Christian Associations, of the Temperance and Peace Movements, the advance of Religious Freedom and Toleration; the most memorable facts in the History of every Denomination not only in the United States but in the whole world; and an obituary account of persons distinguished in the religious world who died in 1867.

In additionto this large amount of historical information, this American Ecclesiasticol Almanac will contain the completest statistical Tables of Religious Denominations ever published. These tables will show the relative number of the Christian and the principal Non-Christian Religions of the world, the ecclesiastical statistics of America, Europe, Asis, Africa and Australia, and a complete statistical exhibit of every important religious denomination of America and Europe.

In short, it will contain an immense amount of intelligence, not accessible in any other volume, of the greatest interest to every one who is not indifferent with regard to religions question, and constantly needed for reference.

The name of the author of the "American Ecclesiastical Almanac" guarantees for the accuracy and completeness of the information that will be furnished.

Price 30 cents—A ltberal discount allowed to dealers; also to clergymen, teachers, and others wishing to form clubs for the above Almanac, among their church members.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

A REPOSITORY OF

Fashion, Pleasure and Instruction.

HARPER'S BAZAAR, the publication of which has just been commenced by Harper & Brothers, is an illustrated Weekly Journal, devoted to Fashion and Household Literature.

It is the first weekly journal of fashion ever published in the United States. By arrangements which the publishers have perfected, at grert cost, with the most celebra ed European fashion journals—particularly with the well-known "Bazar of Berlin—illustrations of fashions for each week of the year will appear in Harper's Bazar simultaneously with their publication in Paris and Berlin; an advantage which will belong exclusively to this journal.

In a country where toree hundred millions of dollars are annually expended for dry goods, to be transformed into articles of dress, trustworthy and practical instructions as to the most tasteful and economical methods of fashioning these articles become of the greatest value to American women. The Bazar will contain full and explicit instructions, with illustrations, which will enable every lady reader to cut and make her own and her children's entire wardrobe, with a large portion of her husband's. Each alternate number will be accompanied with large pattern plates, containing from forty to fifty full-sized patterns, applicable to every article of wardrobe made in the family, with the necessary directions for cutting and making. Similar illustrations and descriptions of fancy work will also be furnished. These patterns will be executed in Paris and Berlin, and will surpass anything of the kind hitherto produced in this country. Frequently an elegant colored fashion plate will be presented with the paper. Practical descriptions will also be given of the fashions especially in vogue in New York—the centre of fashion in America.

Harper's Bazar, besides being the leading Fashion Journal in this country, will also aim to present before its readers the very best specimens of Household Literature. It will contain original and selected serial stories, poetry, novelettes, articles on the topics of the day, (excluding politics,) on books, art, morals, familiar science, education, amusements, hygiene, etiquette, housekeeping, gardening, with home and foreign gossip. No subject of household interest will be excluded from its columns.

In the first number of the Bazar will be commenced a novel, entitled "The Cord and the Creese; or, The Brandon Mystery," by James De Mille, Esq., author of "The Dodge Club." This novel has been read in manuscript by several of our most competent critics, who unanimously pronounce it, in point of interest, plot, variety of adventure, and graphic delineation of character, to be fully equal to any of the novels of Wilkie Collins.

Harper's Bazar will contain 16 folio pages, of the size of Harper's Weekly, printed on superfine calendered paper, and will be published weekly, at ten cents per single number, or four dollars per year.

Ladies in the country will be supplied gratuitously through the mails with the first six numbers of Harper's Bazar, upon written application to the publishers.

Postage, five cents for three months.

Single subscribers will be supplied from the beginning to the end of the year 1868, which will complete the first volume, for the yearly price of four dollars.

An extra copy will be supplied gratis for every Club five subscribers, at four dollars each, in one remittance, or six copies for twenty dollars.

"EUREKA,"

THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THE CLASSIC POETS have sung to us of a spring whose pure, ethereal waters impart perpetual youth and beauty to all who will drink of them. It is now conceded by all that the EUREKA is made of the water of that same spring, and its magical effects will be seen at once by those who use it. The hair will be restored to its youth and beauty, even where the snows of winter have fallen. In presenting this Hair Restorative to the public, I have no hesitation in saying that it is no humbug; that it will do all that is claimed for it, viz: Restoring the hair to its original color; preventing its falling off, and giving it softness, youth and lustre that no other preparation can produce. The Eureka has been used by tens of thousands, and in every case has given entire satisfaction, and is now used universally. Dr. Van Zandt has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair—preventing it falling off, by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the EUREKA, and you will not be disappointed.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson. Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Poetry.

THY KINGDOM COME.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

Thy kingdom come.
I heard a seer cry: The wilderness,
The solitary place,
Shall yet be glad for Him, and He shall bless
(Thy kingdom come) with His revealed face.
The forests; they shall drop their precious gum,
And shed for Him their balm: and He shall yield
The grandeur of His speech to charm the field.

Then all the soothed winds shall drop to listen
(Thy kingdom come).
Comforted waters waxen ca'm shall glisten
With bashful tremblement beneath His smile:
And Echo ever the while
Shall take, and in her awful joy repeat,
The laughter of His lips—Thy kingdom come):
And hills that sit apart shall be no longer dumb:
No, they shall shout and shout,
Raining their lovely loyalty along the dewy plain,
And va'leys round about.

And all the well-contented land made sweet
With flowers she opened at His feet,
Shall answer; shout and make the welkin ring,
And tell it to the stars, shout, shout, and sing:
Her cup being full to the brim,
Her poverty made rich with Him.

His yearnings satisfied to the utmost sum—
Lift up, O earth! prepare thy song,
It hall not yet be long.
Lift up, O earth! for He shall come again,
Thy Lord: and He shall reign, and He shall reign—
Thy kingdom come.

PERSONNEL OF THE CONVENTION OF 1867.

Hon. Thomas Isabelle is a native of St. Landry parish, Louitiana, and was born in 1829. His father was Dr. J. B. Isabelle. After spending a few years at school at Opelousas, Thomas came to New Orleans in 1849 and engaged in the manufacture and sale of sewing machines, which he is still carrying on successfully.

Mr. Isabelle's first active participation in public affairs was in 1863, when Magruder was threatening New Orleans. General Shepley, military commandant, having called for volunteers for the defense of the city, Mr. Isabelle closed his store and enlisted as a private in the Caillou Blues, in which company he was soon after commissioned a first lieutenant. Their term of service was sixty days, but Lieutenant Isabelle and his company served ninety days. At the close of his military service he resumed his business and devoted himself quietly to his private affairs. He was, however, one of the pioneers in the early movements of the colored people to obtain the recognition of their civil and political rights. He was a conscientious and firm believer in the capacity of his people for improvement and self-government; and believed that they had now a title to equal political and civil privileges with all other men by their loyalty to the government, and not less by the prudence and self-restrainst which they had exhibited during the war, to the astonishment and admiration of the world and their forever oppressors. He therefore embarked with zeal and earnestness in the political movements of the colored men, and carried to their cause much influence.

He organized the Dostie Club in the first ward, one of the largest and most influential in the city, and was made President of the Union Brotherhood, numbering about four thousand members. He also identified himself with the praiseworthy and unexpected, although spontaneous attempts of the colored men to be self-dependent, and to relieve and maintain the indigent and helpless of their own color. He aided in founding the Union Sisters' Asylum, on Toulouse street, and is the president of that association.

Mr. Isabelle is a modest and unobtrusive gentleman, and one whom genuine amiability and quiet and pleasing address will render an agreeable companion to his fellow members, and whom sound judgment and strict integrity will render a true and faithful representative of his constituency.

Mr. Isabelle is a Radical, and will support, to their full extent, the principles and the men of his party, because he firmly believes that in that path alone lies the way, not only to the elevation of his own color, but to the redemption, the peace, and the prosperity of Louisiana.

The Dying Infidel.

One morning, Dr. Fletcher, of Stepney, received a request to visit a man who was a professed skeptic, and apparently near his end. On entering the chamber where he lay, he beheld the attenuated form of one who had been a tall, athletic man, struggling under the ravages of a disease at once the most painful and incurable. The doctor addressed him by sundry kind inquiries, and expressions of sympathy, reminding him of the sufferings of Christ, who gave himself a ransom for sinners, that through His astonishing sacrifice they might obtain the forgiveness of sin, and be restored to the favor of God.

Hearing this the dying man said: "Sir, I don't believe that; I wish I could, as my dear wife there does; she believes all you say." "Well," said Dr. F., "but you say you wish you could, and that is a great point towards attaining it, if you are sincere. Now, what do you believe concerning Jesus Christ?" "Well," he replied, "I believe such a man once lived, and that he mas a very good, sincere man; but that is all."

It was a principle with Dr. F., when reasoning with unbelievers, if they acknowledged the smallest portion of truth, to make it a position from which to argue with them. This mode he now adopted, and said: "You believe that Jesus Christ was a good man. Now, do you think that a good man would wish to deceive others, or a sincere man use language that must mislead?" "Certainly not," he replied. "Then how do you reconcile your admission that he was a good man, with his saying to the Jews, 'I and my father are one.' When they took up stones to kill him, he did not undeceive them, but still maintained the fact of his Godhead; adding, 'My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me, and I know them, and I give unto them eternal life;' now, could any mere man say, I give unto them eternal life? Could any angel, however exalted?"

"Stop!" cried the dying man, with an excited voice; "Stop, sir, I never saw this before; a new light breaks in upon me—stop, sir!" Holding up his emaciated hand, as if fearing that a breath might obscure the new light breaking in on the benighted soul, and with a countenance lighted up with a sort of preternatural expression quite indescribable, but with eyes intently fixed on Dr. F., he exclaimed, after a short pause, while big tears ran down his cheeks: "Sir, you are a messenger of mercy sent by God himself to save my poor soul! Yes, Christ is God, and he died to save sinners! Yes, even me!" His feelings almost overpowered his feeble frame.

Lest he should be too much excited, his visitor left him, first commending his case to God by prayer, with the promise to see him again on the following morning. The next day he found him propped up in bed, literally "a new man," displaying all the eagerness of a hungry man, seeking to be fed with the "bread of life," combined with the simplicity of a child, trusting in the promises of God, which are "yea and amen in Christ Jesus." He candidly confessed that though he had rejected the Gospel as unworthy of credit, he had never before read it. As its great truths were presented to his mind, he seized hold of them with an eagerness indescribable, whilst his former almost insupportable pains seemed now to be forgotten in the overwhelming enjoyment arising from the experience of the love of Christ, and in proportion as his bodily frame decayed, his faith triumphed and his joy increased.

He had one little girl, his eldest child, capable of reading. He gave her a copy of the New Testament, with all the passages marked by his own hand, which had been made specially useful to him in the way of instruction or consolation, and he desired her, as the last request of her dying father, to read it daily; never to part with it, but to make it her guide through life, that it might be her comfort in death. After this he directed that all his infidel books suould be committed to the flames, that the poison might be destroyed, and the plague stayed. He lived just one fortnight after Dr. F.'s first interview, and then died under the influence of Gospel hope.

How many, like this poor man, despise and endeavor to discredit the Bible, when they have never read it for themselves, or only looked into it, to find objections with which to strengthen their infidelity? Is this rational? Is it honest?

Letter from Brother Lynch.

In a letter to Brother Brakeman, dated Enterprise, Miss., November 9th, Rev. James Lynch gives many very interesting items, and though the letter is a private one, we take the liberty of giving some extracts, or rather of repeating some of its facts and figures, to the readers of the ADVOCATE:

He has delivered seventy-seven moral, educational, and political addresses, which have been listened to by nearly 50,000 people, white and colored; has preached fifty sermons and organized four circuits. He has traveled through Central and Northern Mississippi, visiting several of the principal churches of our denomination, preaching as he went. He says: "I have done what I could to stir up among our preachers and people the pure and progressive spirit of our holy christianity, and the aggressive and missionary spirit of our beloved Methodism. And in some instances there have been overwhelming demonstrations of the Spirit's presence and power." He has made it a part of his work to give special attention to the young, visiting them and addressing them in their day and Sunday schools, and is much cheered by their improvement and the prospect before them.

Brother Lynch has repeatedly discussed the issues of the day with leading public men in Mississippi, though it has sometimes been at the peril of his life. The wonder is, that he was allowed to do it at all. Think of his having attempted such a thing in Mississippi before the war, or while it was in progress. Verily, the world moves, and Africa is helping to move it! Brother L.'s labor and influence has done much to strengthen the mother church in Mississippi, and to sow broadcast the seeds of eternal life, love and liberty.

He says: "I am in the portion of the State to labor for Christ, until conference. I am about to start on a tour of preaching and organi- societies from the Mobile and Ohio Railroad to the Mississippi River. In these interior counties the people are famishing for thh bread of life, and must be fed. The journey is a dangerous one, but I must go at the master's command. The work is perilous, but it must be done."

The writer of this knows something, from a year's experience, of the danger and difficulty of travel in that State, and can sympathize with our brother, as he goes forward in the work. He will be passing over territory hitherto untraveled by our ministers, and breaking new ground at every point. May God be with him, and let the church pray for him.

After a tribute to the memory of Madam De Mortie, he alludes to the elections in the North, and their influence upon bold, bad men at the South, and the peril in which they place our ministers and people, and concludes in these words: "But these things do not move me in the least. There can be no doubt as to the final issue. There may be trial and suffering still in store for us, as a people, but we shall succeed. I have just as much faith in the triumph of truth and right as I have in my God."

Brother Lynch is greatly desirous that some definite movement should be made looking toward a union with us of the A. M. E., and A. M. E. Zion Churches, and to this we say Amen! It must come sooner or later. Has not the time arrived for a special effort in that direction?

Mr. Eggleston, of the committee on commerce of the last congress, expects soon to have access to the information elicited by the survey ordered of the Louisville canal, with a view of determining the expense of enlarging, and the survey on the Indiana side, to obtain estimates for a new canal, and such measures as these reports seem to indicate as best will be prepared and urged by Mr. Eggleston at an early day.

Glass Eyes.

The following facts about the material and manufacture of artificial eyes, will be read with interest because new:

The manufacture of these eyes is done entirely by hand. A man sits down behind a jet of glass flame, which is pointed and directed as he wishes by a blow-pipe. He takes what is called an optic, or the white of the eye, which has been blown from the end of a glass tube, and looks very much like a half open white rose-bud, with a small hole at the top of it. This optic is made of a peculiar white enamel, which looks so near the color of the white of the human eye that it is difficult to tell the artificial from the natural. As Boissonneau says in his book, "The eye artificial is composed of enamel, and modeled in the lamp of the enameler." The optic is held and turned in the flame till it becomes red hot, the glass being almost in a state of fusion. At this point the iris is introduced into the opening in the end of the optic, being melted in from the end of a small stick of glass of the color of the eye which it is wished to imitate. If the eye is brown, brown glass is used; if blue, blue glass is used.

The pupil of the eye is always made with a drop of black glass imbedded in the center of the iris. The blood vessels seen in the white of the eye are easily put in with red glass while the optic is glowing with heat like a ball of gold. The whole eye can be made inside of an hour, and is at once ready to put in. The reader should know that it is simply a thin glass shell, which is intended to cover the stump of the blind eye. After being dipped in water, this shell is slipped in place, ing held by the eyelids. The secret of imparting motion to it depends upon working the glass eye to that it will fit the stump—if it is nio large it will not move; if it fits nicely it moves in every particular like the natural eye, and it is quite impossible, in many cases, to tell one from the other. The operation is not in the least painful, and those who have worn them a number of years feel better with them in than with them out. A glass eye should be taken out every night and put in in the morning. In three or four years the false eye becomes so worn that a new one has to be obtained. Some ladies who live at a distance from the manufactory, keep a box of glass eyes on hand in case of accident, for besides wearing out they will break under certain circumstances, as when

"Hate's last lightning quivers from his eyes."

It is said that no less than 7000 people in New York city wear these glass eyes, and that there are two or three eye factories there.

The Hope of Man.

Final success—the joy of life's ripe harvest—is the goal of our hopes. No wise or thoughtful man will live merely for to-day. The pilgrim who seeks a home is not content to linger and loiter for the mere flowers beside his way. The sower looks onward to fields white and ready for the sickle. Wisdom has regard to the grand issue. The triumph or pleasure of to-day is transitory. We want a hope that does not sink with the setting sun. The true success of life is that which does not fail the evening of our days, and leave them to blight or barrenness. We want that shout of "harvest home," that will not die into silence with the failing breath, but makes the passage to the grave a whispering gallery where heaven and earth talk together.

THE RECEPTION DECLINED.

By the following note from General Hancock to R. King Cutler it will be seen that the general declines the proposed honor of the reception prepared for him by the various self-constituted committees:

[Copy.]
VICKSBURG, Mississippi, November 26, 1867.

Hon. R. King Cutler, President of Committee:

SIR—Having observed by the New Orleans press that it is proposed by a committee of which you are president, under the direction of the "Executive State Central committee of the Union party of New Orleans," to receive me upon my arrival in your city I beg respectfully to decline the same. My tastes and intention will lead me to decline receptions of political parties, and, indeed, all others of a public character from whatever sources, save such as may relate to official matters connected with my administration of affairs in the fifth military district. Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
WINFIELD S. HANCOCK,
Major General U. S. A.

LOISETTE.

It was a divine May morning when I set out to walk to Summerfield, and I felt more hopeful of success than I had ever done before. I had determined that day should decide my fate. All through the winter and the early spring I had loved Loisette, and a hundred times I had longed and yearned to tell her so, and to ask her to be my wife, and each time something—I could hardly tell what—struck me silent.

She liked me I knew, but did she love me? Something in her eyes seemed to lead me to hope she did; such eyes they were, loving and tender, and shy. When I looked into their soft depths all the most delightful descriptions of eyes I had ever read used to come across me, "les portes de l'amour," "des bluets doux comme les yeux;" above all Calderon's tender refrain,

Sweetest eyes were ever seen,

When she looked at me with those eyes, then it seemed to me I might "tell her all that was in my heart," and take her to mine unforbidden. But the next moment, as if she guessed and half feared my thought, she turned away slyly, and her manner altered, and my heart shrank back in fear and sorrow.

But at last I felt I could endure this suspense no longer. I must know the best or the worst. If she were to be mine, such a home and such life as I have planned, and hoped, and dreamed of ever since I knew her, should be prepared; if she were not for me, then I should leave England, and break away from that and all other home ties, and try to bear it like a man somewhere away from all that should unman me.

But this Mayday, as I started forth and walked along briskly through the up and down lanes of the lovely Hertfordshire country, now shot in between banks tufted with ferns, overrun with the exquisite small-leaved ivy, crowned with lavish May; now emerging upon sweeps of hill and dips of valley, crossing commons ablaze with gorse, traversing woodland paths where bluebells spread their sheets of azure, and lingering primroses starred mossy banks. Heaven! how I remember it all. That Mayday hope seemed as strong and as full of spring and life and vigor as my own limbs. I strode on, thinking of the eyes that would look up their soft welcome to mine, and of the warm little hand that I should clasp, and perhaps then claim as mine—my very own—while life should last. It seemed to me that such feelings could not but be prophetic.

"If I find her in the garden," I thought, "I will look upon it as a good omen; I will not let the time go by; I will seize the opportunity and speak to her at once."

I got to the cottage and opened the garden gate. As I stepped in I saw her, a little way down the path, in her dainty morning gown and broad garden hat, filling the basket that hung on her arm with flowers, and softly singing to herself. I stopped on the lawn; I wanted to come upon her unawares, and test the effect of my sudden appearance, which I could not do if the sound of my foot on the gravel should betray my approach; thus I got close to her before she knew I was near. She started violently, and the color rushed to her cheek. The slightest thing would bring it—I have seen her flush at the sudden rising of a bird from the thicket. The next moment she smiled and held out her hand. "Oh, it is you! You startled me. I had no idea anybody was near," and the sweet eyes were raised to mine trustingly. "Won't you come in?"

"Not if I may stay out—unless you are tired?"

"Oh, no. I am never tired of being in the garden. So you'll help me to gather my flowers; see, you can reach up to those sprays of honeysuckle; get some of the best, he rosiest, for me."

"Ah, how delicious!" she said, inhaling the fragrance with deep ecstatic inspirations, and she held up to me the blossom that had just touched her face. I kissed the flower; I took the hand that held it, I told her all I had to tell her. She stood still, her head bent so that the hat hid her face from me, and I knew not in what spirit she listened till a sigh that was half a sob checked me.

She looked up with a face so full of pain, of pity, of perplexity, of deprecating appeal, that though the hope in my heart sank down I almost felt more for the sorrow in her face than for that in my own soul.

"Forgive me," she said. "I am so grieved. I ought to have told you. I did not know that you—that you cared for me that way. I have been engaged these two years. He is in India and coming back in August. Oh, you don't think I have been coquettish—that I have been knowingly leading you on to this—do you?" In her earnestness she laid her hand on mine, and lifted her face with a tremulous mouth and eyes brimful of tears.

If I had died for it I must have snatched the consolation the moment offered—the last, the only one. I drew her on my heart, holding her close, close; and I stilled the quivering of the lips with twenty kisses.

When I released her she turned her back to me, hid her face in her hands, and sobbed till her frame shook.

"Loisette, Loisette, forgive me! I could not help it! I swear I could not help it, Loisette."

She shook her head.

"Loisette, think how I love you; think what I feel in knowing all the hope I had of you is gone—gone forever! Loisette, I am going away, where I can never offend you more. Think that what I have done was in parting with you for the last time - a last farewell, Loisette."

She tried to speak, but sobs made her inarticulate; still I knew she was bitterly reproaching me.

"Yes; I have no right to expect forgiveness. I will go. I won't distress you further. But we have at least been friends, dear, and you can not think of that, and let me go forever, without one word."

Still she was silent. I paused and waited; then I flung up my arms as man does who has lost all; and with a great groan I turned to leave her. I heard her move, I heard her attempt to speak, and I looked back. Her face was still averted, still covered with one hand. But the other was held out to me, and springing back I took it reverently, and bent my lips upon it.

"God forever bless you, Loisette, the one and only woman in his earth for me!"

"And God bless and comfort you," she said. "I wish I could have been a better friend to you—I mean to be. Always be-

"I will, I do."

And so Loisette and I parted. The May morning was darkened as I passed through the garden gate again. I turned my steps I know not whither—away where no one could see me. That was the only wish or instinct I had.

I walked miles seeking rest and finding none. At last I stopped at the gate, and leaned my arms on it, and looked blindly over the wide landscape spread before me.

As I gazed a dull numbness fell on my sorrow, and my perceptions of outward objects slowly returned.

I watched some children gathering blossoms of the May, and thought what a pity it was they should tear the boughs down so and destroy so much to secure so little. I watched a stealthy cat creeping through the long undulations of the grass on the hunt for the poor little tender young rabbits. Up sprang a lark, bursting into ripples of song, and my eye followed him, rising, hovering, rising again, passing, balancing on the wing, soaring up once more, darting away obliquely, resting awhile, but always singing—singing as if he could not cease for his life—then dashing down like a stone and vanishing.

And then my grief seized me once more, and I dropped on the turf and hid my face in my arms, and cried as I had never cried since I was a boy, when my mother died, and when I thought the world held no more happiness.

When our great griefs fall on us we treat them as boys do bonfires. It seems that they can not burn fiercely enough; we heap on them everything that comes to our hand in the way of fuel; all the tenderest recollections, all the sweetest hopes, all the most blessed anticipations that made the joy and glory of our lives—that were as wings lifting us above the earth we trod on. All these are brought out from the storehouse of memory and thrown on the pile, making it blaze with inextinguishable fury, or what seems to us so, and we feel a bitter relish in the anguish, and seek to make it more, rather than less, as we stir the heap into fiercer conflagration.

Ah me! Ah me! what a miserable fool I had been, and how was I punished!

I had thought, when in my hopefulness that morning I had calculated the whole affair, that I had been prepared for this impossibility, and could bear it. But strangely, it had never entered into my calculations that if Loisette were not for me it could be that she was promised to another; there was the sting, the thing so impossible to endure without every fiber of my heart being torn by the agonies of jealousy, in addition to grief. Loisette engaged, Loisette with no love for me, all her love for another! Loisette thinking of him, calling him all those tender names that lips like hers seemed made to utter! And in August, in three months, he was coming back doubtless to claim his bride!

At that thought I sprang up as if a serpent had arisen from the green turf and stung me. I started away so far that it was not till dark that, utterly worn out and exhausted, I reached home. I shall never forget that night, nor the waking in the morning after a couple of hours dead sleep.

That day I wrote to my cousin, Sir Edward Haldane, who had just been appointed governor of New Brunswick, to offer myself as his private secretary—a post he had suggested my taking when his nomination to the place had first been talked of. The answer came; he would be delighted. In less than a fortnight I left England.

"I am so grieved," Mrs. Hamilton had written before this, "so grieved in every way." I had not been wrong, then, in fancying I had her good wishes. "I should have been so glad to have bidden you God speed by word of mouth before you went, but I feel I ought not to ask you to come. Any way, you have our best wishes, now and ever." Not a word from Loisette. Well, better so. What could she say.

I often look back now on my sojourn in that black, miserable, raw colony, ice-bound for half the year, sun-scorched for a few weeks, with something like a shudder.

The great cold staring barrack of a government house, with its flat, unshaded gardens; the unpicturesque village that was the seat of government, and prided itself accordingly; the country that was nothing but dense forest, bare clearing, studded with blackened stumps or quaking morass! The interminable winter, white, silent, fettered with a frost that was unrelenting as death, that chilled the blood and nipped the flesh into blains, and checked the current of life in the veins of childhood, of age, and of all tender beings!

Oh, the desolation of those winter forests! No tongue can tell it. No breeze no voice of bird, no rustle of leaf, no color a broad white floor, a hard blue room back, stiff iron trees standing up motionless and stark. All so like my life in deso lateness! only this nature felt no pain!

I wandered about among the lanes where we used to wander, hoping, dreading, longing, oh, how intensely! At last I came upon Loisette and her sister. I did not meet

I staid there till the sickly, tardy spring, often driven back by fresh snowballs, came to loosen the spell that winter had laid on them, but a turn of the road brought me in sight of them, walking slowly before me.

I hastened my steps; I must see her once more, must look into her eyes, must hear the tones of her voice, let the cost be what it would.

As I approached she turned with a start, a look half-expectant, half-alarmed; she felt who was coming, and the blood rushed over face and neck and brow. Mrs. Hamilton, following her sister's movements, was the first to speak; she came forward, both hands extended with joyous welcome; then Loisette greeted me with shy kindness, passed to the other side of her sister, and walked on silently, while Mrs. Hamilton questioned me as to my travels, my movements, my plans.

"You'll come and see us, you will promise? I know you are a man of your word, and that if you promise you will keep your word. Come and dine to-morrow, will you?"

I promised. I could not be more miserable than I was, and I must learn all I wanted to know. But I would not go to dinner. I remembered too well the last time I dined there, so I said I would go in the morning.

When I entered the drawing room what a rush of memories at sight of the familiar place—of the two women sitting by the fire as they had a year ago—all but I apparently unchanged.

in the circle as of old. I could not speak. Loisette was silent. Mrs. Hamilton talked for us all.

Presently she glanced at the clock on the mantlepiece. "Three already; you must excuse me, dear, I shall barely be in time to meet Mrs. L. at the station. You won't go, or I shall think you are offended. When shall we see you again? Settle it with Loisette. Good by. No, au revoir!" And she was gone, and Loisette and I were sitting side by side, silent.

Loisette was sitting, very pale and calm, looking into the fire.

"Loisette."

She gave an almost imperceptible start, her color rose slightly, and she turned her eyes on me for a moment—I could not tell whether in reproach or mere surprise—and then resumed her gaze on the fire.

"Miss Vane—are you still Miss Vane?"

"Yes."

"When—how long?" I could not find words in which to put the question.

"When am I going to be married? you would ask," she said, with a calm that was almost rigid. "I am not going to be married. I have been jilted."

"You jilted, Loisette!"

"Do you pity me? Don't. I am glad of it; glad, at least, to be free; glad that I have nothing to blame myself for in obtaining my freedom. Long before I gained it I felt we had made a mistake, and while I was thinking of how I might suggest the idea to—to him, he cut the knot by marrying a half-caste damsel with several lacs of rupees. Though what sort of a fortune that may be I have not the faintest conception." A faint gleam of the old, sweet archness came across her face.

I bent forward, looking with all my heart in my eyes on the soft, half-averted profile, watching the conscious blood rising slowly. I laid my head on the little, cold, rigidly clasped hands; I felt them relaxing; gently my arm wound itself round her waist; her head dropped on my shoulder, nestled there, and was still.

So we sat until the pony carriage stopped at the gate. Mrs. Hamilton came in in a somewhat domonstrative manner. She glanced at Loisette, then at me, and understood it all.

"So you bore my absence with what equanimity you might!" she said, lifting her bright face to mine with a world of congratulation in her eyes. "Now you'll stay to dinner."

Loisette turned and fled.

"God bless you, you dear woman!" I said. "I never expected to be so glad to get rid of you as I was an hour ago."

"And God bless you! It was you I wanted for a brother all along. I always hated the notion of Loisette marrying that man. Poor child, she did not know her own heart, and was pursuaded into accepting him. If she had listened to me she would have thrown him over long ago; but she was conscientious while she thought he loved her. Perhaps it's better as it is. I will tell you something. She knows there is no mistake this time."

MEN OF MARK IN THE CONVENTION.

Early last summer we predicted that the convention to assemble this fall would equal in talent any convention ever assembled before in this state. Our prediction is now realized. We have men who have already made their mark. On Monday the talent of the white portion of the convention was brought to bear upon several practical questions, and was discovered to be of no ordinary character. Yesterday the culture and talent of our colored delegates were also brought out upon subjects of much interest to the Republican party. The Hon. B. P. S. Pinchback proved himself a ready debater, quick, clear, and to the point in all he said, and fearless in the utterance of what he believes to be right. He is a natural orator, and is destined to attain a high position in his party, and reflect great credit upon the race which he so ably represents. Of the others who have distinguished themselves we shall speak from day to day, as our space will admit.

Regulating New Orleans.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, speaking of the condition of affairs in this city, and the expected arrival here of General Hancock, says:

He will find matters at New Orleans in a condition which will require tact and firmness to properly control. The rebel element is still in great strength, and will do its best to prevent the advantages of reconstruction from being experienced by the people of Louisiana. It is well that Hays has been got rid of. He was implicated in the dreadful massacre of 1866, and his men were most active among the barbarians who were triumphant in that scene of blood. He is undoubtedly an "impediment" in the way of reconstruction, and he ought to have been got rid of months ago. The New Orleans papers do not feel very favorable to the new officers, which may be considered a compliment to them. Praise from those sheets would authorize a belief that the new appointees had by some deference to the rebel element, rendered their loyalty doubtful. The abuse which they receive from the secesh organs is therefore an excellent certificate of merit.

FIRE NEAR PLAQUEMINE.—The South says:

The sugarhouse and the outbuildings attached to it on the "Plaisance plantation," now owned by V. A. Hebert, situated five miles below Plaquemine, were completely destroyed by fire during the day on Wednesday last. Although there is no cane on the plantation, and the sugarhouse latidle and in all probability would have remained so for some time to come, the loss is a heavy one. The building was one of the best and most substantially constructed in the parish. The mill was a very superior one, and the other portions of the machinery were quite good. We have not learned how the fire originated.

Dullness of trade prevails outside as well as in America. A letter from Glasgow, Scotland, says that although the price of cottcn is nearly as low as it was before the war there is no demand for goods, and the manufacturers are as badly off for orders and the operatives for work as they were in 1857. There is more starvation in Glasgow and its neighborhood just now than at will preach in the chapel of his Church to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock.

Our New Church.

Providence permitting, our new church will be ready for dedication on the eighth of December, on which occasion we expect Bishop Ames to officiate. It is possible that the Bishop may not arrive in time for December 8; in that event the dedication will occur on December 15. Due notice will be given to the public through the Advocate and the city press. On an occasion of so much importance, and one destined to be historical, we deem it eminently fitting that one of our bishops should be present.

Time of Conference.

Our preachers will take notice that the time of the annual session of our Conference is December 19, at 9 o'clock, in the Marais street M. E. Church. As the preachers come to town they will report in person to the Rev. Scott Chinn, the pastor of the church, who will assign them places to stop during the session of the conference.

Candidates for examination will meet in the Marais street Church on the 17th December, at 9 o'clock.

The Advocate for 1868.

We hope our brethren will thoroughly canvass their stations and circuits, for subscribers for the Advocate for 1868, before they leave for conference. Let each preacher bring a good report to conference. Call upon each member, and then present the subject to your congregations, and ascertain how many subscribers you can obtain for the year to come. Brethren, the church relies upon you in this matter; you are the authorized agents for the Advocate. You have worked nobly for the paper in the past, for which we return our warmest thanks, but we pray you to work a little harder for the future.

Official Printer.

The convention, by one majority elected J. B. Roudanez & Co. the official printer for the Constitutional Convention. In this we rejoice, as the Tribune has been faithful when many other journals were faithless, and has been a steady light amid the gloom. It well deserved this patronage.

We would respectfully suggest to the convention, that in view of the poverty of the State, only a synopsis of the speeches be printed. It is said that Judge Abel's speech in the convention of '64 cost the State $60,000 for printing them. The convention should study economy.

Rev. Bishop Ames

is to preside at our Conference. We rejoice in his coming, and his presence will greatly add not only to the interest of the occasion, but will be a joy to the whole church in the Southwest.

A young lady was recently presented with a solitaire diamond ring by her intended, which she refused to accept, saying "that she thought he knew she preferred a cluster, and she did not see any use in being

The Convention.

The State Constitutional Convention was permanently organized on Monday last, by the election of Judge Taliaferro for President. This of itself is sufficient to refute the slanders that the convention is composed of the "dregs of society;" for the men who had the discrimination to choose such a man to preside over their deliberations, have thereby evinced a fitness for their position worthy a place in any deliberative body. President Taliaferro is associate justice of our Supreme Court—a scholar of more than ordinary culture, and a gentleman of spotless reputation. He is specially acceptable to the Union men of this State, by his solemn and dignified protest against secession. This noble act of his life has endeared him to the hearts of all true patriots, and will halo his name with unfading lustre. His friends love to call him the "old Roman," but we are content to point to him as an American. His election will go far to prepare the public mind for the favorable reception of the acts of the Convention over which he has been called to preside.

Nor are we less favorably impressed with the general character of the whole convention. Some of the best legal minds in the State are members, while there is an average intelligence far exceeding that of the convention of '64. The colored members appear to good advantage. Not a few of them have a gentlemanly bearing, and participate in the debates intelligently and with fluency.

And now that the convention is organized, we earnestly suggest that all partisan plans be laid aside, and that the great work of framing a constitution for our State be engaged in with undivided attention. This is the paramount object for which the convention was called, and the people reasonably expect that the good end will be speedily attained. We are aware that many express the wish for a short session, in which we fully sympathize; yet "haste makes waste" sometimes. Still we urge commendable speed upon the members. This poverty-stricken State should not be burdened with a long session. Nor should the State itself remain much longer out of the Union. Congress stands ready to admit Louisiana reconstructed Within the past six months there has been a great change in this regard. We know there was a time not long ago, when some Republican Congressmen desired the delay of the non-reconstructed States till after the next presidential elections; but the late elections in the North have had a salutary effect, and were Louisiana ready, she would be readmitted tomorrow.

There are, therefore, two reasons why the convention should hold a short session—Economy and Restoration.

Mississippi Items.

The last quarterly meeting at Aberdeen showed an encouraging state of the church. The membership now numbers over 600. Five local preachers and a good corps of exhorters are working well in extending the work and establishing the people in the faith. They report many inviting fields, and many calls for help from the regions yet beyond our lines.

The interest of the schools at Aberdeen have not been maintained as they ought to have been. The people there, as well as elsewhere, seem inclined to split into little factions or parties, which are jealous of, and often opposed to each other.

Many of the people will not send their children, because they may have some little prejudice against the teacher. The result of all is, that schools are limited and all small.

At Columbus they had made a mistake concerning the time of the meeting, and were expecting it to be a week later, which prevented many of the country people from coming, as they would have done had they known the time. We held the quarterly conference on Wednesday following. The reports show a considerable increase in membership. One local preacher and several exhorters were licensed, and prospects for extension are very favorable. We now have about one thousand members in the counties of Monroe and Loundes; but if we had good preachers who were able to keep horses, and travel in the old circuit rider style, we might double the number in a few months.

At Macon we found them closing up the work in the church. They had it ready for service on Sunday, November 10. The congregation contributed $30 towards paying for some of the work which they had contracted for on their own account, and we dedicated the house to the worship of God. Our people at Macon are poor, and our work there was commenced under some difficulties; but they bought their lot, and have paid for the seats of their church, and report a membership of 140 in town, and about the same in the country, making 280 in all. Brother Jones, the pastor, has done a good work, and seems to have the confidence of all the people, both white and colored.

At Shugulah Station, in the south part of Noxubee county, Brother Adams, of Meridian, organized a church some weeks ago, of 120 members. They are endeavoring to buy an old church which the white people do nat now use.

The school house at Macon, belonging to the colored people, is about to be sold for a little debt due the carpenters who built it. Of this they should all be ashamed. It is due them, however, to state that the Methodist people were willing to pay their part of it, but the Baptists did not come up with them. It appears that they (the Baptists) were willing that it should be sold, and are expecting to buy it for a church.

At Meridian we found things all going along smoothly and pleasantly. Brother Adams is now living in the parsonage, which they have built this year. The house is worth about $300, and they are yet in debt on it about $60. The people had raised $110 for church purposes during the last quarter, and we had a missionary meeting, at which $7 50 was raised by collection, and they gave $7 for a special collection made at the quarterly meeting. There has been a considerable increase in the membership during the quarter. Brother Moore, one of our local preachers, is elected a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from that county. One of the exhorters at Macon is also a delegate elect.

Misses Jarvis and McClellen have remained at their posts as teachers all the summer, and have done a good work for the people at Meridian.

A special appropriation of $1000 was made to build a school house for the colored people at Meridian. The matter was entrusted to certain parties, who undertook to build a Baptist Church with this money. They had the building completed, but when they went for the money they learned that appropriations were not made to build churches. The builders locked up the house until they should get their pay, and so the matter stood when we left Meridian.

We regret to report that the educational interests of the freedmen are not in a very encouraging condition in Mississippi. Many of the teachers have not yet come from the North, having staid back on account of yellow fever and other sickness. The schools, so far as we know, are not as well attended as they were last year. This is in part owing to the fact that tuition is being charged this year, but we fear that there is a sort of apathy on the subject at this time. There is a prevailing disposition among colored people to relapse into indifference about things unless they are aroused by some outside force.

We have had an election. Whether it is over yet or not we are not formed. The result will probably be known some time the coming winter.

There has been considerable excitement, but so far we have heard of no violence. The rebel element has been greatly relieved by the result of Northern elections. We have heard some of them swear that they would have the victory yet. Those Southern men who voted for a convention have been denounced most bitterly, and all sorts of charges have been made against them in the press and otherwise. Some of the papers have published the names of such, and made every effort to excite prejudice and hatred against them. Northern men who have settled in the country have fared little better. The freedmen have been deceived and intimidated as far as it could be done.

There was a respectable party here who favored reconstruction for a time, but the extreme rebel element gained the ascendency, and drove them back into their ranks, and they have been very docile since If the reconstruction policy fails, as these fierce rebels hope it will, those who have favored it will have to make a very abject submission or leave the country. Many of them are looking to the latter alternative now. Many good men would leave the State now if they could sell their property.

Such a state of affairs must be disastrous. Business languishes, and the country is growing poorer every day. Once productive plantations are offered for sale at two or three dollars per acre, and no man will buy them. We would about as soon think of making a home on the slope of a volcano as in Mississippi.

An English View of Ameerican Churches.

The Rev. Newman Hall, of London, who recently visited this country, is on his way home. He was at Toronto the other day, and at a meeting held to welcome him, made an address. In the course of his remarks, he said: "I have been asked to state what I have seen in the United States in reference to church matters. I cannot say much, for instead of observing, I have been obliged to talk. There is one thing, however, that came under my observation, which I don't like at all—that is the practice of a choir performing fine music in the gallery, and the congregation sitting quietly without taking any part in it, and in some cases the words are in an unknown tongue. In our Congregationalist Churches at home, they all sing, and the roar of the voices drown both choir and the organ. To me there is no music so grand as the united voices of a vast assemblage praising and worshiping God. I observed also in the States, a tendency to classify worshipers in the House of God. I have preached in some beautiful churches, with handsome carpets and luxuriant pews, fit even for a duchess, and I have asked the question, "Where do the poor people go? Where do they sit?" They answered that mission churches were provided for them. Such congregations of great respectability and intelligence pay large sums for their pews, and also for those mission churches for the poor. There the poor man cannot go; but I like to see the rich and poor meet together for worship, for God is the maker of them all. A similar tendency exists in London, but proceeds from a different cause—what I might call the geographical difficulty. London has a population of about four millions of people; its length is reckoned at eighteen miles, and its breadth twelve miles; and the upper classes, down even to the small shop keeper—all who can afford it—go to the suburbs, while the poor working peple live by themselves by thousands in the great center. The poor are, therefore, found in the center, and rich in the suburbs, and both are injured. The poor would be greatly benefited by the intelligence and wealth of the rich, and they, in turn, be improved by the practice of charity. I don't know how we can help this state of affairs, except by making a mission every Sunday to send ministers to the poor. But in cities where there is not a necessity, I hope you will guard against the fine churches for the rich, and the mean church for the poor; so that, now and then, we may set aside the social distinctions which put us in different positions, and come altogether into the presence of one God and Father. In regard to Young Men's Christian Associations, what I have seen of them, both in this and the neighboring country, their comforts, conveniences and means, so well adapted to the ends in view, renders me diffident in speaking of similar institutions in the old country."

The New Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake City.

The Salt Lake Daily Telegraph says the new Mormon Tabernacle, about which so much has been said, is nearly finished. It has already been used for a meeting of the Mormon Conference. The form of the Tabernacle was suggested by Brigham Young; whether he was guided by a "revelation," we are not told. The builder thinks "any person who has not seen the building, can have a very good idea of the roof, by imagining the back or shell of a common Eastern ground turtle, of huge proportions; but it is more frequently likened to the hull of an old fashioned ship, without any keel, and turned topsy-turvy." This roof is supported by forty-four piers of cut sand stone, each nine feet by three. Nine of these piers stand in a straight line on each side of the building, and from them springs an arch of forty-eight feet. Thirteen piers stand in a circle at each end of the building, from which spring an equal number of arches. Between these piers are windows, containing altogether twenty-five thousand panes of glass, and doors. Of the latter, fourteen are for the populace, one for the president—Young—one for the choir, and others for the bishops and priesthood.

The interior of the building is thus deseribed: "The stand for the speakers is at the west end of the building, and covers seventy-five hundred feet of surface.

"The front of the stand is a segment of a circle. Before it are a seat and desk for the bishops and others who administer the sacrament. That first seat in the centre of the stand or platform is for the Presidency of the Stake, the next for the Quorum of the Twelve, the third for the First Presidency. Back of these are seats for above 150 singers, with the great organ, yet unfinished, behind them. On the right and left are seats for from eight hundred to one thousand persons.

POWERS OF DISTRICT COMMANDERS UNDER THE RECONSTRUCTION LAWS.

We are induced to enter upon the discussion of this question on account of the action of the commanding gexeral on the late removals he has made of persons holding office in Louisiana.

Sections two and three of the original reconstruction act read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the president to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the army not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties, and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace, and criminals; and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of, and to try offenders; or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of state authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

It will be readily perceived, by a bare inspection of the above sections of the law, that it is made the duty of the commanding general to protect all persons within the limits of his command in their rights of person and property, to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the peace, and all criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and try offenders when in his judgment it may be necessary, or he may organize military tribunals for that purpose. Here, then, is a distinct enumeration of his powers and duties. Discretion as to the mode and measure of the exercise of these great powers is vested in and left by the law to the wisdom and sound judgment of the commander himself.

Whatever is necessary to enforce order and enable him to carry into effect the laws is implied in the direct authority given him. It would seem clear, then, from these two sections of the law alone, that the commanding general is authorized to abrogate or abolish any and all organizations of pretended governments which he may find opposing him in carrying into execution the laws of Congress on this subject. He can either abrogate or abolish the existing government itself, or can remove from office and appoint another in place of the one deposed. Being supreme over all existing governments and organizations, he can deal with them in any manner that he deems proper and expedient.

Under the authority given to the commanders, the governor, attorney general, a judge of one of the district courts, and many others were removed from office in Louisiana, and others were appointed in their places.

Shortly after the exercise of this power by the commander of the fifth military district the congress of the United States again convened, and in the month of July, 1867, a supplemental act was passed, section one of which reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That it is hereby declared to have been the true intent and meaning of the act of the second day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, entitled, "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states," and of the act supplementary thereto, passed on the twenty-third day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, that the governments then existing in the rebel states of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas were not legal state governments, and that thereafter said governments, if continued, were to be continued subject in all respects to the military commanders of the respective districts, and to the paramount authority of congress.

This section declares that the existing state governments in the ten rebel states, if conntinued, were subject to the military commanders, either to retain or abolish.

Section two of the same act says:

Be it further enacted, That the commander of any district named in said act shall have power, subject to the disapproval of the general of the army of the United States, and to have effect till disapproved, whenever in the opinion of such commander the proper administration of said act shall require it, to suspend or remove from office, or from the performance of official duties and the exercise of official powers, any officer or person holding or exercising, or professing to hold or exercise, any civil or military office or duty in such district under any power, election, appointment, or authority derived from, or granted by, or claimed under, any so-called state or the government thereof, or any municipal or other division thereof, and upon such suspension or removal such commander, subject to the disapproval of the general as aforesaid, shall have power to provide from time to time for the performance of the said duties of such officer or person so suspended or removed, by the detail of some competent officer or soldier of the army, or by the appointment of some other person to perform the same, and to fill vacancies occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise.

The first paragraph of this section states that the commander of any district named in said act shall have power subject to the disapproval of the general of the army of the United States; and such orders as he may issue are to have effect until disapproved, whenever in his judgment the proper administration of said act may require it, to suspend or remove from office any person holding or exercising official position.

The law speaks of suspension and removal; and it becomes important in this connection to ascertain the distinction between suspension and removal. If a party is simply suspended, during that suspension he is incapacitated for exercising the functions of his office; and whenever the order revoking the suspension is promulgated he can again resume his duties. But the case is quite different when a person is removed from office. The moment he is removed he is out of office, and has no official status whatsoever. He can by no rational interpretation of the law again assume to exercise the duties of the office from which he has been removed without an order or commission appointing him anew.

What, then, is the status of the officers lately removed by General Mower? It appears that the commanding general of the United States armies has not disapproved of the removals made, but has simply suspended the order. The law says that the order removing shall have full force and effect until disapproved by the commanding general of the United States army. During the suspension of these orders making removals and appointments, the offices themselves are vacant. The incumbents being removed, and the appointees being without power or right to act, this is the logical result from which there is no escape: Should any officer, after he has been removed from office, assume to act, he does it at his peril, and is liable to all the pains and penalties which the law authorizes the commander to inflict on all persons opposing its faithful execution. The persons appointed in the place of those removed can not exercise the duties of their offices, because they are suspended by the order of the commander of the United States army. In this dilemma, if it is important or necessary to the faithful execution of the reconstruction laws that these offices should be filled, the commander of the district is authorized to detail competent officers or soldiers from the army to perform the duties, until the suspension is revoked.

This is the only recourse left. No power save and except that of the commander of the United States army can interfere. He has in this case only suspended; he has not disapproved. This suspension can not be construed to favor only the outgoing parties. It operates alike on the persons removed and the persons appointed. Neither can act without laying themselves liable to the pains and penalties of the law.

Let us suppose that the suspension is removed. Would the old incumbent continue in his place? Everybody would at once say no. Suppose again that the party removed had vacated his position, and the party appointed had qualified, and taken charge before the suspension, does the order of suspension put the party removed back into office? We answer no, because he has been removed, and must be reappointed before he can enjoy the luxury of holding office again.

Explosion of a Steamboat.

THE IDAHO BURSTS HER BOILER.

One Man Killed and Six Badly Injured.

About one o'clock Tuesday afternoon, as the Ouachita packet Idaho, lying at the foot of Customhouse street, was firing up preparatory to starting out on her up-river trip, on account, it is alleged, of overheating her boiler, it exploded with a deafening report, which was heard all over the city. The boiler was thrown high in the air, and fell upon the deck. The passenger and hurricane decks were riven to splinters, and the whole portion of the boat forward of the cabin door was left in ruins clear to the hull. The smokestacks were bent and twisted like ribbons; one was left suspended over the starboard bow, and the other over the front of the boat. A painter named Charles Wilson, who was at work on the upper deck at the time, was thrown several feet in the air, and was badly scalded and bruised.

Mr. Stapleton, the captain of the boat, was also badly scalded, so that his life is considered in danger. Both of these men were taken to their homes in Algiers. Six men were reported injured by the scalding water. Two of them were blown into the water and picked up by a boat. Two of the injured men were white and four were colored men. All of those not taken to their homes were carried immediately to the Charity hospital. One colored man was crushed to death beneath the debris of the explosion.

Other steamers were lying alongside of the Idaho at the time of the explosion, but were uninjured.

Captains Whitmore and Flanders, steamboat inspectors, are investigating the cause of the disaster, and their report will be made known to day.

Plantation Sales.—The Plaquemines South says: Captain Jumel sold on Monday last one-half of the plantation of Toffiez & Landry, situated on the river about four miles below this place, to P. O. Daigre, for $4800.

On Tuesday sold to C. W. Ross, of Bayou Goula, the one undivided half of the house and lot, in that village, belonging to J. Guy Hebert, and estate of L. Therdore Hebert, for $650. Also the one-twelfth of the plantation of Breaux & Hebert, situated at "Richland," some seven or eight miles from Bayou Goula, and comprising 469 acres, sugar mill, steam engine, dwelling, and other outbuildings, to Arvillien Breaux, for $40; and the one-third of 68 acres of swamp land to same party for $5. Cheap enough, surely. A lot of movable property was sold at the same time for prices corresponding with the above.

The property of the estate of William P. Bradburn, in this place, was not sold on Monday last—no one bidding.

The sorghum crop of 1867 is said to be a failure, when compared with the yield of former years. From most of the cane-growing regions of the West the reports upon the condition of the crop are gloomy. Excepting a few favored localities, heavy rains have prevented the canes from maturing in season to escape the frost.

Revivals.

At Sixth street Church, Rev. A. C. McDonald, preacher, in charge, a goodly number have been converted, and the altar is nightly crowded with penitents. Good reports reach us from all parts of the conference, giving evidence that the Lord is working with his servants in saving the people.

Constitutional Convention.

Second Day—Monday, November 25.

The convention was called to order promptly at eleven o'clock by Hon. Robert G. Gardner, of Jefferson, the president pro tem.

The roll was called by the secretary pro tem, and eighty-five members answered to their names.

The president then called upon the Rev. Bishop Campbell, who addressed the throne of grace, invoking divine sustenance and guidance in the responsible labors which this convention of the people is called upon to perform.

The minutes of the session of Saturday were read by the secretary and adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe, of Orleans, moved that Rev. Messrs. Newman, Turner, and Campbell, and ex-Governor Wells be invited to take seats on the platform. Adopted.

Mr. Masicot, of Orleans, moved that the morning papers be distributed among the members of the convention. Adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe, of Orleans, presented the following:

Resolved, That all subordinate officers and employes of this convention be drawn equally from both races.

Judge Crawford, of Ouachita, opposed the adoption of the resolution on the ground that all men should be selected for their merits, and not for the color of their skin.

Mr. Deslonde, of St. John, moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. Wilson, of Orleans, called for th yeas and nays. One-fifth voting therefor the ayes and noes were ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was adopted by a vote of 47 yeas to 38 nays.

Mr. Smith, of Orleans, moved to proceed to ballot for permanent president of the convention.

Mr. Cromwell, of Orleans, moved that the following named officers be elected by ballot: President, secretary, sergeant-at-arms, and doorkeeper.

Mr. Cooley, of Pointe Coupee, moved to amend by electing a president viva voce.

Mr. Jones, of Orleans, moved to lay the amendment on the table. Adopted.

Mr. Smith's motion was then adopted.

Nominations for president of the convention were then declared in order.

Mr. Bertonneau, of Orleans, nominated Rufus Waples, of Orleans.

Mr. Dupart, of St. Tammany, nominated W. R. Crane, of Orleans.

Mr. Jones, of Orleans, nominated Charles Smith, of Orleans.

Mr. Smith, of Orleans, nominated Judge J. G. Taliaferro, of Catahoula.

Mr. Snaer, of St. Martin, nominated Simeon Belden, of Orleans.

Mr. Smith, of Orleans, declined in favor of Hon. J. G. Taliaferro, of Catahoula.

Messrs. Cooley, of Pointe Coupee, Ingraham, of Caddo, and Mushaway, of Orleans, were appointed tellers.

The ballot exhibited the following result:

Whole number of votes cast	88
Necessary for a choice	45
J. G. Taliaferro, of Catahoula, had	39
W. R. Crane, of Orleans, had	20
Rufus Waples, of Orleans, had	18
Simeon Belden, of Orleans, had	10
Charles Smith, of Orleans, had	1

The first ballot not resulting in an election.

Mr. Newsham, of Feliciana, moved to drop all but the three candidates having the highest number of votes. Carried.

Mr. Snaer withdrew the name of Simeon Belden.

A second ballot was proceeded with, but the tellers failed to report unanimously upon the result. Mr. Mushaway reported ninety votes cast. One more was counted than there were members present in the convention. Mr. Cooley, representing his other associate, Mr. Ingraham, accounted for the discrepancy by stating that the ballots had been once counted previous to this announcement, and that there were then eighty-nine votes; that while reading the ballots another ballot in favor of Mr. Waples had been accidentally added.

The report of the majority of the tellers was as follows:

Whole number of votes cast	89
Necessary for a choice	45
J. G. Taliaferro, of Catahoula, had	45
W. R. Crane, of Orleans, had	29
Rufus Waples, of Orleans, had	14
R. G. Gardiner, of Jefferson, had	1

Mr. Newsham, of Feliciana, moved to declare Hon. J. G. Taliaferro unanimously elected president of the convention.

Mr. Smith, of Orleans, moved that a new ballot be proceeded with.

General McMillan, of Carroll, moved that Hon. J. G. Taliaferro be declared elected president of the convention.

All motions were ruled out of order except that to proceed with a new ballot, which was put by the chair and declared adopted.

Mr. Bertonneau, of Orleans, withdrew the name of Rufus Waples as a candidate for president of the convention.

The third ballot was had with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast	89
Necessary for choice	45
J. G. Taliaferro had	51
W. R. Crane had	38

Mr. Wickliffe, of Orleans, moved that the Hon. J. G. Taliaferro be declared unanimously elected president of the convention. Carried unanimously.

Mr. Pinchback, of Orleans, moved that a committee of three be appointed to escort the president elect to the chair. Carried.

The chair appointed Messrs. Pinchback, Wickliffe, and Waples, all of Orleans.

The venerable Judge Taliaferro was then waited upon to the president's desk, and was introduced by Mr. Wickliffe to the president pro tem., and by him presented to the convention. He was received by the body with deafening cheers, and the old gray-haired Union hero of the secession convention—the one wise man in an age of madmen—bowed his modest acknowledgments to the men who had conferred upon him this honor.

The president elect briefly addressed the convention as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—In thanking you for the honor conferred upon me I must at the same time declare, in all candor, that it is with diffidence I assume the position which your partialities have assigned to me. It is true that I am not without some experience in the proceedings of deliberative bodies, yet I can make no pretension to that thorough knowledge of the rules of debate which the duties of a presiding officer naturally imply. Questions of exceeding difficulty and delicacy often devolve upon that officer for decision, and it is important that he should be more conversant than I am with parliamentary rules and usages in order to a proper solution of such questions. In all cases then of difficulty I must rely, gentlemen, upon your aid and support.

Gentlemen—You are called to the discharge of grave and responsible duties. The late terrible civil commotion through which we have passed has destroyed the legal state governments of those states engaged in rebellion against the national authority. That authority has pronounced the existing political organizations of those states provisional only, and has provided for the re-establishment of legitimate state governments. Under the provisions so made you have assembled to establish a constitution for Louisiana. Ordinarily, heretofore, the establishing or remodeling the constitution of a state involved no material difficulties, and required no extraordinary effort. But our former political aspect has undergone an essential change. New conditions have arisen. New principles and new elements enter into the work of reconstruction. With these it is your province to deal with the maturest deliberation. The work of destroying is infinitely easier than the work of restoring. One madman was able to destroy the great temple of Ephesus. The labor, the judgment, and the skill of many sane men would have been required to reinstate the noble edifice. I trust that in the end of your deliberations you will be able to present an organic law for Louisiana which will meet the wants of her people, and conform to the advancing state of civilization. Discordant views and opinions, if unhappily any should arise, your dispassionate consideration will adjust with reference to equal justice to all, and to the lasting welfare of the country.

Mr. Cooley, of Pointe Coupee, presented the following:

Resolved, That a committee of seven members be appointed by the chair to recommend to the convention suitable persons to occupy the places of secretary, assistant secretary, sergeant-at-arms, doorkeeper, and postmaster; and that said committee be instructed to report to-morrow at the opening of the meeting of this body.

Mr. Rodriguez, of Orleans, moved to lay the resolution on the table. Carried.

Mr. Pinchback, of Orleans, moved to proceed to the election of secretary of the convention by ballot. Carried.

Nominations were declared in order, and Mr. Belden, of Orleans, nominated William Vigers.

Mr. Bonsiegneur, of Orleans, nominated Hugh J. Campbell.

Messrs. Belden and Smith, of Orleans, and Vidal, of St. Landry, were appointed tellers.

The result of the ballot was proclaimed as follows:

Whole number of votes	89
Necessary for a choice	45
William Vigers had	54
H. J. Campbell had	31

Mr. Vigers was declared elected.

Mr. Wilson, of Orleans, moved to proceed to the election of sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. Newsham, of Feliciana, moved to adjourn.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by adding "till five o'clock this evening."

The motion was withdrawn to permit Mr. McMillan, of Carroll, to introduce the following:

Resolved, That a committee of thirteen members be appointed by the chair to prepare rules and regulations for the government of the convention, and the number, character, and duties of the various committees necessary for preparing a constitution.

Adopted.

Mr. Newsham, of Feliciana, renewed his motion to adjourn, which was lost.

Mr. Wilson moved to proceed to an election of sergeant-at-arms by ballot. Carried.

Nominations were declared in order, and the following names were submitted:

Edgard Davis, J. M. Davis, L. Berthel, C. C. Morgan, N. Villere, L. P. J. Capla, Charles Grandpre, and D. W. Shaw.

Messrs. Wilson, Jones, and Wickliffe, of Orleans, were appointed tellers.

Mr. Bertonneau, of Orleans, moved that a plurality of votes should determine the election. Carried.

The result was as follows:

L. Berthel received	26
J. M. Davis received	25
Edgard Davis received	14
D. W. Shaw received	7
E. M. Shaw received	7
N. Villere received	3
C. C. Morgan received	2
Charles Grandpre received	2
Charles E. Merrill received	1

On motion of Mr. Blondin, of Orleans, the convention at a quarter before 4 o'clock adjourned till 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

Third Day—Tuesday, November 26.

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock, President Taliaferro in the chair.

The roll was called and sixty-nine members answered to their names. This number constituting a quorum, the convention proceeded to business.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the secretary, amended, and adopted.

The president presented to the convention a letter from Judge H. C. Warmoth, transmitting a copy of a volume containing the constitutions of all the states. The letter was ordered to be read, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, La., November 26, 1867.

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention of Louisiana:

GENTLEMEN—I have the honor, in the name of Hon. T. L. Tullock, secretary of the Union congressional committee, to present herewith for the use of the convention a copy of the "New York Constitutional Manual," containing a copy of the constitutions of all the states in the Union.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. C. WARMOTH.

Mr. Jones moved that the thanks of the convention be returned therefor. Adopted.

Mr. Cooley moved to extend an invitation, with the privilege of the floor, to Hon. B. L. Lynch, Dr M. A. Southworth, Judge H. C. Warmoth, and Hon. J. K. Belden.

Mr. Smith moved to amend by adding the members of the convention of 1864.

Mr. Bertonnean moved to lay the amendment on the table on the ground that as a colored citizen of Louisiana the convention of 1864 had done nothing for his race.

Mr. Smith championed the convention.

Mr. Rodriguez opposed the motion of Mr. Smith on the ground that one-half of those members of the convention of 1864 who assembled in this hall in July were opposed to the rights of colored men.

The motion to lay on the table was carried.

Mr. Newsham moved to amend by adding an invitation to the members of the public press of New Orleans within the bar.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by inviting the guests of the convention to take seats on the platform, on the ground that the platform was the place of honor, and that if admitted within the bar they will exercise the opportunity of lobbying with the members of the convention. He insisted that the members of the convention should do their work without outside influence.

Mr. Wickliffe's motion to amend was lost.

Mr. Crawford moved to amend by inviting members of the press of the United States. Adopted.

The motion was then adopted as amended.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to instruct the sergeant-at-arms to invite the guests of the convention within the bar.

Mr. Ingraham submitted the following:

Resolved, That the state librarian be requested to furnish each member of this convention with a copy of revised statutes of the state of Louisiana from 1812 to 1856, also copies of all acts of the legislature from 1856 to 1867—it being understood that all books so furnished shall be returned to the state library when this convention shall adjourn sine die.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by inserting revised statutes of 1855-6.

The amendment was adopted, and the resolution adopted as amended.

Mr. Isabelle (R. H.) called the attention of the convention to the fact that the worship of God had been neglected this morning, and moved that the convention be opened each morning with prayer.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that a committee of three be appointed to invite the clergy of the city, who are willing to do so, to officiate as chaplains of the convention, and that the committee report their names to the convention.

A motion to lay on the table was lost.

Mr. Wickliffe's motion was adopted.

The president announced the committee to draft rules for the government of the convention, as provided for by the resolution of Monday, as follows:

Messrs. W. L. McMillan, chairman; T. S. Crawford, J. H. Ingraham, W. H. Cooley, J. P. Newsham, P. B. S. Pinchback, J. J. Ludeling, M. Vidal, R. J. Cromwell, R. Waples, George Y. Kelso, R. G. Gardiner, and J. H. Landers.

Mr. Reagan moved to adopt the rules and regulations of the constitutional convention of 1864 until such time as the committee reported.

Mr. Cooley moved to amend by substituting the rules and regulations of the house of representatives of the United States congress. Adopted.

The motion was adopted as amended.

Mr. Tinchant moved that each member of the convention be provided with a copy of the reconstruction acts of congress.

Mr. Smith moved to lay on the table. Adopted.

Mr. Jones moved to instruct the sergeant-at-arms to call upon the secretary of the Republican executive committee for the document in question. Adopted.

Mr. Cooley moved to postpone the election of officers of the convention, except a doorkeeper, until the committee of thirteen had submitted their report. Adopted.

Mr. Newsham introduced a resolution approving of the action of Major General Mower in the removals he had made of public officers, but subsequently withdrew the same to permit the convention to proceed with its organization.

Mr. Pinchback moved to proceed with an election of doorkeeper, and that a plurality of votes should elect. Adopted.

Nominations were declared in order, and the following parties were placed in nomination:

Wm. Mulford, M. Raymond, J. Hurst, Alfred Monroe, J. A. Deslonde, J. J. Burgess, J. T. Deslonde, J. B. Jourdain, J. M. Vance, P. K. O'Connor, D. W. Shaw, J. B. Lewis, Josiah Doyle.

Messrs. Pinchback, Snaer, and Vandegriff were appointed tellers.

The ballot was announced as follows:

Alfred Monroe had	18
William Mulford had	17
J. M. Vance had	13
J. A. Deslonde had	12
Josh. Doyle had	9
J. B. Jourdain had	8
P. K. O'Connor had	2
D. W. Shaw had	2
M. Raymond had	1
J. J. Burgess had	1
T. T. Hill had	1

Mr. Alfred Monroe was declared elected doorkeeper.

Mr. Smith moved that the judges of the supreme and district courts, ex-members of congress, and ex-Governor Hahn be invited to seats within the bar of the convention. Carried.

Mr. Reagan moved to proceed with the election of postmaster. Lost.

Mr. Belden moved that the sergeant-at-arms be authorized to appoint two assistants, to remain as such during the will of the convention.

R. H. Isabelle opposed the adoption of the resolution on the ground that it violated the thirteenth and fourteenth articles of the Radical Republican platform. The convention had elected one white officer already, and three colored officers. He wanted to receive what was due his own race, and would demand the same for the white race.

The motion of Mr. Belden was laid on the table.

Mr. Bertonneau moved to proceed with the election of official printer of the convention.

Mr. Newsham moved to lay the motion on the table. Lost—38 yeas to 49 nays.

Mr. Bonseigneur moved to vote by viva voce on the election of public printer.

Mr. Reagan moved to lay upon the table the motion of Mr. Bonseigneur.

Mr. Crane demanded a vote viva voce so that the people would know how their representatives had voted.

Mr. Reagan replied resenting any imputation upon his loyalty or his motives, but declared that a vote by ballot was customary, ordinary, regular, and convenient.

Mr. Bertonneau called for the yeas and nays.

The motion to lay on the table was carried by a vote of 51 yeas against 35 nays.

Mr. Belden moved to proceed to the election of an official printer by ballot.

Mr. Wilson moved to adjourn till five o'clock this evening. Lost.

Mr. R. H. Isabelle moved to have a recess of fifteen minutes.

Mr. Pinchback moved to table Mr. Isabelle's motion. Carried.

The motion of Mr. Belden was then taken up, and adopted.

Nominations were declared in order.

Mr. Vandegriff, of St. Martin, nominated S. L. Brown & Co. of the New Orleans REPUBLICAN.

Mr. ——— nominated J. B. Roudanez & Co., of the New Orleans Tribune.

The nominations were closed.

Mr. Waples desired to address the convention on the relative merits of the two candidates.

He was decided out of order by the chair.

Mr. Wickliffe appealed from the decision of the chair.

The chair was sustained by a vote of 47 yeas to 38 nays.

Messrs. Pinchback, Moses, and Newsham were appointed tellers.

The ballot resulted in the election of Messrs. J. B. Roudanez & Co., by the following ballot:

Whole number of votes cast	91
Necessary for a choice	46
S. L. Brown & Co. had	45
J. B. Roudanez & Co. had	46

On motion of Mr. Mushaway the convention, at ten minutes past two o'clock, adjourned until Wednesday morning at ten o'clock.

Fourth Day—Wednesday, November 27.

The convention was called to order at ten o'clock by President Taliaferro.

The roll was called, and sixty-nine members answered to their names.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe,

The Rev. T. W. Conway was invited to open the proceedings of the day with prayer. Carried.

At the conclusion of the prayer, the minutes of the previous day were read and approved.

Mr. Ludeling, of the committee of thirteen, asked leave for the committee to retire from the convention in order to complete their report. The committee were allowed to withdraw, whereupon

Mr. Wickliffe, thinking the present circumstances of the Radical Republican party demanded such action, submitted the following preamble and resolutions, denouncing an editorial recently published in the REPUBLICAN:

WHEREAS, The enemies of the Radical Republican party in Louisiana have succeeded but too well in inflaming the prejudices of the white race against the colored people of our state, and against all true Radical Republicans on account of their connection with their party; and whereas, it is the true policy of the Radical Republican party, and their real honest desire, to dissipate the unfounded prejudice by a course of strict justice and honor, and by using every endeavor to preserve peace and good order; therefore,

Resolved, That the delegates to this convention, as the direct and legal representatives of the Radical Republican party, and the true friends of the colored race, do hereby utterly repudiate all desires for class legislation, and all desire to Africanize the state of Louisiana, and that we do not as a people or party desire or meditate, nor will we countenance bloodshed or revenge.

Resolved, That all we claim is equality before the law for all men without distinction of race or color, or previous condition; and that we shall endeavor to secure this great desideratum of all just men, and to inaugurate a system of government that will secure the great political, civil, social, and industrial welfare of the whole people of Louisiana; therefore,

Resolved, That we deprecate the sentiments expressed in the leading article of the REPUBLICAN newspaper of this city in its issue of November 23, 1867, and denounce the said article as incendiary, uncalled for, and dangerous to the best interests of our party, and declare that the said paper in said article does not represent the sentiments, wishes, or purposes of the Radical Republican party of Louisiana, or of the colored race.

Resolved, That while we do not expect aught else from rebel sheets but misrepresentations and falsehood and calumny, and are fully aware that the sentiments uttered by those despicable hireling sheets are not entertained by the honorable portion of the Southern people, we must solemnly protest against all such unauthorized and dangerous sentiments, on the part of those supposed to be the organs of this party, and to express its sentiments, views, and purposes.

Mr. Isabelle seconded the resolution.

Mr. Wickliffe supported his motion in a fiery speech, in which he denounced the paper as endeavoring to stir up war between the two races.

Mr. Reagan denounced the preamble and resolutions of Mr. Wickliffe, on the ground that this was not, as the preamble implied, a Radical Republican meeting. It was a convention of the people of the state, and they were not here to sit in judgment on any newspaper. He characterized the matter brought into the convention by Mr. Wickliffe as a firebrand, and as conceived in poor taste and worse spirit.

Mr. Bertonneau defended the Grand Army of the Republic from aspersions thrown upon that generous and charitable organization of ex-soldiers of the army, who are banded together for mutual relief and assistance in sickness and distress.

Mr. Crane objected to laying the motion on the table. He thought such motions calculated to interfere with the freedom of speech. He favored the resolution.

Mr. Bonsigneur thought the article in the REPUBLICAN a calumny on his race. He declared that the paper had said nothing about the convention up to the day of the meeting thereof, and the article was published at that time for purposes of mischief.

Mr. Blackburn said he came here as a man who had always been loyal to the flag of the Union. He represented a large constituency, many of them colored men, who could take care of their own interests. They were incorruptible in their loyalty and in their ballot. He declared that the REPUBLICAN newspaper was regarded as the great palladium of loyalty throughout the state. He would not disparage the Tribune and Advocate, but they were comparatively unknown in the interior. He denounced the rebel press of the state as conspiring to create a war of races between black and white. He knew this was not the purpose of the REPUBLICAN newspaper. He thought that as the charge was made mainly against a secret organization, it was their business, not that of the convention, to deny it. The convention was not here as radicals, or as Union Republicans, but as representatives of the loyal people of Louisiana. He had seen too much effort exhibited already to array blacks against whites, and the city against the country.

Mr. Wickliffe interrupted the speech, accusing him of personality, and called for the reading of an article published in the New Orleans Times a few days since, entitled "An Appeal to the President"—an article which never appeared in the columns of the REPUBLICAN.

Mr. Blackburn resumed, criticising the New Orleans Tribune as giving its influence in favor of distinctions between the races, and of the two, the REPUBLICAN newspaper seems to be the mildest and most conservative.

It is not necessary to indorse everything that appears in the columns of the REPUBLICAN; but to pass these resolutions, and repudiate the REPUBLICAN would, he feared, be a death blow to the Republican party in Louisiana.

Mr. Lynch was ashamed that the convention was wasting its time in the discussion of such a question us this. We are not here, he said, to legislate for individual men or particular newspapers, but for the welfare and safety of the state and the people whom we represent.

The resolution was then read.

Mr. Reagan declared he had as much right to inquire into the past record of any member of the convention as to bring in question the sentiments of any newspaper—a test which certain members on the floor could ill afford to bear.

Mr. Pinchback denounced the resolutions as a piece of machinery. They are plausible, and calculated to deceive and mislead. It seemed to him as a dose of bitter medicine sugar-coated. He had always despised this underhanded way of accomplishing an object. He trusted this convention would meet the issue openly, and give these resolutions a disposal which would prevent such efforts hereafter. He moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. Wickliffe claimed the floor, and was called to order by the chair; but the repeated calls of the chair and of the members were necessary to bring the member to his seat.

The motion was carried to lay on the table by a vote of 46 to 31.

Mr. Deslonde presented the following:

Resolved, That General J. A. Mower and staff be respectfully invited to visit the convention, and that a committee of five be appointed to wait upon the general, and inform him of this action of the convention.

Mr. Wickliffe presented the following:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to procure a copy of the rules of order of the house of representatives, and that the printer be instructed to furnish one hundred copies for the use of the convention.

A motion to lay on the table was lost.

A motion to refer to the committee thirteen was carried.

Mr. Wickliffe arose to explain, on a question of privilege, that he meant no opposition to the New Orleans REPUBLICAN in his resolutions, but wished the convention to repudiate an article which he did not agree with.

Mr. Belden moved, at ten minutes before twelve, that the convention take a recess of one hour to allow the committee of thirteen time to report. Carried.

The convention resumed its business again about one o'clock. The roll was called and ninety-one members answered to their names.

The following committees were announced:

Committee to invite ministers of the gospel to officiate as chaplain of the convention—G. M. Wickliffe, James Mushaway, and P. F. Valfroit.

Committee to wait upon General Mower—Joseph A. Deslonde, John Lynch, Auguste Donato, Jr., N. Schwab, and Simon Jones.

General McMillan, chairman of the committe of thirteen, reported rules and regulations for the goverment of the convention with a resolution providing for their adoption. Also, recommending that the following standing committees be appointed:

A committee on the legislative department, consisting of seven members; judiciary department, consisting of seven members; executive department, nine members; general provisions, seven members; ordinance and schedules, seven; enrollment, five; printing, seven; finance, five; militia, thirteen; public education, thirteen; internal improvements, seven; bill of rights, nine; contingent expenses, five; draft of the constitution, seven.

Mr. Vandegriff moved that the report of the committee be received and adopted, and the committee discharged.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend the report by striking out that portion of section six of the prepared rules of order which provides for the president having a casting vote. Lost by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Vandegriff's motion was then adopted.

Mr. Pinchback moved that one hundred copies of the rules be printed for the use of the convention.

Mr. Belden moved to amend by substituting two hundred copies.

Mr. Bertonneau opposed the amendment on the ground of economy, thinking one hundred copies sufficient.

The amendment of Mr. Belden was accepted, and Mr. Pinchback's motion adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe presented the following:

Resolved, That every member of this convention not present at roll call each morning shall forfeit his per diem for that day's attendence; and the secretary of this convention is required to keep a full record of all such delinquents, to be furnished to the treasurer of the state.

Opposed by Mr. Belden, ruled out of order, and withdrawn.

Mr. Barrett offered the following:

Resolved, That the members of this convention now proceed to draw seats by lot, drawing by delegations.

Passed on first reading; a motion to suspend the rules to put the resolution on its second reading was lost.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that when this convention adjourn, it be till Friday next at 11 o'clock. Adopted.

Mr. Ingraham moved to proceed to the permanent organization of the convention. Carried.

General McMillan moved to proceed to the election of a minute clerk, and nominated Hugh J. Campbell.

Mr. Lynch moved that Colonel Campbell be declared elected by acclamation. Carried.

Mr. Cooley moved to proceed to the election of two assistant sergeants-at-arms, and that both be elected on one ballot. Carried.

The following named gentlemen were placed in nomination: J. M. Davis, Alexander Scott, Norbert Villere, J. M. Waters, Ernest Gaudet, G. H. Flagg, and J. A. Craig.

Messrs. Snaer, Smith, and Morris were appointed tellers. The following is the result of the ballot:

J. M. Davis had 84 votes; Alexander Scott, 21; Norbert Villere, 21; E. Gaudet, 21; J. M. Vance, 8; W. H. Honneus, 7; S. Kain, 7; G. H. Flagg, 3; J. W. Wallace, 3; J. A. Craig, 3; M. Scott, 3; N. Collins, 3; C. C. Morgan, 1.

J. M. Davis was therefore declared elected first assistant sergeant-at-arms, and a new ballot ordered for the other.

All the candidates were withdrawn except the three having the highest number of votes.

The second ballot exhibited the following result:

E. Gaudet received 38 votes, Alex Scott received 28 votes, N. Villere received 21 votes.

Mr. Gaudet was declared elected.

A motion to adjourn was lost.

The convention then voted to proceed to the election of assistant secretary. Adopted.

The following named gentlemen were placed in nomination:

Messrs. H. Carstens, of ——; Justin Sarta, of Terrebone; and Thomas B. Waters, of Catahoula.

The same gentlemen were appointed tellers.

The ballot resulted as follows:

J. Sarta received 34; T. B. Waters, 25; H. Carstens, 23; J. L. Montier, 1.

There was consequently no election.

The convention, at forty minutes past four o'clock, adjourned till eleven o'clock on Friday next.

LATE BY TELEGRAPH.

[Dispatches to the Associated Press.]

RICHMOND, November 25.—The United States court was not opened at all to-day, nor did the judge assume his seat. Upon the train arriving at half-past 1 o'clock, without Judge Chase, the marshal adjourned the court till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Judge Underwood received a telegram from Judge Chase, saying he would certainly be present to-morrow. Davis having been notified of the circumstances, did not appear at the courthouse, but will be there to-morrow morning.

Among the witnesses summoned by the government, who arrived to-day, is General R. E. Lee. General Custis Lee and Fitzhugh Lee are also here. General Horace Porter, of Grant's staff, also a witness, arrived to-day, as also did Ex-Governor Letcher, and General Francis H. Smith, of Lexington.

Upon the announcement of the adjournment of the court to-day, the crowd, consisting chiefly of blacks, quietly dispersed.

Judge Underwood to-day decided upon the prayer of General Imboden, and issued a mandamus to compel General Schofield to permit him to vote. It is returnable December 5.

The venire out of which the Davis jury is to be selected, is one-third colored men.

Among the witnesses summoned for the government, are Generals Magruder, Mahone, and Wickham, of Virginia, and Gordon, of Georgia.

From Europe.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—It is thought Kelly has been taken from the steamer City of Paris at Cork, and there is much excitement among the Fenians at Manchester, Birmingham, and Cork, but no open riots.

WASHINGTON, November 26.—The immense amount of matter telegraphed northward last night caused some delay in the regular dispatches.

Gold closed steady at 140. It is said Secretary McCulloch threw twenty-five millions on the market to control it, or rather to prevent a panic.

Bets are made that the house will send, the articles of impeachment to the senate provided a vote is taken in December.

The appointment of Schenck, who favors high protection and expansion, to the chairmanship of the committee of ways and means, excites surprise and comment.

From Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, November 25.—In the reconstruction convention a resolution was offered to present a memorial to congress, praying that the present reconstruction law be so altered or amended as to require only a majority of the voters voting on the question to determine for or against the adoption of the new constitution. Several members stated that they desired the law amended so that the oppsition could not defeat the constitution by staying away from the polls, and pressed the immediate adoption of the memorial. It was deliberated upon, and finally tabled, and ordered to be printed.

Ordinances were introduced and referred to establish a board of emigration for this state, and to provide for a bureau of industrial statistics.

The radical majority decided not to press the adoption of the amendment requiring common carriers to make no distinction on account of color between persons traveling in this state, and refused to bring up the question this morning. This action was induced by fear of endangering the adoption of other measures and because the object in view had already been obtained in part at leatt by the adoption of section 1 of the bill of rights, which declares tha persons possess equal civil and politica, rights and public privileges.

A resolution was reported by the committee on education providing for establishing throughout the state, in each township or school district, one or more schools which all the children of the state, between the ages of eighteen and twenty years, may attend free of charge. A motion to amend by providing separate schools for white and colored children was tabled—yeas 58, nays 27. On the final vote the resolution was adopted—yeas 51, nays 35.

The real cause why the radical majority did not pass the amendment requiring common carriers to make no distinction between travelers on account of color was that there was danger of breaking up the convention, several members threatening to withdraw if it was adopted.

It is highly probable that the proposition to organize a provisional civil government in place of the present state government will be quashed in committee.

Nitro Glycerine Explosion.

NEW YORK, November 26.—A nitro glycerine explosion at Bergen, N. J., killed nine persons and wounded others.

From Savannah.

SAVANNAH, November 25.—There was a large meeting of merchants held here to-day to memoralize the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington regarding the removal of the vexatious way the cotton tax is collected in the interior. From Richmond.

RICHMOND, November 26.—Judge Chase did not arrive this morning as expected, but at eleven o'clock the court met. There was a detachment of cavalry in the park. The courtroom was densely crowded when the grand jury was brought in. All the counsel of Mr. Davis were present except Messrs. Brady and Reid. Judge Underwood took his seat at half-past eleven, and the grand jurors were sworn in.

In his charge Judge Underwood said he regretted the absence of Judge Chase. He cautioned them that no party, class, or prejudice influence their deliberations. Offenses connected with the rebellion claimed their attention. If it be brought to their knowledge that any one had committed treason he must be indicted, unless he has been especially pardoned by the president or by general amnesty. He reiterated the law and penalties for treason, and said that the violation of revenue laws would claim their attention, and that they should be unsparing in the case of public officers engaged in it, if any should be so found.

Up to noon no steps had been taken in the Davis matter, and Mr. Davis has not yet appeared in court. About thirty ladies were present as spectators.

Messrs. Seddon, Letcher, and several other witnesses for the government, were before the grand jury to-day, which show that Mr. Davis will be tried on a new indictment at the March term of the court. Mr. Davis will remain here several days. He will not spend the winter in Canada. General Lee goes on Thursday to Petersburg to attend the marriage of his son, W. H. F. Lee.

Mr. Evarts, for the government, said the intention of the government was to try the Davis case some day this term. One consideration in fixing the day was the time when Mr. Chase would attend here, and the government proposed to name a day after the adjournment of the supreme court for this trial, when Mr. Chase could sit with Underwood. Evarts suggested the fourth Wednesday in March.

Mr. O'Connor said the personal convenience of Mr. Davis would have been promoted if that had had taken place in May last, and it would be very convenient now, but this counsel would agree to the proposition of Mr. Evarts. He thought the presence of Mr. Chase would be beneficial, not alone to the interests of the accused, but to all interested. Judge Underwood said the arrangement proposed by the government was agreeable to the court particularly, because the court earnestly desired that Judge Chase should sit upon the case. It was due the defendant that two judges should sit on the case in order that appeal might be taken on disputed questions, and the case carried up by defendant to a higher court. The judge agreed to fix the 20th of March for the trial, and on application of Mr. O'Connor to extend Mr. Davis' bail bonds until that time and he further agreed if Judge Chase could not preside then to extend the leave of absence until the term following. The order of extension of leave of absence for Mr. Davis, and fixing the 20th of March for trial, was entered by order of the judge, and so ended the Davis trial for this term. Mr. Davis did not appear in court. Three witnesses who came into court—ex-Secretary Seddon, ex-Governor Letcher, and General Wickham—were recognized to appear at the next term of the court.

From Augusta.

AUGUSTA, Ga., November 26.—Trains on the Macon and Augusta road commenced running to Milledgeville to-day.

The conservative convention at Macon promises to be fairly attended. The press is urging on the people the necessity of thorough organization for the purpose of defeating the constitution to be submitted by the reconstruction convention.

Meetings have been held in various parts of the state, and delegates appointed. It is believed that the convention will issue an address urging the people not to take part in the election for the ratification of the reconstruction constitution, hoping by this means to defeat it.

From Charleston.

CHARLESTON, November 26.—The impression is almost universal here that owing to a lack of the requisite number of registered votes, the convention will be defeated in South Carolina. Sixty-two thousand votes will be required to insure a convention, and only twenty-five thousand are known to have voted in twenty of the thirty districts of the state.

Later accounts from Wadmalaw island shows that the statement previously made of the riots there were greatly exaggerated. No person seriously hurt.

From Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, November 26.—The reconstruction convention adopted the following article of the constitution:

Article —. Taxation. All property in this state shall be taxed in exact proportion to the value of such property; provided, however, that the general assembly may levy a poll tax not to exceed one dollar and fifty cents on each poll, which shall be applied exclusively in aid of the public school fund.

The day's session was consumed in discussing the proposition to vest power in the governor to appoint all judicial officers. The convention finally provided for the election of supreme court judges and chancellors by the legislature and all other judicial officers by the people.

On Persecuting the Hair.

Human hair has been subject to all the caprices of fashion and all the fitfulness of fond but ignorant admiration in every age of the world and in every country. A large volume could be written of its history—its habits, its loves, its hates, and its persecutions. I propose in this paper to confine myself chiefly to a few brief notes of one modern mode of destroying its beauty, in doubly vain endeavors to restore it, or to provoke its growth in gracefulness and luxuriousness.

What has the hair done that it should be treated as we treat it? We twist it, we scrub it, rasp it, scorch it, stretch it, curl it, plaster it down, drown it in grease, we sicken it with deadly and nasty liquids, we tie it so tightly that it cannot grow, and then punish it by soaking it in odious chemicals and poisonous compounds. As Plato said of the world, the skillful physicians say of hair, that it is "governed too much." Like Mr. Jefferson Davis, it only wants to be let alone; or, at least, like Jefferson Davis's slaves, to be freed from incessant and pitiless abuse. The notion seems to prevail that the hair is a kind of dumb Mrs. Mallapert, "vot loves to be persecuted." It is no such hypocrite. Like every good, healthy christian, it delights in cleanliness and gentle treatment, plenty of pure food, and freedom from oppressive and restrictive laws.

The first, second and third essential things to do, in order to keep or secure a healthy head of hair, is to preserve a perfectly clean scalp. Avoid irritating it by stiff brushes or violent shampooing. These injure the scalp seriously, they diminish its energies, and thereby promote the formation of dandruff and scurvy.

Grease, whatever disguise it may assume, is injurious to the hair.

These applications act mechanically on the hair, and seem to render it soft, but at the same time they stop up the minute pores of the scalp and practically act as a hermetic seal to them. The insensible perspiration can no more escape through this dense cover than it can penetrate a coat of india rubber. Stimulants applied to a scalp in this condition only hasten the ruin of the hair.

Every touch of the scalp should be soft and soothing, and every application gentle.

No effort should be made to alter or modify the natural color of the hair, because nature, in every case, selects that shade which best harmonizes with the complexion and most perfectly suits the expression and cast of countenance. A light complexioned person with dark hair, to a cultivated and artistic eye, is an anomaly or monstrosity, as much out of harmony with the true ideal of beauty as a girl with a moustache or a boy with a wrinkled face.

A slight clipping once in four or six weeks is a benefit to the hair; and for this reason—that the escape of the oily substance contained in the hair is sometimes prevented by the closing of the ends, and thus it becomes more or less dry and harsh. A long neglect of clipping is seen in the dry and faded appearance of the ends, which a single application of the shears restores to freshness and beauty.

The head should be washed almost or altogether as frequently as the face. The dryness which washing gives to the hair would soon be provided for by a greater flow of the natural oil, which now is seldom called for and often restrained.

But, whatever may be written about the habits of hair, there are many persons who will persist in the use of oils, pomades, and dyes. These compounds are more freely used in America than in any other country; and the result is seen in the comparative rarity of really fine heads of hair

Pomades are made both from animal and vegetable substances. Among the animal substances that form the basis of these popular preparations are the fat of the bear, deer, hedgehog, rabbit, man, mole, goose and snake; ashes of the hedgehog, hedgehog skin, mouse, goat's hair, horse's teeth, bees, wasps; Spanish flies, house-flies distilled with honey in milk, honey, bee-glue and red coral.

The vegetable substances are too numerous to mention, but include benzoin, resins, common tar, turpentine, and laudanum.

"On the principle of like going to and nourishing like," says a careful authority, "the fat of excessively hairy animals—as, for instance, the bear—has been considered peculiarly precious as a promoter of the growth of the human hair: while that of the hedgehog, on a similar principle, would tend to make hair strong! The fat from a human scalp—a well-thatched one being probably preferred—was formerly regarded with feelings of peculiar interest by those ingenious philosophers, whose surprise, on putting their theory to the test, must have been great, upon finding that, after all, it was no richer in virtue than any other kind of grease. A kindred notion was that which fixed on ravens' eggs as a proper application for coloring the hair black. The Romans were not behind us in the oddity of their fancies; for they resorted not only to external, but to internal remedies for the loss of hair. Pliny mentions of the latter kind, observing that 'the sponge growing out of the wild rose, reduced to ashes and mixed with honey, is one of the noblest remedies.'"

The only permanent good effected by the application of pomades is accomplished by the friction and cleansing that sometimes accompany it.

"There is an elderly female in London," says Dr. Perry, in his work on the Hair, Scalp and Face, "of some repute in the practice of restoring the hair, whose method is said to consist mainly in getting the head of her subject between her knees, and straightway beginning a most vigorous attack upon it, consisting in rubbing, punching, pummelling, shampooing, and the like, which results in the effectual stimulation of every part. Another aged sister produces a similar result with blistering powder."

"Restoratives," "lustrals," and similar compounds, are almost uniformly made up of castor oil and alcohol, because no other fixed oil will freely dissolve in alcohol.

One of the most celebrated restoratives, for example, is composed of eight ounces of ninety per ct. alcohol, colored with a few drops of tincture of alkonet root, to which is added one ounce of castor oil. The perfume is gained by a compound of bergamot, narolic, verbena, and orange. Another equally popular restorative is made by adding two ounces of castor oil without any perfume to eight ounces of eighty per ct. alcohol.

Pomades sold for the same purpose owe their more decided results to the presence of cantharides, which is a powerful stimulant.

All such applications are of no permanent utility. At best they only produce a feeble growth of short, downy hair, which soon disappears, or never attains a healthy condition.

Interesting Cotton Suit.

The case of D. Kelham & Co. vs. Carroll, Hoy & Co. was argued before the supreme court, C. E. Schmidt for plaintiffs and Randolph, Singleton & Hardie for defendants. This is an appeal case to recover one hundred bales of cotton or $25,000 damages from defendants. On the 10th March, 1862, Carroll, Hoy & Co. sold to plaintiffs the crop of the estate of Fielding Davis, in the county of Issaquena, Mississippi, at eight cents per pound for middling, with an additional half-cent per pound on each grade of quality above and a reduction of half a cent for each lower grade. The cotton to remain free of storage on the plantation, at the risk of the purchaser until called for; to be sampled and weighed by the agent of the estate, classification to be determined by a competent person selected by purchasers and the sellers, and to be paid for on rendition of the invoice.

On the 20th of March, 1862, plaintiff paid $2000, and on the 14th of April. $1500 on account of the sale, a portion of this money being in confederate money. But the whole cotton crop of the Fielding Davis plantation was destroyed, and hence the suit of plaintiffs to recover the purchase money.

Defendants admit the sale and the contract, but deny their liability under it, as the contract specified that the cotton should remain on the plantation until called for; that it did so remain, and no demand was made by plaintiffs until after its destruction; and the destruction happened without any fault or negligence of defendants.

The case was ably argued on both sides. The decision will be watched with interest.

What New Orleans is Built Upon.

This paragraph from an exchange explains the standing of the Crescent city:

The city of New Orleans is built upon the most magnificent foundation on which city ever rose. It was the boast of Venice that her marble palaces rested in the waters of the Adriatic on piles of costly wood, which now serve to pay the debts of her degenerate sons; bnt our Venice has not less than three tiers of gigantic trees beneath it. They all stand upright, one upon another, with their roots spread out as they grew, and the great Sir Charles Lyell expresses his belief that it must have taken at least one thousand eight hundred years to fill up the chasm, since one tier had to rot away to a level with the bottom of the swamp before the upper tier could grow upon it.

The great stump speaker at the Academy might have referred to this in his local hits, especially as he is no politician.

Cross Suits in Admiralty.

General Herron, United States marshal, gives notice through the advertising columns of the REPUBLICAN this morning that he has seized the New York Mail Steamship company's steamship Monterey, and Messrs. James H. Trott & Co.'s bark Lincoln. These vessels have been taken into custody at the instance of the opposing owners, each side claiming that the other was blamable for the late collision near the bar, which resulted in considerable damage to the bark and the staving in of the upper part of the Monterey's side. As the case now stands it seems as though both parties were to blame, which often occurs in such cases. At any rate they will learn the luxury of going to law before they get through with the case. That will be worth something.

The Memphis Avalanche says: "We do not propose that either ourselves or our children shall have the nightmare or dyspepsia from eating plum puddings or pumpkin pies, in honor of Andrew Johnson's ukase ordering his people to thanksgiving. Let the Puritans meet and pray; let them meet and thank God, and kill the fatted calf, and shed all sorts of innocent blood over the condition of the country; but let no Southern man meet and snivel with hypocritical tears."

Augustus Washington, a young colored man, attended some twenty years ago an academy in New Hampshire, where he won honors in study. Feeling the prejudices against his race in this country he sought a home in Liberia. He now owns a fine farm of one thousand acres under high cultivation and well stocked with cattle and agricultural implements, and he is extensively engaged in the making and exporting of sugar and molasses. This enterprising farmer is also among the foremost public men of Liberia; he is speaker of the house of representatives, and held in high honor by both natives and emigrants.

NEW RELIGIOUS ALMANAC.

Indispensable for Every Clergyman!

Important for every Church Member, and every Friend of Religious Movements!

The "American Ecclestical Almanac for 1688," by Professor A. J. Schem, which will be published about the first of January, 1868, will fill a want long felt by Clergymen and members of all religious persuasions, and by all taking an interest in the religiious questions of the day. As the title page, which we give annexed, indicates, it will give a brief account of all the important events in the religious history of the year 1867, the proceedings of great Councils, Congresses, Assemblies and Meetings of particular denominations, the work of the Bible, and Missionary Societies, the progress of the Young Msn's Christian Associations, of the Temperance and Peace Movements, the advance of Religious Freedom and Toleration; the most memorable facts in the History of every Denomination not only in the United States but in the whole world; and an obituary account of persons distinguished in the religious world who died in 1867.

In additionto this large amount of historical information, this American Ecclesiasticol Almanac will contain the completest statistical Tables of Religious Denominations ever published. These tables will show the relative number of the Christian and the principal Non-Christian Religions of the world, the ecclesiastical statistics of America, Europe, Asis, Africa and Australia, and a complete statistical exhibit of every important religious denomination of America and Europe.

In short, it will contain an immense amount of intelligence, not accessible in any other volume, of the greatest interest to every one who is not indifferent with regard to religions question, and constantly needed for reference.

The name of the author of the "American Ecclesiastical Almanac" guarantees for the accuracy and completeness of the information that will be furnished.

Price 30 cents—A liberal discount allowed to dealers; also to clergymen, teachers, and others wishing to form clubs for the above Almanac, among their church members.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

A REPOSITORY OF

Fashion, Pleasure and Instruction.

HARPER'S BAZAAR, the publication of which has just been commenced by Harper & Brothers, is an illustrated Weekly Journal, devoted to Fashion and Household Literature.

It is the first weekly journal of fashion ever published in the United States. By arrangements which the publishers have perfected, at great cost, with the most celebrated European fashion journals—particularly with the well-known "Bazar of Berlin"—illustrations of fashions for each week of the year will appear in Harper's Bazar simultaneously with their publication in Paris and Berlin; an advantage which will belong exclusively to this journal.

In a country where three hundred millions of dollars are annually expended for dry goods, to be transformed into articles of dress, trustworthy and practical instructions as to the most tasteful and economical methods of fashioning these articles become of the greatest value to American women. The Bazar will contain full and explicit instructions, with illustrations, which will enable every lady reader to cut and make her own and her children's entire wardrobe, with a large portion of her husband's. Each alternate number will be accompanied with large pattern plates, containing from forty to fifty full-sized patterns, applicable to every article of wardrobe made in the family, with the necessary directions for cutting and making. Similar illustrations and descriptions of fancy work will also be furnished. These patterns will be executed in Paris and Berlin, and will surpass anything of the kind hitherto produced in this country. Frequently an elegant colored fashion plate will be presented with the paper. Practical descriptions will also be given of the fashions especially in vogue in New York—the centre of fashion in America.

Harper's Bazar, besides being the leading Fashion Journal in this country, will also aim to present before its readers the very best specimens of Household Literature. It will contain original and selected serial stories, poetry, novelettes, articles on the topics of the day, (excluding politics,) on books, art, morals, familiar science, education, amusements, hygiene, etiquette, housekeeping, gardening, with home and foreign gossip. No subject of household interest will be excluded from its columns.

In the first number of the Bazar will be commenced a novel, entitled "The Cord and the Creese; or, The Brandon Mystery," by James De Mille, Esq., author of "The Dodge Club." This novel has been read in manuscript by sevcral of our most competent critics, who unanimously pronounce it, in point of interest of plot, variety of adventure, and graphic delineation of character, to be fully equal to any of the novels of Wilkie Collins.

Harper's Bazar will contain 16 folio pages, of the size of Harper's Weekly, printed on superfine calendered paper, and will be published weekly, at ten cents per single number, or four dollars per year.

Ladies in the country will be supplied gratuitously hrough the mails with the first six numbers of Harper's Bazar, upon written application to the publishers.

Postage, five cents for three months.

Single subscribers will be supplied from the beginning to the end of the year 1868, which will complete the first volume, for the yearly price of four dollars.

An extra copy will be supplied gratis for every Club five subscribers, at four dollars each, in one remittance, or six copies for twenty dollars.

"EUREKA,"

THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THE CLASSIC POETS have sung to us of a spring whose pure, ethereal waters impart perpetual youth and beauty to all who will drink of them. It is now conceded by all that the EUREKA is made of the water of that same spring, and its magical effects will be seen at once by those who use it. The hair will be restored to its youth and beauty, even where the snows of winter have fallen. In presenting this Hair Restorative to the public, I have no hesitation in saying that it is no humbug: that it will do all that is claimed for it, viz: Restoring the hair to its original color; preventing its falling off, and giving it a soft-ness, youth and lustre that no other preparation can produce. The Eureka has been used by tens of thousands, and in every case has given entire satisfaction, and is now used universally. Dr. Van Zandt has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair—preventing it falling off, by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the EUREKA, and you will not be disappointed.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin: all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in this city.

A NEW GLEE BOOK,
THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38. Mailed post-paid.

Poetry.

Let Me Go!

Let me go where saints are going,
To the mansions of the blest;
Let me go where my Redeemer,
Has prepared his people's rest.
Let me go where none are weary,
Where is raised no wail of woe;
Let me go and bathe my spirit,
In the raptures angels know.

Let me go, why should I tarry?
What has earth to bind me here?
What, but cares, and toils and sorrow?
What, but death, and pain and fare,
Let me go where tears and sighing,
Are for evermore unknown;
Where the joyous songs of glory,
Call me to a happier home.

Let me go—there is a glory,
That my soul hath long'd to know;
I am thirsting for the waters,
That from crystal fountains flow.
Let me go, O, speed my journey,
Saints and seraphs lure away!
O! I almost feel the raptures,
That belong to endless day.

I would gain the realms of brightness,
Where they dwell for evermore;
I would join the friends that wait me,
Over on the other shore.
Let me go, for bliss eternal,
Lures my soul away, away,
And the victor's song triumphant,
Thrills my heart, I cannot stay.

Let me go, for hopes most cherish'd,
Blasted, round me often lie;
O! I've gathered brightest flowers,
But to see them fade and die.
Let me go—I'd cease this dying—
I would gain life's fairer plains;
Let me join the myriad harpers—
Let me chant their rapturous strains.

There is where the angels tarry—
There the saved for ever throng;
There the brightness wearies never,
There I'll sing Redemption's song.
Oft methinks I hear the singing,
That is only heard above;
Let me go—O! speed my going—
Let me go where all is love.

PERSONNEL OF THE CONVENTION OF 1867.

Our articles on this subject are attracting some interest, and especially among our friends at the North. Our object is to place the result of the experiment of universal suffrage fairly before the people, and not to flatter persons nor to subserve any private ends. Any information from friends who desire to aid this object will be gladly received.

Hon. William Jasper Blackburn.

Mr. Blackburn, whose name is widely known and intimately connected with the political events of the last six years in this State, is a native of Arkansas. His parents were both Southern born, one being a native of Georgia, the other of North Carolina. He was left an orphan at an early age. His youth was spent in a wild backwoods country, subject to all the disadvantages of honest and unavoidable poverty—including that most severely felt, and at the same time most unjust one, the deprivation of an early education; we say most unjust, for this the State owed him and every one of her children, and she failed most miserably in her most important duty when she neglected it.

Mr. Blackburn will be disposed, we think, to see that Louisiana, in the future, does her duty in this respect to all her children

Until the age of sixteen, Jasper led the usual life of a frontier boy—plowed, hoed and hunted, and "roughed it" with panthers, bears, Indians and backwoodsmen. At this time he found a good friend in Judge Lewis B. Tully, of Arkansas, who, noticing the germs of talent in the boy, took him with his own sons to Columbia, Tennessee, and placed him at school. Here he devoted himself with ardor to his studies, and was at the head of his classes. Failing health, from close confinement to his books, compelled him to leave college before graduating. He returned to Arkansas, and apprenticed himself as a printer in the office of the Batesville News, where his younger brother, Newton C. Blackburn, was also apprenticed. At the end of his term he became the publisher of the same paper. In 1845 he removed to Little Rock, and worked in the offices of the Banner and Gazette as a printer. He pursued his trade afterwards in Fort Smith, and Van Buren, Ark., till 1848. In that year he came to Louisiana. He published the Minden Herald, in Minden, La., for a number of years. In 1859 he removed his printing office to Homer, and established the Homer Iliad, of which paper he is still the editor and proprietor. Of the Iliad we need not speak. Its staunch loyalism, and able service in the cause of the Union, are known not only through the State, but throughout the country, and led to its selection by Congress as one of the official journals of the United States in the South, provided for by special act.

Mr. Blackburn has been a life-long and devoted friend and advocate of the Constitution and the Union, and an opponent of slavery, though he had never even visited a Northern State till after the war. He published the Iliad throughout the war amidst much persecution and proscription, on account of his well-known Union principles. His high moral character, however, his many and warmly appreciated social virtues, and his known devotion to whatever he felt to be just and right, always retained towards himself personally the respect and kindness of his political opponents.

Mr. Blackburn is widely known as a terse and vigorous writer, with a preference for plain Anglo Saxon words, and with a dash of pungency and humor in his style which render him parricularly forcible as a political writer. He is, also, a favorite and esteemed writer in several literary circles.

He was married at the age of 23, and is now the father of a large family of sweet girls and noble boys, of whom he is justly proud, and for his special and untiring devotion to whom he is distinguished both at home and abroad.

Mr. Blackburn has an original and vigorous mind, keen and swift perception, both of men and things, a sound and careful judgment, and a perfect command, at all times, of all of his resources. These gifts, sharpened and heightened by over twenty years training in the arena of a journalist and politician, make him an efficient leader and a formidable opponent, and will secure for him a prominent place in the future political history of Louisiana.

Hon. Ceasar C. Antoine, delegate from the parish of Caddo to the Constitutional Convention, is a native of this city, having been born September 8, 1836. He was left an orphan at an early age, but under the care of relatives attended the school formerly kept by Wm. Mulford, Esq., in this city, having secured a common but practical education. He next mastered the tonsorial profession, in which occupation he was engaged when Commodore Farragut's fleet arrived, in April, 1862. Being on the landing of the Canal street ferry when Capt. Bell came ashore, on the 25th April, 1862, he, in company with his colleague, Capt. J. H. Ingraham, took Capt. Bell by the hand and welcomed the fleet and the defenders of the Government to this city.

When. Major Gen. B. F. Butler called upon the colored citizens, in 1862, to enter the United States army, Capt. Antoine did signal service in recruiting for the 1st, 2d and 3d Native Guards Regiments.

The ladies of the First Baptist Church (Rev. Nelson D. Sanders) having procured a beautiful flag, for presentation to the 1st Regiment, Capt. Antoine made the presentation address. This flag, now in the possession of Capt. Ingraham, is the flag that Caillou, Plaucianos, Heath and other brave men, dyed with their blood at Port Hudson, May 27, 1863.

When Gen. Taylor threatened this city with an attack in 1863, Capt. Antoine raised a company under the call of Gen. Shepley, the Military Governor, which company he commanded until mustered out of service.

When the surrender of Gen. Kirby Smith took place, Capt. Antoine made Shreveport, (Caddo parish) his home, in which city he is now carrying on a very lucrative business, his State, parish and municipal tax being over a thousand dollars a year, and a heavy internal revenue tax.

Capt. Antoine has taken an active part in every movement that has been inaugurated for the advancement of humanity and the elevation of his cause. He is a member of the City Council of Shreveport, having been appointed by Governor Flanders.

Though young in years, Capt. Antoine has a sound and mature judgment, a shrewd observance of men and events; is a firm friend and an uncompromising opponent. He is of an agreeable personal appearance, and a good speaker.

We predict that he will do good service in the Convention. He has one rare and good qualification of a legislator—he does not talk much. His constituents will know if he votes right, as we believe he will

Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback.

In our article in reference to this gentleman, a few numbers since, we omitted to state an important fact of his public life. We here supply the omission. In the year 1865 Capt. Pinchback took a prominent part in the political canvass in Alabama, among his own people. He was the first speaker in that portion of the State, and among the first in the South, to advocate publicly universal suffrage, and the political equality of the colored people. His speeches attracted much attention, were very effective in informing the colored people of their true status, and putting them on their guard against designing men and impostors. His mission was attended with great personal danger and much opposition; but his courage and perseverance carried him through what was a work of great importance at that juncture.

Bishop Morris.

The following beautiful auto-biographical sketch will be read with much interest by our readers. The venerable Bishop kindly enclosed it in a private note to us, for both of which we thank him, and hope that he will write for the ADVOCATE again soon, and often. In passing we beg to assure our beloved Bishop that in this Southern work our preachers, and especially our presiding elders, experience many of the inconveniences of travel which he experienced fifty years ago:

FRAGMENT.

I was born in Kanawha county, Virginia, April 28, 1794; joined the M. E. Church in August, 1813, and received the full spirit of adoption on Christmas following. I was licensed to preach the 2d of April, 1814, employed on a circuit by a presiding elder in 1815, and received as a traveling preacher on trial by the Ohio Conference, in 1816. After a campaign of fifty years, I was, in January, 1866, attacked with paralysis, and rendered incapable of pulpit service. Having now no sermons to make, or conferences to hold, I have time to think and review the past on a small scale.

Great changes have occurred in my day, both in church and State. When I began to itinerate, we had no graded pikes; canals and railroads were not then thought of; our speed then was four miles an hour. The contrast between the old system of horse and saddle-bags, and the present with railroad and satchel, is wonderful; the speed is increased from four miles to twenty-five miles per hour, which is a great saving of time. The world moves. The sites of our large and flourishing towns in the West were then in the wildwood. Our log cabins are superseded by respectable dwellings of brick, and our log meeting houses by respectable church edifices. As to our numerical strength, the M. E. Church has more than quadrupled in my day, with financial ability in proportion. My early cotemporaries are mostly gone. I have great grand children ranging from four to eleven years old. Under these surroundings, it begins to be whispered around that I am an old man. Perhaps it is so, but I don't feel old. It is true, I have some physical infirmities, but my spirit is buoyant. I love life as well as I ever did, and might enjoy it as well, if able to be active in the ministry. If I was forty years younger, I should hope soon to resume my ministry; but as it is, I have little or no prospect; and it remains for me to cultivate patience, and exercise resignation. Old age, however, is not what I once supposed it to be. I expected it would bring only gloom and depression; but in my 74th year I find neither. To borrow trouble of the future is against my creed. I do not expect to cross the river till I reach it, and have no wish to die before my time comes. When it does come, I trust, supporting grace will come with it. "'Tis all my hope and all my plea. For me the the Savior died." Brethren, pray for me. T. A. MORRIS.

Address of the Bishops to the Church

IN BEHALF OF THE MISSIONARY CAUSE.

Dear Brethren—We are pained to observe a decline in the missionary contributions of the church. A year ago the Missionary Society appropriated $1,030,978, and called upon the church for $850,000, which, with the surplus then in our treasury, would have carried us safely through the year. On coming together this month, the General Missionary Committee found that our treasurer had only received during the year $615,-156 12, while he had disbursed, in that period, $855,933 17, and that the cash in his hands was $361,757 78 less than the outstanding liabilities of the society.

Under these circumstances, it was thought necessary to make the appropriations for the foreign work $102,464 87, and those for the domestic work $261,454 less than last year. Even with these large reductions, it will be necessary for the Church to increase greatly her missionary gifts.

The decline in our contributions is attributed to various causes. The surplus in the treasury had its effect. The increase of pastoral compensation, and of all other church expenses, and the partial failure of the crops, have been thought to solve the problem. But when we consider that we have increased our Church property seven millions of dollars, this solution will hardly answer. A more operative cause is the centenary celebration. Under this stimulus, the Church subscribed from seven millions to nine millions of dollars, much of which was paid during the current ecclesiastical year. But even this cannot be accepted as a sufficient account of the decline, as our other contributions for benevolent objects have not decreased.

We cannot believe there has been a diminution of missionary spirit in the Church, but suppose that other things have diverted the attention of our pastors from the great cause. Hence too little pains to diffuse missionary intelligence, too few missionary meetings, and, above all, too many failures to put into operation our disciplinary plan of missionary collections.

The charge does not lie equally upon all parts of the Church, for twenty-four conferences report an increase of missionary money, though in all but five the advance is less than a thousand dollars.

Still we look hopefully to the future. We have not withdrawn from any field. How can we? Indeed, in one instance, we have entered new territory. We refer to China. Our mission there was hemmed in on the south by the Amoy missions, on the north by the Ningpo, and on the east by the sea. Westward lies the province of Kiangsee, in the great valley of the Yangtse Kiang. Our brethren at Foochow look wistfully over the Bohea hills to Kingiang, and we have said to them, "Go forward."

At home we must enlarge. The South is opening to us. Not to advance is to recede. While we do so, it must be by crippling some other parts of the work, and also imposing great embarrassments, if not sufferings, upon our brethren at the outposts and abroad. We say to them, "In this exigency endure hardness as good soldiers;" and to you, "Come promptly to their aid." Jointly with the General Committee and the Board, we ask for $850,000. Is this too much? We have 1,144,-733 members and probationers. When wages and profits are so high as in the United States, is it too much to expect of them a dollar a year, at the great command of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel?" a command bound not upon the ministry only. Will you not swiftly outrun our expectations? We know that the approaching year is not promising. The uncertainty as to the course of the Government on great questions relating to property and trade, must curtail the operations of our manufacturing and mercantile communities, on whose liberality we have always relied. Still, while the cities are building expensive churches, we look for continued generous contributions from merchant princes.

But to the farmers, with whom is the substantial and unfluctuating wealth of the country, we chiefly look at present. Let them give according as the Lord hath blessed them, and they will give not by the dollar, but the tens, the hundreds and the thousands.

Let presiding elders see that the plan of the discipline is carried out; let pastors preach missionary sermons; let missionary committees spread the papers and other means of intelligence; let missionary demonstrations be held at conferences and other occasions that may offer; let the Sabbath schools work well their missionary organizations, and suffer nothing to divert their contributions, and soon will our treasury overflow.

"Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the Churches of Macedonia; how that, in a trial of great affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality"..... "Therefore, as ye abound in everything—in faith, in utterance, and diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also."

Savings Bank.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our citizens of the city and State to this Bank, located at 114 Carondelet street.

It is a branch of the "National Freedman's Savings Bank and Trust Company," the principal office being in Washington, D. C.

It has now been in operation about two years, and we consider it one of the best and safest banks in the country.

We understand that they take gold and silver on deposit, and agree to pay their depositors the same whenever called for.

All who wish to deposit their money where it will be paying them interest, will do well to go to the above mentioned book.

Catholics in the South.

The Roman Catholics are putting forth extraordinary efforts to convert the South. On Tuesday last, Bishop Dubois, twenty-five nuns, and the same number of priests, arrived in this city from France and Germany. The field of their future labors will be Louisiana and Texas. This is a large importation at one time, and indicates a zeal and an expenditure worthy of imitation by the Protestants. But Protestants are not zealous in the moral restoration of the South. Our own is the only Protestant church in this country that has heartily engaged in this Southern work. We have disbursed hundreds of thousands of dollars annually for the last four years, in employing ministers and in building churches. And the future struggle will be between the Roman Catholic and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Instead of clutching to props, which can not elevate you, or if they do bear you up for a moment, must soon be withdrawn again, the gospel bids you grow against the Tree of Life; and just as you grow up into Christ, you will grow up into holiness and into happiness. And if you have not yet found an object to your heart's content—if you feel that there is still something wrong with you—that you are neither leading the life which you would like to lead, nor enjoying the comfort which you think might be somehow got, be advised. Take the Lord Jesus for your friend. He is one in whom you will find no flaw. He is one of whom, if you really get acquainted with him, you will never weary; and one who, if once you really go to him, will never weary of you.

ARE THE CHILDREN AT HOME?

Each day when the glow of sunset
Fades in the western sky,
And the wee ones tired of playing,
Go tripping lightly by,
I steal away from my husband,
Asleep in his easy chair,
And watch from the open doorway
Their faces fresh and fair.

Alone in the dear old homestead
That once was full of life,
Ringing with girlish laughter,
Echoing boyish strife,
We two are waiting together:
And oft, as the shadows come,
With tremulous voice he calls me,
"It is night! are the children home?"

"Yes, love!" I answer him gently,
They're all home long ago;"—
And I sing, in my quivering treble,
A song so soft and low,
Till the old man drops to slumber,
With his head upon his hand,
And I tell to myself the number
Home in a better land.

Home, where never a sorrow
Shall dim their eyes with tears!
Where the smile of God is on them
Through all the summer years!
I know!—yet my arms are empty,
That fondly folded seven,
And the mother heart within me
Is almost starved for heaven.

Sometimes in the dusk of evening,
I only shut my eyes,
And the children are all about me,
A vision from the skies;
The baba whose dimpled fingers
Lost the way to my breast,
And the beautiful ones, the angels,
Passed to the world of the blessed.

With never a cloud upon them,
I see their radiant brows:
My boys that I gave to freedom—
The red sword sealed their vows!
In a tangled Southern forest,
Twin brothers, bold and brave,
They fell; and the flag they died for,
Thank God! floats over their grave.

A breath, and the vision is lifted
Away on the wings of light,
And again we two are together,
All alone in the night.
They tell me his mind is failing,
But I smile at idle fears;
He is only back with the children,
In the dear and peaceful years.

And still as the summer sunset
Fades away in the West,
And the wee ones, tired of playing,
Go trooping home to rest,
My husband calls from his corner,
"Say, love! have the children come?"
And I answer, with eyes uplifted,
"Yes, dear! they are all at home."

KILLING A COLORED MAN.

Defending Crime.

The Bulletin, in noticing the killing of a colored man on Allard's plantation, near Bayou Bridge, on the night of Sunday last, by two Italians—Louis Andres and Cosmo Bastaghia—takes occasion to utter a howl of partisan rage against Attorney General Lynch because that officer has been faithful to his oath and duty in the premises.

It appears that the deceased and some other negroes were stealing oranges from an orchard, the fruit of which was bought by one Dominick, who had employed the two men, Andres and Bastaghia, to watch the fruit.

On discovering the thieves the watchmen fired five times, killing one negro whose name is unknown. The negroes were unarmed, made no resistance, and no effort was made to capture them, or either of them, but a desperate effort was made to kill them all.

A rebel coroner selected a good and true jury of his own political complexion, we presume, and unhesitatingly comes out the verdict of the wise judges "that no blame attaches to either of the accused;" whereupon the two manslaughterers are set at liberty.

The attorney general did say that every species of larceny, even in the night time, when there was no attempt made to capture the thieves, or no resistance offered by them, and when the parties were not attacking or endeavoring to enter a dwelling-house, or its inclosure, did not justify the taking of life. He directed that an affidavit be made against the watchmen for murder, and the matter thoroughly examined. Hence the howl of the Bulletin.

Suppose two colored men were watching that orchard on the night in question, and that they shot down a white thief under similar circumstances, would the coroner and his jury have found the verdict "no blame attaches to either of the accused"? We guess not. And if the coroner and his jury had so found, and the attorney general had, notwithstanding, directed a judicial investigation of the matter, would the Bulletin reporter have snarled at him for so doing? Certainly not.

It is no wonder that thirty-five murders have been committed in the twelfth judicial district within the last two years and not a single person tried for any of those murders. Of course the murdered persons were colored, the murderers white. This is a pretty state of affairs. How long, oh Lord! how long?

EQUAL RIGHTS.

ASSESSED PROPERTY IN NEW ORLEANS.—We have received from Mr. S. P. Harper, secretary of the board of supervisors of Orleans parish, a recapitulation of the value of property assessed in the twelve assessment districts for 1867. The value of real estate is $109,037,260; income, $2,075,191; furniture, $1,807,200; horses, cows, and carriages, $904,885; stocks in vessels and corporations, $474,400; merchandise, capital, and money at interest, $25,323,193; total, $139,622,129. All the items show an increase over 1866, except income, in which there is a decrease of $1,023,324. The total increase is $13,047,364.

CROWDING A BACHELOR.—"What did you come here after?" inquired Miss Susan Diaper, of a bachelor friend, who made her a call when the rest of the folks were gone out.

"I came to borrow some matches," he meekly replied.

"Matches! that's a likely story. Why don't you make a match. I know what you come for," exclaimed the delighted miss as she crowded the old bachelor into a corner, "you come to kiss and hug me almost to death, but you shan't—unless you are the strongest, and the Lord knows you are!"

Rev. Dr. Newman

will preach in the chapel of his Church to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock.

Time of Conference.

We again remind our brethren that our Conference meets on December 19, at 9 A. M., in the Marais street Church, Bishop Ames to preside.

Additions.

Nine were added to the Ames M. E. Church on last Sabbath—six by letter and three were received in full. Of those who joined by letter, were a mother and her two daughters, and two brothers whose parents had previously joined. It was delightful thus to receive whole families into the Church.

Rev. Newman Hall's Sermons.

The sermons of this eminent English Divine, who is now on a visit to this country, and who is thrilling the immense audiences in our great cities, will be published weekly in the Methodist, which paper is published at 114 Nassau street, New York; and though a paper of the largest size, the subscription price is but $2 50 a year.

Processions.

We would like to know how Gavazzi and Garibaldi would have looked, in that procession in Boston, at the laying of the corner stone of the Cathedral the other day, and how the spirits of the martyrs looked upon it, as similar to those which escorted them to the stake? And with what tingling ears the poor prisoners of the now crowded prisons of Rome, heard that America also worshipped the Beast. Ah, they would no doubt fall back upon their chains, and despair of liberty on the earth. We must rub up our church history before we compliment the papacy. Q. Q.

Suspended Ones.

Beecher says he don't want to die a vertical death; nor do the gentlemen of this city, whom Gen. Mower appointed, and whom Grant suspended. We therefore hope that Gen. Hancock will relieve these gentlemen by placing their feet in office. Especially we commend to the General's favorable attention Messrs. Sypher, Hire and Carter, who are worthy of the positions to which they were appointed.

Sunday.

Among the important questions which the Constitutional Convention now in session in this city, should consider, is the proper observance of the Sabbath. And this should be done, because it is a question which touches the best interests of society, such as public health, order, and morals. Assuming that all agree in the Divine appointment of the Sabbath as a day of rest and religious worship, yet all may not agree as to the duty of civil legislators to secure the beneficial end of the law. We heartily repudiate the doctrine of religious coercion; yet there is a wide difference between saying what a man shall do, and what he shall not do. We would not consent to a law compelling each citizen to attend church on Sunday. This should be optional with him, to do, or not to do, as he may elect. Nor would we have a law dictating to a citizen how he shall spend the Sabbath in his own house. So long as he does not disturb the public peace, or commit crime, he may act as he pleases at home. It should be left to the citizen to determine whether, on the Lord's Day, he shall feast or fast, ride or walk. With such questions civil law should not meddle. We are not in favor of mandatory Sunday laws; but we distinctly favor prohibitory Sunday laws; that is, laws which forbid men doing certain acts on Sunday. It is wiser to restrain than constrain.

We hold it to be the duty of civil legislators to avoid being party to the desecration of the Holy Sabbath. And how can this be done? Evidently, by limiting the time of all business licenses to six days in the week; that is, "Sundays excepted." This is the simplest way to get at the duty which civil government owes to the Divine government. Such an inhibition would effectually close up all Sunday theatres, drinking and gambling saloons, and places of traffic. It would remove the temptation to frolic and to spend his hard earnings from the laboring man, as he strolls forth on a Sunday afternoon with his wife and children, and it would prevent a vast amount of crime. It is a fact worthy the attention of the Convention, that there are more arrests in large cities on Sunday, than on any other day of the week, and nearly all persons thus and then arrested were under the influence of liquor.

It must be apparent to every candid mind, that when the civil authorities issue licenses to persons keeping places of amusement or gambling saloons, or for the sale of intoxicating drinks, and do not except Sundays, said civil authorities are party to the violations of the Sabbath law, and for which God holds them responsible. In the brief space allotted us, we cannot argue the subject at length, but only call the attention of the Convention to their high duty in the premises, and respectfully ask, in the name of the Christian Church and of God, to recognize the Sabbath in our new State constitution, in this simple but effectual manner, viz: "Sundays excepted."

has at length reached our city, and assumed command of the Fifth Military District. His advent was looked for with profound solicitude by every loyal citizen, and his presence is a subject of general congratulation. A gentleman, a soldier and a patriot, he will discharge his duties with impartiality, and execute the laws of Congress with wisdom and power. Governed by the time-honored maxim that obedience is the chief virtue of the soldier, he will faithfully execute and not defeat, the congressional plan of reconstruction. He does not stop to inquire whether that plan meets his views, nor whether it is accepted by the disloyal element of his district; nor whether it has the approval of the President. With such questions he has nothing to do; his only concern is, "What is the law, and how can I most effectually execute it?" Governed by a principle so wise and prudent, the Commanding General will receive the approval of all the people.

His brilliant record as a soldier in the late war for the Union, is a pledge that he has no sympathy in peace with those who, in war, he so triumphantly defeated, Of all our generals, none fought harder, longer and more victoriously than General Hancock. He fought not for factions, but for the Union, and he will now earnestly seek the speedy restoration of the excluded States to their former Federal relations. In his civil administration he will not go back upon his brilliant military record, nor do aught to continue the severance of the union of these States. In this he is in full accord with Grant and Sheridan, and there is not a reasonable doubt but that he will carry out the statesman-like policy of Sheridan in this department. Sheridan and Hancock are on terms of no ordinary intimacy, and their views on reconstruction are coincident. He will not go back on Sheridan, nor will he go back on Congress.

Fortunately, the Commanding General will find in our municipal government a Mayor and Common Council on whom he may confidently rely. His Honor, the Mayor, is an old citizen of New Orleans, of undoubted honesty, of high respectability and unwavering patriotism; and the members of the Council, of both races, are among the chief business men of our city, and only require his sustaining authority to make most efficient councilmen. And it is a matter of no little satisfaction to know, that General Hancock will find in our midst a large number of ex-army officers, who fought with him for the same glorious cause; who are here largely engaged in business; who have determined to make their home in Louisiana, and who are the "coming men of the South" His companions in arms will be his companions in peace. The men who conquered a peace should enjoy the fruits of that peace.

We are highly pleased with the commencement of General Hancock's administration. His removal of Cutler, Ward and Perkins, meets with very general approval, and augurs well for the future. But we consider removals and appointments, at this late hour, as petty compared with the greater work of the restoration of the State to the Federal Union. All his mighty energies should be bent toward this grand object; all his orders, whether for removals or appointments, should have this end in view. The whole country wants rest—religion and education; commerce and agriculture, the arts and the trades call aloud for rest; and on the head of him who shall first restore the State to the Union, shall rest the benediction: "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

Plain Words.

The New Orleans Bee, with a little more frankness, and a little less bitterness than the Times, greets certain members of the convention, whom it chooses to classify as persons of respectability, who have formerly stood high in public esteem in this State, with a formal decree of ostracism from all association with their class, whom it designates the gentlemen of the State. The value of this outspoken declaration of political intolerance on the part of the Bee is, that it shows precisely what all persons of the Bee's political school would do with every Union man in the State, if they had the power. The Bee says that "we (the ex-rebels) will hereafter decline to associate with or recognize 'these men'"—meaning, we presume, such persons as Judge Crawford, Mr. Ludeling, Judge Taliaferro, and others of the convention, whom it used to style respectable. The crime for which these gentlemen are to suffer excommunication from the society of the Bee—et id omne genus—is, that of accepting seats in a convention elected under the laws of the land, for the purpose of restoring their State to the Union, along with other gentlemen, who have the good or bad fortune to differ with the editors of the Bee in—color. We condole with the excommunicated gentlemen on their misfortune, but we presume that, like all wise and prudent men, they have weighed well beforehand all the consequences of their action, and among them the ill will of all persons like the editors of the Bee. We hope that they will bear it with equanimity. We have heard of several gentlemen who were outlawed by the friends of the Bee during the late "unpleasantness," who have survived it, and are now in good health.

But we have a moral to draw from this characteristic declaration of rebel indignation. We say to the white members of the convention, especially to the old citizens of Louisiana, and the ex-members of the army, in all seriousness, you have it in your power to unite in one phalanx all the friends of the Union in this State, or to split them asunder, and give the next election to our opponents, and defeat your own constitution. There is but one thing in the way, prejudice, and that the prejudice of these very men, who, whatever you may do to conciliate them, will never withdraw their sentence of social and political ostracism against you. On the one hand you have a class of men, the newly enfranchised, looking to your every action, even on trivial subjects, with an interest intense, engrossing, almost painful. These people were, in this State, once before cheated by men who professed to be their friends. They feel that the supreme crisis in their history, for the present generation at least, has come, when the great boon of citizenship, of recognized manhood, of an equal chance and a fair start with other men free themselves, and above all of securing for their children the removal of that crushing load of disabilities which has burdened and fettered their own lives; when all this is just passing within their reach, and is to be won or lost by your action in the next few weeks.

These men are your constituency; you were elected by their votes. They ask just one thing. If they fail, they know that their dearest hopes are postponed indefinitely, perhaps for generations. That thing is absolute, perfect equality before the law, in all civil and political rights and privileges. Anything else, they feel, will be the perpetuation of an unjust prejudice, and a spirit of caste which will seek to perpetually stamp them as an inferior race. If this is granted fairly, squarely and unequivocally, these men will be a unit in the support of the men and the party who grant it. If it is withheld in any essential particular, no matter under what specious pretext, or disguise of fair and general promises, these people will sooner or later detect it, and you will forever lose their confidence, as did the leading members of the convention of '64, and will divide the party. On the other hand, you have that prejudice, hoary with the frosts of centuries, of color, as embodied in and represented by the anti-congressional party of the North and South. It is strong, widely extended, and malignant. It will be a powerful foe to fight. But after all it is a prejudice, and only a prejudice. It is destined to disappear before what the president of the convention so happily termed the "advancing requirements of the age." We say that the only path of honor and safety for the Republican party of the South is to take this prejudice boldly by the horns—to meet it in a square fight, and vanquish it now.

Political Personalities.

"One way to kill a measure, is to kill the man who advocates it." This is the reason assigned for the intense personalities indulged in, in our present political campaign. But we submit that facts do not justify the correctness of the statement. In the American Revolution, no man was more violently assailed than Washington, and in the late revolution, no one was more bitterly denounced than Lincoln. Yet the measures advocated by these eminent statesmen were triumphantly successful, while their names are dearer to the American people for the very calumnies reported against them. In this country, political slanders do not injure a politician, for the reason that the people understand that slanders are the politician's weapons, and are freely used. One of the chief evils of these gross personalities is, the great questions at issue are lost sight of; men and not measures receive the greater prominence. Has not the time come for the press of the city to cease these offensive personal attacks, and commence the discussion of the grave questions involved in reconstruction? The press should give direction to the acts of the Constitutional Convention, now in session in this city. Fundamental principles should be announced; national history should be rehearsed, and recognized authorities quoted. This we hold to be the business of the press, and not the perpetual twaddle of personal calumnies now given to the public.

The School Day Visitor,

An illustrated monthly magazine for young people, is received. It will be found both interesting and instructive. It will make a fine Christmas present to any of your little friends. Order it to their address from the publishers, J. W. Daughaday & Co., 424 Walnut st., Philadelphia, Pa. Price $1 25 a year.

Notwithstanding the very poor yield of sugar lands this year parties are offering and paying enormous rents for sugar lands in this parish. We know of several plantations, none of which have yielded a hundred hogsheads of sugar during several past years, for which from $4000 to $5000 rent per year has been offered, and what is strange in some cases refused.—Houma Guard.

Clinton and Baton Rouge.

Thursday, November 21, we left New Orleans for the above named places. We were delayed some ten hours on the river by fog, and did not reach Baton Rouge till Friday afternoon. Yellow fever prevailing both at Baton Rouge and Clinton, had suspended public travel between those places, and we were compelled, at an enormous price, to hire private conveyance to the latter place, distance 32 miles from Baton Rouge; and to make sure of getting through before night, we started Saturday morning before breakfast, and got nothing to eat till 1 o'clock, P. M., when a dinner for self and horse cost $2. We were repeatedly notified, by the way, of the epidemic at Clinton, and warned against going there. The morning was cloudy, some wind, with dense mist and fog, and having not yet fully recovered from the effects of yellow fever ourselves, and being without breakfast, we felt the damp, chilly, malarious atmosphere very sensibly.

The night before we left Baton Rouge, the best horse in the livery stable from which we hired our conveyance, had been stolen by two thieves, who took the Clinton road, and the pursuers traveled with us all day. They were well armed. We will here state that the country is infested with horse thieves, highwaymen and assassins, who astonish people by their boldness. At the suggestion of a friend, we left an extra change and "valuables" in safe keeping at Baton Rouge. On reaching Clinton, we found that one of the thieves had lodged there the night before, and the other had stayed, with the horse, just out of town. No further trace of them could be found, and they escaped, as do most of them. These desperadoes are well organized, and it is evident, have aiders and abettors in every principal town; hence the difficulty of arresting and punishing them.

We found the town nearly evacuated by the white inhabitants, who, more frightened than endangered had fled to the country from the epidemic. All business was suspended in consequence, and a Sabbath-like quiet prevailed, and gloom and solemnity reigned. In proportion to numbers, the fever has been five times more fatal in Clinton than it was in New Orleans. Several had died, among them our whilom friend and fellow-soldier, M. B. Smith, postmaster.

We had written two letters apprising the people of our coming, and from Baton Rouge sent a telegram, but none of them were received; and only Saturday night remained to give notice of the quarterly meeting. We preached Sabbath morning to a fair congregation. At 3 o'clock P. M. held conference, while brother Nailor, a local preacher, administered the Word to the people. There are five appointments, and a total of membership and on trial of 484 was reported by the pastor. At night we preached to a full house, and administered the sacraments, and 21 persons joined the church, making a total of 505. We bade the people farewell, intending to leave early next morning Monday morning, at daylight, a heavy rain set in, accompanied with high wind and hail. Very soon thereafter we were called up by brother Marshall Smith (a local preacher) and lady, who had driven six miles in an open carriage through the storm, and at that early hour, to be lawfully married! They had lived together for years as husband and wife. He had been improperly licensed last year, and we would not renew his license till the marriage law was complied with. This was the first quarterly meeting he had been able to attend this year. He was determined the disability should be removed. So eager are the people to meet the demands of law, when once they are thoroughly understood. The ceremony was soon performed, and they returned home rejoicing, though as wet as if they had been immersed.

Time was precious; and notwithstanding the rain and mud, we had to start for Baton Rouge. As we returned the people were eager to hear of the stage of the epidemic in Clinton, but as we had been "in the midst of the plague," they were afraid to approach us nearer than "calling distance." And we had to travel well into the afternoon before we could find a family brave enough to give us dinner! Those residing in towns and cities have little idea of the "panic" produced in the country by the epidemic. The moral effect, if not quite superstitious. Scarcely more awed were the Israelites, as they stood trembling at the base of Sinai, while God's thunder and "the voice of the trumpet waxed louder and louder," than are these country people, as they listen to the tidings of the plague, which they regard as the direct visitation of the Almighty. They, at least, "learn righteousness" while His judgments are "abroad in the land." Would it were so in the cities! It certainly should be.

We reached Baton Rouge at sunset, and at night preached and administered the sacraments to a large congregation. Tuesday morning we held quarterly conference. We have not time or space to speak as we ought of the work brother Hayward has done this year. His little flock have nobly sustained him, and deserve great praise. He, too, has five appointments, and nearly 500 members and probationers. The little society in Baton Rouge alone, has expended over one thousand dollars upon the unfinished church, and incidental expenses. Many of the people who had been drawn or driven into the A. M. E. Church are having their eyes opened, and are returning to their "first love" and their loyalty to the "mother church." We are stronger as a church, to-day, in Baton Rouge, for the trial through which we have passed. Our redemption has come; we are justified in the eyes of the people from all the false accusations made against us, and are going on to perfection; and the people are going with us. Two local preachers, brothers Peter Clark and Henry Grimes, were recommended to the traveling connection, and for election to deacon's orders. The two circuits report nearly 1000 members and five churches. They have done well.

At sundown Tuesday, November 26, we repaired to the river to await the steamer for New Orleans, hourly expected. Love feast was held at night, but we could not attend for fear of missing the boat. The steamer did not come, and we spent the weary hours writing up our journal, in private correspondence, and finally writing this communication. It is now Wednesday morning, November 27, 3 o'clock and 20 minutes, and no boat yet. But the night has given us ten working hours, which have been diligently used. The little trip to Clinton and back to Baton Rouge only cost us $31 50! Add expenses here, and from New Orleans to Baton Rouge and back, and it foots up $57 60 for the trip!

At 8 o'clock A. M. we took passage on the Iberville, a coast packet, and at midnight we had reached Donaldsonville! We arrived at New Orleans next day, November 28, at 8 o'clock A. M. On the boat we met Dr. Miller, of the Church South, late President of Centenary College, at Jackson, La. He is much more kind and liberal in spirit, than many others of the leading men of his church, but not very hopeful of the future, either for the church or the country. B.

A Trip to Alabama.

The Colored People—Their Churches—Schools—Convention.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 26, 1867.
Editors of the New Orleans Advocate:

Having watched with anxious eye the progress of reconstruction in the State of Mississippi up to a week ago, I concluded, at the request of many friends, to visit Mobile and Montgomery, Ala. The health of Mobile is greatly improved, and the shipments of cotton from the States of Alabama and Mississippi have created quite a revival in business. The colored population appears to be equal to that of the white, and this class of people carry on most of the mechanical and menial labor; they are as busy as bees in the hive, and are saving their earnings to a very great extent. Scores of houses in the suburbs of the city, on their own lots, are being erected by colored men. Several are very largely engaged in business, having invested a vast amount of capital.

Several private schools are in operation, taught by persons of Southern birth and training. While they possess many excellent features, they by no means adequately meet the wants of the large and growing colored population of the city.

There are nine colored churches in the city, six of which are Methodist; five of the Zion A. M. E. branch, and one of the A. M. E. The former have about twenty-six hundred members, the latter has only thirty-three members. The colored religious community have suffered greatly by fire, the large church on St. Louis street being burned to the ground, and the Zion being twice destroyed. The colored people are sadly in want of church accommodations in the city of Mobile, for notwithstanding their population is about thirty-three thousand, there are not church accommodations for over four thousand five hundred. The colored Methodists, under the Zion connection, exhibit much regard for the "old mother Church," and treated me, as its representative, with a welcome I had not anticipated. Two of their pastors—Revs. E. D. Taylor and W. G. Strong—are men of rare ability and deep piety, and look to the work of the M E. Church in the South as the most powerful lever now in operation for the religious elevation of the colored people.

The establishment of the M. E. Church in Mobile, without conflicting with any other denomination, would certainly fill a great want now manifest in the insufficiency of church accommodations.

Leaving Mobile on Saturday, at 2 o'clock P. M., after a long and tedious ride over land and water, I reached Montgomery at 5 A. M. Sabbath morning, and preached to overflowing congregations at the Methodist and Baptist Churches. Here many of the colored Methodist Protestants, who are without a house, and worship in a meeting-house used by the whites, would gladly welcome the M. E. Church.

The convention now in session, of course, engrosses public attention. A glance at the convention—a few moments' attendance on its deliberations, would convince any one of the wickedness of the opposition press, which represents it as composed of men incompetent to legislate. Fourteen of the one hundred delegates are colored. Among the whites are those who hitherto have been considered among the best men in the State. Indeed, the bar, bench, pulpit and press are all ably represented in it. It is doing its work thoroughly and well, having stamped infamy on rebellion, thrown up safeguards against it, and walled with impregnable bulwarks the enfranchisement of the colored race. The delegates exhibit great courage, and have faith in the patriotism of the North. Governor Patton, who was elected by rebels, takes much interest in the proceedings of the convention; everything indicates that he is in full sympathy with the Radicals. He has been in public life over twenty-five years, is possessed of vast wealth, and has the reputation of being a great financier and successful political manager. Yesterday morning, I attended the colored Sabbath schools, and heard him deliver an excellent address to the children. He had dropped in of his own account. He is a faithful Christian. Rev. Mr. Avery, one of the stationed preachers in what is properly the South Mississippi district, has won good opinions by his efficient services as assistant secretary of the convention.

It is a fact worthy of note, that two of the colored delegates were nominated and elected mainly by white men. One of them is Mr. Rapier, a large planter on the Tennessee River.

Returning to the subject of the organization of the M. E. Church, it does seem that the promptings of patriotism and philanthropy, to say nothing of Christian devotion, would create an unbounded zeal for its extension. The colored man of the South must be religiously educated. An element—an extrinsic instrumentality, must for a long time be actively at work among the colored Methodists, in order to promote the religious development we all so much desire. The fitness of this extrinsic instrumentality is not the result of sable tinge, but of a clear head and pure heart, to which may be added the training consequent from Christian and intelligent association.

Nothing is clearer, to my mind, than that in the South God has most specially committed to the M. E. Church most largely the destiny of the colored race—a work that has as great claim upon her as that of the Indies, Japan, or Chili. Thank God, she has indicated a purpose to lay hold of it with giant hands.

James Lynch.

The New York Tribune says that the express war is probably near its close, the managers of the various companies having under consideration a scheme for consolidation to which the objections are so small that it will probably be adopted. The impediments are the terms demanded by the Adams and Merchants' Union. These companies being still in good fighting condition, with a profitable business, reasonably ask that these facts should be considered in Constitutional Convention.

Fifth Day—Friday, November 29.

The convention was called to order at ten minutes past eleven o'clock by Hon. George W. Reagan in the absence of Judge Taliaferro, who proposed that Hon. J. H. Ingraham be appointed temporary president of the convention.

The motion was carried, and Mr. Ingraham took the chair.

Prayer was then offered in French by the Rev. D. Mestre, of the Union congregation.

The roll was called, eighty-eight members answering to their names.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted.

Mr. Vandegriff presented the following:

Resolved, That Major General Winfield S. Hancock and staff be respectfully invited to visit the convention, and that a committee of seven be appointed by the chair to wait upon the major general and inform him of this action of this convention.

Mr. Smith moved to amend by inserting "and his excellency Governor Flanders."

The amendment was accepted, and the resolution passed its second reading.

Mr. Demarest presented the following:

Resolved, That all commissioners of the recent election under the reconstruction bill do receive the same per diem as members of the convention.

Mr. Wickliffe opposed the resolution on the ground that it was the duty of the commanding general to pay the per diem of commissioners of election.

Mr. Lynch moved to refer to the committee on contingent expenses. Carried.

Mr. Vandegriff moved that the sergeant at-arms be instructed to procure four newspapers daily for each member of the convention, such papers as each member shall select.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay on the table. Carried.

Mr. Newsham moved that the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to place seats in the lobby for the use of visitors to the convention. Adopted.

Mr. Underwood moved that each member of the convention be supplied with copies of each issue of the REPUBLICAN, Tribune, Advocate, and Picayune. Laid on the table.

Mr. Tinchant moved that the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to cause the United States flag to be kept flying from the flagstaff upon the building from daylight until dark, daily, during the session of the convention. Adopted.

Judge Taliaferro appeared and took his seat.

Mr. Blackburn presented the following:

Resolved, That every member of this convention have the privilege to invite a friend within the bar and to his desk.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Newsham moved that the recent removals by General Mower of state officials who had been chosen to their respective offices as a reward for their services to the rebellion meet the approval of this convention as wise and patriotic, and that attested copies of this motion as adopted be telegraphed at once to General Grant, Senator Wade, and Speaker Colfax. Adopted.

Mr. Newsham moved that the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to procure daily for each member of the convention a copy of each loyal paper published in the city.

After a prolonged discussion the whole matter was laid on the table.

Mr. Reagan submitted the following:

WHEREAS, The peculiar and unprecedented nature of the new element which is now merging into legitimate form is destined soon to become the law and law-making power of the state; and

Whereas, The dilapidated condition of all the resources of the state by the ravages of war has greatly obstructed many of the avenues of information; and

Whereas, It is reasonably apprehended that great effort will be made to prevent the adoption of the constitution to be submitted by the convention to the people, by the combined powers of the conservative press, by great machinations, and by open violence: and

Whereas, It is deemed by this convention indispensably necessary that all the sources and instrumentalities within the control of this body should be used for the purpose of effecting a thorough dissemination of our proceedings and the result of our deliberations among the people of this state, therefore be it

Resolved, That the proprietors of the New Orleans REPUBLICAN be and they are hereby employed to publish regularly the proceedings of this convention, for which they shall be paid by the state on a warrant from the convention, signed by the president and secretary, a compensation pro rata with the established custom of printing.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Belden moved to take up the order of the day. Adopted.

The convention therefore proceeded with the election of assistant secretary.

Messrs. Belden, Brown, and Butler were appointed tellers.

The ballot resulted as follows:

Thomas B. Waters received 45 votes, Justin Sarta 39, H. Carstens 12, J. M. Wells 1.

Under the rules, which provide that on the second ballot a plurality of votes shall elect, Mr. Waters was declared elected.

Mr. Ludeling called up the resolution of Wednesday providing for the drawing of seats by lot, the drawing to be done by delegations. Adopted.

Mr. Pinchback moved that the convention take a recess of fifteen minutes. Adopted.

At a quarter past one o'clock the convention was again called to order, and the drawing for seats commenced. The secretary had prepared slips on which the representative districts were written. These were placed in a hat, and therefrom the sergeant-at-arms first drew out "First district of Orleans." In about fifteen minutes the six colored and three white delegates from the first district had ranged themselves in the front tier to the left of the speaker, absorbing the whole row. "Third district of Orleans," next called, took their seats—five of them—at the speaker's right, in the front row. East and West Feliciana—three delegates—retained their former seats. Orleans Right Bank was called next, and its delegation—the solitary gentleman from Algiers—took its seat at the head of the second row on the left. Second district of Orleans came next, and its delegation took the second row from the front on the speaker's right.

Mr. Wickliffe took the head of the row, feeling, probably, that his "duties to his constitutents" would require him to come oftener upon the floor than any other member of the delegation. The delegates from St. Charles and St. John took seats on the left of the Algiers delegation; Ascension next. Four seats back on the left, side by side in a row, sat Barrett, Ludeling, Crawford, Fuller, and Edwards; and just behind them are McMillan, Lynch, and Ingraham; on the extreme left and rear are Gould and Steele, from Tensas. Natchitoches was the last parish whose delegates had the choice of seats.

The president announced the following standing committees:

Committee on Legislative Department—J. L. Barrett, chairman; John Lynch, T. S. Crawford, J. Deslonde, Solomon Moses, A. Bertonneau, S. B. Packard.

On the Judiciary—J. T. Ludeling, chairman; R. Waples, A. N. Gould, W. R. Meadows, T. P. Harrison, G. W. Deering, W. H. Cooley.

On Contingent Expenses—H. Bonseigneur, chairman; S. Belden, M. Vidal, J. B. Esnard, A. N. Gould.

On Draft of the Constitution—W. H. Cooley, chairman; T. S. Crawford, John T. Ludeling, Rufus Waples, W. L. McMillan, Charles Leroy, P. F. Valfroit, J. A. H. Roberts, J. H. Ingraham.

The president appointed the following pages to the convention: Lewis E. Daniell, Alexander Armstrong, Edward Simpson, and G. Duparte.

Mr. Wickliffe refused to serve as a member of the committee on enrollment, and demanded that his name be stricken from the list. His request was complied with by the unanimous vote of the convention.

Mr. Ludeling announced that he had received a message from the Hon. Thomas P. Harrison, member elect from Morehouse parish, stating that he was sick and unable to attend, and asking to be excused from attendance. The request was granted.

Mr. McMillan asked permission to introduce the following bill, which was made the special order for Monday, and one hundred copies ordered to be printed:

Be it ordained by the people of the state of Louisiana in convention assembled, That the act of the legislature of this state, approved the 26th of March, 1867, entitled "An act to provide means for the construction of levees by the issue of bonds of the state for four millions of dollars, and to provide for the redemption of said bonds," is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the said bonds, when issued, whether signed by the persons then acting as governor and secretary of state of the state, or by the persons now acting and discharging the duties of governor and secretary of state, shall have full force and effect, and the faith of the state for their redemption as pledged and provided in said act shall forever be held valid and of full effect.

Mr. Isabelle presented the following.

WHEREAS, The disasters visited upon the people of Louisiana by the overflow, the epidemic, the disorganized condition of money matters in this commonwealth, have caused much suffering in the cotton growing community, and especially among the freedmen; and

Whereas, The tax on cotton now enforced by the United States government falls heavy upon the poorer classes of our people; therefore be it,

Resolved, By the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, that while we are willing and anxious to support our national government, yet we have experienced that our people are unable to pay the heavy tax collected on cotton raised in this state; therefore we petition and urge upon congress to repeal or modify the said tax on cotton.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions and petition be immediately sent to the president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives of the United States.

Adopted, and passed on its second reading under a suspension of the rules.

At about half-past three o'clock the convention adjourned till Saturday morning at eleven o'clock.

Sixth Day—Saturday, November 30.

President Taliaferro called the convention to order at eleven o'clock.

The roll was called and sixty-eight members answered to their names.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read, amended, and approved.

Mr. Reagan submitted a resolution providing for an amendment of rule forty-seven by authorizing the appointment of a warrant clerk and postmaster.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by adding enrolling clerk. Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Wickliffe submitted a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of seven on "Style and Arrangement," to give form and expression to all articles of the constitution; also

A resolution prohibiting any expenditures without the order of the convention.

By Mr. R. H Isabelle. A resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee of five on revising the state constitution.

By Mr. Smith. A resolution to appoint a committee of three to investigate and report upon the condition of the levees of the state, and report action is necessary to bring to the attention of congress.

By Mr. Cromwell. A resolution expressing the sense of the convention as opposed to general amnesty of those lately in arms against the government.

By Mr. Wickliffe. A resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of seven on federal relations.

All laid over under the rules.

Mr. Moses moved that two messengers be elected to perform such duties as the convention should require or direct. Laid on the table.

Mr. Cooley moved to repeal the vote of Monday which provided for the opening of each session of the convention with prayer. Laid on the table.

Mr. Blackburn presented a resolution that the first great and paramount duty of this convention was to frame a new constitution for the state, and that all minor business be dispensed with till this object be accomplished. Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Ingraham submitted the following drafts of ordinances, which received reference to their appropriate committees:

To the committee on the judiciary:

EXEMPTIONS.

SECTION 1. The personal property of every resident of this state, to consist of such property only as shall be designated by law, shall be exempted to the amount of five hundred dollars from sale on execution or other final process of any court, issued for the collection of any debt contracted after the adoption of this constitution.

SEC. 2. Every homestead of eighty acres of land and the dwelling houses thereon, and the appurtenances to be selected by the owner thereof and not included in any town plat, city, or village, or recorded town plat, or such parts of lots as shall equal thereto and the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances owned and occupied by any resident of the state, not exceeding in value one thousand dollars, shall be exempt from forced sale on execution or any other final process from a court for any debt contracted after the adoption of this constitution such mortgage or other alienation of such land by the owner thereof, if a married man, shall not be valid without the signature of the wife to the same.

MATRIMONY.

Section 1. All persons who were formerly debarred by slavery from legally contracting matrimony in this state, who have lived together as husband and wife for three consecutive years prior to the adoption of this constitution shall be deemed after the adoption of this constitution, in all courts of justice as husband and wife, and their offspring as their legal heirs as though said disability had never existed.

To the committee on the Militia:

SECTION 1. The militia shall be composed of all able bodied male citizens (except such as are disfranchised by this constitution) residents of this state, being eighteen years of age, and under the age of forty years, and shall be enrolled in militia, and perform militia duty in such manner, not incompatible with the constitution and laws of the United States, as may be prescribed by the general assembly of Louisiana. But persons whose religious opinions and conscientious scruples forbid them to bear arms, shall be relieved from doing so on producing to the proper authorities satisfactory proof that they are thus conscientious.

SEC. 2. The general assembly shall provide at its first session after the adoption of this constitution, and from time to time thereafter as the exigency may require, for organizing, equipping, and disciplining the militia in such a manner, not incompatible with the laws of the United States, as shall be most effective to repel invasion and suppress insurrection, and shall pass such laws as shall promote the formation of volunteer militia associations in the city of New Orleans and in every parish, and to secure them such privileges or assistance as may afford them effectual encouragement.

SEC. 3. There shall be an adjutant general, who shall be appointed by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate. He shall hold his office at the pleasure of the governor; shall perform such duties, and shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by law.

Mr. Wilson submitted an ordinance providing for the organization of the militia. Received proper reference.

Mr. Wickliffe submitted the following ordinance, which was referred to the committee on public education:

ARTICLE 1. The legislature shall establish free public schools throughout the state, and shall provide for their support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state, between the ages of six and eighteen, shall be admitted to the public schools in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools established for any race.

ART. 2. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of this constitution.

ART. 3. The superintendent of public education shall have the supervision and general control of all private schools throughout the state.

ART. 4. No person shall establish a private school unless licensed by the state, and all such schools shall be taxed as other professions. The legislature shall make laws governing this entire subject in accordance with the spirit of the resolution.

ART. 5. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

ART. 6. There shall be elected a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed, and his salary shall be $5000 per year, payable quarterly.

ART. 7. The proceeds of all lands heretofore, and that which may hereafter be granted by the United States to this state for the use or purpose of the public schools of the state, and the proceeds of the estates of deceased persons to which the state may become entitled by law, shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent., which interest, together with the interest of the trust fund deposited with the state by the United States under the act of congress approved June 23, 1836, and all the rents of the unsold lands shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

ART. 8. All monies accruing from the sales which have been or may be hereafter made of any lands heretofore granted by the United States to this state for the use of a specific seminary of learning, or from any kind of donation or bequest that may hereafter be made for that purpose, shall be and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which at six per cent per annum shall be appropriated to the exclusive benefit of the same; and no law shall be made diverting said funds to any other use than to the establishment and benefit of said seminary of learning. The legislature shall have power to raise funds for the organization and support of said seminary of learning in such manner as it may deem best.

ART. 9. No appropriation shall be made by the legislature for the support of any private school or institution of learning whatever.

ART. 10. A university shall be established and maintained in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of five faculties, to wit: One of law, one of medicine, one of the natural sciences, one of letters, and one of industrial science. The legislature shall provide by law for its organization and maintenance: Provided, That all departments of this institution of learning shall be open in common to all students capable of matriculating, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. No rules or regulations shall be made by the trustees, faculties, or other officers of said institution, nor shall any laws be made by the legislature violating the letter or spirit of this article, under penalty of the annulling of the charter of said institution.

ART. 11. All colleges, seminaries, or schools of what nature soever, whether literary, legal, medical, military, or individual, authorized by the legislature, and under the control of this state, shall be open in common to all classes of students, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition.

Mr. Packard moved that the official printer be instructed to furnish constitutions of all the free states, in pamphlet form, for the use of the convention.

Mr. Crane opposed the motion on the ground of expense, and that the proposed work was one that would establish a bad precedent for a radical convention.

The motion was laid on the table.

The orders of the day were reached, and the motion of Mr. Ragan to publish the proceedings of the convention in the REPUBLICAN came up for disposition.

Mr. Crane made a violent and vigorous speech in opposition to the proposed measure, and appealed to the colored men in the convention to support the organ of their own race. He accused the REPUBLICAN of copying information from rebel papers. He came here to represent the colored men who sent him here, and he should stand by them and theirs. He claimed that his career was a remarkable one. He believed in enfranchising the blacks in 1864, but the convention of 1864 did not, and so they exiled Louisiana from the Union. He claimed that he was a sentinel on the watchtower of freedom, and he would shield the interests of his constituents from their enemies in the guise of friends. He thought the REPUBLICAN had slandered him. He was an injured man. He said that the cause of liberty was about to be destroyed through the machinations of pretended friends. He felt that he had said enough, and that a proposition of this kind time lost in discussing such matters already, and moved to lay the motion on the table.

The ayes and nays were called for, with the following result:

Yea: Messrs. Antoine, Barrott, Bertonneau, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Cuney, Demarest, Depasseau, Deslonde, Douglass, Duparte, Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, Fuller, Gardiner, Harris, Isabelle R. V., Martin, Meadows, Morris, Moses, Mushaway, Myers, Poindexter, Pollard, Riggs, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schawb, Smith, Halfroit, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—42.

Nays: Baker, Belden, Blackburn, Blandin, Cromwell, Dearing, Deslonde J, Donato, Drinkard, Francois, Ferguson, Gair, Gould, Harper, Hempstead, Ingraham, Jackson, Jones, Kelso, Landers, Lauge, Leroy, Lewis J, Lewis R., Lynch, McLeran, McMillan, Murrel, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Snaer, Scott, Snider, Steele, Tinchant, Twitchell, Underwood, Vandergriff, Vidal—46.

Consequently the motion to lay on the table was lost.

Mr. Reagan thought the REPUBLICAN newspaper was fully capable of vindicating itself among all loyal and intelligent men. He did not, in his motion, propose to curtail the perquisites of the official organ, but simply to extend information of the action of the convention through such a channel as would cause its general dissemination throughout the state. There are men who charge that this convention is not competent to perform its duties. The speaker wanted the people to knows that the convention would be governed by judgment and discretion, without reference to race, color, or previous condition. The sarcastic gentleman from Orleans has, perhaps, good reasons for offering the adoption of the resolution before the house, because the paper in question has made one or two references to the past record of certain individual members of this convention. The speaker saw no economy in allowing the constitution to fall to the ground for lack fo sufficient knowledge concerning it among the masses of the people.

Mr. Bertonneau opposed the resolution on the ground of economy.

Mr. Belden moved to refer the whole matter to a special committee of five.

Mr. Tinchant moved to amend by referring to the committee on printing.

Mr. Wickliffe opposed referring any matter to a packed committee, which he asserted was the case with all the committees in the convention. He said he did not care for any intellectual baby sitting upon an editorial tripod; and said something about curs barking at a gentleman. Then he went on boldly in opposition to the measure of Mr. Ragan. He thought the New York Herald, which was publishing the proceedings of this convention without any compensation, would give publicity to its work to the four corners of the world. He said something about economy, and appealed to his colored constituents not to let the odium of adopting this resolution rest upon them; if they did this, they would receive the approbrium which attached to the convention of '64—that of being thieves and plunderers.

He concluded by asking, in behalf of the success of the Radical party, that the resolution be voted down.

Mr. Smith moved to amend by adding the name of the German Gazette in this city.

Mr. Newsham thought the convention could do better than to discuss the rights and character of newspapers. The convention, in his opinion, could find something better to do. The question is not, shall the printing be taken from the New Orleans Tribune. The work has been awarded to it, and it belongs to it. But shall all information be restricted to the columns of that sheet? Is there any reason why the great REPUBLICAN newspaper should not have a little bit of what the Tribune has a great deal of? Certainly, on the matter of economy, the speeches made by these gentlemen here on the other side cost the state more than the bill can possibly amount to for printing the proceedings in the newspapers.

A motion was made to include the Homer Iliad and St. Landry Progress.

Mr. Ludeling stated that he did not come here to build a party, but was sent by his constituents to help make a constitution. He thought more time had been absorbed already in irrelevant speeches than would have been required to make the constitution. He moved to refer to the committee on printing.

Mr. Belden favored the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Bonsigneur, as chairman of the committee on contingent expenses, claimed the right to have the resolution referred to his committee.

The chair decided that the subject should be referred to the committee on printing.

Mr. Wickliffe appealed from the decision of the chair. The chair was sustained by a nearly unanimous vote.

Mr. Lynch of Carroll submitted the following:

WHEREAS, At a recent meeting of the board of levee commissioners of this state it was decided to send a commission consisting of three members of the board to Washington city for the purpose of presenting to congress the knowledge of the impoverished condition of our state, and the absolute necessity which exists for asking the indorsement of the general government upon the bonds of the state issued for levee purposes. Therefore be it

Resolved, by the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, That the object of the commission appointed by the state board of levee commissioners is hereby approved and indorsed, and the assistance of the general government urgently implored in aiding us to repair and rebuild our levees.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Smith called up his resolution of this morning to appoint three members of the convention a special committee to consider the condition of the levees, ascertain what had been done by the commissioners as to bonds, etc., and what action by the convention is expedient, and to report thereon to the convention on Monday, pending which—

Mr. Belden, at two o'clock, moved to adjourn till eleven o'clock on Monday. Carried.

Seventh Day—Monday, December 2.

President Taliaferro called the convention to order at eleven o'clock.

The roll was called, seventy-one members answering to their names.

Prayer was offered by Judge Fisk, of Texas.

The minutes of the previous day were read. Amendments were suggested thereon by sundry members, and the minutes were accepted.

Mr. Crane submitted the following:

Resolved, That it be a standing order of the convention that the convention shall every day at — o'clock resolve itself into a committee of the whole convention, to consider therein all reports from standing and special committees, on such propositions as shall be referred to or made from said committees.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Smith called up his resolution of Saturday:

Resolved, That a special committee, to be composed of three members, be appointed by the chairman, to consider and report to this convention the present condition of the levees in the state, what progress has been made by the existing board of levee commissioners in negotiating the bonds appropriated by the late legislature for levee purposes, and also what action is expedient for this convention to adopt in relation thereto, and to lay before congress the tee be instructed, if practicable, to bring in their report on next Thursday.

Action thereon was postponed.

Mr. Wickliffe introduced a series of resolutions having in view the raising of funds for the payment of the expenses of the convention by means of a direct taxation on all species of real property, calling, business; a poll tax authorizing the appointment of collectors, etc.:

Be it ordained by the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, That in order to raise sufficient funds to defray the necessary expenses to be incurred in carrying out the will of the congress of the United States, as expressed in the various reconstruction bills passed by that honorable body for the government of the states lately in rebellion against the federal government:

1. A direct tax shall be and is hereby levied of per cent on the valuation of all real estate of each individual, succession, company, or corporation in the state, to be fixed by the roll of assessment as made by the state of Louisiana for the year 1867 on the same species of property.

2. A direct tax shall be and is hereby levied of per cent on all personal property of each individual, succession, company, or corporation, to be fixed as far as practicable by the aforesaid assessment rolls, and where said rolls are impracticable, to be fixed by the board of collectors of each parish or district as hereinafter provided for: Provided, That the property of no person shall be taxed, whether real or personal, that does not amount in the aggregate to over two hundred dollars.

3. A direct tax shall be, and is hereby levied on all professions, callings, or occupations, for the same amount and governed by the same rules as those fixed by the state authorities for the year 1867.

4. A poll tax on each male person over twenty-one years of age, of one dollar.

5. All taxes hereby imposed shall be payable in greenbacks or United States national currency.

6. A board of collectors shall be appointed by the committee of contingent expenses to consist of three members for each country parish, and the same number for each municipal district of the parish of Orleans; one of each board being named as chairman of said committee, whose duty it shall be to collect all taxes herein named and levied, and make their returns to the committee of contingent expenses within thirty days from the date hereinafter specified for commencing their duties as collectors.

7. The said committee shall fix the day on which the collectors of said taxes shall begin, which shall not be longer than thirty days from the passage of this ordinance, and shall cause notice of the same to be published for ten consecutive days prior to the day of commencing the collection in the New Orleans Tribune, the New Orleans REPUBLICAN, the New Orleans Bee, the New Orleans Crescent, the New Orleans Picayune, and the New Orleans German Gazette.

8. All collectors appointed under this ordinance shall give bond with real estate security to the president of this convention in the sum —— thousand dollars, and shall receive the same commission for their services as is allowed by the United States authorities for similar services.

9. All collectors found guilty of fraud, perjury, or malfeasance in office shall be subject to fine and imprisonment at the discretion of this convention, and their securities held good for all defalcations of their principals.

10. The said collectors are hereby empowered with all necessary authority to collect the taxes as herein provided for, and to enforce their collection by summary process, to seize and sell at public auction all property liable to taxation under this ordinance after giving ten days notice either in one public newspaper in the parish, or posting the same at the courthouse door.

They shall also have power to call upon the posse comitatus to assist in carrying out the provisions of this ordinance, and to imprison any one interfering, or attempting to interfere with them in the discharge of their duties.

11. All courts and officers of courts throughout the state are hereby forbidden to interfere with the said collectors in the discharge of their duties under this ordinance, by any legal process whatever, under penalty of impeachment, and fine or imprisonment.

12. The chairmen of the various boards of collectors shall, as fast as possible, turn over all moneys collected by their respective boards to the state treasurer, and take his receipt therefor, indorsed by the chairman of the committee on contingent expenses and the president of this convention.

13. The state treasurer shall not pay out any of the funds collected by virtue of this ordinance to any person, or for any purpose, except upon the warrant of the chairman of the committee on contingent expenses, indorsed by the president and secretary of this convention, in accordance with such special resolutions as may be passed by this convention.

14. Persons purchasing real property at the sales of any collectors appointed by virtue of this ordinance, shall be put in full and complete possession of the purchased property and maintained therein for the space of two years from the day of such sale; after which time such property shall revert to the individual, succession, company, or corporation for whose taxes it was sold. Those purchasing personal property shall become entitled in fee simple, and be protected against all claimants.

15. The collectors shall never seize real property except no personal property can be found, and except the personal property is insufficient to secure the tax hereby assessed.

16. No privileges, exemptions, or prescriptions as heretofore established by law shall have any force against the provisions of this ordinance. All rights, credits, and titles shall be liable to seizure for the collection of the taxes herein levied, all laws heretofore and now in force to the contrary notwithstanding.

17. There shall be a special committee appointed by the president of this convention, to be styled "the tax judicial committee," whose duty it shall be to decide all points of law and equity arising under this ordinance, and to whom all cases of difficulty arising out of the provisions and enforcement of this ordinance shall be referred for final settlement.

Mr. Wickliffe moved their reference to the committee on contingent expenses. Carried.

Mr. Ingraham moved to reconsider as he thought the reference a singular one, and desired the reference to the committee on finance. Lost.

Mr. Lynch submitted the following:

Resolved, That the delegates to this convention be and they are hereby allowed eight dollars per day for thirty days, and the same mileage allowed to the members of the last legislature of this state; but no pay shall be allowed to delegates for the time which this convention may remain in session after the expiration of thirty days.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Ingraham submitted an ordinance on the subject of suffrage, which was referred to the committee on general provisions.

Mr. Newsham presented a resolution recommending to General Hancock the removal from office of persons in the state of Louisiana, disfranchised by the reconstruction laws of congress, and the appointment of loyal citizens in their places. Laid over under the rules.

The orders of the day were then reached.

The resolution of Mr. Smith in relation to the levees came up, and was adopted.

Mr. Ragan's resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That rule forty-seven of this convention be and is hereby so amended as to read after the words minute clerk, warrant clerk, and after the words official printer, a postmaster.

Laid on the table—50 yeas, 22 nays.

Mr. Wickliffe's resolution, proposing the appointment of a committee of seven on style and arrangement, was withdrawn by consent.

Mr. Wickliffe's resolution as follows:

Resolved, That nothing whatever shall be purchased by the sergeant-at-arms or any one else for the use of this convention, nor shall any appropriations be allowed for any actual or contingent expenses unless duly authorized by a regular vote of this convention, providing that a standing committee of thirteen shall be appointed by the chair to be known as the committee on mode of revising the state constitution, was adopted.

These resolutions of Mr. Cromwell came up in their order and were referred to the appropriate committees:

1. Resolved, That we, the representatives of the loyal people of the state of Louisiana in convention assembled, are thankful to Almighty God for the success of the Radical Republican party in this state. We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal, endowed with certain inalienable rights, and therefore the law should afford equal protection to all in the exercise of their civil, public, political, and religious rights, and insure perfect equality under the law.

2. That this state shall be governed and controled and directed by those who have served it in times of its peril, and who seek to preserve it with friendly hands from its foes.

3. That rebellion is disfranchisement, and armed attempts to overthrow our government to secure negro slavery is treasonable expatriation, and we do indorse the acts of the thirty-ninth and fortieth congresses, and will reconstruct Louisiana upon the basis of the military reconstruction bill.

4. That we are friendly to universal liberty, but no universal amnesty, but the continuance of disfranchisement of all congress has, and all others we may think necessary, for the safety of our common country, and the freedom of the negro race.

Mr. Wickliffe's resolution as follows came up:

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed by the president of this convention, to whom shall be referred the subjects of a preamble for the constitution, emancipation, the distribution of powers, and federal relations, with instructions to report as early as possible, such articles as may be deemed proper to incorporate in the constitution on those subjects also.

Mr. Cooley moved to lay the resolution on the table. Carried.

Mr. Blackburn's resolution:

Resolved, As the wish of this convention, that its first, great, and paramount duty is to frame a state constitution to be presented to the people for their ratification or rejection; and that all minor business be dispensed with till this much needed work is disposed of.

Was laid on the table on motion of Mr. Smith.

Mr. Lynch's resolution of Saturday last came up:

WHEREAS, At a recent meeting of the board of levee commissioners of this state it was decided to send a commission consisting of three members of the board to Washington city for the purpose of presenting to congress the knowledge of the impoverished condition of our state, and the absolute necessity which exists for asking the indorsement of the general government upon the bonds of the state issued for levee purposes; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, that the object of the commission appointed by the state board of levee commissioners is hereby approved and indorsed, and the assistance of the general government urgently implored in aiding us to repair and rebuild our levees.

Mr. Smith moved to postpone action until the report of the committee authorized by his (Smith's) resolution of this morning was received. Carried.

Mr. Brown moved that any member presenting a resolution or motion shall have a right to explain his reasons for so doing before any motion to lay on the table shall be received. Laid on the table. Yeas: 52. Nays: 32.

Mr. Schwab presented a resolution providing for the printing of the proceedings of the convention in the German Gazette. Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Meadows presented:

Resolved, That all children now bound out in the State of Louisiana against the will of their parents be and hereby are released, if said parents do so desire.

Laid over under the rules.

The president announced the following named gentlemen to wait upon Major General Hancock and staff, and his excellency Governor Flanders, and invite them to visit the convention: Messrs. Vandegriff, McMillan, Leroy, Cooley, Donato, Mushaway, and Thomas Isabelle.

Mr. Deslonde, of Iberville, submitted the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that all male citizens over twenty-one years of age, who shall not be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion, shall have the right to vote and be elegible to hold any office under the government of the state.

Resolved, That it is not the desire of the loyal people of the state to oppress any citizen, and that we will disfranchise those whose connection with the rebellion and subsequent contumacy, cause us to believe that the power of the state can not be safely intrusted in their hands.

Resolved, That all men are created equal and that we desire all men to have and enjoy equal rights and privileges before the law.

Referred to committee on bill of rights.

Mr. Packard, of Orleans, right bank, introduced the following:

WHEREAS, The framing and adopting of the organic law of the state is the important business for which the convention was convened, therefore be it

Resolved, That the committee on draft of the constitution be instructed to prepare and submit to this convention a "draft of constitution," and in order that the said committee be enabled to submit their report at the earliest possible time, the committee are granted permission to sit during the sessions of this convention while preparing their report.

WHEREAS, Many radical changes in the civil and criminal law of the state of Louisiana are demanded by the advancing spirit of the age, and by reason of the changed condition of persons and property since the enactment of the same; and

Whereas, Especially the law regarding real property is found to have long fettered and retarded material progress and prosperity of the state; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the committee of judiciary be instructed to inquire into and report such changes in the civil and criminal law of the state as may be deemed necessary, and said committee have leave to report by ordinance or otherwise.

WHEREAS, By section eight of the act of congress known as the supplementary reconstruction act, authority is vested in this constitutional convention to levy and collect such taxes upon the property of the state as may be required to pay the expenses of the same; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the committee on finance be instructed to inquire into and devise the best means for supplying the treasury of the state with funds sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of this convention, by taxation or otherwise, and said committee have leave to report by ordinance or otherwise.

Received and ordered to lie over under the rules.

Mr. Wilson, of Orleans, submitted the following, which was referred to the committee on general provisions:

The legislature shall provide by law for the licensing of lotteries which shall be drawn on the Havana plan; and the buying or selling of lottery tickets drawn on any other plan within the state shall be prohibited. All policy plans are strictly prohibited.

Mr. Thomas Isabelle submitted the following, which was referred to the committee on bill of rights:

whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, are hereby forever abolished and prohibited throughout the state.

Mr. Tinchant submitted the following, which was referred to the committee on the executive department:

Resolved, That the governor shall be empowered to organize immediately a constabulary force, to be composed of one thousand men of undoubted loyalty. Said force shall be proportionally apportioned among the several parishes. Its duties shall be to protect, to the best of its ability, the liberty, life, property, and interests of all citizens.

Resolved, That this resolution be referred to a special committee of five, to be appointed by the chair.

Mr. Wilson introduced the following:

The legislature shall enact no law requiring qualified suffrage.

Referred to the committee on bill of rights.

Mr. Hiestand submitted the following:

WHEREAS, It is necessary for the best interests of the state that a correct account should be kept of all expenses incurred in printing the proceedings of this convention, be it

Resolved, That the committee on printing be authorized to employ a clerk for that purpose, and for all other services that he may be required to perform by said committee.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the printer be required to furnish in pamphlet form two hundred copies of the following constitutions and ordinances: of Missouri, 1865, Nebraska, 1867, Minnesota, 1857 and 1858, Tennessee, 1839 and 1866, for the use of this convention.

Laid on the table.

Mr. Belden moved that H. Peralta, Esq., auditor of public accounts of the state of Louisiana, be requested to furnish to this convention an abstract of the "state taxes" now due and unpaid for the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865.

Laid over under the rules.

Under special assignment the following ordinance, introduced on Friday by Mr. McMillan, came up for final action:

Be it ordained by the people of the State of Louisiana in convention assembled, That the act of the legislature of this state, approved 26th March, 1867, entitled an act to provide means for the completion of levees by the issue of bonds of the state for four millions of dollars, and to provide for the redemption of said bonds, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the said bonds when issued, whether signed by the persons then acting as governor and secretary of state of this state, or by the persons now acting and discharging the duties of governor and secretary of state, shall have full force and effect; and the faith of the state for the redemption as pledged and provided in said act shall forever be held valid and of full effect.

A motion was made by Mr. Belden to postpone until Friday next.

Messrs. Belden, Blackburn, Crane, Cooley, Newsham, Harper, Ludeling, Smith, and McMillan spoke at length upon the subject, at which time the motion to postpone was adopted.

Mr. Crawford, at two o'clock, moved to adjourn till Tuesday at 11 o'clock. Carried.

Eighth Day—Tuesday, December 3, 1867.

President Taliaferro called to order at 11 o'clock. Eighty-one members answered to their names on roll call.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Mr. Reagan submitted the following:

The seat of government shall be established at the city of Baton Rouge, and shall not be removed without the consent of two-thirds of both houses of the general assembly, and the legislature at its first session is hereby empowered to levy a tax of —— per cent upon all taxable property within the state, necessary and adequate to erect a building adapted to the provisions herein designated, and shall, as soon as practicable, devise ways and means for carrying into effect the provisions of this article.

Provided, that until the provisions of this article shall have been accomplished, the seat of government shall remain at the city of New Orleans.

Referred to the committee on general provisions.

Mr. R. H. Isabelle submitted the following:

ARTICLE 1. The legislature may establish the price and pay of foremen, mechanics, laborers, and others employed on the public works of the state, parochial, city, or town governments. Provided: That the compensation to be paid all foremen, mechanics, cartmen, and laborers employed on the public works under the government of the state of Louisiana, city of New Orleans, and the police juries of the various parishes of the state shall not be less than the following rates, viz:

Foremen, per day	$3 50
Cartmen, furnishing their teams	4 00
Cartm

and have our constitution so framed and defined that these several articles be ingrafted in the constitution of this state, namely:

ARTICLE 1. Slavery forever prohibited within this state.

ART. 2. All persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power or any tribal authority, excluding Indians, are declared to be citizens of this state and the United States.

ART. 3. There shall be no discrimination in the public, political, civil, or religious rights or immunities among the citizens of this state on account of race or color, or previous condition of involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

ART. 4. The legislature shall make no law, ordinance, statute, regulation, or code recognizing the right of property in man or exclusive public privileges to any.

ART. 5. Any person who, under color of any custom, regulation, rule, statute, ordinance, or law shall subject or cause to be subjected any inhabitants of this state to the deprivation of any public right, privilege, or immunity secured or protected by this article or constitution, or to pains, punishment, and penalties on account of such persons having at any time been held in a condition of involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, or by reason of their color or race, than is prescribed for the pleasure or punishment of white persons, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or imprisonmeht not exceeding one year, or both.

ART. 6. It shall be lawful and the duty of the governor of the state or such persons as he may empower for that purpose to employ the militia and volunteer forces of the state as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of these articles.

Referred to the committee on constitution.

Mr. Tinchant moved that two hundred copies be printed for use of the convention.

A motion to lay on the table was lost.

Mr. Cooley called for the yeas and nays on the motion. Ordered.

The motion was lost by the following vote:

Yeas: Messrs. Antoine, Belden, Bertonneau, Bonseigneur, Burrel, Cromwell, Demarest, P. G. Deslonde, Douglass, Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Gair, Gardiner, Guichard, Hempstead, Hiestand, Jackson, Jones, Lange, Leroy, Richard Lewis, Marie, Massicot, Morris, Moses, Newsham, Oliver, Pierce, Poindexter, Reagan, Riard, Roberts, Snaer, Thibaut, Tinchant, Underwood, Valfroit—40.

Nays: Messrs. Baker, Barret, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonnefoi, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Cuney, Dearing, Jr., Depassau, Duparte, Ferguson, Gould, Harper, Harris, Harrison, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Thomas Isabelle, Kelso, Landers, Lewis, Ludeling, Lynch, Martin, Meadows, McLeran, McMillan, Murrel, Mushaway, Myers, Pinchback, Pollard, Reese, Riggs, Rodriguez, Scott, Snider, Steele, Twitchell, Vandergriff, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—49.

Mr. Pinchback moved a suspension of the rules to put his memorial on its second reading. Carried.

The resolution was then adopted on its second reading.

The orders of the day were reached.

The resolution of Mr. Crane came up.

Resolved, That it be a standing order of the convention that the convention shall every day at — o'clock resolve itself into a committee of the whole convention, to consider therein all reports from standing and special committees, on such propositions as shall be referred to or made from said committees.

Mr. Crane moved to fill the blank by inserting one o'clock. Adopted.

Mr. Newsham's resolution of yesterday came up and was referred to the committee on the whole.

The resolution of Mr. Packard came up:

WHEREAS, The framing and adopting of the organic law of the state is the important business for which the convention was convened, therefore be it

Resolved, That the committee on draft of the constitution be instructed to prepare and submit to this convention a "draft of constitution," and in order that the said committee be enabled to submit their report at the earliest possible time, the committee are granted permission to sit during the sessions of this convention while preparing their report.

Mr Cooley opposed its adoption.

Mr. Pinchback moved to lay on the table subject to call. Carried.

Mr. Hiestand's resolution came up:

WHEREAS, It is necessary for the best interests of the state that a correct account should be kept of all expenses incurred in printing the proceedings of this convention, be it

Resolved, That the committee on printing be authorized to employ a clerk for that purpose, and for all other services that he may be required to perform by said committee.

Mr. Hiestand moved its adoption.

Mr. Cooley offered the following proviso: "Provided a clerk is allowed to every other standing committee of this convention."

Mr. ——— moved to lay the whole subject on the table. Carried.

Mr. Meadows' resolution came up:

Resolved, That all children now bound out in the state of Louisiana against the will of their parents be and are hereby released if said parents do so desire.

Mr. Waples moved to refer to the committee on bill of rights. Carried.

Mr. Schwab's resolution to publish the proceedings of the convention in the German Gazette came up in order and was referred to the committee on printing.

Mr. Newsham urged the passage of the resolution, but asked for it a thorough discussion.

Mr. Blackburn declared that there are many bitter and malicious rebels capable of registering, who are doing all they can do to prevent reconstruction, while there are many noble, steadfast Union men who are groaning under technical disabilities. He thought this matter should be clearly defined, and moved to amend by inserting the precise words of the act of reconstruction which define the duties of the commanding general.

Mr. McMillan moved the consideration of this important subject be referred to the committee of the whole house.

Mr. Cooley opposed the adoption on the ground that he did not wish the commanding general to have anything to do with matters which belong to the convention. He did not believe in the policy of making suggestions or tendering advice to the commanding general.

Mr. Smith thought the commanding general had full powers in the matter, provided he chose to exercise them.

Mr. Harper thought the subject should receive careful consideration, and favored the motion.

Mr. Crawford seconded the motion of Mr. McMillan.

The motion of Mr. McMillan was adopted.

The resolution of Mr. Lynch came up in order.

Resolved, That the delegates to this convention be and they are hereby allowed eight dollars per day for thirty days, and the same mileage allowed to the members of the last legislature of this state; but no pay shall be allowed to delegates for the time which this convention may remain in session after the expiration of thirty days.

Mr. Lange moved to lay on the table. Carried.

Mr. McMillan moved to reconsider.

A motion was made to lay on the table. The yeas and nays were called for, and lost.

The motion to lay on the table was lost.

Under the reports of committees:

The committee on enrollments submitted the names of the following gentlemen whom the committee had selected as clerks thereof: H. Berthelot, chief enrolling clerk, A. Snaer and Walker Beiden, assistant enrolling clerks. The committee request the approval by the convention of their action. Laid over.

General Fuller, of the committe on finance, reported that the committee had obtained no funds to pay the expenses of the convention, and saw no prospect of getting any.

Mr. Bonseigneur, for the committee on contingent expenses, announced the selection by that committee of Mr. E. Longpre as clerk thereof, and request the approval of the convention. Laid over.

Mr. Wickliffe submitted the following:

WHEREAS, It is the earnest desire of the people of Louisiana now in convention assembled to reconstruct this state in perfect accord with the will of the congress of the United States as expressed in the reconstruction laws passed by that august body for the government of the states lately in rebellion; and

Whereas, It is utterly impossible to carry out the will of congress as therein expressed for the reconstruction of this state, unless the state, municipal, parish, and judicial offices throughout the state are filled by men of undoubted loyalty to the general government, prior to the attempt to submit the constitution to the people for ratification, or to take any other step toward the reconstruction of this state; and

Whereas, The power of this convention of the people of Louisiana to accomplish this essential prerequisite to a recoustruction, viz: the removal of all disloyal men now in office throughout the state, and the installing in their places men of known and tried loyalty—is not as clearly defined by the said reconstruction acts as is desirable; therefore

Resolved, That this convention, elected by the loyal people of Louisiana in obedience to the laws of congress, and representing directly and legally the feelings, sentiments, wishes, and purposes of the loyal people of Louisiana, both white and colored, do hereby earnestly petition congress, at the earliest possible moment to pass an enabling act giving power to this convention, as the representatives of the loyal people of Louisiana, to remove from office all men throughout the state who now are, or may be in any state, municipal, parish, or judicial office, and who now are or may be impediments to the reconstruction of Louisiana in accordance with the reconstruction laws of congress, and fill those offices with men of undoubted loyalty and sympathy with the expressed will of congress, and require the commanding general of the fifth military district to render all desired and necessary aid in order to carry out the will of congress in reconstructing this state: Provided, That all appointments thus made shall be temporary, and the incumbents thus appointed shall hold their offices until their successors are duly elected under the constitution to be submitted by this convention.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the president of this convention to the honorable speaker of the house of representatives at Washington, and the honorable president of the United States senate, requesting them to lay the same before the respective bodies over which they preside, and to urge immediate action thereon.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Blackburn submitted the following:

An ordinance to provide means to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, by the issue of bonds of the state for five hundred thousand dollars, bearing interest of eight per cent per annum, and to provide for the redemption of said bonds:

SECTION 1. We, the people of the state of Louisiana, in convention assembled, in accordance with the act of the congress of the United States of America, passed March the 23d, 1867, do declare and ordain, and it is hereby declared and ordained, that the president of the convention be and he is hereby authorized and directed to issue bonds of this state to be signed by him and countersigned by the chairman of the committee on contingent expenses, and to be sealed with the seal of the state, to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars, payable in two years from date of issue, with interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum to be paid with the principal at the maturity of said bonds; and for the payment of these bonds and interest the faith of the state of Louisiana to be and is hereby unconditionally pledged to the holders thereof.

SEC. 2. Be it further declared and ordained, that for the payment of said bonds and interest the sum of two hundred and seventy thousand dollars shall be annually set apart as a special fund by the state treasurer, from the first moneys received in the state treasury, beginning with first day of January, Anno Domini, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, and continuing until the final extinction by payment of said bonds and interest.

SEC. 3. Be it further declared and ordained, that in order to provide for the extinction of said bonds and interest, the auditor of the state is hereby directed to determine what rate of additional taxation on the total assessed value of all the taxable movable, and immovable property of the state is necessary for the payment of said bonds and interest; and when ascertained it shall be his duty, and he is hereby directed to notify the sheriffs and tax collectors of the state, the rate of the additional taxation as ascertained, and which additional tax is hereby fixed and declared lawful; and shall be levied upon all the taxable movable and immovable property of the state, that may have been assessed; and it shall be the duty of the sheriffs and tax collectors, and who are hereby directed to collect said tax, and the collection of the same shall be enforced as the law provides or may hereafter provide for the collection of taxes.

SEC. 4. Be it further declared and ordained, that said bonds shall be for one thousand dollars each in amount, with interest of eight per cent per annum; they shall be receivable any date after issue, with interest calculated and allowed up to date of receipt, by the sheriffs, tax collectors and state treasurer for all state taxes or other public dues, as well as for the sale of public lands.

SEC. 5. Be it further declared and ordained, that the sum of six thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated from the proceeds of the sale of said bonds, to pay the expenses of lithographing and printing said bonds.

SEC. 6. Be it further declared and ordained, that the chairman of the committee on contingent expences be authorized and he is hereby empowered to appoint a person, who shall have said bonds lithographed and printed, and negotiate the same on terms the most favorable to be obtained.

SEC. 7. Be it further declared and ordained, that the proceeds of the sale of said bonds shall be deposited in the state treasury, and so much as may be required to defray the expenses of this convention shall be warranted upon the president of this convention and countersigned by the chairman of the committee of contingent expenses, and the state treasurer shall pay the same; and the balance of the money not so used shall be by the state treasurer placed to the credit of the general fund and reserved until the meeting of the general assembly elected under the provisions of the constitution of this convention, to be used as they may direct.

Referred, after a long discussion, to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Lynch moved to discharge the committee on finance.

Mr. McMillan moved to amend by discharging the committees on finance and contingent expenses, and to instruct the chair to appoint a committee of five on ways and means.

Laid on the table.

Mr. McMillan asked to be excused from serving upon the committee to wait upon General Hancock. His request was complied with, and Mr. Newsham appointed in his stead.

The convention then went into committee of the whole. President Taliaferro called Mr. Waples to the chair.

The following resolution of Mr. Newsham was called up according to assignment.

Whereas, By supplementary acts of congress, passed March 2, 1867, it is declared that no legal state government exists in Louisiana; and by an act passed supplementary thereto on the 23d day of March, 1867, it is enacted that if said governments were continued they were to continue subject in all respects to the paramount authority of congress; and,

Whereas, It is made the duty of the district commanders to remove from office all persons in office disloyal to the United States and not citizens thereof; and,

Whereas, Boards of registration were created by said acts of congress for the purpose of registering citizens loyal to the Union; and,

Whereas, The right to remove from office is vested in the military commander of the district; and

Whereas, Many, if not a majority of the parish and judicial and municipal offices of the state are now held by persons disfranchised, and not citizens by the provisions of said paramount law or laws of congress; and

Whereas, This convention is the legal creation of the said acts of congress, convened for the purpose of making a constitution and civil government for the state of Louisiana; and

Whereas, it is a well established principle of law, that no person not a citizen can legally hold an office, and it being impossible to organize with the present disloyal element of the state in office, all or many of whom are disfranchised by said act of congress; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the loyal people of Louisiana, in convention assembled, do respectfully recommend to W. S. Hancock, major general commanding fifth military district, the removal from office of all persons in the state of Louisiana disfranchised by said acts of congress, and the appointment of loyal men, citizens, in their place.

Mr. Newsham favored the adoption of the resolution in order that the legal points involved might be tested.

Mr. Crane took opportunity to explain the functions and provinces of the committee of the whole. Hoped that the convention would not commit itself to any theory of disfranchisement. He had always been an enfranchised. He wished to have action on this resolution postponed until some other day in order that all might give the subject ample thought. He prophecied that if the convention went any further than the laws of Congress contemplated, there would be a terrible recoil upon the loyal people of the South. He wanted universal suffrage, universal education, but at the same time he wanted universal justice.

Mr. Crawford opposed the adoption of the resolutions presented. He thought the test required of registered voters was not a sufficient test of loyalty; but this was not the main objection; the convention is assembled here to frame a constitution, and not to instruct the commanding general how he shall act. General Hancock is responsible for his own acts, and the convention is not responsible for what he does. He has his duties to perform, which he will perform in his own way; the convention has its duties to perform, and the volunteering of suggestions to the commanding general is not one of them.

Mr. Ingraham doubted the expediency of adopting the resolutions submitted. His experience with former military commanders had taught him caution in offering volunteer suggestions. Let the military commanders be held responsible to the power from whom they derive their authority.

Mr. Pinchback thought this convention was as independent of the commanding general as the commanding general was independent of the convention. In the recent order of Major General Hancock he declares that he will maintain the civil authorities. The convention is the only civil authority now legally in existence, and any suggestions to the commanding general are decidedly out of place. He hoped that the resolutions would be voted down.

Mr. Blackburn considered it the duty of the convention to express the sentiments of the people who sent them here—not to dictate but to ask or to suggest. This convention had been elected in opposition to the combined civil authorities in the state, and these authorities should be displaced. He submitted that the committee of the whole do rise ahd report back to the convention the following:

To strike out all above the word resolve, snd substitute the following:

Resolved, As the wish of the loyal people of the state of Louisiana, as expressed through this convention, that the commanding general of this military department be and is hereby respectfully requested to immediately carry out and enforce the latter clause of the fourth section of the congressional supplementary act of reconstruction of July last.

Mr. Cooley thought it was General Hancock's desire as strongly as that of the loyal people that all disloyal persons and all impediments to reconstruction should be removed from office. He considered the most proper way was to leave all of this in the hands of the commanding general. The object to be gained there is no difference of opinion upon; the only opinion is how it can be done. Let the convention attend to its legitimate business, and every disloyal man will be turned out of office by a general state election within the next three months. Moving in that form, the general will be bound to respect the will of the convention; but adopting resolutions like these at this time will be certainly unwise and impolitic. Those of us, he said, who sat quietly at our homes during the war smoking our pipes and cursing the rebels, can not question the loyalty of General Hancock, who was doing better than any of us—he was fighting the rebels. Neither can they or dare they question the loyalty of General Sheridan or his successor, General Mower.

Mr. Blackburn regretted that the condition of affairs had placed the loyal people of the state where they were. But the question has been forced upon them, and they were bound to meet it. He was no defender of a military rule, and he wished the civil government to be maintained, but in the hands of loyal men. Civil rule in this state now is a farce and a lie. This resolution is not to dictate to the commanding general, but simply to express the will of those men in Louisiana who were loyal to the star spangled banner.

Mr. Bonseigneur did not understand the term of civil government—whether the commanding general in his order meant this convention or the governor and his department of state. He thought all civil powers to-day were reposed in the convention.

Mr. Cooley thought he had been misunderstood. He declared there was a civil government in Louisiana—a government which had been tacitly recognized by all previous military commanders, and which no military commander may ignore or set aside. He thought General Hancock was bound to follow out the suggestions of this convention in any way. He thought the only way to get rid of a rebel government was to have a new constitution presented to the people as soon as possible.

Mr. Harper was anxious the interests of the state should be in loyal hands.

Mr. McMillan moved that the committee do now rise and report progress. Carried.

Judge Taliaferro resumed the chair, and at twenty minutes past three o'clock, on motion of Mr. McMillan, the convention adjourned till eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning.

"EUREKA,"

THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THE CLASSIC POETS have sung to us of a spring whose pure, ethereal waters impart perpetual youth and beauty to all who will drink of them. It is now conceded by all that the EUREKA is made of the water of that same spring, and its magical effects will be seen at once by those who use it. The hair will be restored to its youth and beauty, even where the snows of winter have fallen. In presenting this Hair Restorative to the public, I have no hesitation in saying that it is no humbug: that it will do all that is claimed for it, viz: Restoring the hair to its original color; preventing its falling off, and giving it a softness, youth and lustre that no other preparation can produce. The Eureka has been used by tens of thousands, and in every case has given entire satisfaction, and is now used universally. Dr. Van Zandt has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair—preventing it falling off, by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the EUREKA, and you will not be disappointed.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr. L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety: and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. THE STRANGER ON THE HILL.

BY T. BUCHANAN READ.

Between broad fields of wheat and corn,
In the lovely home where I was born,
The peach trees lean against the wall,
And the woodbine wanders over all;
There is the shaded doorway still,
But the stranger's foot has crossed the sill.

There is the barn—and still as of yore,
I can smell the hay from the open door,
And see the busy swallows throng,
And hear the peewee's mournful song;
But the stranger comes—ah! painful proof—
His sheaves are piled to the heated roof.

There is the orchard—the very trees,
Where my childhood knew long hours of ease,
And watched the shadowy moments run,
Till by life had imbibed more shade than sun;
That swing from the bough now sweeps the air.
But the stranger's children are swinging there.

There bubbles the shady spring below,
With its bulrush brook where the hazels grow:
'Twas there I found the calmus root,
And watched the minnows poise and shoot,
And saw the robin lave his wing—
But the stranger's bucket is at the spring.

Oh! ye who daily cross the sill,
Step lightly for I love it still,
And when you crowd the old barn eaves,
Then think what countless harvest sheaves,
Have passed within the scanted door,
To gladden eyes that are no more.

Deal kindly with those orchard trees;
And when your children crowd your knees,
Their sweetest fruit shall they impart,
As if old memories stirred their hearts:
To youthful sports still leave their swing,
And in sweet reverence hold the spring.

The barn, the trees, the brook, the birds,
The meadows with their lowing herds,
The woodbine on the cottage wall—
My heart still lingers by them all,
Ye strangers on my native sill,
Step lightly, for I love it still.

PERSONNEL OF THE CONVENTION OF 1867.

Our article this week is one of more than usual interest. In our issue of next week we expect to publish some sketches which will expose some of the hidden work of the massacre of July 30th, and even the way that policemen were extemporized for the occasion, and how they did their duty:

Hon. W. L. McMillan, Parish of Carroll.

A visitor to the Convention will not be long on the floor, before his attention is attracted by the sonorous and open countenance, and fearless and independent bearing, which peculiarly distinguishes the delegate from Carroll. Even a total stranger will feel the impression that he is looking on a man, and on one who has already made his mark in the world, and who will receive a prominent and commanding influence in whatever society he moves, without seeking for or even desiring it. With a calm, self-possessed, and engaging manner, a clear, full, and finely modulated voice, a perfect mastery of language, by which the very words that fit come always to the right place, not one too few or too many, a frank and open countenance, which conciliates even the opponent whom his damascene blade is most ruthlessly dissecting, he always commands the attention of the house, and never wearies it. The past life of the gentleman does not disappoint the impressions and expectations which even a casual acquaintance makes upon others. It has been one of rare adventure, and distinguished and honorable achievements. Gen. McMillan was born in Highland county, Ohio, in 1829. He is connected with some of the most widely known and respected families of Ohio. He graduated as doctor of medicine in 1852, and settled in Columbus, Ohio, where he continued to practice till the commencement of the war, with the exception of two years, which he spent as an officer in the medical department of the army of Russia. His services were so distinguished and highly appreciated, as to attract the especial notice and thanks of the Czar, who publicly complimented him. When the war began he was surgeon general of Ohio, and assisted in organizing the first regiment sent from that State, and accompanied the 1st and 2d regiments to Washington, in April, 1861, and remained with them as senior medical officer until the close of their three months term, and took part in the battles of Vienna and the first Bull Run. Returning to Ohio he resumed his official duties as surgeon general, visiting the different armies in which Ohio had troops, for the purpose of rendering such State assistance as might be found necessary.

In July, 1862, he was appointed colonel of the 95th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and ordered to Kentucky, where he participated in the disastrous campaign under Gen. Nelson, in August and September of that year. In January, 1863, he was ordered to Memphis to report to Gen. Grant, and was by him ordered to Young's Point, where his regiment was assigned to Gen. Sherman's (15th army) corps. With it he took part in the memorrble campaigns against Vicksburg and Jackson. In the fall of 1863 he was detached, and left by Gen. Snerman to guard the line of the Big Black and the rear of Vicksburg. In December, 1863, he was ordered to Memphis, and did duty in that city, and on the line of the Memphis and Chattanooga Railroad until the spring of 1864, when he participated in the second campaign into West Tennessee and Mississippi. In July, 1864, he went with Gen. Mower to the relief of Little Rock, and from there in the pursuit of Gen. Price through Missouri and Kansas. In December he went to Nashville, and was engaged in the battle of the 15th and 16th of December at that place.

For distinguished services and gallantry in these important battles, he was promoted. In the spring of 1865 he accompanied the 6th Army Corps to Mobile, in the reduction of which he took a prominent and important part. Subsequently he was stationed at Meridian, in command of the sub-District of Eastern Tennessee and Western Alabama.

After the war Gen. McMillan removed to Carroll parish, in this State, and engaged in planting, and has made it his permanent residence. He was appointed by Gen. Sheridan a member of the Board of Levee Commissioners, and in September last was, without solicitation or exertion on his part, elected by a large vote to the Constitutional Convention.

Gen. McMillan is one of that class of men of whom any State can be proud—who will give weight to any party, and whose talents, learning and knowledge of the world will assist the labors of any body of men of which he is a member. He is not a demagogue, and despises all their artifices and tricks. In times like these, when revolutionary measures are fermenting and boiling, and revolutionary men come to the surface, this sense of personal dignity and self-respect may be even too fastidious, and leave him liable to misconception temporarily; but the time will never come when the Republican party can do without him and men like him, and when his adopted State can cease to be proud of and honor him.

Dedication at Canton, Miss.

The new church at Canton, of which we have made mention before, was dedicated to the worship of God at the quarterly meeting, held there December 1st.

At 11 A. M. a good congregation assembled. The services were according to the forms prescribed in our Discipline. The dedication sermon, of which we give a synopsis, was preached by the presiding elder, from Matt. 16–18.

"Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The word Church here signifies the people of God as an organized body. We sometimes use the word to mean a single congregation, as we would say the Church at Canton; sometimes to signify a denomination, as when we speak of Catholic or Methodist, or Baptist churches. It is here used to mean all the people of God as they are recognized, as one by the great Hand who is over all.

This church is spoken of in the Scriptures uder the similitude of a building. Paul says: "Ye are God's building," and that his people are to grow together into "a holy temple to the Lord." Peter says: "Ye are a spiritual house." Under the old dispensation, the temple was a type of the church. As all the tribes came up there to worship, so are all the nations, and languages and rulers of men to be gathered into the great Spiritual Temple; and as the temple of Solomon was more beautiful and glorious than any other building then on earth, so the Church of Christ was to surpass all the institutions of men. Christ uses the same figure, and says, "I will build my church. In the consideration of the subject we shall notice—

I. The Foundation of the Church. There has been much dispute as to what Christ here meant by this rock; into this we shall not enter, but merely consider the declaration that it was on a rock that it was founded. This signifies that it was a firm and solid foundation. 'Twas not upon sand, or mud, or yielding earth, but on the great solid base on which hills and mountains stand. It is so firm it will not settle, however high the walls may rise; though they reach the clouds, the foundation will sustain all the weight. No land slide shall move it—no water wash it away; no digger shall undermine it. Paul says the foundation is Jesus Christ. It is on him, and on the great principles revealed through him, that the structure rests. One of these is Truth. Whatsoever is built upon a lie, or any false view or false faith, must fall; for all lies must perish. Another one is Justice. Whatever is enduring must be right. All that is wrong must fall sooner or later. Goodness or Love, in all its benevolent effects to serve men, is also one of the great principles of this foundation. These are all as eternal as God himself. They were before the world was, and will be when it is no more.

II. The Structure of the Church. If we would build a house, there are three important things to be considered: The plan, the materials, the execution.

The plan was made by the Great Architect, who built heaven and earth—who gave the seas their bounds, and the mountains their place, and put the blue dense of the clouds above them, and saw and said that all was good. That it is wise, and good, and beautiful, we cannot doubt. The work is not completed, and there may be confusion and rubbish around it now, but when all is done, and all that is useless cleared away, then we shall be able more fully to appreciate and admire the design. The plan is a comprehensive one. It is so great that all the nations can come into it, and all the tribes and races of mankind, and every individual may come; and there is never one who comes but that there is a suitable place for him.

The materials of this building are not decaying matter, but living souls, and these must be suitable for such a work. They must be good materials. Bad men are not fit for a place in the church. Thieves, liars, drunkards, adulterers, swearers, and all other breakers of God's laws, are not fit for this use, and cannot be put into Christ's true church. Unbelievers, unconverted persons and hypocrites will be rejected. There is no place for them. The materials must not only be of the proper kind, they must be prepared for their place and use. As the timber is sawed and cut, and the stone broken and squared, and the brick moulded and burned, so the people of God are prepared by experience and discipline in this life, for their place in God's true temple. When I have seen the bricks burning in the kiln, I have sometimes thought, could they think and talk as other pieces of clay sometimes do, they would say: "Oh! master, save us from these flames;" but without that they have no strength and no value. When afflictions are trying us, we are ready to say, "Lord save me from this," when that we so much dread may be the very means by which God intends to fit us for a place in his temple. Those parts of the building most important or most beautiful, are often prepared by the severest process. Great is the variety of these materials. The infant in it's innocence, the young in their opening, growing life, the strong in their vigor, the old, mature in experience and wisdom, all find a place. A few days ago, the finest Methodist Church in all the world was dedicated to God, in a city on one of the Northern lakes. Bishop Simpson preached the dedication sermon to a congregation who could give one hundred and thirty-six thousand dollars to build a house for the Lord, and here we meet to-day, in this temple of wood, with a congregation just out of the house of bondage, to give our offering to him also, and we believe he is well pleased with both, and will honor the great and the humble alike with his presence.

Of the builders of this house, God is the great master workman. We are laborers together with him. Some of us have large, some smaller attainments of work, according to our several abilities. There have been great master workmen, like Paul, and Luther, and Wesley, and there are men like our Bishops, who have heavy responsibilities at the present day. As elders and preachers we have our tasks, but it is not the preacher alone who is called to work. To each individual is assigned the duty of fitting his own soul for its place. How is with you today, brother or sister? Have you measured yours with the Bible rule? have you lined it by God's law? have you squared it by Gospel precepts, and polished it by patience and charity? If so, happy are ye; if not, arise to your task, for the great master is coming soon to inspect your work, and woe to that one who is not prepared to receive him. Arise and go forth to your work all ye people, and let the house of the Lord go up.

III. The Durability of the Church. The "gates of hell" shall not prevail against it. We think the expression, gates of death, would be nearer the true meaning, for in the language in which this was written, death and hell are expressed by the same word. The figure, as we understand it, represents death as a vast and silent city, into whose gates, always open, the multitudes of earth are ever going and never returning. Could we go back to that time, and see the world as it then was, its cities with busy people, magnificent temples on its hills, built in honor of idols, and then see them as they now are, we would see a few blocks of stone now and then, a ruined wall or a mound of earth, and that is all that now is left. The gates of death have prevailed against them. Nations have perished, languages been forgotten, the mighty armies of old been conquered by this prevailing power. The busy crowd has gone to the silent land; God's people to their rest. Earthquakes have spoken, tempests blown, floods overspread, fires consumed; the pestilence has breathed on the midnight air, and nations have lain dead at his feet; famines have blighted the sustenance of man, and wars dyed nations in their own blood, and the slower but surer fingers of time been laid on all things; but the Cnurch of Jesus Christ has withstood them all. It stands, not a tottering ruin, hoary with years, but sound and strong as when the first stone was laid. To-day its walls are rising heavenward, and nations from afar are beholding its progress. Its towers are like a city that cannot be hid, and the workmen are calling to their fellows, who are answering back and telling the progress of the work. The missionaries from heathen lands are bringing materials from afar, and angels rejoice over every stone laid on the walls. Even here we are doing something. The temples built there [illegible] gathered, the preachers, who are striking ringing blows with Gospel hammer, the glad faces of believers, the groans of the penitent, kneeling at the altar and crying for mercy, and the rejoicings of new converts, all tell us that God's work is going forward. The little one has become not one, but five thousand, and still they are coming. So far the work has stood, and the sure word of prophecy tells us that it shall stand and be completed. By and by the last stone will be laid, the scaffolds taken down, and the rubbish removed, and then Zion shall appear in all its beauty. What a great dedication that will be. What a congregation will be there. They will come from heaven and come from earth—angels, seraphs, patriarchs, prophets, apostles, ministers, and all the saints of God; and Jesus himself shall dedicate the temple. His glory will fill it, and then "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God."

At the conclusion of the sermon, the trustees presented the house to the presiding elder, and it was dedicated to the worship of God according to the disciplinary form.

At 3 P. M. Brother Anderson, from Jackson, preached a pointed, earnest sermon; after which we baptised thirteen children, and administered the sacrament. The pastor, and another minister of the M. E. Church South were present, and assisted us. At night we preached again, and took up a collection of over ten dollars; after which we called for mourners, and nearly fifty came forward. It was a glad day for the people of Canton, and they said they would never forget it. With many blessings upon us, and many promises to meet us in heaven, we bade them farewell. D.

The Death of the Righteous.

When Balak, the King of the Moabites, sent for Balaam, the son of Bseor, to curse the children of Israel, he took him to the high places of Baal, that he might see the whole camp of the Israelites, and curse them all. But Balaam, after gazing upon them, exclaimed: "How shall I curse whom God hath not cursed; how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied? From the tops of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel?" And as though the voice of conscience smote him, in view of the dying hour, he was afraid to disobey God, and said: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Who, of all men, would not like to die the death of the righteous? Who would not like to leave this world in the triumphs of faith?

But who are the righteous whose death is so desirable:

The righteous are they who render the right. Who give their heart's best affection to God, loving him supremely, and who love their neighbor as themselves. Who walk by the Gospel rule, and glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which are his. Who willingly do and suffer all the will of God.

Why is it desirable to die the death of the righteous? Not because there is any spirit of self-boasting, for they realize that when they have done all, they are unprofitable servants. But because Jesus is present, and precious to the dying saint, and

"Jesus can make the dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Again, it is desirable to die, because heaven comes down to earth.

"The place where the good man meets his fate,
Is privileged far above the common walks of virtuous life,
Quite on the verge of heaven."

The heavenly host are very near.

"Heaven comes down the soul to
But let ss examine the records of some of these death-bed scenes, and the martyrs' testimonies. When Polycarp was threatened with martyrdom, if he would recant, he said: "Your fire will be spent in an hour; but that which is reserved for sinners is eternal." While bound to the stake he offered up his last prayer. "O God of angels, and powers, and all creatures, blessed be thou, who hast made me worthy to see this day and hour; thou hast made me a partaker among the holy martyrs." Having finished his prayer, he cried aloud "Amen" while the fire was kindled, and soon his happy spirit was in glory.

When Ignatius, the Bishop of Antioch, received his sentence to be devoured by wild beasts, he wrote to the Christians at Rome: "Now I begin to be a disciple; nor shall anything move me, visible or invisible, that I may attain to Christ Jesus. Let fire, and the cross, and all the companies of wild beasts; let breaking of bones and tearing of members; let the shattering in pieces of the whole body, and all the wicked torments of the devil come upon me. Only let me enjoy Jesus Christ. This is the gain that is laid up for me. My love is crucified."

At the dawn of the Reformation, Latimer and Ridly, two English Bishops, were called to suffer martyrdom at Oxford, October 15, 1555. When Ridly saw Latimer, he ran and embraced him, and exclaimed: "Be of good cheer, Brother, for God will either assuage the fury of the flames, or else give us strength to bear them." Latimer replied: "We shall this day light such a candle in England, as by God's grace shall never be put out."

"Weep not for the saint that ascends,
To partake of the joys of the sky.
Weep not for the seraph, that bends
With the worshipping church on high.
Weep not for the spirit, now crowned
With the garland of martyrdom given.
O, weep not for him—he has found
His reward and his refuge in heaven."

The last words of Martin Luther were: "O my heavenly father, my everlasting God. Thou hast revealed to me thy Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. I have preached him, I have confessed him; I love him and worship him as my dearest Savior and Redeemer." He then thrice repeated: "Into thy hands I commit my spirit," and calmly reposed in Christ. Melancthon, when dying, was asked if he wanted anything. He replied: "Nothing but heaven." When his friends were too officious in adjusting his clothes, he requested them "not to disturb his delightful repose."

Jacob Bochon, when about to die, said: "Now I go hence into paradise."

The last words of John Elliot, the apostle of the Indians, Rev. John Bailey said, were: "What shall I say! Christ is altogether lovely. His glorious angels are come for me." Sepbey exclaimed: "O, what a day of sunshine this has been to me! O, what delight! Who can fathom the joys of the third heaven!" Jesse Lee said in rapture: "Glory! glory! glory! hallelujah, Jesus reigns." Rev. J. Appleton said: "Glory to God in the highest! The whole earth shall be filled with his glory!" But let us see how the sinner dies, that we may mark the contrast. "Cardinal Beauford said: "Must I die? Cannot my riches save me? I could purchase a kingdom, if that would save my life. Alas! there is no bribing death. How are my hopes disappointed." Cardiaal Borgia said: "I have provided, in the course of my life, for everything but death; and now, alas! I must die, though entirely unprepared."

The false philosophy of Thomas Hobbes, the infidel, afforded him no comfort or light in the dying hour, for he said he was "taking a leap in the dark." The sceptical Hume died in the greatest agony of mind. Voltaire said: "I am abandoned of God and of men." He said to the doctor: "I will give you half I [illegible] life." The doctor replied: "Sir, you cannot live six months." Then he said: "I shall be in hell, and you will go with me."

The wretched Altamont leaves a sad, sad testimony, as follows: Remorse for the past throws my thoughts on the future; worse dread of the future throws them back on the past. I turn, and turn, and find no ray. Didst thou feel half the mountain that is upon me, thou wouldst struggle with the martyr for his stake, and bless him for the flames, that would not be unquenchable fire. My principles have poisoned my friends! My extravagance has beggared my boy. My unkindness has murdered my wife. And is there another hell? O, thou blasphemed, yet indulgent Lord God! Hell itself were a refuge, if it could hide but from thy frown."

The character of the life fixed the character of the death. And the only way to die the death of the righteous is to live a righteous life.

"How blessed the righteous when he dies!
When sinks a weary soul to rest;
How mildly beams the closing eyes,
How gently heaves the expiring breath.
Life's labor done, as sinks the clay—
Light from its load the spirit flies.
While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies!"

MEXICAN NEWS.

The Two Republics announces the arrival in Mexico city of several distinguished Americans, among them General Babcock, of General Grant's staff, General Herman Sturm, of Indiana, and Kane O'Donnell, Esq., of the New York Tribune.

This paper says that it is understood that the reorganization of the cabinet is now going on, and that the portfolios have been offered to the following named gentlemen, viz: Foreign affairs, Sr. D. Francisco Zarco; hacienda, Sr. D. Mariano Rojo; justice, Sr. D. Fzequiel Montes. Of the others we have not learned anything as yet.

The Sombra de Arteaga says that the governor of Queretaro has hauled up and lectured the Fathers Figueroa and Aguilar of that city for being too religious on All-souls day for performing high mass for the repose of the soul of him whose body perished for the good of Mexico.

The Globe has the following: Marriage by the civil law is becoming generalized throughout the whole country in spite of the efforts of the clergy to make the people believe that such a contract is contrary both to religion and good morals.

La Republica of Jalapa announced that in that city many civil marriages have come off lately, contracted by persons previously married according to the uses and ceremonies of the Catholic church.

Among the marriages of this character, recently, we find the following named:

General Ramon Corona was married in Mazatlan to Mrs. Maria Ana Mactenkly. General Bibiano Davalos to Miss Elena Cazares. General Antonio Neri to Miss Emilia Valdivia.

Just before leaving Vera Cruz to go into exile General Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, in a letter that has been published, stated to D. Joaquin Alcalde that he defended him very well indeed, because he called him the veteran of Independence, the companion of Iturbide, the founder of the republic, and the conqueror of Tampico, and implores the benedictions of heaven for his defender, and that no mishap may befall him, concluding by giving to Mr. Alcalde the sash of general of division, but without the dispatch and corresponding pay; not giving the first, because he has not the power to do so, for having it, he would have given it; and the second, because unfortunately he has not got the "cash" to give $4000 per annum; so that he only gives him a blue strip bordered with gold, somewhat antiquated, which he can lay away in his wardrobe as a relic.

The Princess Salm Salm left Mexico on Monday morning, November 10, by the early train for Apizaco, and thence to Vera Cruz, where she joins her husband, lately liberated by the amnesty proclamation. We learn that they intend to visit Austria and Prussia immediately.

THE TEST OATH.

The ninth section of the last act of congress on the subject of registration reads thus:

And be it further enacted, That all members of the board of registration, and all persons hereafter elected and appointed to office in said military district, under any so-called state or municipal authority, or by detail or appointment of the district commanders, shall be required to take and to subscribe the oath of office prescribed by law for officers of the United States.

From the following taken from the Crescent of last evening, it appears that Andy Johnson has been making appointments which can not be carried out:

We were pleased to receive a call this morning from Colonel Dennett, of the Planters' Banner, who is spending a few days in our city. The colonel is forced to decline the appointment of collector of the Teche district on account of a very excusable objection to swearing to a lie.

The acts of newly appointed officers who have not taken the required oath are entirely null and void, and amount to acts of usurpation, for which they subject themselves to severe punishment.

Boston Election.

The telegraph announces the election of Dr. N. B. Shurtleff, the Democratic candidate for mayor of Boston. It may be a Democratic triumph; but the real issue was on the license question. Dr. Shurtleff was not only nominated by the Democrats, but by the license organization and the working men. The new legislature will enact a license law, and the citizens of the "hub" wanted one of its supporters to execute it.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1867.

Rev. Joseph Welch, of Texas, reached New Orleans last Sunday morning, in excellent health and spirits. He had just returned from the North, and was en route for his Texan home. He preached in the Ames Church on Sabbath night, to the delight of all present. He left the city on last Tuesday morning, for Galveston, where he now is, working for the Lord. May the Master bless his servant with abundant success!

Dedication.

Providence permitting, our new Church will be solemnly dedicated to the worship of Almighty God to-morrow, Sunday, the 15th inst. We trust it will be an occasion of deep and abiding interest. For more than two years, our people have been worshiping in halls, and have endured many inconveniences for Christ's sake. They have labored and prayed that the Lord would give them a permanent place in which to worship Him, and now their hearts rejoice in the full realization of their long cherished hopes. It is an event so full of holy triumph, as to obliterate all traces of the trials we have endured during the last twenty months, in the effort to erect this Christian temple.

"Then let your songs abound,
And every tear be dry;
We are marching through Emanuel's ground
To fairer worlds on high."

The dedicatory services will be as follows: At 11 A. M. Bishop Ames will preach and dedicate the Church to God.

In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, there will be a Sunday school meeting, at which Rev. W. M. Henry will preside, and General Cyrus Bussey and General S. L. Brown will speak

In the evening, at 7 o'clock, Rev. Dr. Newman, the pastor, will preach.

We cordially invite all our friends to be present, and as cordially extend the invitation to the strangers who may be in our city.

Wesleyan Hall.

This is the name of a substantia building erected by the trustees of Wesley Chapel, on their lot adjoining their Church. It is to be used for a day school, and for the meeting of benevolent associations. The structure is two storied, surrounded on three sides by a spacious gallery, and is 55 feet long by 30 wide. It is a frame building, with a good slate roof, and in round figures cost $2500, all of which is the property of the Wesley Chapel congregation. On the ground floor is a large room, well lighted, with six fire places, and will be used for school purposes. The upper room is commodious and airy, and will serve as the public hall when large congregations may assemble. Connected with the grounds is a fine bell, the gift of Wm. McCulloch, of the Gas Company.

The dedication of this hall took place last Thursday. It was crowded by an audience which deeply appreciated the occasion and the building. The Rev. Anthony Ross, the pastor, presided on the occasion, and among the invited guests were Rev. H. Green, S. Chinn, J. Turner, E. Green, etc. Father Ross read the hymn, Brother Chynn lead in prayer, and Rev. Dr. Newman preached the sermon, which was followed with the benediction by Rev. W. M. Henry.

In the evening, Rev. N. L. Brakeman preached in the Church, which closed these very interesting exercises.

Single copies of the Advocate can be had at Simon's on Baronne street, and at the book stand in the Post Office.

Legalized Gambling.

Some member of our Constitutional Convention proposed to license gambling saloons, and apply the revenue derived therefrom to charitable institutions. There is nothing new in this proposition. It has been adopted in several European countries, and in some of the States in this country. The idea has its adherents in this city, and some of our politicians seem determined to ingraft it in the organic law of this State. We are not, therefore, surprised that the subject is before the present Convention, but we hope it will not prevail, for the following reasons:

1. The State should punish vice, and not legalize it. Gambling is a vice of the greatest enormity. It is a moral evil per se. It partakes of the nature of robbery, as the winner takes from the loser that for which he does not give an equivalent in return. And this is the more emphatically true, as the losers are generally dupes—young, inexperienced men, who are enticed into the gambling hells by the splendid and free entertainment provided for their destruction. They are first feasted and then robbed; like a turkey they are fatted to be killed. And it is now proposed to throw around these robbers the panoply of law, and instead of punishing them, to give them authority to perpetuate their crimes. It is a weakness of human law, that it is always on the side of the strong. It were wiser in our Convention to provide for the protection of the unfortunate loser, and punish the lucky winner. The thoughtless youth; the lonely stranger; the inflamed merchant, would more readily enter licensed saloons, than were such places condemned by law. To license gambling is to offer a premium for rascality, and attempt to make respectable what all right-minded men have denounced as an unmitigated vice.

To attempt to regulate a social evil by legalizing it, is to give a patent for the existence of such an evil. Rather condemn the vice as such, by the severest pains and penalties of law, and then have a vigilent executive, who shall give power to the law by a faithful execution thereof.

II. In those countries where gambling is legalized, the State is bankrupt and the people are poor. The Prince of Baden-Baden derives a large revenue from gambling licenses, but such is the prevalence of the vice, that the people are kept in poverty, and the State is unable to support itself—there is not money left to pay other taxes when due. In Rome, lotteries are sanctioned by the Pope, and to such an extent are the people reduced to purchase tickets, that Rome is the poorest city in the world. It is true that men will gamble, whether they pay a fine or a license for the privilege; yet fewer gamble in those cities where the law is against the vice, and where the police are ever on the alert to catch the transgressor, than where the evil is sanctioned by law. It is in accordance with the soundest principles of jurisprudence, that prohibition is the most effectual to suppress vice; were this not true, there would be neither reason nor hope in our legislators passing criminal laws; but because murder, and theft, and arson are restrained by the penalties of the law, therefore such laws are enacted. This principle is true, and should therefore be applied to gambling.

III. It would be more lucrative to the State to fine than to license gambling. There would be more thrift and frugality; personal and social economy would be promoted; there would be larger deposits in our savings banks, and the State would have to expend less for charitable institutions. The State is now burdened to support prisons and asylums; the majority of their inmates are there through the evil of gambling. More clerks are tempted to steal from their employers to gratify their passions for gambling, than from any other cause. And we regard the proposition to apply the revenue derived from licensed gambling houses to "charitable institutions," as a mere trick to cover up the baseness and blackness of the deed. It is doing evil that good may come from it, to thereby quiet the public conscience. We consider this a subterfuge—a hypocritical device. The good done to the institutions would not counterbalance the evil done to the State. Our houses of charity would be compelled to expend a larger sum for the support of inmates, made such by the vice of gambling, than they would receive from the sale of licenses for gambling.

For these reasons, we oppose the proposed plan, and respectfully call upon the Convention not to license, but to punish with heavy fines and other penalties, that enormous vice which is ruining so many of our youth, and daily reducing whole families from affluence to want.

La Harp Street M. E. Church.

The above named Church, Rev. E. Royal, pastor, began the year with a total of but 33 members and probationers, and has had a hard struggle all the year, but has at last achieved a glorious success. It is in a Creole Catholic neighborhood, where prejudice against Protestants is very strong and bitter. To make matters worse, a young man (R. Lafayette, from Franklin, La., formerly a student in the Thomson Biblical Institute,) with considerable ability as a speaker, rented a house in the same neighborhood, and without any proper authority began preaching and gathering together a society in opposition to La Harp Street Church, and succeeded in getting some 40 or 50 "members," so-called, and a crowd of "outsiders" to rally around him.

The week following our fourth and last quarterly meeting, Brother Royal began a protracted meeting. The first fruits of the effort were the conversion of Mrs. Antoinette, a Catholic, aged about 50 years. Her conversion and union with the M. E. Church produced a great excitement in the neighborhood, especially among the Catholics. The work was genuine and powerful, and her relation of her experience was clear, earnest and convincing. The change in her heart and life was remarked by all, and many came to church to hear, speak and pray. Among the spectators was a young man, (also a Catholic,) upon whom conviction seized, and he, too, was converted. He had been a man of strong prejudice and violent temper, and had been disposed, hitherto, to disturb the meetings. But now he has become a new man; the lion was changed into a lamb, and Saul-like he began at once to preach Jesus. From this time the house was crowded, and the excitement intense. Up to this writing there have been 30 conversions, (among them Brother Royal's wife, who has been a seeker for years,) and 40 accessions, nearly all Catholics.

Meanwhile, Lafayette's meetings have been broken up, and he has returned to Franklin. Let God be praised for His goodness, and may the good work go on! B.

STATE FINANCES.

Highly Important Letter.

Colonel Charles H. Fox, of this city, has very kindly favored us with the following interesting communication touching our State finances, and which will be read with interest by all the readers of the Advocate. It may aid the Convention to devise "ways and means" by which the credit of our State may be restored, and the confidence of our people inspired. Let the members of the Convention read and inwardly digest:

Mr. Editor—I hand you the enclosed letter from Hon. O. H. Miner, Auditor of the State of Illinois. In explanation of the same, permit me to state that in 1836, the Legislature of Illinois authorized an issue of bonds for internal improvements; those bonds were issued in payment for work on railroads and canals. The financial crisis of 1837 following, all work upon public improvements was suspended, leaving the State indebtedness, as stated in the communication of the Auditor. The bonds were almost worthless, and the State was threatened with bankruptcy. Stay laws were enacted, but were found useless, some legislation was demanded to save the State from repudiation. The State credit was almost ruined. To provide for the payment of the bonds and interest, a convention was called to amend the State Constitution. A clause was inserted, of which the following is a copy:

"There shall be annually assessed and collected, in the same manner as other State revenue may be assessed and collected, a tax of two mills upon each dollar's worth of taxable property in addition to all other taxes, to be applied as follows, to wit: The fund so created shall be kept separate, and shall annually, on the first day of January, be apportioned and paid over pro rata upon all such State indebtedness (other than the canal and school indebtedness) as may for that purpose be presented by the holders of the same, to be entered as credit upon, and to that interest, in extinguishment of the principal of said indebtedness."

The Constitution was adopted by the people. State indebtedness almost immediately was in demand, and now the bonds of the State of Illinois are in demand at par, or a small premium. The statistics in the communication explain themselves. If the Convention now in session would enact a similar clause, would it not have a similar effect upon the indebtedness of the State of Louisiana? Chas. H. Fox.

[Copy.]

State of Illinois, Auditor's Office, Springfield, Dec. 3, 1867.

Charles H. Fox, Esq.:

Sir—I am this day in receipt of your letter, in which you inquired the amount of the public debt of Illinois in 1848. The amount at the time, and the amount of money paid into the State Treasury the first fiscal year, accruing from the two mill tax.

For reply, I state that the message of Governor French to the General Assembly, January, 1849, gives the amount of the debt as $16,661,795 37. The amount by computation November 27, 1867, was $7,581,315 63. The receipts of two mill tax, January 1 to November, 30, '67, have been $747,584 38. A few thousand dollars are yet due from collectors—say $8000 to $10,000.

In addition to the amount of debt January 1, 1849, some $5,300,000 bonds have been issued on various accounts since that date, so that the actual reduction since 1849 has been over $14,000,000. This, however, has not all resulted from the two mill tax, but it has so mainly resulted. Your respectfully, (Signed) O. H. Miner, Auditor.

Information Wanted,

It is earnestly requested that all persons will read the following requests, and assist in seeking the information. Let them be read in all the Churches, and other gatherings of colored people, in every place where the Advocate circulates, and copied in other papers:

Anthony Tasker wants information about his mother, Maria Tasker' a chambermaid, a member of Holls creek Church, in Colbert county, Maryland. The said Anthony Tasker left his mother on the 2d day of September, 1853. He was bought by the trader, Walter Campbell, in the city of Baltimore. The said Maria Tasker was owned by Thomas Highgant. The said Anthony Tasker left the city of Baltimore, and was brought to the city of New Orleans, La., and then sold from that city in the parish of Assumption, on the Bayou Lafourche, where he yet remains. Information may be addressed to Anthony Tasker, care of Mrs. E. C. Pugh, Madewood Plantation, Bayou Lafourche, Assumption parish.

Also, by Nettie Jones, who was a servant of Madom Mead, in St. Mary's parish, La., about her daughter, Juliana Maria, who was owned by Wm. Henry Eliot, and sold in New Orleans to Capt. Pegram.

Also about her father, Thos. Jones, who lived in Montgomery county, Tenn., and her brothers and sisters, Richard, Drury, Jenny, Julia, and Susan Johnson; also, Fanny Woodson, who was going to school in Vicksburg when last heard from in July. Address care of Rev. R. K. Diossy, Franklin, St. Mary's parish, Louisiana.

Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature

By Rev. John McClintock, DD., and Jas. Strong, S. T. D. With maps and numerous illustrations. To be completed in about six volumes, royal 8vo., of about one thousand pages each. Volume 1, comprising A and B, is now ready. The remaining volumes are in rapid progress, and will appear at short intervals. A complete Theological Library, embracing the features of all Biblical and Theological Dictionaries now extant.

The Cyclopædia is designed to be a manual of Sacred Literature for the uso of ministers, students, general readers and Sunday school libraries, so complete in itself that no other work will be necessary for ordinary purposes of reference in these branches of literature. It is intended to be scientific and scholarly, yet not repulsive to the mere English reader by an unnecessary display of technical learning. Price per volume, cloth, $5; sheep, $6; half morocco, $8. Harper & Brothers, publishers, New York.

The Happy Combination.—There is nothing purer than truth, nothing sweeter than charity, nothing warmer than love, nothing brighter than virtue, nothing more steadfast than faith. These, united in one mind, form the purest, sweetest, richest, brightest, holiest, and most enduring happiness. A study of Paul's advice to the Philippian Christian, (Phil. iv., 8,) will serve to beget and strengthen these graces in the soul.

A Good and Cheap Paper for Every Family.—We have received the American Agriculturist for December, and this number closes the Twenty-sixth Volume of that paper. We are sure that those who have taken it the last year must feel that they have received a large return for the money invested. The Agriculturist is a large periodical of 32 to 40 pages, well printed, and filled with plain, practical, reliable, original matter, including hundreds of beautiful and instructive Engravings in every annual volume.

It contains, each month, a Calendar of Operations to be performed on the Farm, in the Orchard and Garden, in and around the Dwelling, etc. The thousands of hints and suggestions given in every volume are prepared by practical intelligent Workingmen, who know what they write about.

The Household Department is valuable to every housekeeper, affording very many useful hints and directions, calculated to lighten and facilitate in-door work.

The Department for Children and Youth is prepared with special care, to furnish not only amusement, but also to inculcate knowledge and sound moral principles.

Circulation—Terms.—The circulation of the American Agriculturist (about 150,000) is so large, that it can be furnished at the low price of $1 50 a year; four copies, $5; ten copies for $12; twenty or more, $1 each; single numbers, 15 cents each.

We advise all our readers to try it a year. Subscriptions should be sent to the publishers, Orange, Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, New York City.

Baptismal Covenant.

Such is the name of a tinted lithographic work, by Rev. Woodruff Post, of East Genesee Conference. It contains the Baptismal vow, Apostles' Creed, etc. Around the margin are illustrations of Bible scenes, with appropriate passages of Scripture. It is well calculated to recall to the mind of the convert his baptismal vow. It is neatly executed, and will look well framed. It can be obtained by addressing Rev. W. Post, Rochester, and enclosing the small sum of fifty cents.

Northwestern Farmer.

The December number of this prince of rural monthlies, comes to us in a new dress, and with the most beautiful engraved title page we have seen on any paper. It has also been enlarged and otherwise much improved; so much so, that we wonder it can be furnished for the small sum of $1 50 a year, and shall wonder still more, if it does not find its way into almost every family. It is worth double its cost to the merchant or professional man, and ten times over to the farmer.

Send ten cents for a sample copy. Address T. A. Bland, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Constitutional Convention.

Eleventh Day—Friday, December 6, 1867.

President Taliaferro called the convention to order at twelve o'clock.

Eighty members answered to their names.

Hon. Josiah Fisk offered prayer.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Tinchant:

Whereas, By the acts of the United States congress, known as military reconstruction acts, and by the acts supplementary thereto, this convention is empowered not only to make a constitution, but to found a civil government; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention shall immediately take prompt measures to form a civil government loyal to the United States, and so enact as to have it thoroughly organized throughout the state previous to submitting the constitution to the people for ratification.

Laid over under the rules.

By Mr. Harper:

That no member of this convention shall speak more than ten minutes upon any question, except in committee of the whole.

By Mr. Crawford:

That the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to keep one of his assistants in the ante-room, and that he be required to keep order and silence therein. Adopted.

By Mr. Bonseigneur:

That no member shall be allowed to speak more than twenty minutes upon any question, without the consent of the convention.

Mr. Burrell moved to lay the motions of Messrs. Harper and Bonseigneur on the table. Lost.

Mr. Ingraham moved to suspend the rules to put the motion of Mr. Bonseigneur on its second reading. Carried.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by requiring the assistant sergeant-at-arms to time each speaker.

Mr. Waples opposed the adoption of the motion as impracticable, especially when important subjects will come up for discussion, as will be the case hereafter.

Mr. Crane seconded Mr. Waples' suggestion.

Mr. Harper thought any ordinary man could say all he had to say in twenty minutes; and that speeches which have been made here occupying an hour and a half could have been delivered, he thought, in two minutes.

Mr. Ingraham favored its adoption.

Mr. Smith moved to lay on the table. Carried.

By Mr. Lynch:

Resolved, That the major general commanding the fifth military district is hereby respectfully asked to furnish this convention an official statement of the number of registered voters in each parish of the state.

Mr. Belden moved to suspend the rules to put this motion on its second reading. Carried.

Mr. Barrett moved to amend by adding "and also the district of New Orleans."

Mr. Ingraham moved to amend by adding "and the representative districts of the city."

The amendments were accepted, and the resolution adopted.

By Mr. Valfroit:

That the legislative body in general assembly shall not have the power to make or pass any acts or amendments in the legislature of the state of Louisiana, that shall deprive citizens of the right of entering any public places on account of race, color, or previous condition.

Referred to committee on legislative department.

By Mr. G. Duparte:

Whereas, Many of our colored children have been bound out by the action of the freedmen's bureau agents to their former masters and others, against the will of their natural relations; and

Whereas, Very many of those children have been taken away from the midst of their relations, among whom they were doing well, and bound over to their former masters and others for a time not to expire until such unfortunate children shall have attained the age of twenty-one years; and

Whereas, We, the people of this state, do desire that those children be returned back to their natural relations so soon as the constitution shall have been ratified by the people, accepted by congress, and the state readmitted in the Union of the United States; therefore be it

Resolved, That all contracts made by the action of the freedmen's bureau agents in this state, in relation to children bound over to their former masters and others without the consent of their natural relations, are declared to be null and void, and of no value, so soon as the constitution of this state shall have been ratified by the people, accepted by congress, and the state readmitted in the Union of the United States.

By Mr. Wilson:

Resolved, That the legislature shall provide for the education of all children in the state between the ages of six and eighteen years, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition, by the maintenance of free public schools by taxation or otherwise.

Article 2. The public schools shall be opened to all children.

Referred to committee on education.

Mr. Isabelle moved that each standing committee be authorized to employ one clerk whenever a majority of such committee may decide the same to be necessary. Adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the president of this convention be and he is hereby authorized and required to immediately issue warrants on the treasurer of this state to each member, officer, and employe of this convention, for the amount due each for his services in this convention, said warrants to be indorsed by the president and signed by the secretary and countersigned by the chairman of the committee on contingent expenses. Adopted.

On motion of Mr. Smith his honor Mayor Heath was escorted to a seat on the platform beside the president.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The ordinance of Mr. McMillan on the subject of levees came up, and on motion of Mr. McMillan action thereon was postponed until after the report of the special committee on this subject was received.

Mr. Smith, chairman of the special committee on levee matters, submitted the following report:

To the President and Members of the Convention:

The special committee appointed to report on the subject of the levees as per resolution of your body beg to submit the following:

They have not had the requisite time to present a detailed statement of the condition of the levees for each parish, nor do they deem it essential for the purposes of the convention.

It is a matter of history, and a dark chapter in the annals of our state, that the fairest portion of our agricultural lands have been submerged by the breaking of the levees on the Mississippi for the past three years. The following parishes are enumerated as having suffered from this calamity, viz: Carroll, Madison, Tensas, Concordia, Pointe Coupee, West Baton Rouge, Iberville, Ascension, Lafourche, Terrebone, St. Mary, St. Martin, Avoyelles, Catahoula, and St. Landry. The bottom lands of Red river and the Ouachita have been overflowed from the same cause, that is the breaking of the levees. It is not our province to furnish statistics to show the magnitude of the loss of crops, the destruction of stock, the injury to the lands, and the sufferings and destitution of the people caused thereby.

The present condition of the levees affords no security against a repetition of these calamities; on the contrary, the breaks in the levees through which the river poured its vast floods during the last high water are still open, and unless closed the same extent of country will be overflowed for the third time.

The legislature at its last session appropriated four millions of dollars in the form of bonds bearing six per cent interest, payable in twenty years for levee purposes, to be expended by the state board of levee commissioners. We are informed by the chairman of the existing board, J. H. Ogleby, Esq., that W. D. Smith, a member of the board, and himself were appointed a committee to proceed to New York and other Northern cities for the purpose of negotiating the sale of these bonds, or borrowing money on pledge of same as provided by law. That the committee reached New York in the early part of August, having in their possession a sample of the bonds, and thoroughly canvassed that market to obtain funds, either by sale or loans on pledge.

The sale of the bonds being limited by law at not less than eighty cents on the dollar, and the old state bonds being quoted at the same time as worth but fifty-six cents on the dollar, it is not difficult to understand why the sale of these bonds could not be accomplished, and of course all efforts in that direction failed.

Efforts to borrow money on pledge were equally unsuccessful. The commissioners as it will be seen have therefore accomplished nothing. The entire series of bonds are in the hands of the governor, unsigned and unissued. It may not be amiss here to remark, as a last resource to obtain means to construct the grand and other important levees, the board advertised for proposals to build these levees, tendering bonds in payment.

The high rates of the bids received established the fact of the depreciated value of the bonds in the market, and the sacrifice was deemed too great by the board to justify their acceptance of the offers for the present.

In view of the preceding state of things, we are further informed by Mr. Oglesby, chairman, that the board at its last meeting came to the conclusion that nothing could be done by way of building the levees, relying on the state appropriation, and determined to make another effort by sending commissioners or agents to Washington to ask congress for the passage of a bill authorizing the indorsement or guarantee of the bonds by the general government, or a loan for the amount, on pledge of the bonds. The persons appointed by the board to go to Washington on this mission are Messrs. J. H. Oglesby, W. L. McMillan, members of the board, and Mr. J. P. Sullivan, of New Orleans. It is the general opinion, in view of the present low stage of the river, that the spring freshet will be later than usual. It is, therefore, thought that if aid could be promptly obtained from congress in any shape to build the levees, it might be available for protection against the next rise.

In conclusion, your committee beg to state that they are of the opinion the project originated by the board of sending commissioners to Washington to appeal to congress for national aid to restore the levees is worthy of the serious consideration of the convention for indorsement. It is also regarded by your committee as a matter of the highest importance that the men selected for this purpose should possess a record of loyalty to the government and identity with the interests of the state, and be able to furnish statistics, present facts and arguments to convince congress that the national government as well as the states bordering on the Mississippi river have a deep interest in the security of the levees, by which a vast area of the alluvial lands of this great valley can be reclaimed for the purposes of agriculture. Of the mode and manner in which this aid shall be asked, whether by the indorsement of the bonds, and the proceeds thereof to be expended by the state authorities, or whether in the shape of a loan on the deposit of the bonds as a pledge, the money to be disbursed as aforesaid, or by congress taking the levees as a national work to be built under the direction of its own agents, are questions that may admit of a difference of opinion.

Your committee, with due deference, think that if congress should conclude to come to the relief of the states by granting material aid to build the levees, that it will be adopted as a national measure and the money will be disbursed by the usual mode. Impressed with this idea, and to correct the prejudices created in the minds of the members of that body by the efforts of those previously entrusted with the duty of representing the state in this matter, and who have attempted to bring pecuniary influences to bear on congress, your committee are of the opinion that the appropriation asked should be as a measure of national relief. We think the action of this convention in the premises, representing as it does the loyal element of the whole state, will have an important influence with congress in convincing them that the relief asked is not a party measure, but is necessary to perfect the reconstruction policy of congress.

Your committee further report that from reference to the books of the auditor and treasurer's office it does not appear that any such bonds exist of the four million issue, and that the act of the legislature authorizing the said issue has not been complied with.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES SMITH,
Chairman Committee.

Mr. Waples moved that the report be laid on the table subject to call and the committee discharged. Adopted.

The committee also submitted the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, The state of Louisiana shall be divided into four levee districts, viz:

First district—All parishes and fractions of parishes lying east of the Mississippi river and south of the Mississippi state line.

Second district—All parishes and fractions of parishes lying west of the Mississippi river, and south of the south line of Rapides and Avoyelles parishes, including Pointe Coupee parish.

Third district—All parishes and fractions of parishes lying between the Mississippi river and Red river.

Fourth district—All parishes and fractions of parishes lying west of Red river and north of the south line of Rapides and Avoyelles parishes, including Avoyelles parish.

Resolved further, That there shall be a general superintendent elected by the superintendents of each district, and one member shall be elected by the state at large.

On motion of Mr. Packard, the resolution was referred to the committee on internal improvements. Carried.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

The following ordinance of Mr. McMillan came up under special assignment:

Be it ordained by the people of the state of Louisiana in convention assembled, That the act of the legislature of this state, approved 26th March, 1867, entitled an act to provide means for the completion of levees by the issue of bonds of the state for four millions of dollars, and to provide for the redemption of said bonds, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the said bonds when issued, whether signed by the persons then acting as governor and secretary of state of this state, or by the persons now acting and discharging the duties of governor and secretary of state, shall have full force and effect; and the faith of the state for the redemption as pledged and provided in said act shall forever be held valid and of full effect.

The question was ably discussed by Messrs. McMillan, Blackburn, Crane, Cooley, Rodriguez, Belden, Brown, Ingraham, Ludeling, Waples, and Wickliffe.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. McMillan called for the yeas and nays.

The motion was carried by the following vote:

Yeas: Messrs. Antoine, Baker, Belden, Bertonneau, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Butler, Crane, Cromwell, Cuney, Demarest, Depasseau, P. G. Deslonde, Douglass, Drinkard, Duparte, Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, Francois, Gair, Gardiner, Guichard, Harris, Hiestand, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Thomas Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Kelso, Lange, Leroy, J. B. Lewis, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McMillan, Morris, Moses, Murrel, Mushaway, Myers, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Riggs, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schawb, Smith, Snaer, Scott, Snider, Tinchant, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vandergriff, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—76.

Nays: Messrs. Barret, Cooley, Dearing, Harper, Harrison, Hempstead, Landers, Richard Lewis, Ludeling, Lynch, McLeran, Newsham, Steele—13.

Mr. McMillan gave notice that he would move a reconsideration of this vote to-morrow.

Mr. Pinchback moved to reconsider now.

Mr. Smith moved to lay on the table. Carried.

Mr. Pinchback presented the following:

Resolved, That no motions, resolutions, or ordinances be considered by this convention that do not pertain directly to this constitution.

Mr. Pinchback moved a suspension of the rules to put the resolution on its adoption. Carried.

Messrs. Cooley and Crane opposed the resolution, and by consent of the convention Mr. Pinchback withdrew the same.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the committee on finance and contingent expenses be requested to report to this convention at the earliest possible day the respective ordinances on the means of raising funds for the use of this convention submitted to them, or to submit a report embodying some practical and feasible plan for secur ing the desired object. Adopted.

Mr. Barrett moved that the convention do adjourn until Monday at twelve o'clock. Lost.

Another motion to adjourn till Saturday at eleven was adopted.

Twelfth Day—December 7, 1867.

President Taliaferro called to order at eleven o'clock.

Sixty-seven members answered to their names at roll call.

Prayer was offered by Hon. Josiah Fisk.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read, amended, and approved.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Underwood:

Resolved, Any person who shall hereafter fight a duel, or assist in the same as second, or send, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge therefor, or agree to go out of the state to fight a duel, shall be disqualified for holding any office, and shall forever after be disfranchised in this state.

Resolved, That the legislature shall at its first session provide by law that the names and residence of all qualified electors shall be registered in order to entitle them to vote, but the registry shall be free of cost to the elector.

Referred to committee on legislative department.

By Mr. Demorest:

WHEREAS, Gambling in this state, and especially in the city of New Orleans, is carried on to a great extent, and

WHEREAS, The treasury of the state receives no benefit therefrom, therefore be it

Resolved, That the next general assembly be authorized to license all gambling houses where banking games are kept, for the benefit of the state, or of charitable institutions of the state, as they may deem best.

Laid over under the rules.

By Mr. Belden:

Resolved, That the pay of the president of this convention shall be double the pay of the other members thereof.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Hiestand moved that the sergeant-at-arms be instructed to prepare seats within the bar of the convention which shall be set apart for the use of ladies visiting this body.

Indefinitely postponed on motion of Mr. Waples.

By Mr. Lange:

WHEREAS, Many members of this convention are without money, and are depending upon their warrants in order to get means, and as many of them are probably unaccustomed of the selling or trading of said warrants, therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention authorize the president to call on the bankers or brokers of the city of New Orleans and make such arrangements as he possibly can with them for the selling or cashing of all warrants of said members of this convention, and to report back to this convention to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Resolved further, That the state treasurer be and is hereby instructed to accept under his official seal any of such warrants issued by the warrant clerk and president of the committee on contingent expenses of this convention.

Referred to committee on contingent expenses.

By Mr. Wilson:

Suffrage shall be universal, and all male citizens of any race or color, without regard to any previous condition, excepting such as have been disfranchised for participating in the rebellion or civil war against the United States government, or for felony committed against the laws of any states of the United States, who have attained the age of twenty-one (21) years, and has been a resident of the state for the last twelve months preceeding the day of election, and are citizens of the United States, shall have the right to vote at all elections held in this state.

The legislature shall provide by laws for the faithful exeeution of this article.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend the rules by substituting 10 o'clock for 11 o'clock. Laid over.

Mr. Wickliffe presented a series of resolutions on reorganizing the judiciary, which was referred to the committee thereon.

By Mr. Wilson:

The legislature shall provide by law for the licensing of gambling houses, and said houses shall play with open doors. Two hundred dollars shall be levied as license, or a tax on each banking game, and one hundred on each tombola.

The taxes so collected shall be for the benefit of charitable institutions.

No municipal corporation shall impose a higher license on such houses than the above-mentioned sum.

Referred to committee on general provisions.

By Mr. Cromwell:

Resolved, That where persons before the adoption of this constitution, shall have undertaken and agreed to occupy the relation to each other of husband and wife, and shall be cohabiting together as such at the time of its adoption, whether the rights of marriage shall have been celebrated between them or not, they shall be deemed husband and wife, and be entitled to the rights and privileges, and subject to the duties and obligations of that relation in like manner as if they had been duly married, and all their children shall be deemed legitimate, whether born before or after the adoption of this constitution; and when the parties have ceased to cohabit before the adoption of this constitution, in consequence of the death of the man or from any other cause, all the children of the woman recognized by the man to be his, shall be deemed legitimate. The legislature shall pass no laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

Referred to committee on general provisions.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMillan, for the committee on the executive department, submitted a report.

The report defines the election qualifications, power, and duties of the governor, lieutenant governor, treasurer, secretary of state, and auditor. The material changes are: No person shall be eligible for the office of governor or lieutenant governor who has not been five years a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state for the two next preceding his election. He shall be at least twenty five years of age. The governor shall be ineligible for a second successive term. The lieutenant governor shall receive pay only while performing duties as president of the senate—then the same as paid by vote to the speaker of the house—except while acting as governor, in which case he shall receive the same pay as the latter officer. Clergymen are made eligible to either office. The salary of all state officers is materially reduced.

Mr. Crane moved that the report of the committee be received, and 300 copies thereof be printed. Adopted.

Mr. Blackburn, for the committee on printing, submitted a report which was afterward withdrawn in order that a general report might be made on Monday.

Mr. Fuller, for the committee on finance, submitted the following:

To the president and members of the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana.

Your committee on finance beg leave to submit the following report:

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, To pay the delegates and officers of this convention, and to defray all other expenses necessary for the use of said convention, the following tax is hereby levied upon the property of this state, both real and personal, viz: a tax of one mill per cent.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the sheriffs of the state, except the parish of Orleans, shall collect the above mentioned tax, and that they refer to the assessment rolls made by the state of Louisiana for the year eighteen hundred and sixty-seven (1867) as the basis for assessing the tax herein levied on real and movable property; and in order to facilitate them in the collection of said tax, they are hereby authorized to employ all summary remedies now given by law for the collection of state taxes, and shall receive for their services the same compensation paid them by the state for like services.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained that the tax herein levied, and which shall be due by the parish of Orleans, shall be collected by the persons now charged with the collection of state taxes in said parish, and they shall possess the same powers and receive the same compensation.

SEC. 4. Be it further ordained that the sheriff or other persons charged with the collection of the tax levied by this ordinance, shall pay to the treasurer of the state at the end of every month, all sums collected by them under this ordinance, and shall settle finally with the treasurer on the first day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, (1868.) But in no case shall the state treasurer give a receipt for either a partial or final settlement, without requiring the sheriff or other collector to take and subscribe an oath that he has paid all the money collected by him to date of settlement, less his commission.

SEC. 5. Be it further ordained, That so much of the tax levied as may be required to pay the delegates and officers of this convention, and to defray all other expenses necessary for the use of said convention shall be paid by the state treasurer upon warrant signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary of this convention. The balance of the tax levied shall be placed by the state treasurer to the credit of the general fund, and reserved until the meeting of the general assembly elected under the provisions of the constitution adopted by this convention, to be used as they may direct.

SEC. 6. Be it further ordained, That the tax levied by this ordinance shall be paid only in the legal currency of the United States.

HENRY W. FULLER,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
JOHN S. HARRIS,
J. G. DRINKARD,
JOHN L. BARRETT,
W. L. McMILLAN.

Mr. Crane moved to print 200 copies. Carried.

Mr. Steele, from the committee on internal improvements, submitted a report.

The report of the committee on internal improvements, provides for a board of public works to be composed of three commissioners to be appointed by the governor, with consent of the bench; the state to be divided into three improvement districts, from each of which a commissioner is shall be chosen. They shall hold office for three years, but the first three chosen shall hold office for one, two, and three years. The general assembly shall provide for their compensation and that of their employes. They shall from time to time report to the general assembly their views and suggestions on swamps, levees, etc. They shall have charge and supervision of all public works. The members may be removed by a concurrent vote of both branches of the legislature, and that body by a three-fourths vote may abolish the board altogether.

Mr. Crane moved to print 200 copies. Carried.

Mr. Vandergriff, chairman of the committee to wait upon General Hancock, reported progress.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The resolutions of Mr. Wickliffe, as follows, came up under the orders:

WHEREAS, It has been charged by the enemies of the colored race in the state of Louisiana that it is the design of the colored race to get control of this state, and destroy the white race therein, and Africanize the state; and

Whereas, It is boldly asserted by the enemies of the colored race that they are leagued together by secret organizations, and are armed and equipped for the purpose of carrying out this terrible plan; and

Whereas, Petitions are now being circulated in this state for the purpose of receiving subscriptions of names of prominent citizens to these petitions in order that they may be forwarded to the president of the United States, to induce him to take action so as to prevent this pretended outrage; and

Whereas, This whole effort is but a plot to justify the president in attempting the accomplishment of such measures as will inevitably lead to a disruption of this government, and thus inaugurate a second, and as these vile schemers hope, successful rebellion against the government of the United States; and

Whereas, If this dangerous scheme be perfected, it will result not only in the ultimate destruction of this government, but in the reduction of this newly enfranchised race again to the chains of slavery, with all its concomitants, injustice, oppression, and horrors; therefore,

Resolved, That the members of this convention, as the legal representatives of this long abused and outrageously slandered people, do solemnly enter our protest against this vile slander on the great body of our constituents; and being fresh from these people, and thoroughly conversant with their wishes, desires, and intentions, solemnly and earnestly deny the truth of all such charges, and declare to the world that there is not one word of truth in them.

Resolved, That as loyal citizens of the United States, we denounce the action of these political schemers against the government of the United States, and against the rights of man, and warn the president, congress, and the people of the United States of the foul plot and dangerous schemes of these men.

Resolved, That we denounce all men who give credence to this unfounded slander and assist in circulating the same.

Resolved, That we earnestly petition congress to appoint a committee to investigate all such charges, and thus disabuse the minds of the friends of the long and still abused race throughout the Union.

Resolved, That the secretary be required to furnish a copy of these resolutions, and mail the same immediately to the president, the speaker of the house of representatives, and president of the senate.

Mr. Wickliffe urged their adoption.

Mr. Cromwell said the colored men were strong enough to maintain their rights, and would maintain them in the hands of loyal men.

Mr. Pinchback regretted that such resolutions had been presented on this floor; they were out of place, and mischievous in their import. In this country there are thirty white men to one black man; therefore it ill becomes the colored men to make violent and intemperate demands. Let them ask for justice, and for nothing more, and let the appeal be made in such a spirit that all people will see the propriety of granting it. Even the slaveholder can not fail to have his stony heart touched by the humble, humane, and even generous conduct of the negro during the war. The appeal was never made by them to violence and revenge, but they trusted all the while to the innate justice of the great American heart. Any one can see the suicidal policy of arraying the black man against the white. This is not a Republican convention. There is a Republican party, and it has a central executive committee. Let them attend to such matters as this if they wish to, and let these questions henceforth be kept off this floor that we may give our undivided attention to our legitimate business.

Mr. Blackburn indorsed the remarks made by Mr. Cromwell; but, pending his remarks, the hour arriving therefor the question was postponed, and the convention took up the

SPECIAL ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The report of the committee on militia came up.

Mr. Crane declared himself opposed to every single section in the report.

The report not having laid over for two days the chair ruled it out of order.

Mr. Bertonneau moved to adjourn till Monday at 12 o'clock. Lost.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the rules be suspended to take up the report of the finance committee for immediate action. Carried.

At this stage of the proceedings Major General Joseph A. Mower was announced, and the convention standing, the general was escorted to a seat on the platform, was introduced by the chairman of the committee of invitation to the honorable president, and by him presented to the convention.

A recess of fifteen minutes was declared, during which the distinguished guest received the congratulations of the delegates.

Upon being called to order, the convention took up the report of the finance committee, and the various ordinances on finance submitted.

COMMITTEE ON THE WHOLE.

Mr. Smith was called to the chair.

After considerable discussion the committee rose and reported back the ordinance of Mr. Blackburn providing for raising funds to pay the expenses of the convention.

Mr. Crane took the floor making a vigorous address on the rights of the newly enfranchised, suffrage, and general amnesty.

Mr. Blackburn explained his proposed ordinance as a measure carrying out the plan proposed in the congressional act of reconstruction. He thought the plan proposed was feasible, and asked for its full investigation and deliberation. He was opposed to general taxation just at this time, and in the present impoverished condition of the country.

Mr. Newsham presented the following as a substitute for the fourth section of the proposed bill:

SEC. 4. Be it further declared and ordained, that said bonds shall be in amounts of twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, five hundred, and thousand dollars with interest of eight per cent per annum; they shall be receivable any date after issue, with interest calculated and allowed up to date of receipt, by the sheriffs, tax collectors, and state treasurer for all state taxes or other public dues, as well as for the sale of public lands.

Also the following:

SEC. 8. Be it further declared and ordained, that said bonds shall be ready for issue in six days from the date of the passage of this ordinance.

Mr. Blackburn accepted the proposed substitute for the fourth section, but deemed the latter section impracticable.

Mr. Belden, without taking ground for or against the bill, enumerated legal and technical objections thereto.

Mr. Jones argued down Mr. Belden's objections, and urged immediate action. Providing this was done, he was authorized to say that all the money required would be forthcoming at once.

Mr. Newsham argued the legal right of the convention to raise money in any way it might deem proper. The law leaves this an open subject, giving the convention free scope to regulate its finances as it may deem best. He had ample reason to believe that immediately these bonds were issued they would be taken up at once, and not at a ruinous discount by disloyal brokers, but at par by men of means who were true to their country and desire her prosperity.

Mr. Ludeling was not prepared for immediate action. This was a subject requiring careful thought and full investigation before any special action was resolved upon, and moved to lay the whole matter on the table subject to call, and that the report, substitute and amendments, be printed. Lost.

Mr. Cooley argued in favor of the report of the finance committee, which provides for the levying of a direct tax of one mill per cent on all taxable property.

Mr. Blackburn explained that the object of his proposed issuance of bonds was to issue them predicated upon a tax hereafter to be levied.

Mr. Cooley continued, expressing a disbelief in the feasibility of collecting money on bonds. The experience of officers of the state in disposing of their warrants on the treasury, and even of the state in disposing of its own bonds heretofore issued has been unfortunate and unprofitable. The bonds of the state of Louisiana issued before the war are to-day not worth in the markets forty-five cents on the dollar. It is rarely that financial men can be found who will come up and buy bonds issued by such an organization as this convention at par when they can buy the old bonds of the state for forty-five cents on the dollar. This might have been the case in the days of ancient Rome, but men of that class are rarely found now-a-days. Men now-a-days are very apt to measure the degree of their financial investments by what they will bring back to their pockets. General Hancock is here to carry out the provisions of the law, and he will carry out fully your enactments if a tax is levied. That is a safe plan; there is no doubt about it. Adopt the ordinance proposed by the finance committee, and I have no doubt by the time that bill designates—the first of April—you will have all the money you require. Pass that bill, and it will be carried out, completely and fully. It has been asked if a sufficient amount will be fully realized by the petty tax of one mill per cent. In this state, the amount of taxable property is two hundred and fifty million dollars. Now one mill per cent of that amount assessed would place in the treasury $250,000—one thousand dollars more than can readily be realized by the sale of half a million in bonds. As a country member, the speaker had as much interest in getting paid as anybody, and he had been looking earnestly at every proposition which would provide a way for paying him for his services; and this he considered the only feasible plan.

Mr. Wickliffe said Mr. Cooley was not a poor man, because he was a lawyer and wore good clothes; and his case was, therefore, not so urgent as that of many others. He characterized the proposition of Mr. Cooley as a rebel trick. Still claiming the floor for Monday next, he, at four o'clock, moved to adjourn until Monday at eleven o'clock. Carried.

Thirteenth Day—Monday, December 9.

President Taliaferro called the convention to order at twelve o'clock.

Ninety-one members answered to their names on the calling of the roll.

Rev. Joseph Welch, of Texas, was called upon to address the throne of grace.

The minutes of the previous day were read and adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Wickliffe submitted the following motion: That a committee of five be appointed by the chair to whom shall be referred the ordinance of finance submitted by Mr. Blackburn, with instructions to confer with any parties who may propose to loan money on bonds to be issued by this convention on the faith of the state, with instructions to report to this convention at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Crane opposed the reference to a committee.

Mr. Jones had had an interview with a capitalist, who proposed that the state convention should issue bonds bearing eight per cent interest; if this was done warrants could be drawn predicated upon them, and money to the amount of $300,000 would be placed in the bank to meet them. He recommended that this course be adopted by the convention.

Mr. McMillan asked to know what amount of discount would be demanded by the brokers.

Mr. Jones was not prepared to answer, having left this matter to be arranged by the committee of finance whom it is proposed to appoint. The amount of discount he was assured would be only a living, reasonable amount. The whole matter may be arranged by to-morrow morning.

Mr. Wickliffe believed, under the ordinary circumstances, a direct tax the most proper mode of raising funds, but an extraordinary circumstance has come up which will render this process unnecessary, since men stand ready to furnish at once all necessary funds; therefore he urged the adoption of the motion.

Mr. Rodriguez felt there was something wrong in this matter, he couldn't tell exactly where. He was afraid somebody would get skinned. There was a trick somewhere. But he wanted money some way, and was willing the committee should be appointed, provided they would be required to report to-day.

Mr. Fuller, as chairman of the committee on finance, stated that the committee had waited upon what they conceived the quickest, safest, and most economical place for raising funds. The committee had waited on bankers, but their mission had been fruitless. Go and present the warrant of this convention to a banker and he will laugh at you. The convention has no finances, an the bankers don't know us. Let us take the state bonds there engraved at an expense of six thousand dollars to the taxpayers, and you receive the same reply, except that they will discount them for you under regulations which will put $100,000 in their pockets. The speaker protested in the name of the taxpayers, the freedmen, and all men having the interests of the state at heart, against this scheme. If he could not pay his way he would sleep in the place provided by the municipal authorities for the homeless before he would thus compromise the dignity of the state. We need to be paid, and are anxious to be paid, and after consulting the best legal advisers your committee has united upon the report which they have submitted as the most dignified and legitimate plan. The mere pittance of one mill per cent will not oppress the poor nor distress the rich. This convention disgraces itself when it admits that it can not perform its duties without being paid for it. I was sent here, he said, by the freedmen of my parish to represent their interests, and I am prepared to do it without pay, if necessary, before I will compromise them for years to come by a wicked and extravagant issue of state bonds.

Mr. Reagan urged the issuance of the bonds, and thought the people of the state would be ready and willing to pay the discount.

Mr. Cooley thought if these bonds were issued they would be negotiated at such a ruinous discount as would appal the members of the convention.

Mr. Smith wished immediate action on the finance question, and hoped the subject would go to the committee at once.

The motion of Mr. Wickliffe was then adopted.

The chair appointed the following named gentlemen upon the committee: Messrs. Henry W. Fuller, H. Bonseigneur, Simon Jones, W. J. Blackburn, and G. M. Wickliffe.

Mr. Fuller declined serving as chairman of the committee, and John S. Harris was appointed in his stead.

Mr. Crawford, in order to allow committees time to report, moved to adjourn until Tuesday at one o'clock. The motion was carried by a vote of 58 yeas to 13 nays.

Tuesday, December 10, 1867.

The convention met at one o'clock P. M., Judge Taliaferro in the chair.

Eighty-four members answered to their names on the calling of the roll.

Prayer was offered by Mr. T. W. Conway.

The reading of the minutes of the previous day was dispensed with.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Reagan:

Resolved, That the sergeant-at-arms is hereby authorized to furnish any necessary article called for by the chairman of any committee or other member of the convention.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Deslonde, of Iberville, moved that the secretary shall supply the members of the convention with postage stamps until their per diem is paid.

A motion was made to amend by inserting "and also cigars."

Mr. Smith moved to lay on the table. Carried.

By Mr. Martin:

Resolved, That the legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to punish all employes or citizens, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, who may by threats, violence, or intimidations attempt to prevent any citizen or citizens as aforesaid from exercising their rights and privileges as voters or attending public meetings of any description whatever, or interfering with the rights and privileges of any citizen or citizens of the state.

Referred to committee on judiciary.

By Mr. Cromwell:

Resolved, That the state of Louisiana shall never assume nor pay any debt or obligation contracted or incurred in aid of the rebellion; nor shall this state ever in any manner claim from the United States or make any allowance or compensation for slaves emancipated or liberated in any way whatever.

Laid over under the rules.

By Mr. Martin:

Resolved, That the legislature shall at its first session pass such laws that all planters and farmers in the state of Louisiana shall be subject and liable to take out a license or pay any duties or taxes as retail merchants for any article of clothing or other merchandise which they may buy and sell to their employes on their plantations or farms. And they shall be subject or liable in any manner as retail merchants for such traffic with said employe or employes. Such act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Referred to committee on judiciary.

By Mr. Jones:

Resolved, That sales that have been or may be made by collectors of taxes shall be received by courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales.

Referred to committee on general provisions.

Mr. Harper moved that hereafter the secretary shall read by title only all bills or resolutions that are to be referred to the consideration of a committee, thereby saving time to the convention.

Laid over under the rules.

Mr. Crane moved that all reports of the committees of the convention, except that of the committee on bill of rights, be referred to the committee on draft of the constitution; that committee to report them back in committee of the whole, to be discussed section by section.

Mr. Crawford moved to amend by inserting the report of the committee on bill of rights also.

The motion of Mr. Crane was adopted.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. Vandergriff, of the committee on enrollment, submitted a report naming M. A. Gury as clerk of the committee.

Mr. Cooley and others objected to the appointment of a clerk of the enrollment committee at this time as unnecessary.

The committee asked leave to withdraw their report. Granted.

The committee on printing submitted a report establishing a tariff of pay for the official printing of the convention lower in the main than has heretofore been paid for like services. The committee also recommend that the proceedings of the convention be published in the New Orleans REPUBLICAN, Homer Iliad, Louisiana Intelligencer, St. Landry Progress, German Gazette, and Iberville Pioneer.

Mr. Blackburn moved to suspend the rules to put the report upon its adoption.

Mr. Tinchant moved to lay the motion on the table; carried.

Mr. Tinchant moved that one hundred copies of the report be printed; carried.

Mr. Tinchant moved to suspend the rules to make the report of the committee the order of the day for to-morrow.

A motion to lay this motion on the table was carried.

Mr. Ludeling, of the committee on judiciary, submitted a report vesting the judicial power in a supreme court, district courts, parish courts, and justices of the peace. The justices of the supreme court to be appointed for eight years by the governor.

The legislature shall divide the state into judicial districts, which shall remain unchanged for six years, and a judge shall be appointed in each for six years by the governor. There shall be judicial district courts in the parish of Orleans. The whole number shall not be less than twelve nor more than twenty. Judges to be eligible for appointment must have read and practiced law in the state for five years. A parish judge shall be appointed for six years; he shall have practiced law two years, and receive a salary of $1000. Justices of the peace shall be appointed by the governor for two years. There shall be an attorney general appointed for the state, and a district attorney for each judicial district, and a sheriff and coroner for each parish appointed for four years.

The committee also reported back various ordinances referred to them, recommending, in the main, their re-reference to the committee on general provisions.

Mr. Crane desired to discuss the report, but was called to order under the rules.

Mr. Jones moved to print 200 copies of the report. Carried.

Mr. McMillan called the attention of the convention to a material error in the report of the committee on the executive department. In the section defining the qualifications of the governor the committee had reported 25 years; the printer has it 35 years.

REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. Harris, of the special committee on Mr. Wickliffe's resolution of yesterday, submitted the following:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention of the state of Louisiana:

Your committee, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Wickliffe, submit the following report:

Your committee having conferred with parties who propose to loan money to defray the expenses of this convention on bonds issued by this convention in pursuance of the ordinance introduced by Mr. Blackburn, at the rate of thirty-five per cent discount, the bonds to be issued to the amount of three or five hundred thousand dollars, payable in five years, bearing eight per cent interest.

JOHN S. HARRIS, Chairman.
SIMON JONES,
HENRY BONSEIGNEUR,
G. M. WICKLIFFE,
W. JASPER BLACKBURN.

Mr. Cooley, out of respect for the finances of Louisiana, moved that the report of the committee be laid on the table permanently and the committee discharged.

He withdrew his motion to permit Mr. Jones to explain that the committee had done all that was required of them, and that brokers were ready to furnish the money; thought this was the only way to get money; was sure there would be obstacles in the way of executing the ordinance submitted by the finance committee, which would be insurmountable to General Hancock.

Mr. Cooley thought it a sacrifice of the good name of the state of Louisiana to consent to the proposed plan. He thought the plan proposed was wild and reckless, and that a more economical proposition could be adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe explained the report and argued its adoption. He declared that General Hancock was the last man for any loyal man to depend upon. He would bet his life that five dollars in taxes as proposed by the finance committee would never be collected in Louisiana.

Mr. Crane regretted that there was a member on the floor who was prepared to vote to issue state bonds. The speaker had felt more than once that the ghost of the convention of '64 was on this floor. He would be the last man in the world to believe that General Hancock would defy an act of congress. He expressed full confidence in the report of the finance committee, and thought the project of issuing bonds would make this body as disgraceful as the convention of '64.

Mr. Smith declared that funds must be had to carry on the work of the convention. He wanted to know who was going to pay the taxes but the very men who had taken the state out of the Union and plunged her into ignominy and ruin; therefore he was earnestly in favor of the adoption of the report.

Mr. Ludeling was anxious that money to pay the expenses of the convention should be provided in the earliest and most economical manner. The plan proposed by the finance committee had not been deliberated upon on this floor. The speaker called attention to the law which was superior to all other law in the matter; and he was assured the commanding general would enforce the law justly and earnestly. If he be an honest man and true soldier—and the speaker had never doubted it—he would not bind himself to any clique or party to defeat the ordinances of this convention; if he does do this he belies all his past history. The speaker quoted the section of the reconstruction law which authorizes the forming of courts martial, and declares that all interference, under color of state authority, with the execution of the act, shall be null and void, and also the section of the act giving to the convention the power to regulate financial questions.

Mr. Jones quoted General Hancock's recent jury order to overthrow the gentleman's argument.

Mr. Ludeling denied that there was one word in the reconstruction law which gave any man the right to be a juror. Sitting on a jury is not a privilege, it is a duty, and is considered in the country a very unpleasant duty. At that a dozen members rose to propound questions to the speaker, but the gentleman continued by wishing it understood that he did not come here as a radical Republican; not as a politician; he was not here to gratify ambitious private objects, but to do his whole duty in framing a constitution. There was no question but members of this convention should be paid for their services, and soon and economically, but he was not prepared to burden the people with taxation, be they loyal or disloyal. The report of the finance committee had not been acted upon, and he was not prepared to vote for this iniquitous scheme until he found no better plan existed.

Mr. Blackburn thought too much buncomb had been brought to bear on this question. The propositions before this house are simple and free. He advocated the proposition he had presented, although he was not wedded to that scheme. He declared that the people were not in a condition to undergo immediate taxation. He thought that bonds issued as proposed would realize money sooner and more liberally than in any other way, or than has been done by any other state.

Mr. Newsham moved that the report of the special committee be adopted.

Mr. Cooley moved to lay the report on the table, and called for the ayes and nays.

The ayes and nays were ordered, and the motion was lost by the following vote:

Yeas: Messrs. Barret, Bertonneau, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Dearing, Depasseau, P. G. Deslonde, Douglass, Duparte, Fuller, Ferguson, Gould, Harrison, R. H. Isabelle, Thomas Isabelle, Kelso, Ludeling, Lynch, McMillan, Mushaway, Myers, Packard, Riggs, Rodriguez, Steele, Vandergriff, Waples—30.

Nays: Messrs. Antoine, Baker, Belden, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Burrel, Cromwell, Cuney, Donato, Drinkard, Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Gair, Gardiner, Guichard, Harper, Hempstead, Ingraham, Jackson, Jones, Lange, Leroy, J. B. Lewis, Richard Lewis, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, Moses, Murrel, Newsham, Oliver. Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Roberts, Schawb, Smith, Snaer, Scott, Snider, Valfroit, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—54.

Mr. Crawford moved to adjourn until twelve o'clock to-morrow. Lost.

Mr. Jones moved the adoption of the original motion.

Mr. Crawford protested against the adoption of the motion; though he was a poor man, he was prepared to sleep on this floor, and beg his food from door to door, rather than damn himself, this convention, and the state by voting for such a proposition. The laws of congress give the convention no right to issue bonds, and if this thing is done the convention goes beyond its power, and its action will not be sustained. The proposition made by the chairman of the finance committee—some men here see a rebel behind it. The chairman of that committee was one of those men who spent four or five years in fighting the rebels, and bears on his body wounds received in fighting for equal rights. There is too much talk about "rebels" on the floor of this body, and it comes from certain men with a very poor grace. If this scheme was right he would favor it, but it was wrong, illegal, and ruinous. The only way to secure equal franchise is to carry this convention through in a way that will be acceptable to the people. The speaker had rather work for nothing than that reconstruction should fail, for then everything was lost.

Mr. Crawford moved that the convention adjourn. Lost.

Mr. Smith moved to adjourn—at half-past four—till ten o'clock to-morrow morning. The vote stood 39 to 39, and the chair by casting vote decided in favor of the motion.

Fifteenth Day—Wednesday, December 11.

The convention met at ten o'clock, Judge Taliaferro in the chair.

Seventy-two members answered to their names on the calling of the roll.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Cromwell:

Resolved, That the migration or importation of Chinese are prohibited within this state.

Laid over under the rules.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

The chairmen of the various standing committees reported progress.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The report of the committee on Mr. Wickliffe's resolution came up.

Mr. Waples thought that there was a great need of money among the members of the convention, but he should ponder well before he would authorize the issuance of $500,000 in state bonds, from which there will be realized forty-nine cents by the convention and fifty-one cents by the speculator, for that is just what it amounts to. No man will issue his note payable in two years for $1000, and sell it for $490, who ever intends to pay the note. Should the state do what individuals will not do? He had opposed the indorsing of the levee bonds, but if they were a wrong those proposed now were an infamy. Every lawyer on the floor who had spoken had presented legal objections to the adoption of the ordinance. He demanded that the committees should state who these brokers were—a matter that has been carefully kept a profound secret by the committee. The money will not be got half so soon under this plan as under that of the finance committee. He was prepared to denounce this scheme with his latest breath, and fight it till he died. He would not permit the chances of reconstruction to be jeopardized in this way. The speaker was not in the habit of running after commanding generals, but thought that if this bill should be adopted the commanding general might take it under serious consideration and prevent its execution. The speaker thought $1000 would pay the necessary expenses of those who were most pressed, and knew that this sum would be loaned by a member of the convention if asked for, without any interest.

Mr. Newsham was not to be terrified by the threat of a military ax hanging over his head. He declared the proposed loan as generous and fair as any that can be got. All money of Louisiana, as well as of the city, is at as bad, or even a worse, discount to-day.

Mr. Cooley presented the following:

Resolved, That the report of the committee be recommitted, with instructions that the committee shall report back the name or names of the party or parties with whom this proposed loan is to be effected.

Mr. Jones was willing this should be done, provided the convention should go into secret session.

Mr. Waples said that a member of this convention was prepared to loan $50 each to twenty members of the convention, they giving their notes therefor, without interest, and the money would be forthcoming to-morrow morning.

Mr. Ingraham said that some member of his convention had approached another member, and requested a loan of $50. The money was advanced, and the party who borrowed it was required to give his note for $75, payable in five days. This money was loaned by one of the most radical members of the convention, and this is the courtesy and kindness the members who are rich extend to those who are poor.

Mr. Smith moved that the previous question be now put.

The yeas and nays were called for and ordered.

The chair decided the resolution of Mr. Cooley first in order.

Mr. Wickliffe appealed from the decision of the chair.

The decision of the chair was overruled by a vote of 29 yeas to 47 nays.

The members claimed permission to explain their votes.

Mr. Isabelle was opposed to burdening the people with taxation.

Mr. Moses was opposed to any such swindling shave of state bonds, and he was ready to accept Mr. Waples' offer; or he would rather work for nothing than leave such a disgraceful act behind him.

Mr. Burrell did not know who to trust. The question had been argued by eloquent gentlemen of sound judgment; but he wanted to stick to the work before the convention, or he would never get another chance, and he knew it.

Mr. Wickliffe denied that he was actuated by pecuniary reasons in advocating this plan.

Mr. Murrell was going to vote for the resolution because there were brags made that this convention should adjourn without being paid, and so accomplish nothing.

Mr. Blackburn favored the adoption of the report as the best plan proposed. He was the author of the proposition, and had introduced it because it postponed the levying of taxes a little while longer.

Mr. Bonseigneur was not prepared to vote away $500,000 under the circumstances.

Mr. Cromwell voted for the ordinance because the convention had a right to do so, and needed money, and this was the quickest way to get it.

Mr. Jones knew that no money could be raised by taxation, and the plan proposed was the only other feasible plan presented

Mr. Cooley opposed the bill on the following grounds: 1. The convention has no power to issue bonds pledging the faith of the state. 2. If it had power, the proposed discount was ruinous and disgraceful to the state. 3. That the profits of the loan will go into the pockets of so-called rebels; one of the parties, he was informed, having been sent to Ship Island by General Butler for furnishing supplies to the rebel government. 4. He did not believe the profits realized by pawnbrokers a fair criterion to judge of the value of money.

Mr. Crane opposed the resolution because he was not satisfied, but Messrs. Michael Hahn and W. R. Fish might be the parties who desire to negotiate these bonds.

Mr. Smith rose to defend those gentlemen, as having the purest records as Union men.

Mr. Harper thought the opposition to this bill disclosed the wolf in sheep's clothing; felt that certain parties were using every means in their power, legal or illegal, to defeat the action of this convention.

Mr. Rodriguez asked to understand what the convention was about to vote on.

Mr. Tinchant claimed that the committee had reported a scheme by which money can be got cheaper than in the markets of the city.

Mr. Barrett should oppose the bill, because members had voted themselves $10 per day, with an idea of discounting their warrants, which they were now not disposed to do.

Mr. Reagan did not care from whom the money came, so long as it was obtained honestly.

Mr. Poindexter insisted that money must be raised immediately, as the convention was spending about $10,000 per day.

Mr. Pinchback thought the adoption of the vote would only accept the report; then a very small portion of the work of obtaining the loan was accomplished.

Mr. Belden took the same view, but favored the loan.

Mr. Bonseigneur said that if the parties had been sent to Ship island it was nothing to their discredit, for they were not sent there for crime.

The question then recurred upon the original motion to adopt the report of the special committee.

The motion was adopted by the following vote:

Yeas: Messrs. Antoine, Baker, Belden, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Burrel, Cromwell, Demarest, P. G. Desionde, Donato, Drinkard, Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Gair, Gardiner, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Hiestand, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Lange, Leroy, J. B. Lewis, R. Lewis, Marie, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, Morris, Moses, Murrel, Newsham, Oliver, Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Smith, Snaer, Scott, Snider, Tinchant, Twitchell, Valfroit, Wickliffe, Wilson—53.

Nays: Messrs. Barret, Bertonneau, Bonnefoi, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Depasseau, Douglass, Duparte, Fuller, Ferguson, Gould, Guichard, Harrison, Thomas Isabelle, Kelso, Ludeling, Lynch, Martin, McMillan, Mushaway, Myers, Packard, Riard, Riggs, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schawb, Steele, Thibaut, Vandergriff, Vidal, Waples, Williams—36.

Mr. Cooley moved that the ordinance of Mr. Blackburn be referred to the committee on finance under rule 48 of the constitution.

It was declared that the ordinance had already been referred to the committee on contingent expenses.

Mr. Ingraham moved to take a recess of half an hour to allow the special committee time to report on this ordinance. Carried.

On reassembling, at half-past one o'clock, Mr. Wickliffe in behalf of a majority of the committee, presented the following report:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

The undersigned, members of the special committee to whom was referred the ordinance on finance submitted by the member from Claiborne, with instructions to confer with parties proposing to loan money to the convention, and report, respectfully ask permission to make the following majority report as a more detailed report than the one already submitted.

The committee, therefore, report that they met the parties referred to, who submitted the following propositions:

1. They propose to take the bonds to be issued by the convention for either $300,000 or $500,000.

2. They propose to give us sixty-five cents on the dollar for the bonds to be issued under Mr. Blackburn's ordinance.

3. They propose to deposit $25,000 cash in greenbacks in the state treasury within seven days from the passage of said ordinance by this convention.

4. They propose to forfeit this amount, if they fail in their part of the contract, which will be deposited before a single bond is issued.

5. They propose to deposit in the state treasury $20,000 within every ten days after the issuance of the bonds, and further guarantee that the convention shall always have funds enough at its disposal to cash all its warrants.

Your committee therefore respectfully submit this more extended report, and advise the adoption of the ordinance of Mr. Blackburn, modified to the amount of $300,000, and amended by the substitute of the member from West Feliciana, for the fourth section of said ordinance, and that the propositions herewith submitted be accepted by this convention, with the understanding that no bonds are to be delivered until the money is paid.

LATE BY TELEGRAPH.

From Alabama—The Constitutional Convention, etc.

MONTGOMERY, December 5.—The convention has been engaged all day in considering the constitution. The final vote on its adoption was taken late this enening, and resulted—yeas, 67; nays 10; absent and not voting, 23.

Mr. Semple, of Montgomery, presented a protest signed by fifteen members, some of whom are absentees. The protest was ordered to be spread on the journal, but the names of the absentees who had signed it were stricken off.

Two other members gave notice that they would present a protest to-morrow. One has been presented by a sick member, which makes eighteen members who protest against the constitution.

The convention will probably adjourn to-morrow.

MONTGOMERY, December 6.—A large and enthusiastic conservative meeting was held last night. It was addressed by Hon. John Forsyth, of Mobile, and other distinguished speakers. Four members of the convention, who voted and protested against the constitution, made speeches pledging their hearty co-operation in the effort to defeat the constitution.

The conservative state executive committee recommends the organization of conservative clubs throughout the state, and active efforts are being made to defeat the constitution. The protesting members of the convention declare that they believe any government framed in accordance with the provisions of the constitution adopted by the convention will entail upon the people of the state greater evils than any which now threaten them.

The convention to-day adopted a memorial to congress requesting an alteration or amendment of the reconstruction laws so as to require only a majority of the registered voters voting on the question to determine for or against the adoption of the constitution.

An ordinance to protect electors was passed. It provides for the punishment of all persons who intimidate voters, deceive them as to the days of elections, the candidates to be voted for, etc.

An ordinance was passed declaring all debts made for the purchase of slaves absolutely void, and setting aside all judgments or decrees by any of the state courts since January 11, 1861, upon all evidences of debt based upon the sale or purchase of slaves. The ordinance also declares null and void, at the option of either party, all contracts for the sale of land made between January 11, 1861, and May 9, 1865, where the purchase money is unpaid or title deeds remain unexecuted, unless paid for or contracted to be paid for in United States currency or property other than slaves.

All notes or other evidence of debt outstanding and unpaid given for or in consideration of confederate money or bonds are declared null and void.

The president of the convention, who is the radical nominee for supreme court judge, opposed this ordinance, declaring it could not be sustained in the courts. The constitution, engrossed on parchment, was signed by sixty-four members.

The committee on disabilities recommended a number of persons in each county to congress for relief from political disabilities, on account of their advocacy of reconstruction. The ordinance to suspend all state courts except the supreme, probate, and criminal courts was defeated by a tie vote.

The memorial to congress in favor of the extension of the time for the completion of railroads in this state was defeated by Bingham, and the extremists who desire congress to revoke the grant of land made to the Southern railroads, and appropriate it to the education of freedmen.

There was a good deal of legislation by the convention this week, looking to the maintenance of the radical party in power.

The convention adjourned at two o'clock subject to the call of its president or the military commander, if reconvened before January 1, 1868.

The radicals are holding a grand mass meeting at the capitol to-night to enlighten the freedmen touching their rights under the new constitution.

MONTGOMERY, December 11.—Governor Patton has perfected financial arrangements in New York for paying the interest on the foreign debt, due January 1, 1868, and also secured an extension of the time for payment of the temporary loan heretofore negotiated in New York until the same can probably be paid from tax collections, which obviates the necessity for the sale of state bonds, which would go at a heavy discount under the present depressed condition of Southern finances.

Henry C. Semple, of Montgomery, Joseph H. Speed, of Perry, and eleven other conservative Republican members of the reconstruction convention have published a protest against the constitution, which ably vindicates their position.

They assume that the action of the convention is in opposition to the sentiment of the Northern people as expressed in the recent elections, and that the constitution adopted violates the conditions of the formation of the Republican party in Alabama by transcending the requirements of the reconstruction act, and adding features of proscription and disfranchisement not authorized by these measures. They believe the Northern people will not permit the power of their government to be directed to the abasement and degradation of the white population of the South. That they will not sentence the white race of the South to be the servants of their former slaves, even as a punishment for rebellion

They argue that the civil liberty of the Northern people will be endangered by the continued exercise of a proconsular rule, maintained by force, over an impoverished and ruined people. The South admits the thoroughness of her conquest, but trusts to the magnanimity of her conqueror, and appeals now to the tribunal of last resort, the people.

The political power of the blacks under the proposed system of suffrage is coveted by political adventurers, having no interest in common with the Southern people, as a weapon of offense to be wielded for the accomplishment of their selfish schemes of personal aggrandizement. That race will readily surrender itself to the arts and intrigues of designing persons who flatter their vanity and encourage them in jealous hate of the white inhabitants of the state. The colored delegates in the convention moved as subserviently at the beck of their radical managers as our slaves did at the command of their masters.

The amendment to the bill of rights, introduced by Keffer, that common carriers should make no distinction between citizens of the state, designed to secure to colored people seats at table and berths with whites on steamboats, at hotels, and on cars, aroused considerable opposition, and, threatening to produce serious discord in the convention, was withdrawn by its authors and advocates; but the colored delegates, the protesting members are informed, obliged the radical majority to promise them that the legislature should and would carry it into effect.

The address alludes to the fact that the convention refused to provide for separate schools for whites and blacks, and simply provided in the constitution for the establishment of one or more schools in each school district, by which if only one school should be established in a district children of both races must attend the same school.

One of the standing committees unanimously reported an article of the constitution prohibiting the intermarriage of whites and blacks, which was defeated in deference to the colored members, the committee that made the report receding from their position, and voting to table.

The signers of the address further declare that entertaining the views they do they owe it as a duty to their people to warn them against lending themselves to the ratification of the constitution. They knew not what fate may be in store for the people, but it can scarcely be worse than that which they will bring on themselves by aiding in carrying the constitution into effect.

MOBILE, December 11.—A grand conservative meeting was held here to-night in response to a call of many citizens. The object of the meeting was protection against the action of the late state convention, and to organize conservative political clubs throughout the city and state.

The meeting was largely attended, and was very enthusiastic. Perfect order was maintained throughout.

Patriotic speeches were made by Hon. Robert S. Smith, Hon. Percy Walker, and Major Henry St. Paul, of the Times.

Resolutions prepared by Hon. John Forsyth were unanimously adopted.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

PAILADELPHIA, December 10.—The following resolution was adopted by the United Leaguers last night:

Resolved, That having confidence in the ability, integrity, and patriotism of General U. S. Grant, and believing that his political principles are in consonance with those of the Republican party, and grateful for the services he has rendered to the country in every post of duty to which he has been called, we do hereby nominate him as the candidate of this league for the office of president of the United States.

NASHVILLE, December 10.—The house passed a bill repealing all laws disqualifying negroes from holding office and sitting on juries; also a bill providing for the appointment of a general commissioner for the state and three for each county to file claims of all loyal Tennesseeans for property lost through the war—these claims to be forwarded to Washington for allowance by the government. Both bills will probably pass the senate.

GALVESTON, December 6.—Captain Cenas, of the schooner Edith Brown, of New Orleans, which was totally wrecked on Brazos bar on 29th ultimo, came on the Tartar, and has gone to New Orleans.

Cotton receipts to-day 226 bales.

GALVESTON, December 10.—Military and civic honors were paid to the remains of Major General Griffin, his son, and Dr. Taylor, which were sent North to-day in charge of Captain Snider, of the third infantry. They go by the steamer Hewes.

CHARLESTON, December 10.—Thirty-two prisoners, only one of whom was white, escaped from the city jail last night.

RALEIGH, December 11.—The United States circuit court continues in session. Much business has been done. The suits brought against the stockholders of banks by holders of notes have not been determined. Judgments for twelve millions of dollars are said to have been obtained against defendants during court.

Judge Barnes opened special superior court.

NEW YORK, December 11.—Cornelius Vanderbilt has been elected president, and Samuel Torrance, vice-president, of the New York Central railroad.

Foreign News.

WASHINGTON, December 6.—Cable dispatches state that Derby said in the house of lords that Stanley refused to join the Roman conference until the basis of conference be settled.

Mr. Rouher says that without France, Italy could not have saved Rome from revolution.

LONDON, December 6.—The Times is pleased with the transfer of St. Thomas to the United States, and hopes that American sanitary measures will abate contagious fevers.

PARIS, December 6.—In the corps legislatif, minister Rouher defended the government's policy in Italy, and said while Italian unity was desirable Italy should never take forcible possession of Rome.

FLORENCE, December 6.—The Italian parliament opened yesterday. Menabreax justified the arrest of Garibaldi, but said it was as inconvenient for the pope to have temporal power in Italy as for a foreign power to hold possession of Paris.

LONDON, December 6.—The Times says Stanley is right in refusing to allow the foreign policy of England to be reviewed by any foreign power. On all other points England is tired of the topic, and will meet the United States half-way.

LONDON, December 12.—The Globe says the attitude of France renders the Roman conference impossible. The Italian government has granted universal amnesty to the adherents of Garibaldi. The political affairs of Italy cause distrust in London mercantile circles.

PARIS, December 7.—This morning's Presse says the conference will not meet at Munich, but at Paris. The envoys of the various powers resident here will represent them in the conference.

LONDON, December 7.—Her majesty's theatre was burned last night after the audience had retired. The origin of the fire is unknown. Loss heavy.

FLORENCE, December 7.—The Italian parliament assembled. Count Louisa, of Pisa, chosen president, defeating Ratuzza forty votes.

LIVERPOOL, December 7.—It is feared the steamer Lizzie Southord, from New York hither, has been lost. She is long overdue.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—The Times praises the house for its refusal to impeach the president. It fears, however, the president will accept the action of the house as a new indorsement of his policy, and from this concludes that the hope of a sound reconstruction must be deferred.

LONDON Dec. 10.—It is inferred from the speech of M. Rouher that the French emperor has adopted the policy of the clerical party. The liberal journals are greatly dissatisfied, while the clerical organs seem pleased and jubilant.

Fenian sympathizers are making extensive preparations for a funeral procession in Liverpool on Sunday in honor of Allen, Gould, and Larkin. Orangemen of the city threaten to break up the procession, and a serious riot is feared.

BERLIN, December 10.—Bancroft had an audience yesterday with the queen of Prussia.

Drysc, the inventor of the needle-gun, is dead.

PARIS, December 10.—M. Rouher declares that since the settlement of the Luxemburg controversy by the London conference France has entertained no thought of territorial extension and conquest.

Latest from Mexico.

HAVANA, December 6.—Mexican dates of the 27th have been received. Peonage has been abolished.

A steam marble factory had been opened in the City of Mexico. Juarez was present upon the occasion and made a patriotic speech. He suggested that the first piece of marble cut be used in a monument to be erected to the memory of Mexicans who fell martyrs to liberty.

The condition of the Mexican treasury is improving.

Statements have been published in the newspapers stating that a contract had been made between Minister Romero and the United States government for three million of dollars worth of war materials, two million of which were to be taken in rifles and muskets and smaller arms, and the remaining million in cannon. Mexican journals have published letters of General Grant, Romero, Seward, and Madam Juarez, in regard to Mexican affairs.

Kidnapping of wealthy persons continues to be carried on pretty extensively by numerous bands of bandits.

"EUREKA,"

THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THE CLASSIC POETS have sung to us of a spring whose pure, ethereal waters impart perpetual youth and beauty to all who will drink of them. It is now conceded by all that the EUREKA is made of the water of that same spring, and its magical effects will be seen at once by those who use it. The hair will be restored to its youth and beauty, even where the snows of winter have fallen. In presenting this Hair Restorative to the public, I have no hesitation in saying that it is no humbug: that it will do all that is claimed for it, viz: Restore the hair to its original color; preventing its falling off, and giving it a softness, youth and lustre that no other preparation can produce. The Eureka has been used by tens of thousands, and in every case has given entire satisfaction, and is now used universally. Dr. Van Zandt has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair—preventing it falling off, by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the EUREKA, and you will not be disappointed.

It is for sale by all druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effect, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen, and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic and Acute.

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent, to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years in an extensive practice in large cities have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver, and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

A NEW GLEE BOOK.

THE GREETING.

A COLLECTION OF GLEES, QUARTETS, Choruses, Part-Songs, etc. By L. O. Emerson, Author of "The Jubilate," "Harp of Judah," "Golden Wreath," "Merry Chimes," etc.

Upwards of Half a Million copies of Mr. Emerson's Music Books have been sold, a fact proving a popularity which has rewarded no other author of the same class of books and which cannot fail to insure for this new volume an immense sale. The contents of this work are, for the most part, new. A large number of valuable pieces have been contributed by Mr L. H. Southard whose name is a sufficient guarantee of their excellence. The marked features of the collection are Originality, Brilliancy and Variety; and it will be found, upon careful examination, that there is no Glee Book now before the public that in every particular will prove so completely satisfactory to Musical Societies and Conventions, Conservatories, Clubs, and Amateur Singers. Price, $1 38. Mailed post-paid.
